POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. III. | J. Buchanan Canfield, EDITOR. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Sept. 17, 1885. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. | No. 15.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney, R. S Turk
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, B. C. Hill.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Court, { S. B. Hannah, Pres't. S. H. Clark. Geo. P. Moore.
County Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

DISTRICT OFFICERS.

1st (Green Bank) District: Justices, Wm. L. Brown and J. H. Patterson. Notaries Public, Wm. L. Brown, C. O. Arbogast and David McGlaughlin. Constables, Thomas R. Moople and C. B. [illegible].

2nd (Edray) District: Justices, Geo. M. Kee and Henry N. Hannah. Notaries, Geo. P. Moore and Geo. Baxter. Constable, John A. Young.

3rd (Huntersville) District: Justice, Jas. T. Lockridge. Notaries, H. S. Rucker, R. S. Turk, J. B. Hannah. Constable, C. O. Sharp.

4th (Little Levels) District: Justices, D. A. Peck and D. C. Kinnison. Notaries, Isaac McNeel, N. J. Brown, B. C. Hill, C. P. Bryan, Peter Hill, Jno. W. McNeil and Aaron Hill. Constable, B. F. McClure.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the 1st Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June, and 3rd Monday of Oct.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, June, and October. June is levy term.

A FAMILY AFFAIR

BY HUGH CONWAY,

Author of "Called Back" and "Dark Days."

[illegible] it as we choose.

When the inforced meeting between Lady Clauson and her stepdaughter took place, the young lady, by means of those signs and tokens, the masonry of which women alone fully comprehend, showed the state of her mind so clearly that war to the knife was then and there declared.

And civil war in families—baronets or otherwise—is a deplorable thing; doubly deplorable for the neutral parties, who lack the excitement of the internecine combat. For a while Sir Maingay's life was anything but a happy one.

It matters little who was most to blame—the girl for her unreasonableness and stubborn spirit, and want of resignation to the inevitable—Lady Clauson for retaliating with all an injured woman's pettiness and spite—Sir Maingay for the thoroughly man-like conduct in letting things drift. They did drift with a vengeance! The breach between the two ladies soon became too enormous to be bridged over by any family diplomatic engineering.

The skirmishes between the belligerents are not worth noticing. The battle-royal was fought when the time came for Miss Clauson to be presented. Lady Clauson asserted that she was the proper person to present her stepdaughter. Beatrice coldly declined her aid. Her ladyship insisted; her stepdaughter was firm in her refusal. Sir Maingay declared himself under his wife's banner, and for once attempted to exercise parental authority. Whereupon Miss Clauson cut the matter short, and declined being presented at all. It was a most dreadful state of affairs! You can, at least, drive a horse to the water, even if you can't make him drink; but you dare not haul a refractory young woman into the presence of a gracious sovereign.

Lady Clauson, who was rigidly exact in following the prescribed usages of society, may not have been far wrong when she declared that "a baronet's daughter, who refused to be presented, was—well, a monstrosity!"

Sir Maingay began to wish his ancestors had not separated themselves from the Roman Catholic communion. He could have sent his daughter to a nunnery. But then, he sadly reflected, she wouldn't have gone at any price. If put there by force, the Protestant league would soon have her out, and [illegible] the [illegible] spoiling. The only thing the worried baronet could think of was to send for his rebel, and ask her advice as to the best means of disposing of her troublesome self.

When alone with her father Beatrice always behaved prettily. She was very fond of him, although the remembrance of the tears, the [illegible], the distracted vows, when contrasted with his second marriage for nothing but good looks, made her look upon him with a little contempt. She did not know that man is so gregarious a creature that it is not meet for him to live alone. She heard his remarks in silence, then gave him her opinion on the matter.

"I don't want to be a nuisance to you, papa. I am eighteen now—too old to go back to school. It's nonsense, of course, to say I should like to earn my own living, because when I come of age I shall have some money. May I go and live at Fairholme?"

Fairholme was Sir Maingay's seldom-used seat in one of the southern counties.

"But you can't live there alone," he said.

"Yes, I could. Mrs. Williams could take care of me. I shall be happy enough."

"My dear girl, why not be reasonable and make friends with Lady Clauson? Then we could all go abroad together."

Lady Clauson, who was by no means a fool, had by this time found out that she needed something more than mere good looks to go down, or go up, in the society her heart longed for. She had, therefore, made up her mind to become a traveled woman, and had arranged that Sir Maingay should take her to a variety of foreign countries. The proposed tour was to be an affair of years, and her ladyship had a fine idea of writing, or of getting some one [illegible] book, describing the well-worn [illegible] ing her father's absence—an absence which from one reason or another lasted quite four years.

[illegible]

BEATRICE CLAUSON.

After a while Sir Maingay almost forgot he had a daughter. The Clausons settled down to continental life for an indefinite time. Lady Clauson knew she was improving herself, and moreover, that Sir Maingay was saving enough money to refurnish the town house from top to bottom whenever they did return to England. In the course of the four years spent abroad, Lady Clauson rectified her predecessor's sins of omission, and gave her devoted husband two fine boy babies. In the revived delights of paternity—a paternity which is so especially dear to middle age—Sir Maingay thought little of the troublesome, obstinate girl he had left in England. His wife and his boys all but turned her out of his heart. So here was Beatrice in the extraordinary position of being a baronet's daughter with scarcely a a friend in the world.

At last the Clausons returned to England. Whether her ladyship wrote her book or not is a matter of uncertainty; anyway, it was never published. Beatrice made no objection to rejoining the family circle. Her father and his wife found her greatly changed. She was quieter, more reserved, more amenable to reason. It seemed to Sir Maingay that she had passed her time at Mrs. Erskine's in study. The learning she had acquired almost frightened the baronet; but he was glad to see she had grown into a beautiful woman, and so he felt quite proud of [illegible] daughter, and hoped that [illegible] for the future [illegible].

His hopes were vain. This time there was no doubt as to with whom the fault lay. A beauty like Lady Clauson could not endure the constant presence of a younger, fresher and even more beautiful beauty. She was also jealous at the way in which her own children took to Beatrice. Besides, she had never forgiven the girl. Relations soon grew strained, and towards the end of the year Beatrice wrote to her uncles, and asked if they would give her a home.

She was now nearly twenty-three. Having when she came of age succeeded to her late mother's third of old Talbert's possessions, she was independent both by age and by income. She was willing to live at Hazlewood House, if her uncles would take her. If not, she resolved to start an establishment of her own. She was still in her former anomalous position—a baronet's daughter who had never made a proper entrance into society. As Lady Clauson said, she must have been a wrong-minded young woman, as this omission seemed to trouble her very little.

The Talberts who liked the little they had seen of their niece went into solemn conclave on the request. They decided, in the event of Sir Maingay giving his consent—at that point they were most exacting—she might come to them. Sir Maingay raised no objections, so Beatrice Clauson came to Hazlewood House, where since her arrival, about a week ago, she had lived in a state of amused wonder as the amiable peculiarities of the "Taldies" gradually revealed themselves to her.

She had, of course, intended to make herself useful to her uncles. It may have been the want of some occupation other than study which made her turn her eyes to Hazlewood House and the two bachelors. She was no [illegible]

[illegible]

Beatrice, as she walked to the table and looked at the sturdy urchin.

She was the first woman the child had seen since he left his friends at the refreshment room. Maid servants, with the curiosity of their sex and kind, had peeped surreptitiously over the balustrade, but had not attracted notice. At such a tender age as his, woman is a child's natural protector. He at once quitted his stalwart friends and ran across the table to the fair girl, who smiled and opened her arms. The little man darted into them, and with a chirrup of delight laid his head on the girl's shoulder and seemed perfectly happy and at rest. He was so pretty that no woman could have refrained from caressing him. Miss Clauson kissed him again and again, then, like every one who came near him, fell to stroking his golden locks and twining them round her fingers. The child's eyes began to close under her soft and soothing touches.

"He must go to bed," said Beatrice, decisively.

"Certainly," said uncle Horace. "Where had he better sleep?"

"Jane has a most comfortable bed," said Herbert.

Jane was the parlor-maid, but Herbert in his housewifely capacity knew the quality of every bed in the house; even the amount of bedding on each. Mr. Mordle turned away. He was afraid of disgracing himself by a burst of ill-timed mirth.

"No, no," exclaimed Beatrice; "he shall sleep with me. Look at him, uncle Horace; isn't he a perfect cherub?"

"He's a pretty little boy; but we don't know where he comes from, my dear. I hardly think you ought to take a strange infant to sleep with you."

"Oh, nonsense, uncle Horace! See what a clean, beautiful boy it is. Whittaker, send a large can of hot water to my room. Come, my pet; I will see how I can act the part of a nursemaid."

Singing and crooning and carrying the child in the most approved fashion, Miss Clauson proceeded to bear her prize away.

"You had better look at his linen, Beatrice," said Horace. "It may be marked with his name."

After this the three men went back to the dining-room and talked the curious occurrence over and over.

In about half an hour's time Beatrice reappeared with the intelligence that the boy's clothing bore no mark of any kind. Indeed, it all seemed brand new. She was apparently much delighted with her new toy. She kept running up and down stairs, to ascertain that her protege was sleeping the sleep of innocent babyhood. At last she went away altogether.

"Beatrice is more demonstrative than I believed her to be," said Horace, reproachfully. Herbert echoed the regret, but Mr. Mordle said nothing. He thought the instinctive kindness she showed towards this mysteriously sent child added another charm to the many he had already discovered in Miss Clauson.

The three men sat together until it was too late to hope that matters would be cleared up [illegible] would not induce him to go and look at their slumbering forms.

[illegible]

"Then, you come, Uncle Herbert. He is a prettier sight than any of your old masters."

Herbert gave his quiet smile. He was of less stern stuff than Horace—that is, if either of the Talberts could be called stern. He suffered Beatrice to lead him to her room, duly admired the little stranger, then, with his niece, returned to Horace. After this manifestation of weakness Horace's unworthy suspicion was all but certainty.

"You will let me keep him?" pleaded Beatrice. "I am sure you will."

Horace made no reply to her unreasonable request. In their usual dignified manner the two gentlemen made their preparations for shutting up. Beatrice went back to her room.

"She grows very, very impulsive," sighed Horace. This time Herbert said nothing. As he got into bed Horace Talbert told himself that Herbert knew all about the boy; he also told himself that no power on earth should induce him to tax Herbert with this knowledge. A man's private affairs were his own property; he himself had laid down this dogma and would now stick to it; the more so because on a former occasion he had broken with Herbert for six years because the latter had infringed on this rule.

CHAPTER V.

MR. MORDLE MAKES A RASH PROMISE.

The next morning the Talberts did an unusual thing; they broke one of their rules by opening their letters before breakfast. They had a time and a place for everything, and their time for reading their correspondence was with their second cups of tea. But so anxious were they to see if their letters contained anything explanatory of last night's occurrence, that the seals were broken at once. They found a couple of invitations to dinner, receipts for payments made two posts ago, the usual amount of circulars, tradesmen's lists and appeals for charity; but not a word about the child. Then the kettle was brought, and Herbert set about making the tea. Under some unwritten code of division of labor or honor, the younger brother always presided at the breakfast table.

Presently Miss Clauson made her appearance with the child on her arm. She had

Miss Clauson made her appearance with the child on her arm.

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

James B. Canfield,

EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Copy, 1 year, in advance, - - - $1.00
" 6 months, - - - - - - - - - .50
One year, not in advance, - - - - - $1.50.
Out of the county $1.15 per year.
Six months, 60 cts.

ADVERTISING RATES

	1 yr.	6 mon.	3 mon.
One Col.	$50 00	$30 00	$18 00.
½ Col.	25 00	17 00	10 00.
¼ Col.	13 00	9 00	6 00.

One Square (10 lines) one week, $1.00
Each additional insertion .50

Local, and Special Notices, five cents a line for each insertion, and no notice inserted for less than twenty-five cents.

Marriage and Death notices free. Obituaries two cents a line.

Seven words to the line

No subscriptions discontinued until all arrearages are paid.

☞ Sales and Notices, in every case, will be charged to the Attorney or officer making the sale, and must be paid for in advance or on delivery of the certificate of publication.

Huntersville, Thursday, Sept. 17, 1885.

Wise on the Stump.

The Washington Post says there has been no late instance on record of such complete political prostitution and of so degraded character as that presented on the stump in Virginia by JOHN S. WISE, the latest and foremost representative of Bourbon Radicalism.

He speaks on an average about two hours and fifty minutes at a time, and nine-tenths of it he devotes with scrupulous fidelity to the foulest abuse of the white people of what he calls his native State. This man, who during the HANCOCK campaign declared that his father was a Democrat, that he was born a Democrat, that he had the training and education of a Democrat, and that he would die a Democrat, now so hates the Democratic party and the white Virginians who compose it that he charges them indiscriminately with being sympathizers with political murderers and assassins, asserts with unblushing cheek that the Danville riot was gotten up by Democrats for political purposes, and proudly boasts that he proved it by testifying before a Republican investigation committee of the Senate.

Unfortunately for decent politics, a man like this, as a candidate for the highest office in a State, can essentially lower the tone of a political campaign. Confident of the one hundred and twenty thousand negroes behind his back, sure of their allegiance and devotion no matter what he says or does—perhaps more so in proportion as he abuses his own race—he conducts a campaign not now possible in any other Southern State. No white Republican in that section, whether native or imported, would so far forget what is due to propriety, and even decency, as to indulge in such disgraceful harangues as Wise has just passed of in Southwest Virginia for political arguments.

No SHERMAN, or LARRABEE, or FORAKER, strangers to the South and aliens to her soil, has done so much to rouse into flame the smouldering fires of sectional hate and race bitterness as this follower of MAHONE, who says that if elected he shall take his seat, so help him God, or yield his life to the Danville murderers and ballot box stuffers.

The best course for Democrats to pursue is to treat this renegade Virginian in the manner which he invites, accept the issue as he makes it and beat him to political death with it. There seems no other way to teach men of his political practices that the time has come for decent politics and that the sort he discusses is at least a dozen years too late.

The Greenbrier Valley Woolen Mills in this county, recently received an order from Phil. for three thousand [illegible] hundred and fifty pair all-wool blankets. This shows the estimation in which this company's goods are held at the north. Two sets of machinery are now being run at the Mills to their full capacity.—Renick Watchman.

[illegible] has appointed [illegible] of Clay county, Deputy Collector for the Fourth Internal Revenue District, composed of the counties of Clay, Braxton, Nicholas and [illegible], with office at Clay C. H.

[illegible] the W. Va. Press Association and the B. & O. [illegible] will meet in Charleston.

IN THE THIRD DISTRICT.

The Political Situation and the Candidates.

A Charleston correspondent of the Wheeling Register of a recent date has this to say of the candidates for Congress in our district:

Your correspondent met a gentleman here, who is well posted on political situation in this the Third Congressional district. Hon. Phil. Snyder, the present incumbent, is the only fully developed candidate, but there are other aspirants in whom the gallant Phil. will find foemen worthy of his steel amongst these who would be willing to occupy Snyder's seat in Congress are noted Judge David E. Johnston, of Mercer county, and present Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, and Col. John W. Harris, of Lewisburg. Judge Johnston has not announced himself, but it is an open secret that he desires the nomination. Judge Johnston's record while a member of the State Senate, and the very satisfactory manner in which he has discharged the duties of the office of Judge during the past six years, will be in his favor. His fearless punishment of criminals convicted in his court commends the Judge to all law-abiding citizens. He has been instrumental in working reform in the growing evil of so many divorce suits by refusing to allow the parties to remarry, especially when the evidence established the fact that they were unworthy to assume sacred vows of marriage.

Judge J. is a man of high moral character, and a member of the Baptist Church, and a shrewd and successful business man, having accumulated a share of this world's wealth, but with all he is a plain man of the people, with whom he is very popular where known. The Judge presided at the June term of the Kanawha Circuit Court, and during that time he made hosts of friends here. One of the pleasing features in the Judge's courts is his expeditious man- of clearing up the court dockets. Although the Judge is popular here, he will make no serious inroad upon Snyder in Kanawha county. However, the genial "Phil," as he is familiarly known here, has made some enemies owing to certain minor Federal appointments which have been made in the county at his instance, notably the postmasters at Malden and Coalburg, which are not satisfactory to the majority of the Democrats. His friends here do not attach much weight to this, but they may find that it will amount to more than a trifle after all. Harris has not yet announced himself, but it is generally understood that if he thinks there is the least chance for him to secure the coveted prize, he will be in the ring when the time comes. Our informant states that Harris is drifting with the tide, and if he finds that is "leads on to fortune" he will plunge therein. Neither Johnston or Harris are making any special canvass, but Snyder is leaving no stone unturned to secure a renomination. Phil. has heretofore succeeded by working early and late, and is by far the best politician of the three, and it will be strange if he is not again successful. Johnston and Harris both belong to the Carlisle-Morrison wing of the party, whilst Snyder adheres to the Randall wing on tariff matters. But Mr. Randall having announced himself in favor of tariff reform, we don't know where Phil will stand. Nearly all the counties of this district, except Kanawha and Fayette, are in favor of a revision, which means a reform of our present tariff laws. These two counties are opposed to any change that would effect the price of coal, as the prosperity of these counties depends almost entirely on the condition of the coal markets. If the mountain counties were not divided against themselves it would be an easy matter for them to nominate a candidate from that section. But owing to petty jealousies amongst the aspiring politicians, and notwithstanding any prejudices they may have against a Charleston candidate, they have heretofore slaughtered their local candidates and allowed Charleston to carry off the honors and in all probability their past history will again in this respect repeat itself. The noted Mathews, Dennis, French and Snyder contest is still fresh in the memory of all in this district. Either Dennis or Mathews would have been nominated but for the opposition of the other. This is the situation at present, but just what the future developments may be, it is hard to predict, but it will not probably materially change the present outlook over the Third district field.

Jim and Pink Lee, two notorious desperadoes in Texas, were shot and killed by officers one day last week.

Andrew Beirne has been appointed Postmaster at Lewisburg vice J. E. McWhorter and S. J. Brown at Mill Point.

From the Greenbrier Independent of the 9th inst.

The Lewisburg Graded School will begin next Monday. The teachers (graded as their names appear) are to be—Prof. A. P. Kerr, Principal, with Misses Amanda J. Austin, Mattie W. Cooper and Mamie K. Austin to assist with the several rooms.

There are only five prisoners confined in Greenbrier county jail at the present time—one serving out a sentence of six months' imprisonment for unlawful cutting; one awaiting an indictment felony; one for assault; and two upon warrant for lunacy.

The Greenbrier Valley Woolen Mills have established a depot at Ronceverte, where a full line of their popular goods can be seen and inspected. Their place of business is in the building occupied as a store by Mr. F. M. Truslow, opposite the Dickson Hotel.

Last week a white woman named Amanda E. Pyles, wife of Mr. John Pyles, of Anthony's Creek District, Greenbrier county, was committed to the jail of this county, under a warrant issued by Justice C. B. Wald, upon a charge of Lunacy, to be held in custody until she can be removed to the Hospital for the Insane at Weston.

Yesterday evening, just as Mr. Mason D. Coffman, of Fort Springs District, in this county, had commenced threshing his crop of wheat and oats, a spark from the engine ignited in one of his stacks, which resulted in the destruction of his entire crop—burning about two hundred bushels of wheat and two hundred and fifty bushels of oats.

Mark Martin, of Blue Sulphur District, Greenbrier county, was committed to the custody of Jailer W. P. Scott last Tuesday night, upon a warrant issued by Justice Z. A. Sandige, of the above District, charging him with striking A. C. Patterson with a stick, on the 7th inst. It is said that Mr. Patterson received two heavy blows on the head at the hands of the accused, and that his condition is thought to be serious.

Mr. Robert A. Alexander, a well-known citizen and lawyer of this county, was found dead in a field not far from his home, near Lewisburg, last Tuesday evening. The deceased had dropped dead from an attack of apoplexy. Life had been extinct about half an hour before he was found. The deceased was a man of more than ordinary natural abilities, kind and polite in his disposition, and leaves no enemy behind him. He was in the 70th year of his age.

Last Monday evening a colored man named Ellsworth Brent, who hails from Washington City, was brought to Lewisburg by officer John E. Barker, from the Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs, upon a warrant issued by Justice Z. F. Morris, and lodged in jail, charged with committing a felony, in that he had stolen the sum of $24 35 from a colored woman at the Springs. He is held in confinement by Jailer W. P. Scott in default of bail, to answer an indictment for the offense with which he stands charged.

From the Webster Echo.

Dr. R. E. Bryan will remove from this place to Centerville, Upshur county, in a few days, at which place he thinks of locating to practice his profession.

A young man by the name of McNeel, formerly of Pocahontas county, but now of Texas, passed through town this week enroute for Braxton county.

Auditor Duffy says the falling off of the school fund is due to no other cause than the hard times, keeping sheriffs from collecting and sending in their payments before June 10th. All money received after June 10th has to lay over for another year. There will be a large State school fund next year, and with the same per cent. of levy the schools can be run for a period of five or six months each or a lower levy can be laid and the schools run for the same time as before.

TO THE PEOPLE OF POCAHONTAS COUNTY:

I take the pleasure to inform the people of Pocahontas county that I have been appointed a General Agent to transport all Deaf Mutes and Blind persons from this county to the West Virginia Asylum located at Romney, W. Va., for their education, and also to bring them back. All persons having such children or knowing of any, will write to me at once.

LEMUEL J. PYLES,
Huntersville, W. Va.

A cyclone struck Washington C. H., Ohio, the county Seat of Fayette, on the night of the 8th inst., and almost demolished it. Five persons were killed and 300 wounded.

—An agent wanted to sell the New, Light Running, High Armed Howe Sewing Machine. See advertisement on fourth page.

Commissioner's Sale.

The undersigned Special Commissioner will, by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia, rendered in the chancery cause of J. C. Hutton et als. vs. James T. Lockridge et als., entered on the 16th day of June, 1885, proceed on the

19th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1885,

in front of the Court-house door of said county, to sell publicly to the highest bidder the following named tracts of land belonging to James T. Lockridge, lying on Knapp's creek in said county about four miles east of Huntersville, consisting of 335¾, 791¼ and 307 acres, also a one-half undivided interest in a tract of 2,000 acres lying on the waters of Gauley river, owned jointly by the defendant Lockridge and one Rachel Wallace, and a tract of 200 acres lying on William's river both in this county. The last two tracts are unimproved, but the first three tracts constitute one of the finest farms in the county, highly improved and in a fine State of cultivation, having on it a good dwelling-house, barn and all necessary out-buildings, and about 100 acres of meadow, every acre of which is smooth and easily harvested.

An actual survey of the "home lands" is being made now by the county surveyor and his plat and survey will be exhibited on day of sale. For further particulars apply to the Commissioner at Huntersville, W. Va.

TERMS: So much cash in hand as will pay cost of suit chargable to James T. Lockridge and cost of sale, and for the residue bonds to be given by the purchaser with good personal security falling due in one, two and three years from date, with interest from date, a lien to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

R. S. TURK,
Special Commissioner.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of the aforesaid county do certify that bond has been given by the above said Commissioner according to the requirements of the decree under which he is acting.

Sept17-4t. JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Commissioner's Sale.

The undersigned Special Commissioner by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia, entered on the 16th day of June, 1885, in the chancery cause of R. S. Turk and Chas. P. Jones vs. Nancy J. Bird, will proceed to sell in front of the Court-house door of said county, on a tract of 124 and a tract of 98½ acres of land lying in said county about four miles from Green Bank, near or adjoining the lands of A. A. Wooddell and others, on which there is a good dwelling-house and other improvements.

THE 19th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1885,

TERMS: Cash in hand sufficient to pay cost of suit and sale, and for the residue a credit of six months to be given, the purchaser executing bond with approved personal security for said deferred payment bearing interest from date, a lien to be retained until all the purchasemoney is paid.

R. S. TURK,
Special Commissioner.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the aforesaid court do certify that bond has been given in the above cause according to law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

Sept17-4t.] Printer's fee, $6.25.

THE TIMES OFFICE will furnish you Envelopes and Paper as cheap, if not cheaper, than you can get them any place else in the county.

—We will send 10 copies of THE TIMES one year for $9 cash. Try and get us up a club.

Order of Puclication.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
County of Pocahontas, to wit:

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office, for the county aforesaid, on the [illegible] Monday in September, 1885,

Joseph M. Adams, Plaintiff,
vs.
Zorobabel Allstock and Martha J. Allstock, Defendants.

The object of this suit is to enforce the collection of an open account for goods, wares and merchandise furnished by the Plaintiff to the Defendant, Zorobabel Allstock, upon which account there remains a balance due and unpaid of $46.58, with interest thereon from the 10th day of June, 1884, due as of that date and payable by the said Allstock to the said Adams, and to set aside and vacate as fraudulent, as to creditors, a deed of the said Zorobabel Allstock executed by the said Allstock to his wife, the Defendant, Martha J. Allstock, on the 16th day of August, 1884, conveying to her 99¾ acres of land lying in this county on the waters of Elk river, and to attach and have sold so much of the said land as will pay the amount of the balance of the open account aforesaid, with its interest and the costs of this suit, and it appearing by affidavits filed that the Defendants aforesaid are non-residents of this State, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

JNO. J. BEARD, Clerk.
Printer's fee, $8.75.

Notice to Take Depositions.

To Zorobabel Allstock and Martha J. Allstock:

TAKE NOTICE, That on the 10th DAY OF OCTOBER, A. D. 1885, between the hours of 8 o'clock, A. M., and 6 o'clock, P. M., at the office of the Hotel at Millboro Spring, Bath county, Virginia, I will take the deposition of Luke W. Quick and others, to be read in my behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, and State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and yourselves are Defendants.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

JOSEPH M. ADAMS.

R. S. TURK, Atty. [illegible]
Sept.18, 93-4t.] Printer's fee, $4.75.

—JOB WORK done with neatness and dispatch at this office. Give us a trial.

☞ The following are our agents who are authorized to receive money for us and receipt for same. We omit the post-offices from their names as money paid to them by any party will be at our risk:

Peter D. Yeager.
Wm. H. Hull.
C. B. Swecker.
A. C. L. Gatewood.
Geo. P. Moore.
J. A. Apperson.
J. B. McNeill.
N. J. Brown.
R. W. Hill.
S. C. Gay.

We hope our agents will do all they can in working up new subscribers for us, and thus helping to extend our circulation.

HOME NEWS

GOSSIP CHAT

—Corn cutting, seeding and threshing is the occupation of our farmers at present.

—Mr. C. P. Dorr, of Addison, Webster county, called on us last week.

—Mr. John Moore, of Mingo Flats, passed through town last week on his way home from Bath.

—Master Strickler Hoover has our thanks—with a big T—for a basket of nice plums.

—Notice our new advertisements this week. You may be interested.

—The great exposer of frauds, the Public Herald, published at Philadelphia by Lum Smith, is again on our table. It is only 50ct a year.

—Rev. G. P. Hannah, of the M. P. Church, was in to see us Tuesday.

—Mrs. James W. Warwick and daughter from Bath county were in town last Friday night.

—We learn from a correspondent from Edray that Mrs. Isaac Sharp has been dangerously ill for the past week, but is now better; that Jas. Gibson, Jr., and hands are now working on the road leading from this place to Marlin's Bottom.

—Rev. W. T. Price and family have moved from Rockingham county Virginia to Marlin's Bottom. We are glad to have them in our county. Mr. Price expects to preach at several places in our county in the future.

—Squire Kee and Capt. Jack Apperson were in our sanctum last Friday.

—By posters printed at this office we see that the personal effects of J. B. Kee, dec'd, will be sold on the 25th of September at the late residence of said Kee.

—Mr. W. H. Edwards, one of the survivors of the Cabin Creek railroad disaster a few weeks ago, was in town last week.

—C. B. Swecker sells the genuine improved, high-arm, oscilating Singer Sewing machine, keeps needles and will furnish repairs for all sewing machines.

—"Blood-food" is the suggestive name often given to Ayer's Sarsaparilla, because of its blood-enriching qualities.

DIED.—September the 6th, 1885, near Marlin's Bottom, Joshua B. Kee, aged 79 year.

—The handsome drummer, of Buckhannon, Mr. Charley Barlow accompanied by his better half, was in town over Sunday. Charley couldn't pass off as an unmarried man this time, as one of our merchants said he would have sworn he was not married. This trip gives him away all along the line.

—Miss Mollie Beard left Monday morning for school at Winchester Virginia, accompanied by Mrs. R. S. Turk and Master Cary Forester as far as Staunton. We wish Miss Mollie great success in her studies.

—Mr. Ben Swecker, the funny man of Dunmore, passed through town Sunday on his way to Buckeye to "cry" off the goods of J. S. McNeill at public Auction.

—We understand that a Justice at Mt. Grove, Virginia, a few days ago had occasion to write a warrant for the arrest of a certain party, and used an agricultural report from which to form the warrant. So much time was taken up in preparing to arrest the party, that he became tired of waiting and crossed the mountain into our county. We have not heard whether or not the warrant has ever been finished. There seems to be something in the air at Mt. Grove that has a great effect on the brain.

—Try Ayer's Pills, and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the mischief to body and mind caused by habitual constipation. The regular use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills, in mild doses, will restore the [illegible] to healthy action.

MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's father on Clover creek this county, Hon. C. P. Dorr to Miss Bell, oldest daughter of Dr. Jno. Ligon, by Rev. T. H. Lacy of Lewisburg, on Tuesday the 15th inst. The happy couple left Wednesday on a bridal tour to the groom's native State, Ohio, and will visit Baltimore and other places before they return. May peace, happiness and prosperity ever attend them, is the wish of THE TIMES office.

PREACHING.—Rev. Wm. T. Price will preach at Huntersville next Sunday (September 20th) at 11 o'clock, a. m.; at Harper's School-house, same day, at 3:30, p. m.; at Marlin's Bottom, Sept. 27th, at 11, a. m., and same day at Swago, 3:30, p. m. We hope the people at each of these appointments will come out and hear Mr. Price preach.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—Rev. G. P. Hannah, M. P. Church, will hold his first quarterly meeting on Beaver creek the first Saturday and Sunday in October. Preaching at 10:30, a. m., Saturday, quarterly conference 2, p. m. Services at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, at 10 preaching, also at 3, p. m.

HORSESHOEING CHEAPER.—Hereafter I will furnish and drive No. 2 and 3 shoes all round for $1.00. I will repair Buggies and wagons cheap. Bring on your work early. Z. T. WEBB, Blacksmith, Huntersville, W. Va.

—The following is a list of the teachers and grade of certificate of each who passed the examination last week:

GRADE, No. 1. Miss H. E. Ligon and Mr W. B. Hannah.

GRADE, No. 2. Misses Lillie Campbell, M. A. See, Mary S. Beard, Messrs. John Barnett and T. J. Sullivan.

GRADE, No. 3. Misses Bertie Lockridge, Alice McGlaughlin, Lena McGlaughlin, Ella Kerr and Mr. John Barlow.

Green Bank News.

Corn is most ripe.

Mrs. Elizabeth Riffle, of Upshur county, is visiting friends and relatives at this place.

Mr. McClure Wilfong was married to Miss Fannie Moyers, of Top Alleghany, on the 6th inst.

The village meeting at this place closed last Wednesday night. There were 53 converts, 49 of whom joined the M. E. Church South. Several very eloquent and impressive sermons were preached during the meeting. It was well attended from first to last.

Sept. 14th. SARNAM.

Mill Point Pickings.

Our farmers are busily engaged in cutting corn and seeding. Corn is fine and a large acreage of wheat is being sown.

Mr. Uriah Bird has attached his new engine to his mill and is doing good and fast work. Mr. Isaac McNeel's mill is not doing much on account of low water.

Mrs. Mary Cackley, of this place accompanied by her little niece, Maggie Ruckman, is visiting friends and relatives in Highland county.

Wheat is found to turn out very well when threshed and is of a good quality.

Rev. Jas. E. Moore will soon move from Edray to his new farm near here. We welcome him.

Success to THE TIMES.

Sept. 14th. O. K.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Master Lacy Sydenstricker returned last week from a week's visit to his Grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Levisay, of Frankford.

Misses Lillian Overholt and Pauline McNeel will leave this week for Winchester to attend the Valley Female College. Both are popular young ladies and their many friends are sorry to see them leave.

The farmers are busily engaged cutting up corn and sowing wheat. The corn crop is excellent.

Mrs. Shaver and son, John, spent a week with relatives at this place returned to their home in Bath county on last Thursday.

Miss Edmonia Gum will attend the wedding of Miss Belle Ligon, of Clover Creek, this week.

Mr. Wm. Curry, of Green Bank, is clerking for Mr. E. I. Holt, of this place.

Dr. Bussard and Mr. Grimes, of Iowa, are visiting friends and relatives in the Levels.

Messrs. S. J. Brown, R. C. Hill and Joseph McNeel left this morning with a car load of cattle and sheep for the Baltimore market.

Sept. 14th. [illegible]

From Frankford.

Dr. Berkley and wife from Washington, D. C. who have been spending the past few days at the Frankford House, left this week for Mill Point where they will sojourn a few days.

Mr. M. E. Russell has returned from Baltimore, Md., where he had been purchasing his fall goods.

Mr. J. T. Criss left for New York one day last week, where he expects to spend a few days.

Col. Samuel Ludington passed through town one day last week with a large drove of cattle for the Baltimore market.

Miss Jennie Dunbar is visiting friends and relatives on Muddy creek in this county

Mrs. Coulton and daughter who have been the guests of Mrs. M. E. Russell for the past two months returned to there home in New York last week.

Sept. 14. HIGHLAND MARY.

Edray Items.

The weather is fine and farmers are busily engaged sowing wheat.

Corn is almost ripe and very good.

Willie Scott has left our burg and gone to Mountain Grove to stay with Messrs. Fudge & McClintic.

Mr. Asa S. McNeel has killed another bear recently, being the third one he has killed this summer.

Big racket at Mr. A. J. Smith's last Wednesday night. I wonder what was the matter?

Mr. J. White has gone to Highland county, Va., to teach school.

Mr. Harmon White and Dr. [illegible] Carter have been on the sick list for sometime, but are improving.

Where shall the next Musical Convention be held?

G.

[The above communication should have appeared last week, but did not for want of time.—ED.]

That County Court Order.

Seeing a communication in a recent issue of THE TIMES from Mr. F. A. Renick concerning the road order made by a recent term of the County Court, I am free to say that all whom I have talked with on this subject, heartily endorse Mr. Renick's views. We all believe the fence that is on the lower side of a road on hill-sides is a positive advantage to the road or, at least it is no disadvantage to it. What use is it to put the citizens to several hundred dollars expense for that which does no harm? When we study this subject carefully we see that some of us are paying a quadruple tax on the road already.

1st. We are taxed to repair the roads;

2nd. We are sold out to the different contractors and compelled to work four days or pay $3.00;

3rd. We have to pay so much toll every time we travel over the repaired roads.

4th. We who have land along either side of the road pay as much tax on every acre of the road as on as many acres of our own land.

And a fifth tax comes in on a great many of us, that is, hauling the rock off our meadows thrown in by a pack of ——— who work on the roads.

Fellow-citizens, does this not look a little tyrannical?

Split Rock, Sept. 10th. U. FULLER.

Healthful Vigor for the Girls.

Mrs. Livermore says, in one of her lectures on Girls, "I would give to girls equal intellectual and industrial training with boys. Yes, and give them equally good health, too." When your girls are suffering from paleness and debility, it is a sign that their blood is is poor and thin, and that they need Brown's Iron Bitters. The only preparation of iron that can be taken safely. Miss Berton, Chestnut st., Louisville, Ky., says, "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of rheumatism when everything else had failed."

It is reported that Pocahontas county has not had any rain for three months. The hay crop was a failure and grass is almost burned out, while the corn will be very short.—Braxton Central.

You are very much mistaken, Mr. Central. There has not been a week the past summer but what our county has been blessed with more or less rain. Our grass crop is not as heavy as it was last year, still we have an average crop. The corn crop is said to be as good as has ever been raised in the county if not the best. We further say we have "taters" till we can't rest, and buckwheat "immensely."

—Mr. J. W. Milligan has sold his [illegible] property to M[illegible] and will give possession sometime after October [illegible]. We very much regret to lose him from our town, but hope he may do well wherever he locates.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on the 17th day of June, 1885, in the chancery cause of

Jacob Piles

vs.

John Piles and others,

I shall, as special commissioner appointed in said decree, proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court-house of Pocahontas county on the two tracts of land, one tract containing 615 acres, more or less, lying on the water's of Beaver Lick Creek; the other containing 800 acres, adjoining the first mentioned tract, lying on Stephenson's Ridge, South-East side of Greenbrier River. A portion of this land has been heretofore [illegible] by Isaac Dean, Josiah Moss and others. The unaliened lands will be first sold, either in a body or in tracts to suit purchasers, and then the aliened lands will be sold in their inverse order of alienation. A portion of this land is well timbered. It lies well and is considered valuable farming land. The title is supposed to be clear.

15th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1885,

TERMS OF SALE: So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and expenses of sale. On the balance a credit of six, twelve and eighteen months from day of sale, the purchaser giving bond with good security bearing interest from date of sale.

H. S. RUCKER,
Spec'l Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that bond has been given by the above named Special Commissioner as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Aug 22-3t. Printer's fee, $5.25.

Pocahontas Times.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville W. Va., as second class matter.

Newspaper Laws.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their paper, the publisher may continue to send until all arrears are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take papers from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

Alvon Talk.

There has been considerable stir at this place for the past ten days among Pennsylvania prospectors for iron ore. They have leased mineral lands about here and say they will go to work at once. They have already opened one vein from six to ten feet thick on J. F. Perry's land, and expect to build a railroad from White Sulphur Springs to his store in order to get the mineral out.

800 or 900 guests are at the White Sulphur.

Corn crops are better in this section this year than I have ever seen them.

U. B. Sent.

Gen. U. S. Grant's Pictures.

Do not read this notice, unless you care to read a proposition which, if you accept, will cost you something. We have an engraving made from an oil painting by a celebrated artist of Gen. Grant, for which he sat shortly after his trip around the world. It is in the opinion of critics the best picture of the Dead Hero in existence. The price of the engraving, 21x28 inches, on very heavy steel engraving board, is One and Twenty-five cents ($1.25), postage paid by us. So thoroughly are we convinced of the value of the engraving as a work of art, and its appreciation by the public, that we will mail to any address in the U. S., for inspection, one copy, packed in a heavy paper box, upon receipt of 24c. in stamps to pay postage and packing, upon the condition that the party receiving same send us one Dollar ($1.00) upon receipt of engraving, if it is satisfactory, or return the picture to us if it is not considered worth fully the price asked. We have also a very handsome Cabinet Photo of Gen. Grant, hand finished, which we will mail on receipt of 25c. No album is complete without one. Liberal arrangements will be made with agents. Write for terms and price list. Enclose stamp.

Address William Dickson & Co., Publishers, Box 328, Chicago, Ill.

Notice to Take Depositions.

To Samuel A. Wilson, Edwin T. Dudley, Rodney H. Dudley, Alex. P. Dudley, Ernest M. Dudley, C. W. Blair, L. D. Blair, R. C. Blair and Margaret C. Kotusee:

Take notice, That on the 1st day of October, 1885, between the hours of 6 o'clock, A. M., and 6 o'clock, P. M., at the law office of R. S. Turk, in the town of Huntersville, in Pocahontas county, W. Va., we will take the depositions of John W. Warwick and others, to be read as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, and State of W. Va., in which we are Plaintiffs, and yourselves are Defendants, styled, F. H. Hull's Administrator and widow vs. F. H. Hull's Heirs and others.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

F. E. Hull,
F. H. Hull,
Louisa E. Hull.

R. S. Turk, Atty.
Sollds.] Printer's fee, $6.00.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. III. J. Buchanan Canfield, EDITOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 18, 1886. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 36.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court,	H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney,	R. S. Turk.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	B. C. Dill.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts,	J. J. Beard.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Court,	S. B. Hannah, Pres't. S. H. Clark. Geo. P. Moore.
County Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter.

DISTRICT OFFICERS.

1st (Green Bank) District: Justices, Wm. L. Brown and J. H. Patterson. Notaries Public, Wm. L. Brown, C. O. Arbogast and David McGlaughlin. Constables, Thomas R. Maupin and C. B. Swecker.

2nd (Edray) District: Justices, Geo. M. Kee and Henry N. Hannah. Notaries, Geo. P. Moore and Geo. Baxter. Constable, John A. Young.

3rd (Huntersville) District: Justice, Jas. T. Lockridge. Notaries, H. S. Rucker, R. S. Turk, J. B. Hannah. Constable, C. O. Sharp.

4th (Little Levels) District: Justices, D. A. Peck and D. C. Kinnison. Notaries, Isaac McNeel, N. J. Brown, B. C. Hill, C. P. Bryan, Peter Hill, Jno. W. McNeil, Aaron Hill and Uriah Bird. Constable, B. F. McClure.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the 1st Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June, and 3rd Monday of Oct.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, July, and October. July is levy term.

A FAMILY AFFAIR

BY HUGH CONWAY,

Author of "Called Back" and "Dark Days"

They told him they were very well. "You don't seem to grow a day older. No family cares to vex you. Most men [illegible] 'Bachelors.' A family means responsibility as well as pleasure, you know." Sir Maingay nodded his head contentedly as one who knows all about it.

"We have something to say to you about Beatrice," said Horace.

Now, Beatrice was the very last subject which Sir Maingay cared to discuss with his brothers-in-law. Although they had never said so much, he felt that they altogether disapproved of his conduct with respect to his daughter. He felt that they thought he should not have gone abroad and left her to herself, although she had been so left by her own expressed wish. To some people, especially those whose consciences were ill at ease, the Talberts' grave, unspoken censure was more terrible than vituperation from any one else.

"About Beatrice," said Sir Maingay. "Not ill, I hope? I thought her looking far from well when she left here."

"No, she is not ill—but we are in some anxiety on her account."

"Ah, I think I know. I think I'm quite prepared for what you are going to say."

Horace raised his eyebrows. "You are!" he said. "If so, it will make our task easier."

"Much easier," said Herbert.

"Well, you are going to say that young Carruthers is in love with my girl. He came here once or twice; I saw it then. He told me he was going [illegible]"

"Yes, that's part of what we were going to say." They had decided it was as well to let Sir Maingay know of Frank's ambition.

"Well," said the baronet, "I like Carruthers. Besides he is a kinsman of yours. I assure you, my dear Horace, my dear Herbert, I can never forget the many happy years spent with poor—" he actually hesitated for the name. Think of that all young wives who believe that your husband will be inconsolable should death remove you!—"with a much beloved member of your family."

"Thank you," said Horace, quietly. He recognized the fact that Sir Maingay meant well.

"Besides," continued the baronet, "Beatrice is entirely her own mistress. She had a will of her own. I have no power over her fortune, which, by the by, is almost as large as my own. This is just as it should be, because with those sons of mine it will be impossible for me to add to her income at my death." So he rattled on, bringing out what was really a justification of himself.

"My dear Maingay," said Horace, mildly "would it not be better if you heard what we have to say and make your comments afterwards?"

"It would be a great deal better, Maingay," said Herbert.

From the days of their first acquaintance they had always assumed this air of superiority over the respectable nobleman. He had never even struggled against it. So he obeyed and was silent.

They told him all about Beatrice. Her letter they could not show him, having forgotten to ask Frank to return it. Sir Maingay listened, but did not appear much upset.

"We will of course take any steps you wish, or aid you in any steps you may take," said Horace in conclusion.

"It's unknown, but I don't see any steps to be taken," said Sir Maingay, complacently.

"Neither do we. But we felt it right you should know all about."

"Quite so. As I said, Beatrice always had a will of her own. She is full of strange freaks—full of them. As you know, for some extraordinary reason she wouldn't be presented, and can't live in the same house with her stepmother—"

"Her mother?" exclaimed the Talberts in a breath, and glancing simultaneously at a certain picture on the wall; an upright landscape which filled the space once occupied by the portrait of Sir Maingay's [illegible]."

The baronet colored. "[illegible] my wife, I mean. You may be sure it is but a freak of the girl's. She has her maid with her you say—a respectable, middle-aged woman. Oh, it will be all right. Perhaps she means to write a book. Ladies do all sorts of things [illegible] to write books nowadays. Lady Fanny Seamont went through Patagonia and shot some niggers or something. There's another lady who [illegible] in Italy and Spain. Fancy [illegible], Herbert! You know where [illegible] Spain is. Women do all sorts of out-of-the-way things now."

"Some women," said Horace, severely. His ideal women, if he had one, did no strange things. "However, if you are contented, there is nothing more to say."

"I'm not contented. It's a nuisance to think of a child you love, wandering heaven knows where. But she'll turn up all right again. Ah! here's my wife; we'll hear what she thinks of it."

Lady Clauson entered, looking, as usual, very beautiful. Horace and Herbert rose and greeted her with solemn gallantry. They were always particularly attentive and courteous to Maingay second wife. This the lady attributed to her charms. She was quite wrong. The Talberts were only anxious to show that if Sir Maingay chose to marry again it was a matter of no concern to them.

Lady Clauson was told the news. She turned to her husband triumphantly. As many better bred people sometimes do, she forgot herself. "I always told you she would do something disgraceful," said her ladyship.

"My dear! my dear Isabel!" said Sir Maingay. He glanced timidly at his brother-in-law.

Horace and Herbert rose like two figures worked by one spring. Their calm eyes looked down the [illegible] and concentrated their [illegible] Lady Clauson, who turned very red.

"Madam," said Horace, "the members of our family, and, I believe I may say, of Sir Maingay's family, are not in the habit of doing disgraceful things. Beatrice may have left us unadvisedly, but I am certain her reason, if known, would meet with her father's and with our approval."

Lady Clauson at once saw her mistake, and apologized humbly; an apology which the brothers accepted gracefully. Then, after having been shown the nursery treasures, they took their leave.

"Maingay does not improve as he grows older," said Horace. Herbert shook his head mournfully, as one who wished to gainsay a fact, but dare not.

Lady Clauson, in spite of her apology, told her husband that Beatrice had done something disgraceful. "Oh, no my dear," said Sir Maingay. "It's only a freak. You know, I won't say for what reason, she can't come here to live. Well, she's grown tired of life down at Oakbury. I don't wonder at it. Horace and Herbert are two regular old women. They darn their own stockings, make antimacassars, and all sorts of things. She was ashamed to say she was tired of the life, so went off on her own account."

Here was yet another motive attributed to Beatrice. Nothing is more risky than the attributing of motives. It is as dangerous as prophesying before the event.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A WORD IN SEASON.

After one or two unsuccessful attempts Carruthers found Mrs. John Rawlings installed behind the family counter at No. 142 Gray street. She was very hard at work—no doubt endeavoring to make up for her husband's repeated absence. In her hands she held what appeared like a long salmon-colored two-inch rope, which, by a dexterous twist of the wrist, or some manipulation only known to the initiated, she was rapidly transforming into strange and symmetrical festoons of those [illegible] articles of diet, sausages. Upon learning that Carruthers wished to speak to her in private she wiped her hands on a cloth, and, lifting up a flap, or species of drawbridge, in the counter, begged he would step through and follow her upstairs.

He did so, and was shown into what Mrs. Rawlings called the parlor; a room papered with marbling paper, carpeted with a dazzling carpet; furnished with imitation walnut chairs and couch upholstered in the brightest blue tapestry; the mantelpiece bearing a mirror in a burnished gilt frame, and, among other gay ornaments, a huge pair of those glass vases with suspended prisms known as lustres; the fire glowed very brightly, and was kept in order by a fender and fireirons of flashing steel. It was, in fact, a room which appeared to open its eyes and glare at you as you entered. A man even more anxious and preoccupied than Frank was could not fail to be struck with the general effect. It would have been positively ungracious not to have noticed it.

"What a bright room!" he said.

"It is a bright room," said Mrs. Rawlings in a gratified way. "You see, sir, we often kill as many as thirty pigs before breakfast."

This seemed a digression without bearing upon the main subject. "Poor things!" said Frank, without making it clear whether he referred to the pigs or their slayers.

"At first when I married Rawlings, I found it a melancholy business; so I made up my mind to have everything away from the factory bright and cheerful."

"You have succeeded here," said Frank, as he took the azure-covered chair offered him.

"I hope so. You see, sir," continued Mrs. Rawlings, "every business has its drawbacks as well as its advantages. Many don't like the pork business, but it's a nice clean business—there's no dust about it like there is about baking. I hate dust of any sort."

At another time Carruthers might have been amused and have tried to draw this woman out, but he was now only anxious to hear about Beatrice, so he commenced his inquisition.

Yes; Mrs. Rawlings had been at Blacktown. She had stayed at the "Cat and Compasses." She, or, rather her husband, had believed a little boy to be their missing son. A young lady had called upon her one morning. She gave no name, but she was a tall young lady; very handsome; and with gray eyes; beautifully dressed; in fact, quite a lady.

Would Mrs. Rawlings tell her visitor what had been said or done at that interview? Oh no—never. The good woman shut her eyes compressed her lips, and shook her head slowly and solemnly; the combined effect of these actions being meant to show that Beatrice's communication was forever locked up in the sacred [illegible] of her heart.

Mrs. Rawlings really meant to keep Beatrice's secret, and doubtless had no pressure been applied she would have kept it loyally. But unlucky she was one of those who have to struggle to retain a secret, not only its main body, but little corners which would slip out unawares. In trying to guard Beatrice's secret from her visitor's renewed questions she was like one trying to pack a feather bed into a traveling trunk; as one part was pushed down another part rose up. The words "poor thing!" applied to Beatrice had already raised Frank's curiosity to the highest pitch, and made him believe that the present inquiry was not collateral.

Was he justified in striving to learn what Beatrice wished hid? He thought so. He loved her with a pure unselfish love; so unselfish that he was not endeavoring to find the cause of her flight for his own end, but in order to be able to give her aid if she required it. Yes, the man who loved her had a right to try and learn all about the woman whom he believed loved him. Besides, had Beatrice in any way bound this woman to secrecy? He could scarcely believe it. He fancied that Mrs. Rawlings, as some people will, was making a mystery of nothing. Beatrice may have given her money to withdraw the absurd claim, and she was ashamed to confess the fact.

"Look here," said Carruthers. "I must and will know what took place between you and the lady. I warn you that by concealment you may do her the greatest wrong. You cannot harm her by telling the truth."

Again Mrs. Rawlings shut her eyes and shook her head.

Again Frank pressed her, again and again. She still kept her secret, [illegible] he wrung it from her [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Frank fully [illegible] realized the fact that Beatrice was driven to seek that interview by some great stress, some grievous need. He began to fancy that in spite of her denial in knowledge even of her name, Mrs. Rawlings might be able to tell all about the flight.

"Can you tell me where to find her?" he asked. "I warn you if you withhold her address from me you may do her a wrong which may never be repaired."

He spoke earnestly and impressively, fixing his eyes upon the woman as he spoke. He wished to learn from her looks whether she knew the address or not.

A sudden inspiration seized Mrs. Rawlings. Inspiration may come to a purveyor as well as to a poet. This young man, this eager young fellow, was the cause of all the shame and mischief—what secret was there to keep from him? He might be right; incalculable harm might follow her silence.

"You want to find her?" she asked. "You don't know where she is?"

"I want to find her. I shall never rest until I find her." His manner told Mrs. Rawlings that her inspiration was correct. She rose and spoke with real emotion.

"Yes, sir," she said "go and find her. Go and do what is right. If you are the man, I think your conscience will tell you what to do. Oh, sir, make what amends you can while there is time. Life is uncertain. It is things of this sort which haunt a man on his death bed."

The look of surprise which at first sat on Frank's face turned to one of something like horror. "Go on," he said hoarsely.

"Perhaps I am wronging you," went on the woman. "Perhaps you did not know all. She said the child was born in secrecy. Perhaps you never knew it. But go to her now, sir, and make what amends you can. It's not for me to speak, but what can a gentleman [illegible] a proud-looking young lady like this. Dear, dear! what she must have suffered, poor thing."

Carruthers was ghastly. His hands grasped the table for support. Mrs. Rawlings glanced at him and felt that her impromptu oration was doing its work.

"There, don't take on so," she said kindly. "There may be excuses for you. Old people oughtn't to judge the young too severely."

"Tell me all she said, every word," gasped Carruthers. He had forced the woman to give him this bitter cup, and he meant to drain it to the dregs.

"Oh, poor dear! she told me all. Told me how she had been forced to make her secret known by my husband's claiming the child. My heart bled for her. She told me how no one knew about the baby; how she should have to let all be be revealed unless I helped her. She told me how she had longed for her child, and somehow, I don't know how, managed to get it to live with her or near her. Oh, it's such a pretty boy! Such a pretty boy, sir."

"Where can I find her?" asked Carruthers. Not that he now hoped to learn.

"Where? I suppose somewhere near the child, down at Blacktown. You know the lady's name. I don't. But you'll do what's right, won't you, sir?"

"Yes," said Frank. "I will do what is right. Thank you. Good morning."

He left the room, and departed by the way he had come. Mrs. Rawlings returned to her interesting occupations. She knew the name neither of her visitor nor of the lady whom she had seen at Blacktown, but to this day, when she recalls the look of what she believed to be remorse on the young man's face, she is happy in the thought that it may be a few heartfelt and appropriate words, though only spoken by a humble woman like herself, helped on the great fight of good against evil, righted a wrong, and made a sinner woman happier. May such a mistake occur to many of us! It affords consolation.

A worthy soul, Mrs. Rawlings. Nevertheless, we will now bid her adieu, and hope that the business in Gray street continues to flourish.

But Frank Carruthers! Poor Frank whose [illegible] had led him into such straits! Who had learned the terrible half truth which by a paradox is often greater than the whole. Carruthers walked and walked—out to Gray's road.

(Continued on 4th page.)

Pocahontas Times.

James B. Canfield,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Copy, 1 year, in advance, - - - $1 00
" 6 months, - - - - - - - - - .50
One year, not in advance, - - - - - $1.50.
Out of the county $1.15 per year.
Six months, 60 cts.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 yr.	6 mos.	3 mos.
One Col.	$50 00	$30 00	$18 00.
½ Col.	25 00	17 00	10 00.
¼ Col.	13 00	9 00	6 00.

One Square (10 lines) one week, $1.00
Each additional insertion .50

Local, and Special Notices, five cents a line for each insertion, and no notice inserted for less than twenty-five cents.

Marriage and Death notices free. Obituaries two cents a line.
Seven words to the line.
No subscriptions discontinued until all arrearages are paid.

Sales and Notices, in every case, will be charged to the Attorney or officer making the sale, and must be paid for in advance or on delivery of the certificate of publication.

Huntersville, Thursday, Feb. 18 1886.

The wife of Congressman Barbour, of Virginia, died last week in Washington.

A. N. Williams has been nominated by the President to be postmaster at Parkersburg.

At the revival which is being held at Philippi, Barbour county, more than 50 conversions have taken place.

The pig-tail Chinamen are causing considerable trouble in Washington Territory. Troops have been sent there to put a few of them under the ground, or at least, that is what they have done.

Prof. J. L. Campbell, of Washington and Lee University, died on the 3rd inst. In his death the institution loses a noble professor.

Mr. Joseph Mayse, Commonwealths attorney of Bath county, slipped on the ice, on the evening of the 4th, and fell breaking his leg just above the ankle, both bones were broken.—Sentinel

The Harrison county grand jury at its recent session in found 305 indictments—300 misdemeanors, and five felonies.

Another great and good man passed away, Hon. Horatio Seymour, ex-Governor, of New York, and Democratic candidate for President in 1868, on the 12th inst. Thus the nation loses one of its truest, noblest and purest statesmen.

Congressman Gibson and State Treasury Thompson are getting up a nice fight in Mr. Gibson's district. Gibson wants to be re-nominated and Thompson is trying to get the nomination himself. It is hard to tell how they will come out in the end.

Serious trouble is threatened in the Pennsylvania coke regions. Several hundred strikers have been marching from place to place, burning buildings belonging to coal companies and shooting a few miners who were still at work.

A howling mob of Socialists took charge of a portion of London a few days ago, which caused some lively scenes. They took possession of hotels, sacked them of food & destroyed the furniture, broke into private houses and wrecked them badly. The police were powerless to do anything for some time but finally overpowered the mob and caused peace to reign at "Wa[illegible]." 15,000 persons [illegible]

[illegible]

The United States Treasury has prepared a statement showing that the amount of silver dollars in circulation July 31 last, was $39,294,433, December 31, $52,541,571, February 11, 1886, $51,751,326.

The Raritan river has overflowed its banks and submerged the lower part of New Brunswick, N. Y. All business in the shipyards and coal yards, along the river has been suspended, and the works of the New Jersey Rubber Company have been compelled to shut down.

A bill has been introduced in the U. S. Senate by Mr. Hoar fixing the time for the meeting of Congress in 1887 and every second year thereafter on the first Monday in October, and in 1886 and every second year thereafter on the second Monday of November.

It is reported that Congressman Daniel, of Virginia, fell on the slippery pavement in Washington and injured himself seriously, breaking open his old wound so that the bone protruded.

DEATH OF JOS. B. DICKINSON.—We learn from a correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch that Mr. Jos. B. Dickinson died, on the morning of the 3rd inst., after a brief illness, at his residence near Millboro', Bath county. It will be remembered that it was in Mr. Dickinson's family that Lillian Madison resided prior to her ill-fated trip to Richmond in March last. Mr. Dickinson was a man of irreproachable character and greatly respected.—Spectator.

MRS. GRANT has received a check for $250,000, the first installment of the proceeds from the general's book, and is now more than ever convinced that the pen is mightier than the sword.

A veteran French soldier who served in a number of bloody battles under the great Napoleon, is sawing wood for his daughter's family near Batavia, Ohio. He is over 90 years old, and his name is Louis Christman.

An ancient astronomer predicted that when Good Friday falls on St. George's day, Easter on St. Mark's day, and Corpus Christi on St. John's day, this poor unprotected world of ours would be knocked into smithereens by an irregulated comet. This remarkable conjunction takes place this year? The insurance companies, in the absence of further proof, have not felt justified in raising the rates as yet.

This is what the Philadelphia Times says about the local newspaper:

"The New Year is a good time to consider the generally overlooked claims of the local newspaper. It is the most useful and least compensated and appreciated of all the agencies which stamp the impress of progress upon villages and inland cities. Without the local newspaper, local towns are, as a rule, thriftless and tend to decay.

"It is common for small great men to speak with contempt of the local newspaper. In that they imitate the critic of greater journals which offend by manly criticism; but the village newspaper makes more great men of less material—more bricks without straw—than any other factor in politics, and it is the one ladder on which men climb to local distinction as the beginning of wider fame."

Supreme Court

In this Court, sitting at Charleston, the call of the docket was concluded on Wednesday, and on Saturday, February 6th, the following decisions from this section of the State were announced:

Anderson vs. Gwinn's administrator, from Greenbrier county; opinion by Woods; decree of Circuit Court affirmed.

Hutton vs. Lockridge, from Pocahontas; opinion by Green; decree of Circuit Court reversed.

Bowyer vs. Martin Towney, appellant from Greenbrier; opinion by Johnson; decree of Circuit Court reversed and cause remanded.

Hinton vs. Ellis, from Summers; opinion by Johnson; decree of Circuit Court affirmed.

Moore vs. Harper, from Pocahontas; opinion by Snyder; decree of Circuit Court affirmed.

Burns et al. vs. Robinson et al., from Greenbrier; opinion by Green; decree of Circuit Court affirmed.

NEVER GIVE UP.

[illegible]

THESE ARE SOLLID FACTS.

The best blood purifier and system regulator ever placed within the reach of suffering humanity, truly is Electric Bitters. Inactivity of the Liver, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Weak Kidneys, or any disease of the urinary organs, or whoever requires an appetizer, tonic or mild stimulant, will always find Electric Bitters the best and only certain cure known. They act surely and quicker, every bottle guaranteed to give entire satisfaction or money refunded. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Wm. H. Cackley & Co., Dunmore W. Va.

AN END TO BONE SCRAPING.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes, Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by Wm. H. Cackley & Co Dunmore, W. Va.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on the 17th day of June, 1885, in the chancery cause of

Jacob Piles
vs.
John Piles and others,

and pursuant to an adjournment and continuance made on the 19th day of October, 1885, I shall, as special commissioner appointed in said decree, proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House of Pocahontas county on the two tracts of land, one containing 615 acres, more or less, lying on the waters of Beaver Lick Creek; the other containing 200 acres, more or less, adjoining the first mentioned tract, lying on Stephenson's Ridge, South-East side of Greenbrier river. A portion of this land has been heretofore held by Isaac Dean, Josiah Sims and others. The unaliened lands will be first sold, either in a body or in tracts to suit purchasers, and the aliened lands will be sold in the inverse order of alienation. Part of this land is well timbered. It lies well and is considered valuable farming land. The title is supposed to be clear.

5th DAY OF APRIL, 1886,

TERMS OF SALE: So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and on the balance a credit of 6, 12 and 18 months from the day of sale, the purchaser giving bonds, bearing interest from day of sale, with good security, and a lien will be retained until all purchase money is paid.

H. S. RUCKER,
Spec'l Com'r.

I certify that bond as required by law has been given by the above commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

Feb. 11 4t.] Printer's fee, $6.75.

Notice.

Sealed proposals for keeping the toll at Marlin's Bottom by the year will be received by the undersigned Superintendent until the 20th day of February, 12 M., 1886, either for a given sum, or for a certain per cent of the tolls, or pay the county a certain sum and have all tolls, subject to rates fixed by the County Court or by law. Proposals to be submitted to the County Court at the March Term next for confirmation and contract or rejection.

No 31-4t.] LEVI GAY, Supt.

A Good Discovery.

Mr. Wm. Thomas, of Newton, Ia., says: "My wife has been seriously affected with a cough for twenty-five years, and this spring more severely than ever before. She had used many remedies without relief, and being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery, did so, with most gratifying results. The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years."

Trial Bottles Free at Wm. H. Cackley & Co's., Dunmore, W. Va. Large size $1.00.

Club List.

We will send THE TIMES and Babyland for $1.50 cash. The price of Babyland is $1.00.

[illegible]

An Answer Wanted.

Can any one bring us a case of Kidney or Liver Complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? We say they cannot, as thousands of cases already permanently cured and who are daily recommending Electric Bitters, will prove. Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Weak Back, or any urinary complaint speedily cured. They purify the blood, regulate the bowels, and act directly on the diseased parts. Every bottle Guaranteed.

For sale at Wm. H. Cackley & Co's., Dunmore, W. Va.

An Enterprising Reliable House.

Can always be relied upon, not only to carry in stock the best of everything, but to secure the Agency for such articles as have well-known merit, and are popular with the people, thereby sustaining the reputation of being always enterprising, and ever reliable. Having secured the Agency for the celebrated Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, will sell it on a positive guarantee. It will surely cure any and every affection of the Throat, Lungs and Chest, and to show our confidence, we invite you to call and get a Trial Bottle Free, at Wm. H. Cackley & Co's, Dunmore, W. Va.

Commissioner's Notice.

Felix H. Hull's Adm'r et als.
vs.
Felix H. Hull's Heirs et als.

All persons interested in the above entitled cause will take notice that I have fixed

MONDAY THE 8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1886,

at my office in the town of Lewisburg, Greenbrier county, West Virginia, to carry out the provisions of the decree entered in said cause at October Term, 1885, of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, re-committing said cause to me, to-wit:

To consider the exceptions of the heirs of Felix H. Hull to the commissioner's report, filed in said cause on the 17th day of October, 1885.

To hear and consider any legal evidence that may be adduced before me, and remodel said report as I may be advised so to do.

To state any other matter specially that may be deemed pertinent or required by and of the parties interested to be stated.

J. W. ARBUCKLE,
31-4w. Special Commissioner.

INSURE YOUR HOMES.

I am prepared to insure farm houses in the Agricultural Insurance Co. of Watertown, N. Y., one of the most substantial Companies in the United States.

Call and see me when you come to town.

R. S. TURK.

THOUSANDS SAY SO.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year.

Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Wm. H. Cackley & Co., Dunmore, W. Va.

But the celebrated of all Singers is the Singer Sewing Machine.

It sings in every language; its cheering and thrifty tones are heard in the [illegible]

[illegible]

A Walking Skeleton.

[illegible]

For Hard Times.

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES
—AND—
DEMOREST'S
ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE

BOTH PUBLICATIONS [illegible]

$2.60 [illegible]

DEMOREST'S
THE BEST
Of all the Magazines.

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times at $1.00 Per Year.

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, AND COPYRIGHTS [illegible]

[illegible]

C. A. SNOW & CO.
Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

Pocahontas Times.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville W. Va., as second class matter.

Newspaper Laws.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their paper, the publisher may continue to send until all arrears are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take papers from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

(Continued from 1st page.)

—on and on—without heeding whither. Such grief as he felt to-day was a new experience in a man's life. When some three months ago Beatrice told him she could not love him, the shock as we know was great, but in spite of it Beatrice was still the Beatrice of his dreams. Then there was hope; there is always hope in such cases. But now none! Not a vestige!

He laughed bitterly as he thought of the hours he had spent endeavoring to find the cause of what he had called Beatrice's complaint—of her general apathy and indifference to the world at large. Now he had got at the very germ of the disease. No wonder she was cold and reserved with such a secret to carry—such a dread everhanging her. Poor girl! Poor girl!

He could see how the boy's coming to Hazlewood House had been arranged. Through Mrs. Miller, of course. And by his new light he was able to explain a discrepancy which had always troubled him. On the night she bade him hope and wait, the nurse had told him that Beatrice had saved her years ago from starvation, whereas, Horace had told him that until she came to the house, she was a stranger to them all. He had not thought it worth while to pursue the inquiry.

She, this strangely mannered woman, had made him promise to wait. Wait for what? There was nothing to wait for. Even if he, as he scornfully told himself he could, should forget his manhood and be willing to take Beatrice as his wife even now, he knew that a barrier, never to be climbed, would be raised by her. He did not wrong her in this. He knew that for all that had befallen she was mourning in mental sackcloth and ashes. He had no blame to give her, no stone to cast.

She had not tried to win his love, she had not accepted that love when offered. Too well he knew why. Yet he knew also that she loved him—loved him but would never be his. The thought drove him half mad. No friend of Carruthers' would have known him, as, with heavy brows and bent head he walked through those quiet streets of suburban London.

But why the flight? No new dread, no new danger could have threatened her. Did she after all fly because he was coming to Hazlewood House? Did she fear that her resolution must give way, and with one breath she must avow her love, and with the next tell her lover that love could not be between them? No. A word from her would have stayed his coming. She had even as good as asked him to come. She was not flying from him.

Then the thought of that man who was seeking her came to his mind. He shuddered and bit his lip; he knew not why. But his first thought was to trace this unknown man and hear why he wanted Beatrice.

[illegible] changed. He would not seek him. He had no [illegible]. After what he had this morning heard all inquiries, all information, could but tend to make him more [illegible]. There was nothing now left for him in the world but stern hard work. Work, work, work, the greatest blessing ever given to man.

So he walked on and on, almost [illegible] in his anguish, almost sinking [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. But all the while, do what he could, [illegible] his [illegible] out of her clutches, thinking of her as the calm, fair, stately girl he had known and loved, the one of all the world against whom slander would never [illegible].

[illegible] his [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] his [illegible] had grown wan and [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. All he could now think of was Beatrice and her sorrow. All he asked was to be able to see her and tell her there was one who would ever be as a brother to her. The wild resolve that he would now acquire to her disappearance as calmly as did her unless disappeared. He would find her. He would go to her, take her hand, if it were possible, stand between her and what she had to bear.

But he knew now, or thought he knew, the utmost that life had to give him, and he saw in it a sorry substitute for what it had seemed to promise only a few days ago.

Blame her! Why should he blame her? How had she wronged him?

CHAPTER XXVII.

A HELPING HAND.

To make up one's mind; to vow to find a young woman who had disappeared without leaving a trace is one thing—to find her is another. The world is a place of considerable size, and chance meetings are not so common as the confiding novel reader is asked to believe. Such was at least the experience of two men, who, from different motives, were equally anxious to find the fugitive. The first Maurice Hervey, the second Frank Carruthers.

Hervey, who, having paid a second visit to Oakbury, had in some way managed to learn that Beatrice, the boy and the nurse had gone to London, bade a hasty adieu to Blacktown and returned to the capital. The more he studied the situation, the more apparent it became that, to use his own words, he was in a cleft stick. So long as Beatrice could conceal her whereabouts from him, so long was he utterly helpless. He could, of course, compass a certain amount of revenge but the cost would be too terrible. However sweet a thing may be, it may be bought too dearly. He could walk boldly up to Sir Maingay Clauson and proclaim himself his son-in-law. He could go to these Talberts and show them that he married their niece when she was little more than a school-girl. But what good would this do? His bolt would be shot, and his quiver held no other. It might bring down Beatrice but not her money. He would have to deal with men of the world instead of a woman over whom he held the terror of exposure. He had one article to sell, silence. There was one customer for it, his wife. With her he could trade to advantage, but the moment he broke [l]ook for another market his commodity became all but valueless.

Again, there was that cursed claims in old Talbert's will. Hervey could easily prove that Beatrice was his wife, but in doing so he also proved that she had married, when under age, without her trustees, consent, and the said trustees could do almost exactly as they liked with her fortune! Probably they would throw him two hundred a year so long as he kept out of the way. What was two hundred a year when he knew that had he not insisted on bringing some one's head down to the dust, he might have had ten times the amount? Why had he not taken the money and foregone the revenge?

In fact, Beatrice's flight, although not effected for strategical reasons, was a masterpiece; a move which bound her enemy hand and foot. Savagely he looked forward to the time when circumstances would force him to take the best offer made him. Well he knew that the moment Beatrice nerved herself to reveal the truth to her friends, the moment she elected to confess her girlish folly, and face what shame and blame might be due to her, every shred of power he held would be gone. It was, therefore, imperative he should find Beatrice and reopen negotiations upon a basis more favorable to her. Reflection and the risk he now ran of losing everything made him inclined to lower his demands. He would take fifteen hundred, even a half of his wife's income, and if she wished it would enter into a regular deed of judicial separation. He would be silent so long as the money was paid him better to be silent.

What if he gave out that he was dead and waited until she had married again? Then his sway would be supreme. But to gain this advantage he might lie silent, it might be for years, and in the meantime must somehow make a living. Perhaps, after her former experience, she would not marry again. Any way the state of his exchequer put a veto on the waiting scheme.

(Continued next week.)

Pocahontas Times.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville W. Va., as second class matter.

Newspaper Laws.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their paper, the publisher may continue to send until all arrears are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take papers from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

(Continued from 1st page.)

—on and on—without heeding whither. Such grief as he felt to-day was a new experience in a man's life. When some three months ago Beatrice told him she could not love him, the shock as we know was great, but in spite of it Beatrice was still the Beatrice of his dreams. Then there was hope; there is always hope in such cases. But now none! Not a vestige!

He laughed bitterly as he thought of the hours he had spent endeavoring to find the cause of what he had called Beatrice's complaint—of her general apathy and indifference to the world at large. Now he had got at the very germ of the disease. No wonder she was cold and reserved with such a secret to carry—such a dread overhanging her. Poor girl! Poor girl!

He could see how the boy's coming to Hazlewood House had been arranged. Through Mrs. Miller, of course. And by his new light he was able to explain a discrepancy which had always troubled him. On the night she bade him hope and wait, the nurse had told him that Beatrice had saved her years ago from starvation, whereas, Hervey had told him that until she came to the house, she was a stranger to them all. He had not thought it worth while to pursue the inquiry.

She, this strangely mannered woman, had made him promise to wait. Wait for what? There was nothing to wait for. Even if he, as he scornfully told himself he could, should forget his manhood and be willing to take Beatrice as his wife even now, he knew that a barrier, never to be climbed, would be raised by her. He did not wrong her in this. He knew that for all that had befallen she was mourning in mental sackcloth and ashes. He had no blame to give her, no stone to cast.

She had not tried to win his love. She had not accepted that love when offered. Too well he knew why. Yet he knew also that she loved him—loved him but would never be his. The thought drove him half mad. No friend of Carruthers' would have known him, as, with heavy brows and bent head he walked through those quiet streets of suburban London.

But why the flight? No new dread, no new danger could have threatened her. Did she after all fly because he was coming to Hazlewood House? Did she fear that her resolution must give way, and with one breath she must avow her love, and with the next tell her lover that love could not be between them? No. A word from her would have stayed his coming. She had even at good [illegible] asked him to come. She was not flying from him.

Then the thought of that man who was seeking her came to his mind. He shuddered and bit his lip; he knew not why. But his first thought was to trace this unknown man and hear why he wanted Beatrice.

[illegible] changed. He would not seek him. He had no more to learn. After what he had this morning heard all inquiries, all information, could but tend to make him more miserable. There was nothing now left for him in the world but some hard work. Work, work, work, the greatest blessing ever given to man.

So he walked on and on, almost crying in his anguish, almost feeling in his utter helplessness [illegible]. But all the while, do what he could, he saw his ideal set of her shrine, thinking of her as the [illegible] he had known and loved, the [illegible] against whom slander would [illegible].

Before his aimless walk was ended his [illegible] had grown and [illegible]. [illegible] could now think of was Beatrice and her sorrow. All he asked was to be able to see her and tell her there was one who would ever be as a brother to her. The wild resolve that he would now acquire in her disappearance as calmly as did her unless disappeared. He would find her. He would go to her, take her hand, if it were possible, stand between her and what she had to bear.

But he knew now, or thought he knew, the utmost that life had to give him, and he saw in it a sorry substitute for what it had seemed to promise only a few days ago.

Blame her! Why should he blame her? How had she wronged him?

CHAPTER XXVII.

A HELPING HAND.

To make up one's mind; to vow to find a young woman who had disappeared without leaving a trace is one thing—to find her is another. The world is a place of considerable size, and chance meetings are not so common as the confiding novel reader is asked to believe. Such was at least the experience of two men, who, from different motives, were equally anxious to find the fugitive. The first Maurice Hervey, the second Frank Carruthers.

Hervey, who, having paid a second visit to Oakbury, had in some way managed to learn that Beatrice, the boy and the nurse had gone to London, bade a hasty adieu to Blacktown and returned to the capital. The more he studied the situation, the more apparent it became that, to use his own words, he was in a cleft stick. So long as Beatrice could conceal her whereabouts from him, so long was he utterly helpless. He could, of course, compass a certain amount of revenge but the cost would be too terrible. However sweet a thing may be, it may be bought too dearly. He could walk boldly up to Sir Mahugay Clausen and proclaim himself his son-in-law. He could go to these Talbots and show them that he married their niece when she was little more than a school-girl. But what good would this do? His bolt would be shot, and his quiver held no other. It might bring down Beatrice but not her money. He would have to deal with men of the world instead of a woman over whom he held the terror of exposure. He had one article to sell, silence. There was one customer for it, his wife. With her he could trade to advantage, but the moment he broke back for another market his commodity became all but valueless.

Again, there was that cursed clause in old Talbert's will. Hervey could easily prove that Beatrice was his wife, but in doing so he also proved that she had married, when under age, without her trustees' consent, and the said trustees could do almost exactly as they liked with her fortune! Probably they would throw him two hundred a year so long as he kept out of the way. What was two hundred a year when he knew that had he not insisted on bringing some one's head down to the dust, he might have had ten times the amount? Why had he not taken the money and forgone the revenge?

In fact, Beatrice's flight, although not effected for strategical reasons, was a masterpiece; a move which bound her enemy hand and foot. Savagely he looked forward to the time when circumstances would force him to take the best offer made him. Well he knew that the moment Beatrice nerved herself to reveal the truth to her friends, the moment she elected to confess her girlish folly, and face what shame and blame might be due to her, every shred of power he held would be gone. It was, therefore, imperative he should find Beatrice and reopen negotiations upon a basis more favorable to her. Reflection and the risk he now ran of losing everything made him inclined to lower his demands. He would take fifteen hundred, even a half of his wife's income, and if she wished it would enter into a regular deed of judicial separation. He would be silent so long as the money was paid him better to be silent.

What if he gave out that he was dead and waited until she had married again? Then his sway would be supreme. But to gain this advantage he must lie [illegible], it might be for years, and in the meantime must somehow make a [illegible]. Perhaps, after her former experience, she would not marry again. Any way the state of his exchequer put a veto on the waiting scheme.

(Continued next week.)

THE TIMES and The Practical Farmer both one year for $1.25. The Farmer is a sixteen page WEEKLY, published at $1.00 per annum. It was established in 1855, and is acknowledged to be one of the BEST agricultural journals in the country. We offer our paper and the Farmer for only $1.25.

—We will send 10 copies of THE TIMES one year for $[illegible] cash. Try and get us up a club.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. IV. | J. Buchanan Canfield, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, August 19, 1886. | Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 10.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney, R. S Turk.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, B. C. Hill.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'sCo. Court, S. B. Hannah, Pres't. S. H. Clark. Geo. P. Moore.
County Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

DISTRICT OFFICERS.

1st (Green Bank) District: Justices, Wm. L. Brown and J. H. Patterson. Notaries Public, Wm. L. Brown, C O. Arbogast and David McGlaughlin. Constables, Thomas R. Maupin and C. B. Swecker.

2nd (Edray) District: Justices, Geo. M. Kee and Henry N. Hannah. Notaries, Geo. P. Moore and Geo. Baxter. Constable, John A. Young.

3rd (Huntersville) District: Justice, Jas. T. Lockridge. Notaries, H. S. Rucker, R. S. Turk, J. B. Hannah. Constable, C. O. Sharp.

4th (Little Levels) District: Justices, D. A. Peck and D. C. Kinnison. Notaries, Isaac McNeel, N. J. Brown, B. C. Hill, C. P. Bryan, Peter Hill, Jno. W. McNeil, Aaron Hill and Uriah Bird. Constable, B. F. McClure.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the 1st Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June, and 3rd Monday of Oct.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and 2nd Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

DICK'S WATCH.

BY MRS. L. M. BLINN.

Dear little Dick, curled by the fire,
Sat watching the shadows come and go,
As the dancing flames leaped higher and higher,
Flooding the room with a yellow glow.

His chubby hand on his side was pressed,
And he turned for a moment a listening ear;
"Mother" cried he, "I've got a watch!
I can feel it ticking right under here!"

"Yes Dick, 'tis a watch that God has made,
To mark your hours as they fly away;
He holds the key in His mighty hand,
And he keeps it in order night and day.

"Should he put inside the mystic key,
Or lay his hand on the tiny spring,
The wheels would stop and, your watch run down,
And lie in your bosom a helpless thing."

He crept to my side and whispered soft,
While his baby voice had an awe struck sound,
"I wish you would ask him, mother dear,
To be sure and remember to keep it wound!"

THE WIDOW'S FORTUNE.

BY AN OLD CONTRIBUTER.

Queenie Baronal was little more than a child when the old doctor died. She had married him at sixteen because her father told her to. She had made him a good wife because her nature was as sweet as sunshine, and her temper exceptionally good. The doctor was rather a trial, too; one of those carping, criticising individuals who was never quite satisfied with any thing.

But Queenie did her best to suit her old husband, and succeeded—after a fashion.

"She was very young," said Dr. Baronal, as he lay on his death-bed, "but she was a good and faithful wife. I'm not sorry that I left all the property to her."

There were two children; bright haired, blue-eyed little cherubs, exactly like their mother, and in the society of these dimpled rogues Mrs. Baronal found her happiness.

"Of course she'll marry again," sagely said Miss Lois, Dr. Baronal's maiden sister.

"Why shouldn't she?" said Mrs. Dean, the minister's wife. "There's no law against it, is there?"

"Yes, I know," said Miss Lois, "but if all poor Zedekiah's money is to go to strangers he'd a deal better left a little of it to me and to his own relations. Queenie is well enough, I dare say," (which was a great concession for Miss Lois Baronal to make, "but she's as much of a child as those two boys. What does she know of the management of an estate, I'd like to know?"

And in the kindness of her heart Miss Lois volunteered to come and live with her widowed sister-in-law and help take care of her property. But Queenie was equal to the emergency.

"It's very kind of you, Lois," said she; "but, if you don't mind, I'd rather go on just as we are. I think we should both be more independent:"

And this settled the question.

The pretty young widow had no lack of wooers when her year of crape and bombazine was over. Dr. Haller, who had succeeded to Dr. Baronal's practice, had no sort of objection to succeeding to his wife as well. Lieutenant Bassett, of the Regular Army, had lost his heart to Queenie's larkspur blue eyes and golden braids. And Mr. Malcolm West, the artist, had covered every millboard and canvas in his studio with sketches of Mrs. Baronal's exquisite profile and roguish "three-quarter" face.

"Three proposals in one week said Queenie, solemnly locking the notes into her writing-desk. "Dear me! I certainly can't marry three gentlemen at once. I must think the matter well over before I decide. Doctor Haller is certainly very nice. Lieutenant Bassett is as handsome as Apollo in that new undress uniform of his—and Mr. West would be charming if he wasn't so very shy and reserved. I must consider. Poor, dear old Doctor Baronal always used to counsel me to think three times before I spoke once, but I never could remember to do so. Three times! That will be once for each of them—one good long thought apiece!"

Miss Lois was sitting at tea in the second story lodging over the baker's shop, which she had hired because it commanded a view of the main street and was so handy to the particular church which she patronized, when Mrs. Colonel Newthrope came breathlessly in.

"Poor, dear Queenie!" said she. "Have you heard?"

"I haven't heard anything," said Miss Lois. "Sit down, do, and have a cup of tea."

"Oh! I can't stay a minute," said Mrs. Newthorpe. "The colonel has telegraphed to me to come up and meet him on the six ten train. Poor darling—what will become of her, with those children on her hands! She was crying when I came away. You see— Oh, dear, was that the church clock striking six? I must run to catch my train. But you'll go in at once to see Queenie. She never needed council more than now."

And Mrs. Colonel Newthrope hastened away. Miss Lois Baronal stared very hard at the willow pattern on her China cup.

"No, I won't go in to see her," said she, apparently addressing the Chinaman on the blue bridge under the willow. "She wouldn't accept any advice from me when she was in prosperity, she shan't have the chance now. I knew how it would be. I told her she had neither judgment nor discretion. She has made her own bed, now let her lie on it. I'm sure I don't know how she will manage to support [illegible] and [illegible]. There's nothing on earth that she can turn her hand to. And I shan't help her; she may be very sure of that."

And, with a solemn countenance, which only half-masked the malicious exultation of her secret heart, Miss Lois Baronal put on her best bonnet and respectable Thibet shawl and went out to circulate among her neighbors the fact that "poor dear Zedekiah's wife had lost every cent in the world, and would probably have to send her children to some half-orphan institution to be brought up."

"I always foretold it," said Mrs. Smith.

"Any one could have seen, with half an eye what was to be the end of all Mrs. Baronal's extravagance," groaned Miss Runkel.

"And if any one's pride deserved a fall, hers did!" said Mrs. Judge Harvey, who could not forget that Queenie's black silk dress had cost fifty cents a yard more than her own.

Before noon the next day, every one in the village had heard that Mrs. Baronal's riches had taken to themselves wings and flown away; and that she was left alone in the world with Clare and Eustace to support.

Ds. Haller whistled dubiously when the news reached him, as it promptly did.

"I'm afraid I was rather precipitate in that written proposal of mine," said he. "No man ever ought to put down things in black and white. I have my own way to make in the world, and a penniless widow, with a ready-made family, is hardly the way to further my fortunes. I must extricate myself from the entanglement as soon as I can think up a decent exit."

Lieutenant Bassett was equally taken by surprise. He flung the bouquet of hot-house blossoms which the florist's boy had just delivered into the grate—the boquet which had been ordered especially for Queenie Baronal.

"No you don't, my boy!" said he, facetiously, addressing his own reflection in the mantal mirror. "You know very well that love in a cottage is not your specialty. You never were economical, and never can be. The little widow can do a deal better than you, financially speaking. Let her have what chance she can. And I always did detest those noisy little boys of hers. Well, perhaps things are just as well as they are."

And so the gallant army officer flung away his love as if it had been a glove.

Mr. West, however, heard the tidings with a very different sensation. He put on his hat, and rushed at once to Dr. Baronal's old stone house, without even stopping to think the matter over.

"Queenie poor!" he cried. "Queenie alone and in trouble! This must never be while I can help it. My income is not large, to be sure, but it will be enough to keep her out of poverty. And henceforward, if she will permit me, her welfare must be my first care."

So it came to pass that, of all her suitors, honest Malcolm West was the only one who rallied to her side while the clouds of adversity seemed to hang over beautiful Queenie Baronal's head. She was sitting alone in her little morning-room, when West was ushered in.

"You have heard the news?" she said, glancing [illegible] with a curious questioning light in her eyes.

"I have heard that you are poor, Mrs. Baronal," said the young artist. "And I do not altogether regret it, because I can now prove to you how great a happiness it will be for me to assume all the care and responsibility of your future, as well as that of the children. Tell me, Queenie, will you allow me to work for you, henceforward? For I love you with all my heart."

The tears glistened in Queenie's eyes.

"Lieutenant Bassett has not been near me," said she. "Dr. Haller has gone to Montreal, leaving the medical student in charge of his practice. And yet they would fain have had me believe that they loved me."

"They are pusillanimous scoundrels!" said the young artist, impulsively. "They don't know the very meaning of the word love."

And Queenie said "yes," and Malcolm West felt that he was elevated to the highest heaven of happiness. While Clare and Eustice played on the floor, and ate, unlimited, sugar-candy out of Mr. West's pockets, and the time slipped along until dusk, when in came Miss Lois, looking like Nemesis personified!

"I am very sorry for you, Queenie," said she, lugubriously. "But you know I told you what you might expect all along!"

"Dear me Lois, what are you talking about?", said Mrs Baronal, innocently.

"About your loss of fortune, of course," said Miss Lois, with some acerbity.

"But I haven't lost my fortune," said Mrs. Baronal, composedly.

"Mrs. Newthorpe said that you had."

"She couldn't possibly have said such a thing as that," declared Mrs. Baronal, "because it has not happened. She was here yesterday, just when I was mourning over the departure of Miss Chesney, the children's nursery governess; for I'm quite sure that I never shall be able to replace her. But as for money, I am quite as rich in that respect as I ever was!"

So this was the foundation of the rumor that had so stirred the social circles of the village. And Malcom West had won the beauty and the fortune too.

Lieutenant Bassett said it was "a confounded shame." And Dr. Haller never ventured to look Queenie in the face again.

But Queenie herself smiled roguishly.

"I could not quite decide for myself said she. "So Fate has decided for me!"—N. Y. Ledger.

The Old Bridge of Ayr.

(From the Pall Mall Gazette.)

An act of unpardonable vandalism is going to be committed, if, as report says, the old bridge of Ayr is to be demolished. If when Burns wrote of the bridge of Ayr he could talk of the "poor narrow footpath of a street, where twa wheelbarrows tremble when they meet," it is not surprising that the stones are now dropping from their places and that the auld brig is considered unsafe for traffic. But for close on 600 years it has done its work and that surely is long enough to have earned the repose not of annihilation but an honored national monument. That "conceited gowk," the new bridge, is still quite capable of carrying all who wish to cross the Ayr, and it is difficult to understand what imperative reason there can be for destroying the "brig of ancient Pictish race, the very wrinkles Gothic in his face." And besides its commemoration by the Ayrshire poet the bridge has a romantic interest of its own, having, like the pyramid of Rhodopis, been built at the sole expense of a single lady, though tradition variously [illegible] her motives.

Pocahontas Times.

James B. Canfield,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Copy, 1 year, in advance, - - - $1.00
" 6 months, - - - - - - - - .50
One year, not in advance, - - - - $1.50.
Out of the county $1.15 per year.
six months, 60 cts.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 yr.	6 mos.	3 mos.
One Col.	$50 00	$30 00	$18 00.
½ Col.	25 00	17 00	10 00.
¼ Col.	15 00	9 00	6 00.

One Square (10 lines) one week, $1.00
Each additional insertion .50

Local, and Special Notices, five cents a line for each insertion, and no notice inserted for less than twenty five cents.

Marriage and Death notices free. Obituaries two cents a line.

Seven words to the line.

No subscriptions discontinued until all arrearages are paid.

☞Sales and Notices, in every case, will be charged to the Attorney or officer making the sale, and must be paid for in advance or on delivery of the certificate of publication.

Huntersville, Thursday, Aug. 19, 1886.

Our Delegate.

When we arrived home we found a communication here written from Academy favoring a Webster county man for House of Delegates. We cannot agree with him that Webster county is entitled to the delegate even if that county has never had a chance to vote for U. S. Senator. The man who is sent from this delegate district is sworn to represent his constituents, no matter which county he is from. Webster had the delegate in the last session and it is Pocahontas' turn now. We believe an arrangement was made a few years ago by which Webster was to have the delegate one term and Pocahontas two terms; but, even ignoring this fact, it is nothing but fair that this county should have the delegate—term about. It is claimed by some Webster delegates that their man ought to serve one full term—four years. Now everybody knows that the delegate from Webster county served a full term, which is only two years, and morever we don't believe that a large majority of the people of Webster favor a man from that county. Our correspondent further says that to nominate a man from Webster county will be the means of uniting the Democracy to a man and success will be the result. We cannot agree with him in this matter. To make a success is to nominate a man from our own county. We hope that Webster delegates will come to the convention at this place place Friday with a determination to nominate a man from our county, and pledge themselves to go home and work for his success and never quit work until the election is over and our delegate has a larger majority given him than any delegate has ever had in the two counties.

The Court House.

Our first editorial on this subject was replied to at length by our Edray correspondent. We then had the right under the rules of debate to close by replying to him, which our last editorial only did without attempting to raise any new issue or point. That then ended the matter as this is the rule adopted and followed by us in all discussions of this character. We have this week received a lengthy communication carrying the debate further which to publish would be changing our rule. Our correspondent, therefore, must excuse us for not giving him more latitude than we would ascribe to others, and in no sense would we have him think that his strictures on the editorial manage and ability of this paper in any way hinders us from giving place to his correspondence. The debate has closed under parliamentary rules.

Green Bank Convention.

Pursuant to call of the Democratic Executive Committee the convention met on the 14th inst., and S. B. Hannah was elected Chairman and C. O. Arbogast, Secretary. On motion the chair appointed Wm. F. Arbogast, Dr. C. L. Austin, B. B. Kerr and Wm. Sheets as a committee to suggest the names of ten delegates to represent the district in the convention to be held at Huntersville Aug. 20th, who after consultation recommended the following named gentlemen:

Dr. J. P. Mooman, J. W. Riley, N. B. Arbogast, C. F Moore, Jessie Patterson, Claiborne Ashford, C. A. Lightner, Chas. Pritchard, Wm. B. Hudson and J. P. Wooddell. On motion the Chairman, Secretary and Committee were added to the delegation and Daniel Wilfong and Wm. Cassell were appointed alternates.

On motion it was decided that any one or any portion of the delegates in attendance at the convention are authorized to cast such vote as the district is entitled in joint convention.

On motion the delegates were instructed to request that each district in this county shall be entitled to a vote in joint convention in proportion to their Democratic strength.

On motion Adjourned.

S. B. HANNAH, Chairman.
C. O. ARBOGAST, Secretary.

Edray District Convention.

Pursuant to the call of the chairman of the county executive committee the voters of Edray district met in convention on Saturday 14th inst., to select ten delegates to represent them at the Delegate District convention to be held at Huntersville on the 20th inst.

The convention was called to order at 1 p. m. and Jno. W. Warwick was chosen chairman and T. M. Skiles secretary.

On motion the chair appointed E. D. King, Levi Waugh and S. D. Price to retire and select ten delegates and the following were selected: Jacob Sharp, A. M. McGlaughlin, J. Q. Poage, H. H. McClintic, Jacob Simmons, Geo. McCollum, Wm. C. Mann, Jno. W. Warwick and Wm. M. Sharp. On motion adopted.

By a unanimous vote the delegates were instructed to vote for Levi Gay as candidate for House of Delegates.

JOHN W. Warwick, Chai'n.
T. M. SKILES, Secretary.

Huntersville District Convention.

On the 14th inst., the following delegates were appointed to represent this district in the convention to be held at Huntersville next Friday, 20th inst.: Henry White, Wm. Curry, Hugh P. McGlaughlin, Wm. T. Perry, Wm. Cleek, Preston M. Harper, I. B. Moore, H. M. Locridge, M. F. Herold and R. S. Turk.

A young man from Pittsburg passed through town Monday en route to Staunton. He was riding a bicycle. A man above town saw him and greatly frightened rushed home and told his wife they must have prayer at once, because the day of judgment was coming, sure. He said he knew it because he saw the d——l a straddle of a buggy wheel going up to Beverly after the lawyers.—Philippi Plaindealer.

It is announced that the Administration has concluded to put the Morrison surplus resolution into practical effect notwithstanding its failure to become a law by Mr. Cleveland's omission to give it his signature. A call is to be at once made for $15,000,000 bonds, which, it is alleged, is to be promptly followed by similar calls at monthly intervals. Apparently the President has caught a whisper from the people since his pocket veto of the measure.—Ex.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. F. Renick, of Caldwell Station, Greenbrier Co., is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Sallie Callison, of this place.

Prof. C. A. Brown returned last week from Staunton where he has been attending the Peabody Institute for the past month.

Last week as Mr. Geo. Clark was fixing the rubber block of his wagon he let the ax slip cutting his thumb and hand severely.

Mr. E. I. Holt is off on another trip to Mingo. Of course he wants to see his brother, and he certainly consults him often.

Messrs. C. & W. had a few words about their turkey pasture last week. Mr. C. says he will either pay Mr. W. for his turkey pasture or muzzle his turkeys.

Your correspondent had the pleasure of attending an all day meeting at the Droop last Sunday. Three excellent sermons were delivered to a large, attentive and appreciative audience—one by Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker, one by Rev. Wm. E. Miller and one by Rev. Hannah.

The Beaver Lick Co. are getting along finely with their railroad; will have it to the river by the first of September. Messrs. E. I. Holt and Dr. Bryan went out a few days ago and took the first ride on it.

Miss Bella Clark returned last week from Union, Monroe Co.; where she has been visiting relatives.

August 16th. PRUNELLA.

Dunmore Doings.

Capt. E. A. Smith left for Ronceverte to-day and S. L. Jackson for Staunton.

Rev. Forrest Moore is in Lewisburg.

Mr. Vandyke is gone to Pittsburg.

Mr. B. F. Jackson has bought a farm eight miles from Harrisonburg, Va., and is making arrangements to move there shortly. We are sorry to have so good a neighbor leave us.

Mr. S. C. Gay has moved on the Kerr farm two miles from Dunmore.

Mr. B. F. McElwee wears a twelve-by-six ft. grin—it's a girl.

August 16th. TOM SAWYER.

Jos. Varner, lost a fine cow Sunday last. An investigation developed the fact that several bones about 10 or 12 inches long had gotten into the cow's stomach and grown fast. It is supposed that she either desiring salt swallowed the bones, or they were taken in, in her slop.—Mt. News.

Notes on Schools and Teaching.

BY J. W. FITZ.

As much time and money have been wasted by parents sending their children to the Universities lacking sound training in first class preparatory schools, I am induced to write a few articles on this most important subject.

I know no really first class preparatory school in W. Va. This want must be supplied. We have a vigorous and growing State. The wealth is greater than the educational development of the people.

The people must realize that the publich school is very elementary, and the instruction in them hardly deserves the name of education.

Very many in our state, who would be called rich elsewhere, are utterly regardless of the claims of a higher education.

Let us scout the idea that the public school is a grand thing, but rather let us consider it but the shadow and skeleton of an education.

We need teachers of highly cultivated minds and these cannot be supplied, as long as the people are humbugged with a class of men, who impress them with the belief that "reading, riting and ciphering" are the ultima thule of intellectual growth.

(To be continued.)

High School.

DEAR TIMES:—It may not be generally known among your readers, that a High School has been attempted here.

The first session has just closed. The final exercises occurred Friday afternoon, July 30th. Where all acquitted themselves so well, it would be invidious to give special commendation.

Readings were given by Lock Kee, Willie Price and Florance Price.

Exercises in Elocution were rendered by Misses Jane Moore, Susy Price and Master Norman Price.

A dialogue was given by Maude Kee and Anna McGlaughlin, it was very harmoniously rendered.

Essays upon Home, Africa and American Revolution were read by Miss Eliza Kee and Andrew Jones Price in the order mentioned. A poem prepared for the occasion was recited by Anna D. Price.

The school-room was handsomely decorated with evergreen and wild flowers and the whole it was a most enjoyable affair. It is hoped there is more and better to follow.

The Principal, Rev. Wm. T. Price, having a family to educate has opened the school and proposes to teach along with his own children any who may be induced to attend In the school, comon branches, Mathematics, Languages and Natural science are taught at $1.50 per month. The Principal is an A. M. of Washington & Lee University and has had considerable experience in teaching.

The following is the poem written for the occasion:

School days, like birds on rapid wings,
Are flying fast away;
O. ye, whose time of life it is,
Breathe not a wish to speed their flight,
But rather bid them stay!

Our life; at very best, is short,
Youth, middle years and age.
Appear like actors pressing close,
With eager feet and busy hands
To drive each from the stage.

God wills it thus, we cannot change
Time's rushing, mighty wave—
What can we do? ah question wise!
Now listen well—ye can do much,
The passing years to save.

Perform your duty, fill your sphere,
Love God and fellow-man;
Your banner raise against the wrong,
Shun idleness that deadly sin,
And labor while you can.

Think you we ne'er shall meet the years,
That here will come no more?
Ah! yes, in higher state than this
We'll pass those years in close review
And scan their record o'er!

Then let us all—the young and old
Improve the time that's given.
Be steady youth—be hopeful age—
The race is short, 'tis quickly run.
And unto every faithful one
The end of it is Heaven!

OBSERVER.

HOME NEWS

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce Levi Gay as a candidate for the next House of Delegates from the Delegate District composed of Pocahontas and Webster counties, subject to the decision of the Democratic convention.

—Days are shortening.

—Autumn will soon be here.

—A Barlow and Wm. Curry are first to finish haying hereabouts.

—Mr. R. V. Hill, of Academy, was in our office Monday.

—Mrs. Plunket, of Staunton, is the guest of Miss Clara Sharp of Douthard's Creek.

—Dr. Wm. F. Rucker and wife, of Lewisburg, made the home of their son H. S. Rucker glad with their presence [illegible]

WANTED.—A good, stout boy to look after horses, cut wood, &c.

T. M. Skiles.

—Miss Fannie Scott left Tuesday morning for her home near Lynchburg, Va., which saddened the hearts of not a few and one especially.

—If you are in need of any kind of Job Work, give us your orders and see what we can do for you.

—Don't fill the system with quinine, to prevent or cure Fever and Ague. Ayer's Ague Cure is the specific for this disease, and leaves no poison to produce dizziness, deafness, headache, or other disorders.

—Young, old and middle aged, all experience the wonderfully beneficial effect of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young children, suffering from sore eyes, sore ears, scald head, or with any scrofulous taint, become healthy and strong by the use of this medicine. Six bottles, $5.

WANTED.—Thirty cattle for fall pasture after 15th of September. Address: T. M. Skiles, Marlins Bottom, W. Va.

[illegible] statements sent out by us two and three weeks ago. We wish them to be paid promptly as it will be to your benefit as well as ours. We are much obliged to those who have already settled.

—A nice assortment of Letter and Note heads at this office and thousands of envelopes charming to the eye—all of which we will sell cheap. Come and buy or send your orders by mail.

—Providence permitting, Rev. Dr. Jno. W. Carter, of Parkersburg, W. Va., will preach the funeral sermon, in memory of the late Dr. P. D. Carter, at the church at Edray, W. Va., on Sunday August 22nd, at 11 o'clock, a. m.

LUMBER SAWING.—Parties wishing bills for building or any choice clear lumber for a special purpose, or of extra width and clear, will find it to their advantage to make out their bills and hand me, as I have contracted for sawing and can fill any bills very soon.

H. M. Lockridge.

—We have received the Delineator for September and it is up to its good standard in giving the latest styles and fashions in Ladies', Misses' and children's suits. Send for it. Single copy, 15cents; or $1 per year. Address The Butterick Publishing Company, 7, 9 & 11 West 13th St., N. Y.

—Mr. Randolph Myers and wife, of Augusta county, Va., passed through our town Tuesday on their way home from Elk.

NEW GOODS.—We have received a large assortment of Cassimeres, Jeans, Flannels, &c., from the Greenbrier Valley Woolen Mills which we will sell for cash or wool. "Come and buy. Jas. B Canfield, Agent. Goods at TIMES office.

THE WORLD'S WONDERS.—S. Harold, of Split Rock, is now canvassing the county for one of the latest and best books—"The World's Wonders." It is replete with [illegible] and the name of the author, J. W. Buel, is sufficient guarantee of its merits. He is agent for this and Pocahontas counties. [illegible]

—It is time that the trustees of Huntersville school should be trying to secure a teacher for the coming session. As the board has increased the salary of a first grade teacher $5 at this place, but little trouble should be had in securing a teacher at once. Begin in time.

—We returned the first of the week from Barbour county, and we noticed in that county that the hay crop is short but the oats crop is luxuriant. In Randolph county the hay crop is better and corn will be an average crop. One of the best, if not the best, pieces of corn we saw along the road is Mr. Levi Gay's at the mouth of Stony creek this county.

—The following shows the aggregate value of personal property as assessed in Pocahontas county in the year, 1886:

Green Bank Dist., No. voters, white, 378; col. 2, value of property $85,700.

Edray, No. voters, white, 374; col. 23, value of property $93,410.

Huntersville, No. voters, white, 224; col. 19, value of property $64,865.

Little Levels, No. of voters, white, 353; col. 37, value of property $110,940.

Totals. No. of voters, white, 1329; col. 81, value of property $355,014.

Boards of Education should take notice that there has been an increase in value in some districts by additional assessments since the first Monday in July. These figures show the true value and will be found thus on the book in the Clerk's Office, also in the hands of the Sheriff.

C. O. Arbogast, Assessor, P. C.

Lookout for Burglars.

On last Friday evening while I. B. Moore and family were visiting a near neighbor, his house was entered in broad daylight by some party and things were very much disarranged in several rooms, one closet was divested of considerable clothing, as there was some queensware in it, it was supposed they were looking for something to satisfy the inner man as well. Three suspicious looking women were seen on the road near this house that morning and evening. A liberal reward should be offered for the apprehension of all such parties.

Xx.

TEACHER'S INSTITUTE.—The teacher's institute for Pocahontas county will meet at Marlin's Bottom, beginning 6th of September 1886, instead of Edray as previously understood.

The exercises will undoubtedly be of a character that will richly repay those who are present as Mr. J. W. Hinkle, the Co. Supt. of Greenbrier, a gentleman of superior ability, has been appointed Instructor.

The Trustees of the Presbyterian church there, kindly tendered the use of their building and it being a comodious one will add very materially to the comfort of the teachers.

I earnestly desire all the Teachers, School Officers, and those interested in the schools of the county to be present and participate in the exercises of the Institute.

I have made arrangements with Messrs. Andrew McGlaughlin, Sam. Price, T. M. Skiles and Levi Gay to board the teachers and others at 75 cts. a day. Applicants for board will do well to write in advance of the time to the above mentioned parties, so that if necessary I will seek other places for accommodation should these prove inadequate.

Examination of teachers will be held at the same place commencing promptly at 8:30 a. m. September 13th.

All applicants will be required to present a certificate of attendance at the Institute or a Lawful excuse before they will be admitted.

Yours Respectfully,

H. M. Lockridge, Co. Supt.

—We have received the report of Hon. Jos. S. Miller, Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The collections [illegible] West Virginia during the last fiscal year were $[illegible]

WANTED you to know that one N. Y. fruit tree is worth six Va., or W. Va. trees. They will stand the severest winters uninjured, and hardier in every respect. We warrant every New York tree to be delivered in good condition, and live one year and to be nice, healthy trees.

Apple trees $18.00 per 100, Peach $10.00, Grapes 25 to 50 cts. each. Don't buy until we call.

L. E. Wyckoff, Head agent for the southern States, Huntersville W. Va.

Wm. N. Cootes, Park's. „ Ed. „ } Salesman, Wilson Nurseries; Geneva and Waterloo.

HILLSBORO.

Male and Female Academy.

C. A. BROWN, Principal.

The second annual session of this school will begin September 6th, 1886, and continue a session of ten months, of two terms. The first term will continue four months; the second, six months. The second term will begin the second Monday in January.

LOCALITY AND ACCOMMODATIONS.

The Academy is pleasantly located in the town of Hillsboro, W. Va. The people of this town and vicinity are noted for their hospitality and general good morals. The town has abundance of church advantages. The school building is a large handsome structure containing two rooms well supplied with desks and charts.

COURSE OF STUDY.

1 GRADE,—Orthography, Reading, Writing, and first lesson Arithmetic, Grammer and Geography.

2. Orthography, Reading, Writing, Practical Arithmetic, Geography, English Grammar and History.

3. Elementary Algebra, Higher Arithmetic, English Grammar, Natural Philosophy, Physical Geography, Physiology, Rhetoric and Latin begun.

4. English, Latin, Greek, Higher Mathematics and History, (Sacred).

In addition to the above course, arrangements have been made for thorough instructions in French and in vocal and instrumental music.

Special attention will be given to Orthography, Penmanship, Composition and Elocution.

It found expedient a Literary Society will be organized in connection with the school.

In this school, will be found the latest and most improved methods of teaching.

Examinations will be held at the expiration of each term. Pupils will be required to reach a grade of 75 per cent before dropping a text book.

Montly reports of pupils progress in studies and general deportment, will be sent to the parents and guardians.

EXPENSES.

Tuition per month in 1st Grade,			$1.50.
„	„	2nd, „	2.00.
„	„	3rd, „	2.50.
„	„	4th, „	3.00.

Extra charges will be made for Music and French.

A contingent fee of 15 cts. per month will be charged to provide fuel ect.

(The above expenses apply to the last term, and to those pupils in attendance (gone beyond the Free school limits during the first term).

Good board can be had in and near the town at reasonable prices.

No deductions from tuition charges, except in protracted sickness.

PUBLIC EXERCISES, MEDALS AND PRIZES.

The school will close with public exercises, at which time, a handsome gold medal will be awarded to the pupil who will have reached the highest grade in daily recitations during the session.

Gold medals will be awarded for Oratory. Prizes will be awarded for excellence in orthography, Penmanship and Reading.

REMARKS.

In view of the above advantages offered at Hillsboro Academy, parents should consider well before sending their sons and daughters from the county to attend other schools. "Home first demands our attention."

Parents frequently make a sad mistake in sending their children to college before they have completed the preparatory course at home, hence it is that so many students leave college badly disheartened. Now Hillsboro Academy offers a thorough preparatory course to all that wish to prepare themselves for a more extensive course at college. It is hoped therefore that parents and people generally of this county will give their patronage and influence to building up and sustaining a graded school at Hillsboro, as one of the most suitable locations in the county for such an enterprise.

For further particulars, Address C. A. Brown, Academy, Pocahontas Co., W. Va.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, W. Va., entered on the 21ST DAY OF JUNE 1886

in the Chancery cause of Geo. K. Gay vs. R. F. Little and als. pending in said Court the undersigned will proceed to sell publicly in front of the Court house door of said county to the highest bidder on the a tract of land lying near Edray in said county adjoining the lands of Sam. B. Moore and others containing one acre on which is a small comfortable cottage.

11TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER 1886,

TERMS: A credit of six and twelve months will be given, except as to cash in hand sufficient to pay cost of suit and sale, the purchaser to give bonds for the deferred instalments with approved personal security; bonds to bear interest from day of sale, a lien to be retained as ultimate security.

R. S. Turk, Special Com'r.

I John J. Beard Clerk of the Circuit Court aforesaid do certify that R. S. Turk special com'r, above named has executed bond in the cause as required by the decree under which he is acting.

Teste: John J. Beard Clk.

Aug. 12-4t.] Printers fee, $7.50.

Notice to Creditors.

To the creditors of L. D. Barlow, dec'd:

At the request of J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas County, W. Va., and as such Administrator of L. D. Barlow dec'd, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said L. D. Barlow, dec'd, for adjudication to me at my office in Huntersville on or before the 2nd day of September, 1886.

WITNESS: James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner of accounts of Pocahontas county, this the 14th day of July, 1886.

James W. Warwick, Jr.,
Com'r of Ac'ts. of P. C.

July 15-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.85.

Commissioner's Notice.

Jacob H. Arbogast
vs.
Jacob G. Slaven's Adm'r and als.,
and
Wm. T. Gammon and wife
vs.
Same:

All persons interested in the above mentioned causes will take notice that as Special Commissioner to whom said causes were referred, by a decree entered therein by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, on the 23rd day of June, 1886, to make a report to court of the following matters of account; viz:

1st. What amount of personal assets are now in the hands of S. L. Gibson, late S. P. C. and administrator of Jacob G. Slaven, dec'd, or which may come into his hands applicable to the payment of the debts due by the estate of said J. G. Slaven;

2nd. The exact balance due upon the debt heretofore decreed Jacob H. Arbogast, surviving obligee, &c., from the estate of the said J. G. Slaven;

3rd. An account showing what debts are properly chargeable upon the estate of said J. G. Slaven, dec'd, with their legal priorities;

4th. Whether or not Wm. Curry, special receiver in these causes has collected the bonds in his hands as such receiver and what disposition he has made of same;

5th. What lands are liable to pay the debts due by said J. G. Slaven, dec'd, their location probable value and whether or not the rents and profits of said lands will discharge said debts with their interest and the costs of these suits in five years, and the order in which said lands will be liable to the payment of said debts, [illegible] with any other matter deemed [illegible] by myself or required by [illegible] in interest, I have, therefore, [illegible]

3rd DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1886,

as the time and my office in the town of Huntersville as the place when and where I shall proceed to execute the [illegible]

R. S. Turk, Spec'l Com'r.

Aug. 5-4t.] Printer's fee, $12.15.

Commissioner's Notice.

Peter Buzzard
vs.
John Moore, &c.

All persons interested in the above cause will take notice that the Circuit Court by a decree entered therein on the 6th day of April, 1886, referred the same to the undersigned as a Special Commissioner to ascertain and report the following items of account to court; viz.:

1. What amount of purchase money on the 50 acres of land purchased in this cause by Wm. Moore is still due on the two bonds of $139.00, dated 5th January, 1858, after crediting the amount of the bonds of R. C. Slavider who purchased at a re-sale made of said land on the 9th of May, 1885;

2nd. To whom the funds arising in this suit are due and payable and the amount each is entitled to receive;

3rd. Whether William Moore, the purchaser of the 50 acres of land aforesaid has any estate out of which the residue of the unpaid purchase money due can be realized and also whether his surety, Andrew Idley, is solvent or insolvent.

4th. What heirs of John Moore, if any, have released their right to share in the fund arising in said suit together with any other matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest, I have therefore fixed on as the time and my office in the town of Huntersville, as the place, when and where I shall proceed to take said account.

THE 4th DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1886,

R. S. Turk,
Spec'l Com'r.

Aug. 5-4t.] Printer's fee, $9.25.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on the first Monday in August, 1886.

George F. Burr, Felix H. Robertson and H. S. Rucker, Plaintiff's,
vs.
William S. Burr, Ella M. Burr his wife, the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg Railway Company, and Geo. H. Moffett, trustee for the benefit of said company, defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to enforce a judgment lien for costs in favor of plaintiffs against defendants, amounting to $[illegible], with [illegible] a tract of land conveyed by Wm. S. Burr and wife to George H. Moffett, trustee, by deed recorded at page [illegible] of Deed Book 14, in the County Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas county, West Virginia. And it appearing by affidavit filed [illegible] Wm. S. Burr and Ella M. Burr his wife, George H. Moffett, trustee, are non-residents of this State, and the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg Railway Company is a corporation [illegible] upon whom process [illegible] can be legally served, [illegible] that they do appear here within one month from the date of the first publication of [illegible] to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste: John J. Beard, Clk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q.

Aug. 5-4t.] Printer's fee, $[illegible]

SUBSCRIBE FOR "THE TIMES." $1.00 per year.

[illegible]ahontas Times.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville W. Va., as second class matter.

Newspaper Laws.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their paper, the publisher may continue to send [illegible] until all arrears are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take papers from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

A Sabbath-Keeping Nation.

Our Nation has been pre-eminently a Sabbath-keeping Nation. If we have lost much of the Puritanic spirit in religion, we have not given up the idea that the Sabbath was made for man, and that its observance is not only good for the individual, but highly beneficial to society, and consequently, to the Nation. Nothing is better settled than that a periodical rest-day is a physical necessity. The French Revolutionists, who sought to destroy uterly all Christain institutions, believed they would accomplish much in this direction by obliterating the Sabbath. They were too wise however, not to see that some substitute must be provided, so they ordained that every tenth day should be a rest-day. This was an acknowledgement that the Sabbath was founded on a principle which long experience had proved to be a sound principle. There is no question on this point among the American people. The number of those who would abolish the Sabbath as a rest-day is very small indeed. The Sabbath is really a national institution in this respect, all our governing authorities, National, State and municipal, and all our courts of record refraining from transacting business on that day.

But to individuals the Sabbath should be something more than a rest-day. The law requires the cessation of labor, not only that physical benefits may result but in order that individuals may worship God undisturbed by the noise and distractions of industry and commerce. Our churches open wide their doors, and the throngs enter and pay their allegiance to the King of Kings. It is in such occupations that the individual sanctifies the day, strengthens his own moral and religious character, and fits himself for the highest duties of citizenship. The Sabbath is, therefore, a day of moral education and recuperation, and it will be a sad day for our Nation when, if ever, it ceases to be, in this sense, a Sabbath-keeping nation.

We ask no laws from Congress or State Legislature to command religious devotion. We ask nothing more than compulsory cessation of business, and restraint of immorality from the State. The Church will do the rest. The Church will sanctify the day. The Church will provide such instruction as men need to make them moral and religious beings; and men so educated are the best, the staunchest and the most intelligent citizens, and such citizens are the only source and safeguard of national prosperity.

Let us, then, maintain the Sabbath, not simply by enforcing the laws which compel cessation of labor, but by using the day for physical rest and for the cultivation of our moral and spiritual natures. Thus shall we truly observe and honor it. Thus shall we honor our citizenship in this great Republic, and strengthen the Nation's hands for the work that is before it.—[N. Y. Independent.

Words of Wisdom

Choose always the way that seems best, however rough it may be. Custom will render it easy and agreeable.

The bow cannot possibly stand always bent, nor can human nature or human frailty subsist without some lawful recreation.

Pastime is a word that should never be used but in a bad sense; it is foolish to say that a thing is agreeable because it helps to pass the time away.

There is some help for the defects of fortune, for if a man cannot attain to the length of his wishes he may have his remedy by cutting them shorter.

Worldly faces never look so worldly as at a funeral. They have the same effect of grating incongruity as the sound of a coarse voice breaking the solemn silence of night.

There are moments when by some strange impulse we contradict our past selves—fatal moments, when a fit of passion, like a stream of lava, lays low the work of half our lives.

If heaven consists in a state of holy dispositions and affections, and not in "pearly gates and purling brooks," this is the state we ought to cultivate if we would reach the heavenly life.

Good resolutions are often like a loosely tied cord—on the first strain of temptation they slip. They should be tied in a hard knot of prayer, and then they should be kept tight and firm by stretching Godward.

Farm and Home.

Never feed a horse with hay from a rack located above his head, as a draught beats down which is injurious, and the dust is liable to injure the eyes.—[Montreal Witness.

Paint costs little, but agricultural implements are expensive. By coating the one with the other every season a great saving is made, for agricultural implements may be used many years longer than is usual by the judicious and timely application of paint.—[Albany Journal.

Farmers who grow only a few tomatoes in rich gardens do not generally know that this vegetable is more successfully grown in fields with moderate fertility. There is less exuberance of vine but earlier and higher flavored fruit, with less tendency to rot.

Charcoal is appreciated by fowls of all kinds. The very best is found in charred grain. Corn roasted like coffee and fed once a day, would, no doubt, pay for the trouble in the increased product of eggs. In fattening, the process is much hastened by its use, and we think the meat much more palatable. There are many epicures who would willingly pay a larger price for poultry fattened by the use of charred corn.—[Chicago Times.

Hot water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by the means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For bruises or sprains, apply cloths well saturated with hot alum water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.—[Boston Budget.

A colored woman out [illegible], quarreling with her husband, threatened to drown herself and threw herself into the water. She would surely have drowned but for a passing boatman. It is supposed that the boatman had been waiting for years to revenge himself for some old score or other against the husband.—N. Y. Times.

Wm T. Price

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. IV. J. Buchanan Canfield, EDITOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, September 16, 1886. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 14.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney, R. S Turk.
Sheriff. J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff. B. C. Hill.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'sCo. Court, S. B. Hannah, Pres't. S. H. Clark. Geo. P. Moore.
County Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

DISTRICT OFFICERS.

1st (Green Bank) District: Justices, Wm. L. Brown and J. H. Patterson. Notaries Public, Wm. L. Brown, C. O. Arbogast and David McGlaughlin. Constables, Thomas R. Maupin and C. B. Swecker.

2nd (Edray) District: Justices, Geo. M. Kee and Henry N. Hannah. Notaries, Geo. P. Moore and Geo. Baxter. Constable, John A. Young.

3rd (Huntersville) District: Justice, Jas. T. Lockridge. Notaries, H. S. Rucker, R. S. Turk, J. B. Hannah. Constable, C. O. Sharp.

4th (Little Levels) District: Justices, D. A. Peck and D. C. Kinnison. Notaries, Isaac McNeel, N. J. Brown, B. C. Hill, C. P. Bryan, Peter Hill, Jno. W. McNeil, Aaron Hill and Uriah Bird. Constable, B. F. McClure.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the 1st Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June, and 3rd Monday of Oct.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and 2nd Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Settled the Bill.

A circuit rider in a neighborhood with which he was unacquainted, stopped a man in the road and asked.

"My friend, can you tell me of a place where a preacher can stay all night without money and without price?"

"Yes, in the woods."

"Of course, but can't you tell me of some house?"

"Yes, (pointing,) that one up on yan hill.

"Will it cost me anything?"

"Not a cent."

"Who lives there?"

"Nobody."

"I don't want to stay in a vacant house. Come, now, good man, tell me of a place."

"Wall, I will. Go about two miles down this road, then turn to the left. The fust house you strike will be old sam Potters. He'll take you in."

"But will he charge anything?"

"Not a cent."

"Treat me well, of course?"

"Like yer judge—give you the best in the house."

"Will he feed my horse?"

"He'll founder him if you say so."

"I am a thousand times obliged to you."

"Say," the man called, as the preacher started off, "he's a sorter curis fellar, an' if you ask him how much he charges he'll git mad. Just act like you was at home, and it'll be all right with him."

"Thank you, I'll do so."

The preacher found old Potter to be a tall, gaunt man, with a harsh voice and grizzled beard. Just before bed time the minister asked Mr. Potter if he would join him in prayer.

"Not jest yit," Potter replied. "Jest git down and pray when yer feel like it. Don't wait on me, fur I've got ter feed the hogs afore I go to bed."

After breakfast the next morning, when the preacher's horse had beyn saddled, the reverend gentleman turned to Potter and said:

"When I leave a place I always feel that I was forgetting something."

"Wall, ain't yer?"

"No, I think not," the preacher replied, as he began to fumble in his saddle bags. "No, I haven't forgotten anything."

"I'm pretty sertain that you have. You have forgot to pay me."

"What! I didn't know you charged anything."

"Ter know it now."

"But my dear sir, I am a poor preacher."

"Never hearn you preach, but but jugin' by the way you talk, I reckin you air er po' preacher."

"I mean that I haven't any money."

"Not my fault."

"That's all very well but I can't pay you."

"Then I'll have to take it outen your hide."

"Look here, my friend—"

"Oh, I'm lookin'. Goin' to keep my eyes on you."

"I say that a man told me that I could stay here without charge."

"Yes, but I wan't the man."

"I really can't pay you."

"What, after eatin as much as you have! W'y, parson, you can make a table look the delicatest an' puniest uv any man I ever seen. The very first pass you made, the hind leg of a shoat disappeared, an' then you made a motion at the last pound of butter we had, an' it wasn't no longer for this here arth."

"I admit I was hungry, but—"

"Oh, you needn't admit it, fur I soon diskivered that fack."

"This is surely a very awkward position. I really do not know what to do."

"Settle up, is the only advice I've got to offer."

"But I really can not."

"Then some of your hide must come off."

"I wish you had more soul."

"Yas, an' I wush you had more money."

"You certainly would not commit an act of violence merely for a few dimes."

"Yas b'leve I would."

"My friend, I'm on my way to feed my flock, and—"

"I reckon you think mo'er bout feedin' yourself. W'y, that dish uv cabbage turned pale every time you looked at it. I ken stand er good deal, but when a vidults cyclone comes along it breaks me up."

"I am occupying a terribly awkward position."

"Better squat, then."

"If you'll let me off I'll send you the money."

"No, I'm erfeered that after you begin to feed your flock you won't think uv a sinner like me."

"Well, I declare I am in an awkward position."

"Yas, so I've hearn."

"Is there no way by which we can settle this affair?"

"Oh, yes; pay up."

"But I tell you I have no money."

"Yes, so I've hearn."

"Well, as you have driven me to the wall I suppose I must fight you."

"That's my ticket. Skin yourself."

The preacher took off his alpaca coat, folded it up and put it on a bench, then, after deliberately rolling up his shirt sleeves, he said:

"Just step this way, please."

Mr. Potter stepped that way and was promptly knocked down. He got up just in time to be knocked down again. The next time he got up cautiously and tried to seize the preacher, but was knocked flat on his back.

"Hold on parson," he said getting up, "the bill's paid. Look here," he continued, brushing himself, "you've got to eat dinner with me before you go. At first I didn't think you had much religion, but now I know that you are one of the elect. John take the parson's horse back to the stable; kain't afford to let you go sir. Best man I ever saw. It was old Bill [illegible] that told you to come over here, an' he has been dodgin round all the morning to see you whupped. Say, what bus'ness was you in before you gunter fight?"

"I was a prize fighter," the preacher replied, as he seated himself and smooth-back his hair.

The Record of the Democratic House.

In a partisan debate sprung upon the House in its closing hours by the Republicans, who desired to put on record a burlesque resolution showing what the Democrats did not do, Mr. Randall summarized the results of the Democratic legislation as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, we are all about to return to the people who sent us here, and the record of this House will be weighed and measured by them. The results of our action will be carefully scanned, and the elections will show whether in the popular judgment the party in control of this House to-day should receive the respect and approval for the future of the American people. Let me recite a few of the results of their legislation.

"We have returned to the public domain millions of acres of public lands sought to be unlawfully kept by insatiate corporations, reaching 70,000,000 acres.

"We have entered upon the work of constructing a new navy. We have passed every act that we have been asked to pass for the purpose of bettering the condition of the working people of the United States. We have not in a single instance, so far as I remember, passed through the House a bill in favor of monopolies. We have given the Senate opportunity to join with us in passing an inter-State commerce bill which only forty men on the other side dared to vote against. But for the delay involved in the present proceeding on the other side, we should probably have reached an opportunity of passing a bill to increase the pensions of one-armed and one-legged soldiers.

"Finally, I say deliberately that the appropriation bills as they have passed this House are so far as I know, freer from suspicions or unnecessary propositions than they have been in any congress since the war, whether this remark applies to the appropriations reported from the committee over which I have the honor to preside or those emanating from the other committees having charge of appropriation bills. Whatever may be the result of the next election, I venture to say we have done so well that we ought to command, and I believe will command, the confidence and approval of the American people.

"Nay more; when we came here thousands and thousands of working people throughout the United States were idle. Even in my own city the number ran up to tens of thousands. But to-day, so far as my information gives me knowledge, there are few laboring men who want work and cannot secure it; (applause) and I add that this is due in a large degree to the confidence which this Democratic House and Democratic Executive in direction of good government have given to the American people." (Applause.)

According to an English statistician five men may now do as much work as six in 1838, and eight in 1848.

The first printing done in America was in the City of Mexico, in 1536. There were then 200 printing offices in Europe. The second press was set up in Lima, Peru, and the third in Cambridge, Mass., in 1638.

Why Is It?

A query frequently comes up in our mind when traveling over different portions of this State and beholding the broad expanse of forests here and there; large areas of fertile land waiting for the industrious hands of men to develop them, and make them happy, prosperous homes. Why the over-crowded districts of Pennsylvania and New York do not seek these fair lands in the Sunny South, far away from the frost-bitten lands of their youth.

Our climate is much more mild, our summer and fall season longer, our winters much shorter, and of course, it requires less labor and much less expense to keep both family and live stock the year round.

Our lands will produce equal to the best of the old States, and a much greater variety of products.

We can hardly understand why people will pay $60 to $100 per acre for land up in those frost bitten and barren sections, when better land can be had in our sunny South for $5, $10 and $20 per acre.

We have a distinct recollection of our boyhood days, spent in Beaver county, Pa., of the cold winters and deep snows, of the long cold springs, that crept along until the middle of May before they would let go their icy fetters.

We have made frequent trips back to the home of our youth, only to increase our love and admiration for the blue hills of West Virginia; its sunshine and balmy air that gives us health and vitality.

Again we recognize a much warmer and sympathetic feeling for humanity in the average West Virginian than in our brethren of the North. Our people do not claim to the exquisite refineness aspired by many of the older States, but for real genuine hospitality and disposition to help one another in times of distress or sickness, they have no superiors. Hence, it is not to be wondered that those who leave here are never satisfied until they return again.

We need more muscle, enterprise and capital to develop our State.—Ex.

[The "why" would not be asked if the people of a great part of the State would show more energy in making good roads, advertising their lands abroad, selling off their wild lands at reasonable figures to industrious and energetic farmers from other States and other countries, and above all help build railroads.—Ed.]

Daniel Saved Him.

[Washington Critic.

"Daniel!"

"Yes, madam."

"In cleaning out rooms, etc., preparatory to finding places to hide away canned goods for the winter, I find in one of the wardrobes this great heavy pair of rubber boots with such long tops. Whose are they?"

"The president's, madam."

"Down in the leg of one of them I find this black bottle with a high cork. What is that for?"

"Bait."

"And in the other leg is an old pack of cards wrapped in an oil cloth. Whose are they?"

"Oh! I see. They are a pair left over by President Arthur."

"Thanks, Daniel" —from the adjoining room.

[illegible] enough to kill an adult.

Pocahontas Times.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Copy, 1 year, in advance, - - - $1.00
" 6 months, - - - - - - - - - .50
One year, not in advance, - - - - - - $1.50.
Out of the county $1.15 per year.
Six months, 60 cts.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 yr.	6 mon.	3 mon.
One Col.	$50 00	$30 00	$18 00.
½ Col.	25 00	17 00	10 00.
¼ Col.	13 00	9 00	6 00.

One Square (10 lines) one week, $1.00
Each additional insertion .50

Local, and Special Notices, five cents a line for each insertion, and no notice inserted for less than twenty five cents.

Marriage and Death notices free. Obituaries two cents a line.

Seven words to the line.

No subscriptions discontinued until all arrearages are paid.

☞ Sales and Notices, in every case, will be charged to the Attorney or officer making the sale, and must be paid for in advance or on delivery of the certificate of publication.

Huntersville, Thursday, Sept. 16, 1886.

Democratic Ticket.

FOR CONGRESS—3rd DISTRICT,
HON. C. P. SNYDER, of Kanawha.

FOR STATE SENATOR—8th DISTRICT,
HON. M. VAN PELT, of Fayette.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES—4th DISTRICT, HON. HENRY A. YEAGER, of Green Bank.

We learn from the papers that our nominee for Senator, M. Van Pelt, is improving rapidly and will be out in a short time and start on a vigorous campaign.

A. C. Minear, of Tucker county, was nominated by the Republicans for State Senator from the 10th Senatorial District. He'll not get there, Eli.

Jno. H. Eroll, of Moorefield, W. Va., while gathering his peach crop was seized by two maked men and brutally choked and beaten and afterward shot through the side. He is in a critical condition.

Slight earthquake shocks occur almost daily at Charleston S. C. A hum of industry is heard everywhere in the city, and ere long much of it will be rebuilt.

The earthquake at Charleston seems to have greatly affected the wells in Texas. Some near Fort Worth which yielded the purest and best of water before the shock now yield murky, sulphurous water making the persons mouths very sore who drink of it.

At Augusta, Ga., the topography of the country has changed considerably since the earthquake. Many houses on the sand hills, which could not be seen from the city before are now plainly visible, proving that the land about the city has settled much.

Are They Lucky.

Judge Jno. Brannon received the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 1st District of this State on the the 9th ballot. The convention was one of harmony and success is predicted.

Hon. Jno. A. Hutchinson, of Wood county, received the nomination for Congress by the Republicans in the 4th District of W. Va. He is after Hogg but will never catch him.

Hon. W. R. Morrison has been nominated for Congress from the 18th Illinois District. He will be elected.

When last heard from the Democratic Congressional convention of the 2nd District of Ill. had been in session five days and balloted 80 times and was still unable to make a choice.

Many others in the U. S. have received nominations, but they are not well known enough in this county to merit notice.

The Institute.

The Institute held recent sessions at Marlin's Bottom, September 6th-11th.

It was jointly presided over by Co. Supt. H. M. Lockridge and Prof. J. W. Hinkle, with M. G. Mathews and J. Woods Price, Rec. Sect's. and Chas. Cook, Cor. Sec. About 45 teachers were in attendance, from first to last, making it the largest meeting yet held.

A very long communication would be required to do full justice to the subjects discussed and the ability evinced by persons who took part in the discussions.

Tuesday evening Supt. Lockridge led off on the question "How to secure larger attendance in the public schools?" This was participated in by Messrs. Bing, Gillispie and others.

Kindness to children and sympathy with them in their amusements and friendly visits to the homes of the parents, were recommended as judicious and influential means of awakening interest and securing an iformand full attendance.

Imediately after the question of compulsory attendance was taken up—"Must universal attendance be reached by the enactment and enforcement of a compulsory law or through the education of public sentiment?" This was led off by Wm. T. Price in the affirmative, and opposed by J. Woods Price, Henry Barlow, Supt. Lockridge and others. The Sentiments of the body were strongly opposed to compulsion.

On Wednesday evening Newton S. Bruffey led off in an excellent address upon "Theory and Practice." (See program pp. 15 and 16). Messrs. Dysard, Henry, Prof. Kerr and othes took prominent parts and the topic was well handled in a spirited manner. The Institute seemed to favor few rules but strict observance of the same. Opinion muchdivided as to how far the teacher should exercise authority and oversight. Prof. Kerr would restrict the teacher's authority to the school grounds; the others seem to feel they were responsible as far as the home gate, where the public road was left. Once on parental premises the pupils passed from under the teacher's authority.

A subject not in the program "Necessity of more effective cooperation of teachers, patrons and school officers" elicited earnest and timely remarks from Prof. Hinkle, Supt. Lockridge, J. R. Henry and Woods Price.

Mr. C. B. Grimes presented instructive remarks upon penmanship.

Mr. Woods Price led off in an alphabetic exercise that showed he had given the matter much study.

Prof. Kerr's lecture on "Science of Teaching" was a masterly effort.

The school was defined to be an institution where the young are trained to habits from which proceed the issues of life—for habits control and direct the destiny of individuals in all practical affairs.

On Friday morning Prof. Hinkle lectured on "Education and Instruction."

It was a masterly presentation of the mind and its department. In all the writer has ever listened to upon various occasions when the mind was discussed, he has never heard a better effort upon mental philosophy, for practical utility. It should be published and scattered everywhere among the scholars. The anylysis sketched upon the board would make a most admirable chart for the school room.

The personel of the Institute was very interesting. Many of the choicest young people of the county are conscientiously engaged in preparing themselves for their work, and there is a hopeful future for the school interests. It is expected that there will be over fifty schools in operation this winter in the county.

The following resolutions were adopted:

1. Resolved, That the Legislature be requested to make it unlawful to grant a number three certificate more than once to the same applicant.

2. That the Legislature be hereby requested to make it lawful for Teachers who may have attended county Institutes for full terms, to teach 20 days for the school month, while those who neglect to attend be required to teach 22 days per month.

3. That it is the sense of this Institute that no person should be voted for as County Supt. who does not show by his active cooperation full sympathy with the public school system, and morever that no persons should be supported for members of the Board of Education who do not pledge themselves to promote the interests of common school education.

That to enhance the usefulness of the schools it would be wise to extend the school term from four months to six months in the county of Pocahontas, and Co. Supt. is hereby respectfully requested to ascertain whether such an extension is practicable.

5. That the members of this Institute would hereby express most heartily their grateful appreciation of the faithful and efficient services of the county Supt. H. M. Lockridge and highly instructive lectures delivered by Prof. J. W. Hinkle, aided by Prof. Kerr, during the sessions of this body. These gentlemen deserve far more from the teachers of this county than a mere formal recognition of services so faithfully and acceptably rendered for their improvement and assistance in their ail important work.

6. That the thanks of this body be cordially tendered the trustees of Marlin's Bottom Church for the use of this house, and also to the citizens of the vicinity for the entertainment furnished at their homes.

Wm. T. Price, J. R. Henry, S. N. Bruffy, } Com. on Resolutions.

Resolutions looking to the extension of the course of study, compulsory attendance, where trustees should deem it best for the educational interests of such children as might be hindered by parents from going to school, and discretionary use of other series of text books than McGuffey's, were rejected.

Prof. J. W. Hinkle offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Institute are due and are hereby tendered Rev. Wm. T. Price for his instructive and highly entertaining lecture on the subject of morals and manners and how they should be taught in our schools.

Your correspondent was most favorably impressed and edified by the exercises, and many new ideas were received that will be of much practical use as well as a source of pleasure.

He hopes the teachers will make use of your paper as a medium of interchanging their views and thus enhance ist usefulness as a county Journal. Yours as ever.

OBSERVER.

From all sections of the country come cheerful and encouraging accounts of the revival of business. It is not in the nature of a boom, but a legitimate and healthy activity, which promises to last.—Intelligencer.

Those who are saying we will have no revival of business until a Republican is elected President should take courage from the above clipping from the leading Republican journal in the State.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following Fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement:

John M. Buzzard, administrator of Eli Buzzard.

Jno. M. Buzzard, Administrator of Perry W. Buzzard.

J. W. Warwick, Jr.
Com'r Co. Ct.

It would be a justifiable act on the part of Judge Jno. Brannon, nominee for Congress, to demand money enough of the Register man to run the campaign, for putting such a horrible picture of him in that paper.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas county, West Va., on the first Monday in September, 1886:

Rhoda A. Bloom vs. Jacob T. Kerr et als } IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to enforce the lien of a judgment obtained against the Jacob T. Kerr by the plaintiff Rhoda A. Bloom before Justice James T. Lockridge, Justice of the 3rd District of said county, on the 7th day of August, 1886, for $188.28 with interest from that date the cost of said Judgment against the lands of the said Jacob T. Kerr, and to set aside and annual a deed made by the said Jacob T. Kerr to George H. Moffett, Trustee, for the benefit of the wife of said Kerr who is the defendant Phoebe A. Kerr, bearing date on the 15th of March, 1883, for 255 acres of land, of record in the Clerk's office of the County of Pocahontas in Deed Book 15 page 430, and have sale of said land to satisfy said debt, cost &c.; and it appearing by affidavit filed, that George H. Moffett, Trustee, is a non-resident of the State of West Va., it is ordered that he appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste: JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
R. S. TURK, p. q.
Sept. 9-4t.] Printer's fee, $5.12.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on the first Monday in September, 1886:

Robert Strong, Plaintiff,
vs.
Joseph Britton, Abner W. Jones, David K. Cartter, John Coltcher, Peres C. Lyman and J. D. Swift, Defendants,
IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to set aside and annul an instrument of writing purporting to be a deed from Joseph Britton to Abner W. Jones, dated the sixth day of February, 1872, and recorded in the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, conveying a certain tract of land containing forty-four thousand acres of land, more or less, described in said proceedings;

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants are all non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste: JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
JOHN COITCHER, p. q.
Sept. 9-4t.] Printer's fee, $7.98.

Notice to Take Depositions.

To Joseph Britton, Abner W. Jones, David K. Cartter, John Coitchen, Peres C. Lyman and J. D. Swift:

You will please take notice that I will proceed to take the depositions of said Joseph Britton, I. Norton Wise, Samuel Strong and others to be read as evidence in my behalf in a Chancery Suit in which I am plaintiff and the said Joseph Britton et als. are defendants, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia. Said depositions will be taken at the office of John Coitcher, No. 505, D. Str., N. W. in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, on the 2nd DAY OF OCTOBER, 1886,

between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M., and if said depositions are not begun or completed at that time and place the taking of the same will be continued from time to time and adjourned from place to place until completed.

ROBERT STRONG.
Printer's fee, $6.35.

HOME NEWS

—If you are in need of any kind of Job Work, give us your orders and see what we can do for you.

—A quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church, South, will be held at Sunset next Sunday (Sept 19th.) Let all attend.

—A pleasant shower of rain last Sunday was quite reviving.

—Mr. Dunlap, of Kerr's creek, Rockbridge county, Va., made us a paying call last Saturday.

—Messrs. H. P. McGlaughlin and M. H. Corbett thrashed 224 bushels of oats last week.

—President Cleveland gets time to go fishing, but we do not; therefore, it is harder to run a county paper than the Presidency.

—Randolph county court has again submitted the proposition to the people of that county to vote $60,000 to the G. & G. R. R. Randolph county knows how to keep up with this progressive age.

—Assessor C. O. Arbogast was in town Tuesday.

GIVEN AWAY.—The POCAHONTAS TIMES—for $1.00 per year.

—C. P. Dorr and family are visiting friends in Pocahontas.—Echo.

PROTRACTED MEETING—Rev. W. G. Cassard will commence a protracted meeting at the church in Huntersville on next Sunday night (Sept. 18th.) which will likely continue several days. Everybody is requested to attend and make the meeting throughout a means of much good to all.

—We will send 10 copies of THE TIMES one year for $9 cash. Try and get us up a club.

—Take Ayer's Pills and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the sufferings of body and mind, caused by habitual constipation. A moderate use of Ayer's Pills will invariably regulate the bowells.

—THE TIMES will be sent to any address in the county 3 months for 25 cts. Subscribe for it yourself and ask your neighbor to subscribe.

—Canker humors of every description, whether in the mouth, throat, or stomach, are expelled from the system by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other remedy can compare with this as a cure for all diseases originating in impure or impoverished blood.

NOTICE.—New Partner; New Goods; New Programe. Come all and see what bargains you can buy at Split Rock, W. Va., of Hannah & Hamilton.

Sept. 1st, '86.

All parties indebted to me at Split Rock must close up by the 1st of October, after that time you are liable to cost. Respectfully,

Frost, W. Va. J. B. HANNAH.

—The lady who was robbed of her pocket-book in Union on the 25th ultimo was Miss Sue Beard of Pocahontas county, instead of Miss Lillie Beard of Greenbrier, as at first reported.—Watchman.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. J. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats Sept. 3rd and remain 4 days; Big Spring Sept. 8th and remain 4 days; Elk (Wm. Gibson's) Sept. 13th and remain 3 days; Edray Sept. 16th and remain 8 days. Those desiring Dental work done will please be prompt as to dates.

—Subscribe for THE TIMES.

WANTED you to know that one N. Y. fruit tree is worth six Va., or W. Va. trees. They will stand the severest winters uninjured, and hardier in every respect. We warrant every New York tree to be delivered in good condition, and live one year, and to be nice, healthy trees.

Apple trees $[illegible] per 100; Peach $[illegible]; Grapes [illegible] cts. each. Don't buy until we call.

L. E. WEIRICK, Head agent for the southern States, Huntersville W. Va.

10 reliable agents wanted. Address as above with stamp.

—In another column will be found an advertisement of Sam Jones' Book.

—Mr. Allen Coulter, of Spice Run, made us a paying call on Monday last. Mr. Coulter is one of those big hearted gentleman who wish to see the hard-worked printer live and receive the cash for his work.

—The Delineator for October is before us. You who want to be in the latest fashion, send for it. 15 cents single copy, or $1 per year. Address the Butterick Publishing Company, 7, 9 & 11 W. 13th St., N. Y.

—Master Amos Corbett while cutting corn last Monday had the misfortune to cut his left limb below the knee very badly.

—A little stranger made its appearance at Jasper Dilley's last Tuesday night. No one had ever seen it before and it could not speak our language. It will, under Mrs. Dilley's idstruction be able to talk in about two years.

RUNAWAY.—Last Monday morning as Mr. Andrew Dilley, living about six miles above here, was starting to town in his carriage accompanied by two other gentlemen, the horse from some cause became frightened and ran down a steep bank, striking the fence with the carriage and throwing the inmates out. The gentleman with Mr. Dilley were considerably bruised, while Mr. Dilley was knocked unconscious for sometime. We hope all may speedily recover.

ELOPEMENT.—On Monday last Mr. J. P. Varner and Miss Sue Ervine, from the upper end of the county, came to town in a carriage and enquired for a minister. It was soon observed that they wanted to end single blessedness and enter double bliss. On being told that no minister was in town they did not seem to be discouraged but started for Frost in search of a minister. They did not high themselves away to Maryland, but as they were past the age of accountability to parents they were determined to be united in their native county by the first minister found regardless of parental dissatisfaction.

[illegible]

Rev. G. S. Wolford, of Highland, is visiting his father Mr. J. H. Wolford on Winterdale street.

The pupils from a distance enrolled at the Academy are Messrs. Sherman Curry, Harry Patterson, Ed. Barckley, Harry Beard and Guy Slaven, of Huntersville. Miss Minnie Apperson, of Marlin's Bottom, Messrs Theo Brinkley, of Renick's Valley, Clauson McNeill, of Buckeye, Charles Hogsett, Jas. Silva, of Millpoint, Will Moore, of Alleghany, Miss Florence Smith, of Mill Point, and Miss Bina Moore, of Sunset.

Miss Ella Renick, of Falling Springs, is visiting her aunt Mrs. Sallie Callison, on Pocahontas Avenue.

Hon. J. W. Holt, of Hamlin, W. Va., is visiting his son Mr. E. I. Holt, on Main street.

Miss Fannie Pollock, of Elmira, Va., is visiting relatives and friends in the Levels.

Miss Laura Hansbarger and Mr. and Mrs. Dean, of Lewisburg, were the guests of Mrs. Wash Hill last week.

Miss Letitia Levisay spent a part of last week with her sister Mrs. Preston Clark.

A party of young ladies and gentlemen of the Levels made a trip to the Cranberry Glades last Friday and spent a very pleasant day exploring them.

Miss Anna Wallace, of Mill Point, left this morning for Lewisburg to attend Lewisburg Female Institute.

Sept. 13th. PRUNELLA.

GOOD RESULT IN EVERY CASE.

D. A. Bradford, wholesale paper [illegible] of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes, that he was seriously afflicted with a severe cold that settled on his lungs; had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery.

Trial Bottle free at Wm. H. Cackley & Co. Dunmore.

Jas. G. Blaine, Jr., is married.

Edray Items.

A Welcome shower of rain here yesterday.

Was it a dance or "hoe-down," at the last Institute, and have teachers good moral characters who engage in such?

Mr. B. F. Strosnider has moved a twenty horse-power steam saw-mill on Stony creek near Cochran's property, and expects to erect a residence in our burg soon. Success to him.

Great preparations for District Conference is going on. If death and eternity could receive as much thought and attention, more souls would be saved and more victors crowned than there will be with present drift of things.

Sept. 13th.

AN END TO BONE SCRAPING.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by Wm. H. Cackley & Co., Dunmore.

We clip the following from the Greenbrier Independent.

Master Cary Feamster returned to Lewisburg last week from an extended visit in Pocahontas county.

Dr. Charles L. Austin and Mr. Brown Moore, of Pocahontas county, paid us pleasant calls last Saturday.

Capt. R. F. Dennis sold his fine bay horse, last Monday to Mr. W. W. Corcoran, of Washington city, for the sum of $300.—This horse was bred by Capt. Wm. L. McNeel, of Pocahontas county.

An Appeal to Members and Friends of Huntersville Circuit, M. E. Church, South.

Having considered ways and means for raising our Missionary appropriation I submit the following plan, hoping that it may meet with general approval: I suggest that each member and friend take upon themselves an assessment of 25c. This sum seems small. Some will want to pay more, but I trust that all will feel called upon to give at least this much. If each person interested will respond to this appeal by giving the amount, a good sum for the Mission cause will be secured, and your pastor will be saved an unending source of worriment. We propose to preach on the subject of Missions at the following places and times: Huntersville, Sunday Sept. 19th 7:30 P. M.; Edray (Mt. Pleasant), Sunday Sept. 26th, 10:30 A. M.; Stony Bottom Sunday Sept. 12th at 7:30 P. M.; Back Alleghany, Sunday Sept. 26th at 7:30 P. M.; Sunset, Sunday Oct. 17th at 11 A. M. A collection will be taken up at these services and we will be very grateful if our friends respond in the measure indicated. All sorts of means are employed to get money for this good object, some of which are questionable. We ask you now to give upon grounds of gratitude alone. A man who can live in this age of happiness and prosperity and yet without giving so small a sum to help cary the Gospel to dying nations, deserves to be shut out of Heaven; and the man who can yet give because he is grateful to God, need not give at all—a curse would otherwise attach to his money and it would be "a stench in God's nostrils." Please consider this matter well and give a portion of what God has given you.

Very truly,
W. G. Cassard, P. C.

The Monroe Watchman thinks Mr. Blaine's speech was the legitimate [illegible] of the earthquake as the south must tremble under the denunciations of such a man.

War is almost a certainty in the eastern Hemisphere. Russia would like to annex Bulgaria while the other powers say not. An uprising against British rule is said to have taken place in northwestern India. The people of some of these provinces desire Russian government. England will not allow it only by arms, and to arm it seems they will come.

The Republicans have nominated Wm. H. Flick, author of the Flick amendment for Congress in the Second District. After his nomination he was called upon to make a speech in which he said: "That his opponent W. L. Wilson, was a scholar, a gentleman, and a Statesman; and that he expected no mud throwing in this campaign; that it would be no disgrace to be defeated by him; but to defeat him would be a glorious victory." Wonder what the Tucker Pioneer will say to that sentiment?

A young lady who had not spoken for years in Savannah, Ga., was made to speak by the fright she received from the earthquake. Since then she has gradually gained her voice, and now talks quite fluently.

It is said that Judge Brannon is ten times stronger in Lewis county than when he made the race before. He will be elected.

Commissioner's Sale.

By virtue of decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county entered in the Chancery cause of Paul McNeel's Executors vs. Samuel Auldridge and others on the 22nd of October, 1885, and the 23rd of June, 1886, by the Circuit Court of said county, I will proceed to sell publicly to the highest bidder in front of the court-house door of said county, on

THE 18th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1886,

2,400 acres of land and an undivided half of 2,400 acres lying in said county on what is known as Buckley Mountain about three miles south of Huntersville, known as the Jno. H. Ruckman lands. Said tracts adjoin each other, and are heavily timbered with splendid oak timber.

TERMS: A credit of nine, eighteen and twenty-seven months will be given except as to so much cash in hand as will pay cost of [illegible], the purchaser to give bonds for the deferred installments with good personal security bearing interest from date, a lien to be retained as ultimate security.

R. S. TURK, Spec'l Com'r.

I, the undersigned Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, do certify that R. S. Turk, the special commissioner above, has given bond as required of him by the decrees under which he is acting.

"THE LEE BOOK."

MEMOIRS OF ROBERT E. LEE,

By Gen. A. L. LONG.

A full history of his military service and campaigns, written by Gen. Long, from data collected while a member of the personal staff of Gen. Lee, and from letters and material contributed by the Lee family. Commended by the Governors of Va., and N. C., and approved by the Southern Delegation in Congress.

His private, domestic and personal history, from information heretofore unpublished, furnished by personal friends companions in arms, and leading men of the South, collected and edited with the assistance of Gen'l Marcus J. Wright.

THE WHOLE FORMING A COMPREHENSIVE, ACCURATE AND STANDARD
Memoir of the Illustrious Soldier.

Complete in one volume, about 700 pages, fully illustrated with portraits, maps etc. Sold by subscription only. For descriptive circulars address. J. M. STODDART & CO., Publishers 522 F Street, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS WANTED.

AGENTS WANTED

(either sex) in every town in the United States to sell our New Illustrated editions of

SAM JONES' SERMONS,

With biography of his life; and sermons by his co-laborer Sam Small. Great demand. Selling by hundreds. Prices low. Large commissions. Previous experience unnecessary. All succeed. Write for terms or to save delay, send [illegible] cents in stamps for full outfit.

Address,

E. P. JORDAN & CO.,

400 and 402 North Third St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

Rev. Carter Grubb has been called to the Rectorship of Greenbrier Parish.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

THIS HORSE

IS A GOOD GOER,

And he is going directly to

J. C. LOURY'S

For NEW & CHEAP GOODS.

You can go too and get
BROWN MUSLIN,
BLEACHED MUSLIN,
CHOICE CALICOES,
HARDWARE,
QUEENSWARE, NOTIONS, DRUGS,
SUMMMER HATS,
READY MADE CLOTHING, &c.,

And everything usually found in a good country Store.

Any and all of the above goods will be sold CHEAP for CASH or good country PRODUCE.

Don't forget the place,

J. C. LOURY & SON,

Huntersville, W. Va.

$50 If you think of expending fifty or one hundred dollars in advertising send us a copy of your advertisement, and we will tell you (free of charge), what will be the best possible investment for you to make. Send 10 cents for our 176 page pamphlet. Address, GEO. P. ROWELL & CO'S Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce St., New York.

Notice to Road Contractors.

The keeping in repair the Turnpike road leading from the county line on top of Droop mountain to county line on top of Cheat mountain for five years or more, will be let to contract at public auction in front of the Court-House at Huntersville on THURSDAY, OCTOBER [illegible], next (that being Court day), pursuant to order of Court, in sections of 10 miles or more for the tolls collected thereon, or so much less thereof as bidders may elect, the contractor to collect all tolls pursuant to law, to give bond with approved security, and have the privilege of erecting gates on every section of ten miles, contract subject to ratification by the County Court.

LEVI GAY, Supt.

Aug. [illegible]

Sale of School Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county rendered on the 21st day of June, 1886, the undersigned will proceed to sell publicly on

THE 18th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1886,

in front of the court-house door of said county for CASH the following tracts of land; viz.:

[illegible] acres and [illegible] acres lying on Greenbrier river, forfeited in the name of [illegible] Cunningham, adjoining the lands of Philip Kramer & als.

[illegible] acre lying adjoining the town of Huntersville, and ½ of an acre lying inside the limits of Huntersville, forfeited in the name of Edgar Campbell.

Also [illegible] acres of land lying on Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of Wm. L. Clark & als., forfeited in the name of [illegible] heirs, which lands are to be sold for the benefit of the school fund.

JOHN W. WARWICK,
Com'r School Lands P. C.

Sept. [illegible] Printer's fee, $[illegible]

HOME NEWS

—If you are in need of any kind of Job Work, give us your orders and see what we can do for you.

—A quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church, South, will be held at Sunset next Sunday (Sept 19th.) Let all attend.

—A pleasant shower of rain last Sunday was quite reviving.

—Mr. Dunlap, of Kerr's creek, Rockbridge county, Va., made us a paying call last Saturday.

—Messrs. H. P. McGlaughlin and M. H. Corbett threshed 224 bushels of oats last week.

—President Cleveland gets time to go fishing, but we do not; therefore, it is harder to run a county paper than the Presidency.

—Randolph county court has again submitted the proposition to the people of that county to vote $60,000 to the G. & G. R. R. Randolph county knows how to keep up with this progressive age.

—Assessor C. O. Arbogast was in town Tuesday.

GIVEN AWAY.—The POCAHONTAS TIMES—for $1.00 per year.

—C. P. Dorr and family are visiting friends in Pocahontas.—Echo.

PROTRACTED MEETING.—Rev. W. G. Cassard will commence a protracted meeting at the church in Huntersville on next Sunday night (Sept. 18th.) which will likely continue several days. Everybody is requested to attend and make the meeting throughout a means of much good to all.

—We will send 10 copies of THE TIMES one year for $9 cash. Try and get us up a club.

—Take Ayer's Pills and be cured. Misery is a mild word to describe the sufferings of body and mind, caused by habitual constipation. A moderate use of Ayer's Pills will invariably regulate the bowels.

—THE TIMES will be sent to any address in the county 3 months for 25 cts. Subscribe for it yourself and ask your neighbor to subscribe.

—Canker humors of every description, whether in the mouth, throat, or stomach, are expelled from the system by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other remedy can compare with this as a cure for all diseases originating in impure or impoverished blood.

NOTICE.—New Partner; New Goods; New Programe. Come all and see what bargains you can buy at Split Rock, W. Va., of Hannah & Hamilton.

Sept. 1st, '86.

All parties indebted to me at Split Rock must close up by the 1st of October, after that time you are liable to cost. Respectfully,

Frost, W. Va. J. B. HANNAH.

—The lady who was robbed of her pocket-book in Union on the 25th ultimo was Miss Sue Beard of Pocahontas county, instead of Miss Lillie Beard of Greenbrier, as at first reported.—Watchman.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. J. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats Sept. 3rd and remain 4 days; Big Spring Sept. 8th and remain 4 days; Elk (Wm. Gibson's) Sept. 13th and remain 3 days; Edray Sept. 16th and remain 8 days. Those desiring Dental work done will please be prompt as to dates.

—Subscribe for THE TIMES.

WANTED you to know that one N. Y. fruit tree is worth six Va., or W. Va. trees. They will stand the severest winters uninjured, and hardier in every respect. We warrant every New York tree to be delivered in good condition, and live one year, and to be nice, healthy trees.

Apple trees $15.00 per 100; Peach $10.00; Grapes 25 to 30 cts. each. Don't buy until we call.

L. E. WAGNER, Head agent for the southern States, Huntersville W. Va.

10 reliable agents wanted. Address as above with stamp.

—In another column will be found an advertisement of Sam Jones' Book.

—Mr. Allen Coulter, of Spice Run, made us a paying call on Monday last. Mr. Coulter is one of those big hearted gentlemen who wish to see the hard-worked printer live and receive the cash for his work.

—The Delineator for October is before us. You who want to be in the latest fashion, send for it. 15 cents single copy, or $1 per year. Address the Butterick Publishing Company, 7, 9 & 11 W. 13th St., N. Y.

—Master Amos Corbett while cutting corn last Monday had the misfortune to cut his left limb below the knee very badly.

—A little stranger made its appearance at Jasper Dilley's last Tuesday night. No one had ever seen it before and it could not speak our language. It will, under Mrs. Dilley's instruction be able to talk in about two years.

RUNAWAY.—Last Monday morning as Mr. Andrew Dilley, living about six miles above here, was starting to town in his carriage accompanied by two other gentlemen, the horse from some cause became frightened and ran down a steep bank, striking the fence with the carriage and throwing the inmates out. The gentleman with Mr. Dilley were considerably bruised, while Mr. Dilley was knocked unconscious for sometime. We hope all may speedily recover.

ELOPEMENT.—On Monday last Mr. J. P. Varner and Miss Sue Ervine, from the upper end of the county, came to town in a carriage and enquired for a minister. It was soon observed that they wanted to end single blessedness and enter double bliss. On being told that no minister was in town they did not seem to be discouraged but started for Frost in search of a minister. They did not high themselves away to Maryland, but as they were past the age of accountability to parents they were determined to be united in their native county by the first minister found regardless of parental [illegible].

Hillsboro Happenings.

Rev. G. S. Welford, of Highland, is visiting his father Mr. J. H. Welford on Winterdale street.

The pupils from a distance enrolled at the Academy are Messrs. Sherman Curry, Harry Patterson, Ed. Barckley, Harry Beard and Guy Slaven, of Huntersville. Miss Minnie Apperson, of Marlin's Bottom, Messrs Theo Brinkley, of Renick's Valley, Clauson McNeill, of Buckeye, Charles Hogsett, Jas. Silva, of Millpoint, Will Moore, of Alleghany, Miss Florence Smith, of Mill Point, and Miss Bina Moore, of Sunset.

Miss Ella Renick, of Falling Springs, is visiting her aunt Mrs. Sallie Callison, on Pocahontas Avenue.

Hon. J. W. Holt, of Hamlin, W. Va., is visiting his son Mr. E. I. Holt, on Main street.

Miss Fannie Pollock, of Elmira, Va., is visiting relatives and friends in the Levels.

Miss Laura Ransbarger and Mr. and Mrs. Dean, of Lewisburg, were the guests of Mrs. Wash Hill last week.

Miss Letitia Levisay spent a part of last week with her sister Mrs. Preston Clark.

A party of young ladies and gentlemen of the Levels made a trip to the Cranberry Glades last Friday and spent a very pleasant day exploring them.

Miss Anna Wallace, of Mill Point, left this morning for Lewisburg to attend Lewisburg Female Institute.

Sept. 13th. PRUNELLA.

GOOD RESULT IN EVERY CASE.

D. A. Bradford, wholesale paper of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes, that he was seriously afflicted with a severe cold that settled on his lungs; had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery.

Trial Bottles free at Wm. H. Cackley & Co. Dunmore.

Jas. G. Blaine, Jr., is married.

Edray Items.

A Welcome shower of rain here yesterday.

Was it a dance or "hoe-down," at the last Institute, and have teachers good moral characters who engage in such?

Mr. B. F. Stroanider has moved a twenty horse-power steam saw-mill on Stony creek near Cochran's property, and expects to erect a residence in our burg soon. Success to him.

Great preparations for District Conference is going on. If death and eternity could receive as much thought and attention, more souls would be saved and more victors crowned than there will be with present drift of things.

Sept. 13th.

AN END TO BONE SCRAPING.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by Wm. H. Cackley & Co., Dunmore.

We clip the following from the Greenbrier Independent.

Master Cary Feamster returned to Lewisburg last week from an extended visit in Pocahontas county.

Dr. Charles L. Austin and Mr. Brown Moore, of Pocahontas county, paid us pleasant calls last Saturday.

Capt. R. P. Dennis sold his fine bay horse, last Monday to Mr. W. W. Corcoran, of Washington city, for the sum of $300.—This horse was bred by Capt. Wm. L. McNeel, of Pocahontas county.

An Appeal to Members and Friends of Huntersville Circuit, M. E. Church, South.

Having considered ways and means for raising our Missionary appropriation I submit the following plan, hoping that it may meet with general approval: I suggest that each member and friend take upon themselves an assessment of 25c. This sum seems small. Some will want to pay more, but I trust that all will feel called upon to give at least this much. If each person interested will respond to this appeal by giving the amount, a good sum for the Mission cause will be secured, and your pastor will be saved an unending source of worriment. We propose to preach on the subject of Missions at the following places and times: Huntersville, Sunday Sept. 19th 7:30 P. M.; Edray (Mt. Pleasant), Sunday Sept. 26th, 10:30 A. M.; Stony Bottom Sunday Sept. 12th at 7:30 P. M.; Back Alleghany, Sunday Sept. 26th at 7:30 P. M.; Sunset, Sunday Oct. 17th at 11 A. M. A collection will be taken up at these services and we will be very grateful if our friends respond in the measure indicated. All sorts of means are employed to get money for this good object, some of which are questionable. We ask you now to give upon grounds of gratitude alone. A man who can live in this age of happiness and prosperity and yet without giving so small a sum to help carry the Gospel to dying nations, deserves to be shut out of Heaven; and the man who can not give because he is grateful to God, need not give at all—a curse would otherwise attach to his money and it would be "a stench in God's nostrils." Please consider this matter well and give a portion of what God has given you.

Very truly,
W. G. Cassard, P. C.

The Monroe Watchman thinks Mr. Blaine's speech was the legitimate cause of the earthquake as the south must tremble under the denunciations of such a man.

War is almost a certainty in the eastern Hemisphere. Russia would like to annex Bulgaria while the other powers say not. An uprising against British rule is said to have taken place in northwestern India. The people of some of these provinces desire Russian government. England will not allow it only by arms, and to arm it seems they will come.

The Republicans have nominated Wm. H. Flick, author of the Flick amendment for Congress in the Second District. After his nomination he was called upon to make a speech in which he said: "That his opponent W. L. Wilson, was a scholar, a gentleman, and a Statesman; and that he expected no mud throwing in this campaign; that it would be no disgrace to be defeated by him; but to defeat him would be a glorious victory." Wonder what the Tucker Pioneer will say to that sentiment?

A young lady who had not spoken for years in Savannah, Ga., was made to speak by the fright she received from the earthquake. Since then she has gradually gained her voice, and now talks quite fluently.

It is said that Judge Brannon is ten times stronger in Lewis county than when he made the race before. He will be elected.

Commissioner's Sale.

By virtue of decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county entered in the Chancery cause of Paul McNeel's Executors vs. Samuel Auldridge and others on the 22nd of October, 1885, and the 23rd of June, 1886, by the Circuit Court of said county, I will proceed to sell publicly to the highest bidder in front of the court-house door of said county, on

THE 18th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1886,

2,400 acres of land and an undivided half of 2,400 acres lying in said county on what is known as Buckley Mountain about three miles south of Huntersville, known as the Jno. H. Ruckman lands. Said tracts adjoin each other, and are heavily timbered with splendid oak timber.

TERMS: A credit of nine, eighteen and twenty-seven months will be given except as to so much cash in hand as will pay cost of suit and sale, the purchaser to give bonds for the deferred installments with good personal security bearing interest from date, a lien to be retained as ultimate security.

R. S. TURK, Spec'l Com'r.

I, the undersigned Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, do certify that R. S. Turk, the special commissioner above, has given bond as required of him by the decrees under which he is acting.

Rev. Carter Grubb has been called to the Rectorship of Greenbrier Parish.

Notice to Road Contractors.

The keeping in repair the Turnpike road leading from the county line on top of Droop mountain to county line on top of Cheat mountain for five years or more, will be let to contract at public auction in front of the Court-House at Huntersville on THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9th, next (that being Court day), pursuant to order of Court, in sections of 10 miles or more for the tolls collected thereon, or so much less thereof as bidders may elect, the contractor to collect all tolls pursuant to law, to give bond with approved security, and have the privilege of erecting gates on every section of ten miles, contract subject to ratification by the County Court.

LEVI GAY, Supt.

Aug. 30th-4t.

Sale of School Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county rendered on the 21st day of June, 1886, the undersigned will proceed to sell publicly on

THE 18th DAY OF OCTOBER, 1886,

in front of the court-house door of said county for CASH the following tracts of land; viz.:

336 acres and 3 acres lying on Greenbrier river, forfeited in the name of Ezekiel Cunningham, adjoining the lands of Philip Kramer & als.;

1 acre lying adjoining the town of Huntersville, and ½ of an acre lying inside the limits of Huntersville, forfeited in the name of Edgar Campbell;

Also 300 acres of land lying on Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of Wm. L. Clark & als., forfeited in the name of Jacob F. Seebert's heirs, which lands are to be sold for the benefit of the school fund.

JOHN W. WARWICK,
Com'r School Lands P. C.

Sept. 10-4t.] Printer's fee $6.10

Pocahontas Times.

James B. Canfield,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville W. Va., as second class matter.

Newspaper Laws.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their paper, the publisher may continue to send until all arrears are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take papers from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

FITS—the gift of mother-in-law.

If you are waiting for something to turn up just step on a barrel-hoop.

When an Icelander marries he is not allowed to see his mother-in-law. It might make things warmer up there if he did.

The camphor laurel, from which the camphor of commerce is obtained, has been successfully introduced in California. It is a native of China.

During the first six months of 1886 the value of the manufacturing and mining enterprises of the South increased by about $63,618,000.

An ordinary beetle can draw twenty times the weight of the body and a large horned beetle, which was carefully weighed and allowed to work unmolested beneath a bell glass, drew 42 2-10 times its own weight.

In England the population doubles in 50 years; in the United States, Canada and Australia, in 25 years; in Germany in 105 years, and in France and in countries using the French language, 130 years.

An experiment was made at Pavia in Italy, with two swallows to determine their speed. Two hen birds were taken from their broods, carried to Milan; and there released at a given hour. Both made their way back to their nests in thirteen minutes which gave their rate of speed at 87½ miles an hour.

Births and Deaths.

The following is the number of births and deaths reported by the Assessor of Greenbrier county, for the year ending December, 1885;

The total number of births in the county was 357, divided as follows as to sex—188 males, and 169 females. As follows as to color—331 white, and 26 colored.

The total number of deaths in the county was 132, divided as follows as to sex—68 males and 64 females. In regard to color as follows—118 white, and 14 colored.—Independent.

Governor Ireland, of Texas is said to be an old West Virginia boy having been born and raised on Middle Island Creek, Tyler county. He left home when a small boy, because of the harsh treatment of his step-mother, and went west to expand with the country. No wonder he talks vigorously and independently to the Mexican "Greasers" when they insult the State through one of its citizens. Any other West Virginian would do the same. Hurrah for Governor Ireland!—Ex.

The Hon. Jno G. Carlisle on the Nation's Welfare.

I cannot close without congratulating you that an era of industrial and commercial prosperity has begun; that there is a general revival in business; that mills and factories are again in operation, and that the great crowds of idle men in cities and along the lines of railroads have been called back to the old shops or new ones, and that there is evident general satisfaction and content. Politically the passions engendered by the war and the strife preceding it are dying out, and every American citizen now recognizes that the glory and honor of this great country belong to no one section and to no one class of men, and one of she greatest achievements of the present administration has been that it has secured not only a union of the states but a union of the people. After twenty years the men of the north and south are called together in the national councils, and the only rivalry between them is in pursuit of the welfare of the whole people. If any man cannot congratulate himself over these things, it is because he is not only insensible to the obligations of citizenship, but to the blessings of good government. Let us see that there shall be no failure here. Peaceful and prosperous home rule in America means "home rule in" in Ireland.

The following letter has been received by Mrs. Crow, of Littleton Wetzel county, wife of a prominent merchant, who asked of Mrs. Cleveland her idea as to the proprietory of a woman signing the pledge:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C. Aug. 12, '86

MRS. A. M. CROW:—The subject to which you refer, and ask my advice, is one in which your own conscience must dictate the wisest course for yourself to pursue. You have better opportunities tor knowing how you can do the most good, and it seems to me that should be the standard by which we women should settle all our great questions in life. It rarely occurs that a woman needs for herself the restraining influence of a temperance pledge, but if by placing ourselves under the obligations of such an organization, we can better help our fathers, brothers, lovers and friends, I think there should be no hesitation in the matter. I know something of the Good Templars, and that they do much good work. It is quite certain you can do harm by casting your lot on the side of temperance, and you may do much good. I do not consider it a small matter by any means, and I am glad you asked me the questions. It is encouraging to know of every sister who wants to add her strength to the cause which happily some day will rid our land of ruined men and broken families.

Very truly yours,
FRANCES CLEVELAND.

A Hot Day.

[Carson City Appeal.]

The sun blazed and blazed for hours and hours and never seemed to change its location at all

The shingles turned up on the roofs, and when a man walked round the corner the sweat ran down into his shoes and sprinkled the sidewalk. You could bake a batch of bread in George Hark's refrigerator.

The solder on the tin roofs melted and ran down into the gutters like rain water.

Doc Benton started out with his ice wagon and before he got to the post-office he was running a street sprinkling cart, right along behind, was puffing steam from all the cracks in the box.

These are a few simple facts regarding the weather, called along Main street, and the truthful population of the city, and the Appeal gives them for what they are worth.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Nov. 29, 1888. No. 19.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

[illegible]

AUNT CRANDALL RESIGNS.

Lived in Watch Hill Lighthouse for [illegible] Years.

The little old [illegible] Watch Hill lighthouse is about to lose its keeper, Mrs. Sally A. Crandall. She has resigned her office. Aunt Sally Crandall has dwelt in the lighthouse during the past twenty years, since her husband, Capt. Jared Crandall, took charge of the light. The Captain died ten years ago, and since his death his widow, with her little family, has been the proprietress of the hollow white-painted shaft. For ten years she has climbed the skeleton iron staircase each evening as the dusk crept over the booming ocean, and in that time not a mariner, picking his way over the deep, ever looked in vain for Sally Crandall's light.

The lighthouse is on a green hillock on Napatree point, begirt with a flinty wall of boulders, against which the ocean ceaselessly drives its thunderous billows. A neat white-painted pale encloses the hill, an acre of land, on which Mrs. Crandall's cow crops the short grass in summer, and a dozen geese and forty fowls strut and cackle to the accompaniment of the ringing shore. Aunt Crandall has had a good time all [illegible]. Her circular home is as neat [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

Very Good Advertising.

[illegible]

PITH AND POINT.

[illegible]

"Oh, no; it's for the horse."

[illegible]

When a man pays $1.00 for a little piece of quinine, it is hard to convince him that it is a drug in the market.

Requested to define the word "dentist," Sophie said: "He is a man who pulls out other people's teeth to get something for his own to [illegible]."

[illegible]

[illegible] of Wisdom.

[illegible]

He Was an Old Sailor.

"Can't a feller wait fer his ship?" said a man with red eyes and [illegible] clothes, as he steadied himself against one of the stone posts on the sea-wall along the Battery. He addressed a policeman who was watching him closely. "Can't he wait till his ship is ready to pull out?"

"Yes," said the officer in a tone as if it depended on circumstances.

"Can't he linger where the waves dash high, till the tide is right to [illegible] his ship over the breakwater?"

"Yes, if he's quiet about it."

[illegible]

All the Men were Isaac.

The daughter of a clergyman in this vicinity, who had learned to read very well, recently asked her father's permission to read aloud the Bible to a poor, old, bed-ridden woman. Permission was granted and once or twice a week the little girl took her Bible and read a chapter to the aged invalid.

A week or two passed, and the clergyman himself paid a call upon the old woman, and before he left, he asked her how his daughter progressed as a reader of Holy Writ. The old woman replied enthusiastically that the child was an angel, and had read her some beautiful passages in the life of Isaac.

About a month later, the reading of the Bible having continued under the same auspices, the clergyman once more called upon the old woman. Naturally he repeated his inquiry as to his little daughter's reading, and was surprised when the old woman replied: "Well, she reads very nicely, sir, but I'm getting a little tired of hearing about Isaac."

"Doesn't she read from other parts of the Bible?" the good minister asked, for he was puzzled.

"It may be other parts, sir, but it do all be about Isaac," the old woman made answer.

As soon as he reached home the clergyman called his youngest daughter to him and asked her why she had such a preference for the history of Abraham and Sarah's first-born. "You see, papa, I can't read very well yet, and those long names do bother me so that I thought old Mrs. Brown wouldn't mind if I called all the men Isaac, and that's why."

So by this simple plan Jehosaphat and Jeroboam and Nebuchadnezzar and Melchisedec and all the rest of the polysyllabic patriarchs had been transformed into the simple and easy pronounced [illegible] of the patriarchs.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE RITAL WAY.

How the Indian [illegible]

[illegible]

The Aquatic Spider and Its Diving-Bell.

[illegible]

Popularity of the Spanish Dance.

[illegible]

Mr. Beecher's Estate.

[illegible]

Very Sensible "Japs."

[illegible]

Consumption, Wasting Diseases.

[illegible]

Conventional "Mash" Resembled.

[illegible]

Dramatics and Embroidery.

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

J. R. LOGAN C. P. MOORE.

LOGAN & MOORE, PROPRIETORS.

C. P. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Nov. 29, 1888.

Thanksgiving Day.

Thursday, Nov. 29, has been designated by the President of the United States as a day of thanksgiving to be observed by the American people. It may then be of interest to our readers to glance for a moment at the origin and purpose of the custom which annually calls for the appointment of such a day.

Thanksgiving day corresponds somewhat to the ancient Jewish Feast of Tabernacles or Feast of Ingathering at the end of the year, and possibly may have been suggested by that. According to that ancient festival eight days were set apart for rejoicing and thanksgiving after the ingathering of the harvest. Thanksgiving Day is a feast peculiar to the American people and is observed more especially by the New England States. It is true that in the past the civil authorities of European countries have set apart an occasional day of thanksgiving, to celebrate some particular deliverance or conquest, but it has never been adopted as an annual feast beyond the limits of America, and even in America its observance has not been of long duration. After the first harvest of the Plymouth colonists in 1621 Gov. Bradford called the people together to rejoice and return thanks. In July 1623 a day was set apart to pray for rain, and when the prayer was answered a day of thanksgiving was appointed. Gov. Winthrop, of Massachusetts recommended such a day in 1632. And so on down occasional calls were made, as by President Washington, who in 1789 recommended a day of thanksgiving on account of the adoption of the Constitution, and by President Madison who in April, 1815 recommended thanksgiving for peace. But it was not until 1863, when Lincoln was President that the observance of a day of thanksgiving began to be an annual custom. Since that time the national proclamation has been yearly made by the President, till it has now so firmly attached itself to American institutions that it will not likely be abandoned so long as the American people retain their identity. Usage has also fixed the last Thursday in November as the day to observe. It is proper and consistent that the custom should be perpetuated in the United States. We are called a Christian nation, and our laws and governmental principles recognize a God who controls the destinies of individuals and nations. Then certainly one day out of each year should be devoted to reflecting on the blessings we enjoy and giving tokens of our gratitude, which latter may be done in no better or wiser way than by exercising generosity and bestowing favors where they are needed.

The Proof of Sincerity.

During the next four years an excellent opportunity will be afforded the democratic party to test the sincerity of her avowed adherents. Not every man who stands at his post when his ship glides smoothly over an untroubled sea can be relied on as a true sailor, but such only as forsake not duty when the sky is dark and the billows sweep over the deck are genuine seamen. So it is in the political voyage. Adverse winds have troubled the waters and the waves of defeat are lashing against the sides of the grand old democratic ship. The man who now deserts her is the coward, but he who remains unmoved by the sights and sounds of clouds and breakers may be forever trusted by his party as worthy and sincere. The faith of a true democrat can not be shaken, nor his zeal abated, by a political retirement of four years. Thousands there are who for a quarter of a century kept and defended their democratic faith, though during that entire time defeat was their portion. So now, and for all time to come, the man who is a democrat because he believes democracy is right, and who favors her policy because to him it seems best for his country, will not be disheartened and forsake his principles because his opponent has triumphed, but with firm and steady step will march forward without variableness or shadow of turning, impelled by an abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of his party. There is a class of men, it is true, who for the sake of political preferment or financial gain will swallow any creed you may dish out. Others still on account of disappointed aspirations or for the purpose of avenging a real or fancied wrong will repudiate their principles and make of themselves political renegades; but the rank and file of the democratic party is not made up of any such element. On the other hand, her devotees are such as have cast their lot with her forever, and no succession of disasters could induce them to abandon their faith. Talk of the democratic party being dead! Her tenets are immortal. She may be trampled upon for generation after generation, but will eventually arise to make a more determined effort. She may be the victim of vivisection, but no post mortem examination can ever be held. She may for awhile be entombed, but only to gather strength in her silent repose and come forth again in greater power. No, democracy is not a mere champion of the past, but is even now training for the next fight, and when that fight comes she will be in the ring in better trim than ever before. The man who now deserts her because of her temporary defeat is unworthy to remain, and his going is a wholesome riddance.

Grover Cleveland is worth about a quarter of a million. That is the estimate of a well advised personal friend. He had something like $100,000 when he became President. He had practiced law profitably for many years, had held the lucrative office of sheriff in Buffalo, had lived well within his income while Governor, and had invested his savings conservatively. During his four years at Washington these investments will have increased to about $150,000. He retains about half his Presidential salary of $50,000 a year.

The recent storm seems to have been very severe throughout the Northern and Eastern States. Considerable damage to shipping along the Coast is reported.

It is remarkable that Van Buren and Cleveland are the only two Democratic Presidents who were candidates for re-election and were defeated. And it was a Harrison that did the business for them in both cases.

The Race for the Spoils.

When the Democrats came back, after wandering twenty-four years in the wilderness, they exhibited an appetite for office that was not altogether unnatural under the circumstances. But it was nothing to the hunger and thirst that less than four years of abstinence have developed among the Republicans.

One of the striking features of the present political situation is the unanimity with which the idea of civil service reform has been abandoned. It seems to be agreed that all such new-fangled notions have been voted out, and there is not the least pretense in any quarter that the spoils do not belong entirely to the victors.

It may be interesting, about next March, to recall some of the observations made four years before on the subject of removals from office, to say nothing of the utterances of party platforms meanwhile. But this interest will be rather historical than practical. It is now conceded that the offices belong to the saints and it must be acknowledged that the saints are not backward in coming forward to claim them.

History relates that the elder Harrison succumbed to the office-seekers in a month, finding his only escape in death. If the grandson prove better able to stand the pressure it will be because he is not without experience in the distribution of patronage. And yet the pressure of 1840-41 was not a circumstance to that which already confronts the President-elect.—Exchange.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lauder Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,		Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Last Monday some one made the original remark, "Is this cold enough for you."

—A "Norther," as the Texans call it, swept down on us Sunday and cooled off the atmosphere to a winter grade.

—Mrs. Bertie Barlow, Mr. Gladwell and Early F. Arbogast, of Green Bank, spent Sunday in our town.

—C. Rice Moore, of Dunmore, spent some time in Huntersville this week, stopping with his brother C. F. Moore.

—Squire R. C. Shrader was in town Saturday. He begins to look very much like a judge.

—Mr. Oscar Slaven and bride, of Kansas, are stopping at the Huntersville Hotel. Oscar is one of the Pocahontas boys that seems to have done well in the west.

—Preaching at the new Church at this place next Sunday, at 11 a. m. by the pastor, Rev. J. L. Henderson.

—Miss Martha Robins, of Bath County, Va., died at the residence of Wm. Cole, Esq., near Huntersville, last Saturday night.

—Wm. H. Grose and family of Helvetia arrived at Huntersville last Tuesday. They will make their future home here, having disposed of their property at Helvetia.

—Two trials before Justice Milligan last Saturday. Huntersville is a great place for trials and tribulations.

—THE TIMES comes out a day later this week. Our patrons will kindly excuse the delay, as the arrangements of the new management are not yet complete.

—J. B. Canfield, Esq. former editor of THE TIMES is off on a flying trip to Staunton, where he expects to meet his wife, who will accompany him home. Mrs. Canfield has been visiting relatives in Philippi, W. Va.

—L. M. McClintic, Esq., recently returned from Bath County where he had been indulging in the chase. He brought with him a nice pair of deer horns to prove that a deer had been killed, but he hasn't proven yet who killed it.

—Jas. A. Sharp, who is now working at Hillsboro, came up Sunday to be present at the first service in the new Church. Mr. Sharp did the greater part of the carpenter work on the building and he has no reason to be ashamed of the [illegible]

—Owing to the sickness of Rev. H. W. Kinzer and the extreme cold weather the meetings that were appointed for the new church at Huntersville this week were abandoned, except the Thanksgiving service Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

—Rev. H. W. Kinzer, who was stopping at the house of C. F. Moore, was taken very sick last Sunday night. For two or three days his condition was critical. At this writing he is considerably improved, now being in a fair way to recover. Mrs. Kinzer, who was sent for is expected to arrive this evening.

WANTED

Dressed Deer Skins, Hides and Tallow for cash or exchange.

A. P. Lantz,
Dealer in Leather, Harness, Saddles, &c.
Huntersville, W. Va.

Dunmore Doings.

W. H. Cackley & Co., have completed their new store house and are now moving into it.

Smith & McElwee have opened up a new store in the building formerly occupied by Ediff Cohn.

Cackley & Rexroad are putting up a store house at Driftwood.

Several weddings this fall near Traveller's Repose.

The lumber business is booming.

We are looking for better times now, if what the Republicans have been telling us is true. One of that faith recently informed us that wages had advanced ten cents a day and cattle ten dollars a head. Is that so?

There will be preaching at Dunmore Dec. 20 at 7 o'clock, p. m. Singing at 2 p. m.

Success to the new Editors and THE TIMES.

Nov. 27th. TOM SAWYER.

Married.

Nov. 14th, 1888, at the residence of the bride's parents on Clover Creek, W. Va., by the Rev. Geo. P. Moore, Mr. Geo. W. Malcomb and Miss Susan E. C. Shinaberry, all of Pocahontas County.

Nov. 22, 1888 at the residence of the bride's mother near Edray, W. Va., by the Rev. Geo. P. Moore, Mr. John D. Gibson and Miss Susan A. Moore, all of Pocahontas County.

Nov. 22, 1888, at the residence of the bride's parents near Edray, W. Va., by the Rev. Geo. P. Moore, Mr. John W. Curry and Miss Martha C. Moore, all of Pocahontas County.

Closing Accounts.

I have sold THE TIMES office to Mr. S. B. Loury, Jr., and Atty. C. F. Moore, and am now settling up all accounts due me on Subscription, Job Work and Advertising. I ask each and every one to give immediate attention to the statements sent to each this week, as I expect to leave the county on December 17th and wish all accounts closed before that time. All accounts not paid before December 14th will be given to L. M. McClintic for collection. Each account is made out at the advance rates, but if any remain unpaid December 15, they will be put in Mr. McClintic's hands at the rate of $3 per year. Honor the statements you receive with cash at once and save time and cost to us both.

Very Truly,
JAS. B. CANFIELD.

On last Sunday services were held for the first time in the new Methodist Church at this place. Rev. H. W. Kinzer, Presiding Elder of the Lewisburg District was announced to preach, but on account of sickness he was unable to fill the appointment. The pastor, Rev. J. L. Henderson conducted the services. Preaching two good sermons to a well filled house. The new Church when completed, and it is now nearly so, will be one of which the town and community may well be proud. It is constructed and equipped after modern and approved style and is a handsome monument to the generosity of its builders.

By way of offset to the alleged contract for 5,000 tons of iron castings awarded to an English firm by the Denver cable Railway Company, which so powerfully affected the imaginations of some people in the recent campaign, we read in the Railroad Gazette that "the Westinghouse Electric Company of Pittsburg, Pa., has been awarded the contract for a central station plant in London, England, for 25,000 incandescent lamps." Yet John Bull appears to be no way seriously alarmed by this "invasion." The proper thing for him to do at the next general election would be to display the Union Jack surmounted by the Stars and Stripes, and to ask all sturdy Britons whether they want the Yankees to light the houses of London and take the bread out of the mouths of British workmen. But John has passed the infantile stage of civilization, and is satisfied to get the best thing that is to be had for his money.

Senator Quay is authority for the statement that a Southern man will be a member of Gen. Harrison's Cabinet.

Some of the rich members of the Cobden Club in London, are the Duke of the Buccleugh, who owns 460,000 acres of land with a rental of $1,200,000, and the Duke of Athol, who owns 194,000 acres and has a rental of nearly $1,000,000.

Congressman Perry Belmont, of New York, has been appointed by the President as Minister to Spain, in the place of J. L. M. Curry, who recently resigned.

It is reported that the Imperial Government of China has issued a proclamation calling upon all of that nationality in the United States to return to the Flowery Kingdom. We hope the invitation will be accepted.

The democratic papers of the State emphatically claim the election of Fleming and the Republican papers claim for Goff. We hope that West Virginia will not have two Governors to support during the next administration.

There seems to be as much controversy concerning the majority in the next Congress, whether it be democrat or republican, as there is over the Fleming and Goff affair. Each party claims it.

The Taylor family of Tennessee continues in luck. Alf, the Republican partner, will furnish music in the National House of Representatives, while Bob, the Democrat, will continue to make the people of Tennessee dance to his fiddling as Governor.

The Republican papers are very anxious to know what President Cleveland will engage in at the end of his term. They needn't trouble themselves about Grover. He will make a living; and he wont go into the chicken business like Hayes to do it.

It seems that Gen. Clinton B. Fisk has fair chances of becoming a president, after all. He will be offered the presidency of Dickenson college at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, with a large salary attached, but it is not known whether or not he will accept.

One of the good things done by President Cleveland, and one that will continue to reflect credit upon his good judgement and calm common sense, was the appointment of Hon. Melville W. Fuller as chief justice. Men of all parties unite in praise of the new chief justice as being the right man in the right place.—Charleston Star.

Now that the Republican party has triumphed and there is no immediate danger of a decrease in the tariff on eggs by which American chickens are protected against the pauper chickens of Europe, we hope our hens will return to their nests and resume their laying.

One of our Exchanges states that President elect Harrison has received forty one letters announcing that somebody's baby, born since the election, has been named for the coming President. Evidently the infant industry is flourishing under the administration of the protective party.

The Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that "Senator Sherman, who is now in the city, does not expect to go into President Harrison's Cabinet, although he feels that he will be asked to do so. The Ohio Senator has already received several letters from Gen. Harrison asking him to come to Indianapolis, but he has thus far declined. Mr. Sherman says he prefers to remain in the Senate at the head of the Foreign Affairs Committee to any position which he might hold in the Cabinet."

If West Virginia elects a Democratic Senator and Nebraska a Republican, the Senate will be a tie.

HIS SOUTHERN POLICY.

From the New York Herald.

Probably no man in Indiana or in the nation knows as much about Harrison's proposed Southern policy as Superintendent of Public Instruction Lafollette. Mr. Lafollette told me this afternoon that one evening before General Harrison's election he spent several hours conversing with him on the Southern question, at which time the General expressed his views very freely.

I asked him what General Harrison's ideas were, and he said:—"In the first place, he will not allow imported Northern carpetbag politicians to hold office down there and usurp the rights of citizens; second, he will not appoint to office ignorant negroes or ignorant white people simply because they vote the Republican ticket. While his policy will not be of the milk and water sort, such as Hayes' was, it will be fair, and, I predict, highly satisfactory to the South."

"You don't mean to be understood that he will appoint Democrats to office?"

"That is what he will do whenever there is no white Republican who is talented and respectable enough to command the respect of his neighbors, and he realizes the fact that in many parts of the South there is not for miles and miles an educated man and one who is fit to hold office that votes the Republican ticket. There are many men in the South who vote the Democratic ticket who are really Republicans. That is, they are protectionists and in sympathy with the Republican party on many other of the live issue of the day. They simply vote the Democratic ticket for historical reasons, because they insist that the Republican banner is stained with the blood of their fellow-man. Many of them are honest enough to admit this. It is this class that General Harrison will recognize."

Last week James B. Canfield, who has been editor and manager of the POCAHONTAS TIMES for more than five years past, retired from the paper, and Messrs. S. B. Loury and C. F. Moore will conduct it hereafter, Mr. Moore being editor. THE TIMES has always been one of the most valued of our country exchanges, and we hope that the new management will keep it up to the high standard which has characterized it heretofore.—Charleston Star.

The public is anxiously awaiting the publication of President Cleveland's next message to Congress, and speculating as to its contents. What its import will be is unknown; but one thing we feel safe in predicting, that it will be an able state paper and will contain the President's own views, regardless of whom it may please or offend.

Hon. A. H. Colquitt was recently re-elected United States Senator from the State of Georgia. Henry W. Grady, Editor of the Atlanta Constitution was strongly urged by his friends for the position, but he positively refused to allow the use of his name.

Notice to Creditors.

To the creditors of Allen D. Grimes dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said Allen D. Grimes to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Allen D. Grimes for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 27th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this 15th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov22-4t.] Printer's fee, $4.50.

Notice to Creditors.

To the Creditors of John Sharp, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John Sharp to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said John Sharp for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 28th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this the 15th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov22-4t.] Printer's fee, $4.50.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va., November 16th, 1888.

John Sharp's Adm'r
vs.
John Sharp's Legatees, etc.

All parties interested in the above cause take notice that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, W. Va., on to take the following accounts:

THURSDAY, THE 28th DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889,

1. A settlement of the accounts of J. C. Arbogast as Administrator, with the will annexed of John Sharp, dec'd;
2. Who the creditors are and the amount of their claims, if any, severally and collectively, with their dignities and priorities;
3. What amount remains in the hands of the Administrator after discharging the debts, if anything, and to whom payable;
4. Any matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest or required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, pronounced in above cause at its October Term, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, Jr.,
Com'r Cir. Ct. P. C.

Nov.22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.47.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va., Nov. 16th, 1888.

Rosella Smith, etc.,
vs.
Mary F. Malcomb, etc.

IN CHANCERY.

All parties interested in above cause are hereby notified that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, in said county, on to take the following accounts:

THURSDAY, THE 20th DAY OF DECEMBER, 1888,

1. The names of the persons who have interest in the [illegible] the bill and proceedings mentioned and the amount of their several interests;
2. The value of the personal estate of George W. Malcomb, dec'd, with which Mary F. Malcomb and John W. Malcomb, or either of them should be charged;
3. Any other matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest to be specially stated, as required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county rendered in above cause at the October Term thereof, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, Jr.,
Com'r Cir. Ct. P. C.

Nov22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.47.

SEWING WOMEN.

[illegible]

VERNEENA'S FORTUNE;

—OR,—

The Stolen Heiress.

A TALE OF NEW YORK IN 1835.

BY PROF. WM. HENRY PECK,

AUTHOR OF

"The Queen's Secret," "The Tower of Gold," "The Half-Breed," "Harold's Hate," "The Bride of Barcelona," Etc.

CHAPTER XV.

AT THE GATE OF OLD ANCHORS.

Of late Dame Grippard had discovered that her tenant at Old Anchors was very severely pressed to obtain money to meet his liabilities, and during the preceding day she had conceived the suspicion that he intended to run away from his creditors, despite the good name and high character as a merchant and gentleman he had always maintained in the city. She had, therefore, taken precaution to effect his arrest should he attempt to flee without first paying her every cent he owed her.

[illegible]

CHAPTER XVI.

[illegible]

CHAPTER XVII.

[illegible]

Mr. Stanton upon the express condition that he shall pay you every dollar he owes you, and afterward have no further transactions whatever with you."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

CURIOUS FACTS.

Nineveh was fifteen miles by nine.

A heat of [illegible] degrees is insufficient to kill [illegible] germs.

A society of grammarians was formed at Rome as early as 276 B. C.

The invention of dice is ascribed to Palamedes of Greece, about 1244.

Forest and Stream relates a story of how a roll of fine-cut tobacco killed a shark.

It was not until 1791 that children in France were assured equal rights in the family.

There are sixteen different instruments bearing names which end in "phone."

No one who parts his name in the middle can secure a patent from the United States.

John Cobb, of Syracuse, N. Y., fired a charge of shot into a man who called him corn Cobb.

The cow bell has been adopted as a political emblem in Wisconsin. It calls the clans together.

Santa Rosa, Cal., has a floral curiosity in the shape of a hollyhock bush that bears jet black flowers.

Kansas has produced a twelve-year-old boy who has stolen over $20,000 worth of horse flesh in twelve months.

A woman in Denver, Col., was so sensitive that when her husband called her a slouch she took poison and died.

It was a not uncommon practice for the poor of the Middle Ages to sell themselves into slavery, or to become slaves by debt.

The Hohenzollerns, the reigning family of Prussia, refers its origin to Thassilo, about 800, who built the castle of Hohenzollern.

An old chap of ninety-two set out to dance at a country picnic in Massachusetts, and the bones of his legs snapped like pipe stems.

Dublin, Ireland, is noted for the manufacture of Irish poplins; Belfast, Ireland, for linens; Philadelphia, Pa., for hosiery, as is Nottingham, England.

The Alcalde of Para, Brazil, has the power, should he meet a subject with his hair parted in the centre, to order his head shaved as clean as a billiard ball and then greased with lard.

A sensation was caused at a Georgia hanging not long ago, when the murderer stepped upon the scaffold, by a lot of his friends applauding him with their hands and throwing him big bouquets of flowers.

Charles Dyer, of Indiana, bet fifty cents that he could cross a highway before a railroad train could hit him. Charles lost by a few seconds, but there is no need to read him a sermon about it. They haven't found but half of him yet.

One of the oldest bits of bric-a-brac is a "dog-pincer," an instrument once in use in Wales to enable the beadle to seize and eject unruly or bad-behaved dogs from church during services. The National Society of French Antiquaries was shown one of these the other day by the learned Celtic scholar Gaidoz.

According to curious old marriage custom, still prevalent in Brittany, the bridegroom, immediately after the priest has wedded the couple, strikes his wife in the face, saying, "This is how you will fare if you make me angry," and then, kissing her, he says, "And this is how you will fare if you treat me well."

What we call a nightmare was supposed by "our Saxon forefathers" to be a demon or vampire called Mara or Mare, that sat upon the chest of a sleeper and gave him horrible sensations. These vampires were thought to be guardians of hidden treasures, and the place where they hid these was called their nidus, or nest.

Some three months ago the water in a Georgia well, some forty feet deep, began to roar and boil in a most alarming manner, and a few weeks later the performance was repeated, so the owner concluded to clean it out and find the trouble. He did—and didn't—for when the bottom was reached there was nothing there, and the well and the mystery are to-day as deep as ever.

Degeneration of the Human Teeth.

The law of retardation exhibits itself in the teeth of the higher races of mankind in a highly inconvenient manner. The greatly developed brain requires all the available room in the skull; there is space left for the attachment of muscles for a powerful jaw. Cooked food also causes degeneracy in the development of the jaw. There is constantly no room left for either the wisdom teeth or the second upper incisors; the wisdom teeth are retarded, often cause great pain, and decay early. The second incisors appear in startling and unexpected places, and often [illegible] at all. [illegible] "American dentists have observed that the third molar (wisdom teeth) are in [illegible] of the United States very liable to imperfect growth or suppression, and to a degree [illegible] among savages or even among civilized races." The same suppression has been observed in the outer pair of superior incisors. This is taking not only to a reduction in the size of the [illegible] [illegible]

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

Cranberry Sauce.

After removing all imperfect or soft berries, wash thoroughly; place for about two minutes in scalding water; skim out or drain, and to every pound of fruit add three-quarters of a pound granulated sugar, a half pint water, and stew over a moderate fire. Be careful to cover, but don't stir the fruit, occasionally shaking the pan if in danger of burning. The berries will thus retain their shape and add to their appearance. Boil from five to seven minutes; remove from fire; turn into a deep dish, and set aside to cool. If to be kept, they can be put up in air-tight jars.

Homemade Toilet Soap.

Careful housewives save even the small bits of soap that have become too little to use. Melt the pieces all together, put in a small bit of Indian meal and a few drops of perfumery. Let this harden in any way desired, stamp on a pattern, or cut with a cake cutter, and the result is a pleasing soap for toilet use. Other bits of soap can be melted in water, and while the mixture is hot stir in oatmeal until there is a stiff batter. For a hand soap this is unequaled when much dirt or deep stains of ink or berries are to be removed. The common yellow soap melted and thickened with scouring sand makes an excellent soap for scrubbing and scouring.—Graphic.

Waxing Hardwood Floors.

For waxing a hardwood floor take a pound of the best beeswax, cut it into very small pieces and let it thoroughly dissolve in three pints of turpentine, stirring occasionally if necessary. The mixture should be only a trifle thicker than clear turpentine. Apply it with a rag to the surface of the floor, which should be smooth and perfectly clean. The right amount varies, less being required for close, hard-grained wood, and more if the wood is soft and open-grained. Even professional "waxers" are sometimes obliged to experiment, according to the Scientific American, which gives these directions, and novices should always try a square foot or two. When thoroughly dry, rub with a hard brush. If it polishes well repeat the process over the whole floor. If not, remove the wax with sand paper and try again. If the mixture is slow in drying add a little of the common "driers" sold by paint dealers.

How to Utilize Buttermilk.

Buttermilk is used in many ways down South. There is nothing more healthful on a warm day than a glass of fresh buttermilk. In our cooking it is almost indispensable, used with soda in bread making. Clabber is nice made into cream cheese. If you do not have a press made of tin you can make a bag of coarse cloth, into which you pour the clabber till the bag tightens and hang it up to drip. In twelve hours the curd will be ready for use. Serve for breakfast with cream and sugar (with a little nutmeg if you like) or eat with salt and pepper.

Buttermilk Biscuit: Sift together a quart of flour and a teaspoon of soda. Work into it a teaspoon of salt, and a tablespoon of lard or butter (not melted). Add a pint of buttermilk a little at a time until all is used. Do not work the dough longer than to collect it smoothly. Roll out one-half inch thick and cut with a biscuit cutter. Bake immediately in hot oven for about ten minutes.

Buttermilk Egg Bread: One quart of corn meal, one tablespoon of melted lard, one teaspoon of salt, four eggs beaten until light. Mix these ingredients into one quart of buttermilk, into which has been dissolved a teaspoon of soda. Pour batter into a pan, which has been heated and well greased, to bake.

Compotes of Fruits.

Compotes are fresh fruits boiled with very little sugar. They are much used by the French, and are an excellent mode of preparing inferior or overripe fruits.

Compotes of Peaches: Cut ripe peaches in half, throw them into boiling water for two or three minutes, then take them out and put in ice water; peel them. Put a pint of water in a saucepan, and set over a brisk fire; let boil, and put the peaches in. As soon as tender take them out, place on a dish, and pour syrup over.

Compote of Oranges: Put a pound of sugar and half a pint of water on to boil. Boil ten minutes, and skim; add the juice of one lemon. Peel a dozen oranges, cut them in halves, remove the seed, and drop a few pieces at a time in the hot syrup, and lay them out on a flat dish. Pour over them the remaining syrup, and set on ice.

Compote of Apples: Peel and quarter large ripe apples. Put in a pan to stew with a little water and sugar to make a syrup. Add pieces of cinnamon bark and lemon peel cut in strips. Let boil, take up the apples, lay in a dish to cool; boil the syrup thick and pour over.

Compote of Pears: Quarter, peel and core sugar pears in a stewpan with a little water and sugar. When tender, take the pears up. Boil the syrup down, add a handful of raisins and a sliced lemon. When thick as jelly pour the syrup over the fruit.

Stuffed Compotes: Select some large, ripe apples; pare them, and take out the cores, leaving the apples whole. Cook them in syrup, take up, drain, and bake them a few minutes in a very quick oven. When done, fill the middle with peach [illegible]

This syrup will keep for months, and is very convenient to have ready for making compotes.—Courier-Journal.

Flower Loving Russians.

Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison, of Chicago, has been traveling around the world, and from time to time giving descriptive sketches of the most vivid character of what he has seen, in the Chicago Mail. In a recent one, on that wonderful city in the far North, St. Petersburg, he says in reference to flowers and gardening:

The love of flowers seems universal here. It pervades all classes throughout the whole country we have passed through. In cities, towns and villages dwelling-house windows are filled with flowers—in first and in second stories—and often so full that they look like conservatories, and at every station children sell wild flowers.

Hot-houses have been brought to perfection, and one now sees in windows melons so sweet that one almost imagines that they convey their odor through the sense of sight; grapes, peaches, and flowers, palms and ferns of rare perfection. In winter, I am told, there is a vast profusion of hot-house plants. The summers are so short that outdoor flowers are not relied on, and hot-houses are abundant and finely managed.

At a garden fete in honor of the visit of the Emperor of Germany, the many kiosks and pavilions of the park seemed to be beautiful structures in flame, and the flower-gardens under us looked like acres of tulips and hyacinths and crocuses of light. The lamps were so colored as to make this effect of the parterres almost perfect. I counted the lamps in a given space and calculated from these that there must have been over fifty thousand burning in two small sections of the park.

The Inventor of Invisible Patches a Tramp.

A melancholy-looking man, with a shaggy beard, wearing an old slouch hat and trousers with deep fringe around the bottom and a big, shaggy overcoat, stood in front of the Philadelphia post-office, holding his hands on his chest. Everybody looked at him as they passed, and some young fellows jeered at him for wearing an overcoat. The melancholy looking man paid no attention to them. He wandered up Ninth street aimlessly and shambled up Market street holding his hands over his chest as he walked. A reporter asked him what he wore an overcoat for with the thermometer at eighty degrees. He spoke in gasps and said: "Because I'm always cold. I can't get my breath hardly half the time. I have been cold for years. I I used to work at my trade for eighteen hours a day. I am a shoemaker. I caught cold about ten years ago, and I've had hard work to breathe ever since. Sometimes I'm afraid to go to sleep for fear I'll lose my breath. I'm the man who invented the invisible patch on shoes. That's a good many years ago. Just think of it. I'm the inventor of the invisible patch and I haven't got a cent. I ought to be getting a royalty from every shoemaker in the country. I was a soldier in the Prussian army. I made many a pair of boots for the officers. Where am I going? Nowhere."

The man laughed harshly. Then he coughed with a hacking sound and went wearily on his way.

Mild-Mannered Cannibals.

Every traveler in New Zealand always expresses astonishment, when they discover the cannibal propensities of the inhabitants, that so gentle and pleasant-mannered a people could become on occasion such ferocious savages. Earle, who wrote a very reliable, intelligent and but little known account of the Maoris very early in the present century, speaks of the gentle manners and kindly ways of a New Zealand chief, whom afterward he discovered to be an inveterate cannibal. He relates that he visited the place where was cooking the body of a young slave girl that his friend had killed for the purpose. The head was severed from the body; the four quarters, with the principal bones removed, were compressed and packed into a small oven in the ground, and covered with earth. It was a case of unjustifiable cannibalism. No revenge was gratified by the deed, and no excuse could be made that the body was eaten to perfect their triumph. Earle says that he learned that the flesh takes many hours to cook, that it is very tough if not thoroughly cooked, but that it pulls to pieces, like a piece of blotting paper, if well done. He continues that the victim was a handsome pleasant looking girl of sixteen, and one he used frequently to see about the Pah.—Gentleman's Magazine.

How to Reduce Fat.

For the reduction of adipose tissue, Banting has, in Germany at least, been superseded by pedestrianism, and the walking is not to be upon level ground, but up-hill. This new fad will certainly not be adopted by indolent persons, and most fleshy people are more or less disinclined to exertion. In fact, laziness is responsible for much of the accumulation of fat. The new relief from obesity has been experimented with by the renowned Bismarck, who has in this manner reduced his weight from two hundred and seventy-four pounds to one hundred and ninety. The principle of the new system is to strengthen the muscle of the heart, which is best done by climbing heights. The patient is [illegible]

BUDGET OF FUN.

HUMOROUS SKETCHES FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

Should Bear It in Mind—Nothing But the Truth—A Better Name—Changed His Mind, Etc., Etc.

Husband—"You are not the cook my mother used to be, my dear."

Wife—"No, John, fortunately. You mustn't forget that your father died of dyspepsia."—Siftings.

Nothing But the Truth.

Judge—"O'Connor, this is the thirtieth time this year that you have appeared before this tribunal. What brought you here again?"

Prisoner—"To tell the truth, Judge, it was the police."

A Better Name.

Pretty Cousin (to young Sissy)—"Why, Charley, since I last saw you you have grown quite a beard."

Young Sissy—"Ya'as, Maud; mutton-chop whiskers, you know."

Pretty Cousin—"Oh, are they! Why they look more like lamb-chop whiskers."—New York Sun.

The Progress of Science.

Jenkins—"Did you hear of the wonderful operation Dr. Ball performed on Smithers last week?"

Bilkins—"No; what was it?"

Jenkins—"Five years ago Smithers stepped on a tack, and yesterday the doctor removed a ten-penny nail from the arm of Smithers' little boy."—The Idea.

Changed His Mind.

Wife—"Shall we go to the picnic to-day, dear?"

Husband—"Just as you say, love."

Wife—"Well, if we go we must take the baby."

Husband—"Oh, by the way, there's all that cordwood to cut and split. I guess I'll stay at home."—Burlington Free Press.

In the Same Predicament.

Kirby—"Lend me a fiver, will you, old boy? I'm clean broke."

Moxey—"That's a pretty good ring you wear. Why don't you hock it?"

Kirby—"Couldn't, you know. It's a souvenir of a deceased brother."

Moxey—"Well, my money is a souvenir of a deceased father. Day-day, old fel."—Time.

Fun Enough.

It was his first visit to the city. As he stood on the curbstone shaking his sides with laughter, he was accosted by one of New Haven's finest. "What's the fun, stranger?"

"Fun! Can't you see it? Just look how that thing (pointing to a watering-cart) leaks. Why, the blamed fool won't have a drop left when he gets home."—New Haven News.

Learning English.

A Frenchman of this city, having received the photograph of a lady, asked a friend what was customary under the circumstances.

"Compliment it," replied the friend. "Tell her its beauty is very rare."

"I beg to make zee acknowledgment, madame," he said to her at their next meeting. "Zee beauty of madame is very scarce."—Binghamton Republican.

Two Brutes.

Magistrate—"What's the charge against this man?"

Officer—"He threw a photograph lens at a baby and cut its head."

Magistrate—"Are you a regular photographer?"

Prisoner—"Yes, your honor. I had been trying for two mortal hours to take a picture of that little imp—I mean little baby, your honor—and—"

Magistrate—"You are discharged. I used to be a photographer myself."—The Cartoon.

The Lost Found.

"Well, Mae," interrogated the irate father of a Chicago girl and a new thousand dollar piano, "can you tell me what this is, stuck onto this rosewood like a lump of grafting wax? Have you decided to marry a farmer, and is he giving you lessons in tree-planting?"

"Oh, no," answered the maiden, with a glad ring in her spruce-like voice; "that's my dear old gum. When Harry wanted a song, I put it where it would be safe, and then forgot it and thought I'd lost it."—The Idea.

A Ruling Passion With Him.

The inquisitive traveler had sat alongside his one-legged victim till everybody had turned in, and still plied him with questions till he wished he had died at the amputation.

"How did you lose your leg?" he asked, as a clincher.

"Well, I'll tell you if you promise not to ask any more questions."

"All right. I won't."

"It was bit off."

"Good-night; am going to bed; but I'd like mighty well to know what bit it off."—Chicago Times.

The Suggestion That Came to Him.

Wife (plaintively)—"Henry, I wish you wouldn't swear so."

Henry (decidedly)—"I don't swear any [illegible]

[illegible]

The Court Reversed Its Decision.

"Mr. Brief," said the judge, gravely, "it seems to me that you are wasting time; you might as well try to make the court believe that two and two do not make four."

Brief settled his eyeglasses a little more firmly on his nose and responded blandly: "May it please your honor I am prepared to do that. Two and two make 22."

The shadow of a smile played around the corner of the judge's mouth as he sat back in his chair, and said: "You may go on with your argument, Mr. Brief."—Boston Bulletin.

A Bad Habit.

"Now, hubby, before we were married we promised to tell each other of our little faults and try to correct them—do you remember, dear?"

"Um-huh," grunted the husband, who was deep in reading the last scandal.

"Well, we've been married a week and I notice a bad habit you have—do you hear?"

"Um-huh."

"Yes, a bad habit you have of not paying attention when one is talking—are you listening to me?"

"Um-hum."

"Of not paying attention, and then when one gets through and asks you something you say: 'Do what?' This is not only aggravating, but impolite, and I want you to break yourself of the disagreeable habit."

"Do what?"—St. Louis Humorist.

Would Throw That In.

"My friend," said a tight-fisted banker to a young man who had pulled him out of the water, "I appreciate the fact that you have saved my life, and I am prepared to reward you—to reward you liberally for your services. What can I do for you?"

"Well, sir, there was a suit of clothes spoiled," said the rescuer who was good natured though not educated, "that would be about seventeen dollars; then I lost my hat, that would be fifty cents; then I took considerable liquor to keep off a cold, which cost me a quarter. I don't think of anything else, sir."

"But you do not mention the fact that you have saved my life. What can I do for you on that score?"

"Oh, well, call the whole thing eighteen dollars an' I'll throw the life saving in free."—Merchant Traveler.

The Visitor Was Mistaken.

Proprietor (showing visitor through the office)—"This is the editorial department."

Visitor—"Then I suppose that fat, genial-looking chap across there is the obituary editor, and that the thin, cross-looking genius who just threw a paper weight at the office boy, is your funny man?"

Proprietor—"No; both guesses are wrong. You probably obtained your ideas from current paragraphs. The fat, good-natured man is the humorist, and the attenuated gentleman is the writer of the tariff editorials."

Visitor—"Ah, indeed! But this gentleman with the handsome desk, railed in from the rest of the office, attended by a pretty type-writer and two messenger boys? I suppose he is editor-in-chief."

Proprietor—"Wrong again! That is the baseball reporter!"—The Idea.

A Congressman's Odd Investigation.

There was a man by the name of Stanton, and he was a Congressman from a Kentucky district some time in the year 1857. Before his election to Congress he had been a bricklayer and a stone mason. During his term some of the contractors engaged on the Capitol extension and improvement got into an imbroglio, and first one and then another began throwing mud, until finally one of them, in his anger, made the charge that the work done by another was of the poorest kind, and that the Capitol building was in danger. It was the first time that any such intimation had ever been made concerning the safety of the Capitol, and it caused considerable alarm, says the Chicago Times.

It led to the appointment of an investigating committee by Congress. Mr. Stanton was made Chairman of the committee. It is customary when a Congressional investigating committee is appointed for it to take up quarters in some elaborately furnished committee room, send for witnesses, and then report its findings. Stanton didn't do anything of the sort.

He put on a bricklayer's suit and clothed his committee in the same garb, went out about the Capitol and inside of it armed with the implements which stonemasons and bricklayers use. They examined the work that had been done, and found that there was not one word of truth in what the quarreling contractors had charged. The committee so reported and was discharged.

That was, so I am told, the only time that any charge of fraud in the construction of the National Capitol was ever made.

Radishes.

Radishes were known in England in the days before this country, or in certain portions of the island, by the names of "radiche" and "radic." It is generally believed that we are indebted to the Chinese for the radish, and it is said that before the Christian era this vegetable had had the honor of having a book [illegible]

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

"A Ruler of Men."

New York World: The report that Mr. Blaine is anxious to have a seat in the Cabinet can hardly be believed. Anybody looking at the portrait of Benjamin Harrison will note that he is a man desirous above all things to be known as a ruler of men. He will never consent to be overshadowed by such men as Blaine and Sherman. He means to be President himself. Mr. Blaine might as well make up his mind that he will not be admitted to the Tippecanoe Cabinet.

The great oil fields of New York and Pennsylvania are becoming rapidly exhausted. The former supply of 100,000 barrels a day has fallen off to 43,000 barrels a day. The wonderful Bradford field, of Pennsylvania, that has produced 140,000,000 barrels of oil, is now practically dry. About 500 new wells are now being sunk in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, in the hope of finding new oil basins.

A negro was arrested in Chicago last week for robbery who was found to speak fluently German, French, Greek, Spanish, English, and several Indian dialects. He was born in Madrid of a Spanish mother, and was, before the war, a servant in the household of Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, who was killed at the battle of Springfield.

In Wichita, Kan., a painter bet his hat, coat, boots and socks on Cleveland, agreeing to go home without them if he was caught down town by the other fellow. He was so caught and fulfilled his wager, notwithstanding it was a cold day for him.

The tedious work of removing boulders and the remnants of an ancient forest from the bed of the Thames River still goes on. It began seven years ago. At last accounts 300 trees and 1,300 boulders had been taken out. The latter varied in weight from one to four tons.

A little girl was sitting on the floor when the sun shone in her face. "Go'way! go'way!" she cried, striking out at it. "You move, dear, and it won't trouble you," said her mamma. "I s'ant; I dot here first," said the little one.—Youth's Companion.

It is expected the new Senator from Michigan will be James McMillan, president of the Michigan Car Company, and possessing a private fortune estimated at $15,000,000.

The towers of the proposed suspension bridge to be built across the Hudson above Peekskill will be 327 feet high and the span 1,620 feet.

Police Judge—sternly: Prisoner at the Bar—Prisoner—interrupting: Yes, sir, that's me. I was at the bar, but I swear I was'nt drunk.

ingly defeated. Mr. Ferguson is the oldest lawyer in the state, and perhaps he will now be considered one of the best prophets above ground.—Ex.

Gen. B. F. Butler rejoices in the election of Harrison. Possibly because his first name is Ben.

Horace Greeley, a brother of Horace, lives in an old fashioned, weather-beaten farm house near the village of Columbus, in Warren county, Pa. He is eighty years old and very poor.

The $10 bills spent in Indiana by the Republican campaign committee have passed to be $1 bills afterward.

Our present system of election laws is the growth of experience, and progress is steadily being made toward registering the will of the voters. The most important requirements are now the registration of voters, the closing of the polls at 4 o'clock in cities, the secret ballot, and the destruction of ballots after they are counted. Not all these provisions are in force in every State, and the provisions for a secret ballot are no where perfect as yet, but all these requirements are to come, and should be urged by all good citizens everywhere. Registration is absolutely necessary to prevent frauds. The closing of the polls at 4 o'clock in afternoon requires the voting to be completed earlier, before returns from remote districts are received, thus lessening the danger of tampering with returns in cities, where fraud is most likely to occur. The reasons for a secret ballot are the protection of the voter from undue influence; and we are learning that it is necessary to so arrange the voting places as to make it absolutely impossible for any person to tell how another votes unless he himself makes the statement. The destruction of the ballots is a late provision in the State of New York, and should be adopted everywhere. At first it would seem that ballots should be preserved to be recounted in case of dispute, but experience has shown that it is impossible to guard them for any length of time. After the election is over and it is known just how many votes are wanted, if a recounting is ordered it becomes easy for those in possession of the ballots to fix them to order. There is no reason why a second count should be more accurate than a first. The best provision, therefore, is to throw around the first count all possible safeguards, so that it is as likely to be correct as any thereafter made —more likely, because the canvassers do not know the result in other places—and then destroy the ballots.—Ex.

Unpopular at Home.

Chicago News: Gen. Harrison is not popular in Indianapolis. He is too cold and unresponsive. He can be almost clammy when he wishes. The result was that in a Presidential election into which every element of city and county pride entered he carried Indianapolis by 156 votes, but lost the county—Marion—by 387, although Marion county gave Blaine 229 plurality in 1884. In his old regiment—the Tenth Indiana—he was also unpopular, although the veterans of that body met this evening and the President was present. As one of the veterans said, Harrison in the army was a martinet of the most severe sort and as particular about unimportant details as an old maid. Sleeping on a log in a swamp he had headquarter guards stationed around him. He was a fighter, tho', and he won respect where he could not win love.

There will be general rejoicing that the will of the late Samuel J. Tilden has been sustained by the Supreme Court of New York. The will was drawn by himself, and left $4,000,000 for the purpose of founding a public library in New York City. It was contested by his nephew, on the ground of vagueness. The property was left in the hands of trustees, and great latitude was allowed them in executing the provisions of the will. It would seem that if such a lawyer as Tilden could not draw up a will that would be sustained by the courts, there would be an end to all certainty of controlling a great estate after one's death.

Senator Arkell, the owner and editor of Judge, is said to have his eye on the London Consulship. Having secured the consignment of Mr. Depew, he feels quite confident.

THE SURPRISE.

Joy met Sorrow in a place
Where the branches interlace.
Very secret, still and sweet,
Safe from all profaning feet.
"Why art here?" Joy, startled, cried;
"Why art here?" gray Sorrow sighed.

"I came here to weep," said Joy.
"Tears are my sweet employ,"
Murmured Sorrow. "Yet I see
Tears as grateful were to thee.
Come, young novice, and be taught
How to ease thy heart o'erfraught."

Joy sat down at Sorrow's feet,
And was taught a lesson sweet.
Fain would he make kind return;
"Sorrow, art too old to learn?
Nay? Then tarry yet awhile,
Till I've taught thee how to smile!"

Since that hour the two have been Bound as by mysterious kin;
Since that hour they so exchange
Tears and smiles, 'tis nothing strange
If sometimes a puzzled heart
Scarce can tell the twain apart.

—Edith Thomas.

The people of the United States use annually about seven postal cards for every man, woman and child; that is to say, our total consumption for a year reaches four hundred million, which is considerably more than are employed by the rest of the world. This enormous number are all printed, cut apart, counted, and wrapped up in packages of twenty five, by machinery that would stand comfortably in a small bed-room, and that requires no assistance whatever from any operative, so long as it is supplied with paper, ink and paste.

Lexington, Ky., abounds in historical relics. The house from which John Morgan, the celebrated "Raider," went out, and which is still occupied by his mother; the house where Marquis de Lafayette lodged when visiting there, and the house where Jefferson Davis boarded when attending law school, are there. The House and farm belonging to Henry Clay, now Ashland Park are just beyond the city limits. The Statue of John Cable Breckenridge is in the Public Square.

About one half the Republican vote in New Hampshire wants to come to the United States Senate.

Papa: Johnnie, what do you want to be when you grow up?

Johnnie: Well I ain't particular, so long's I don't grow up to be a little boy that mamma can spank every time anything goes wrong in the house.

A brilliant thinker and theatergoer writes to say that Secretary Whitney goes to the theater so much that he is known in certain circles as the Bill of the play.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Dec. 6, 1888. | Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 20.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court,	H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney,	R. S. Turk.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	B. C. Hill.
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts,	J. A. Beard.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	S. H. Clark, Pres't.
	S. B. Hannah.
	G. P. Moore.
Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

FARMERS AND THE TARIFF.

That the farmers supported the high-tariff policy in the recent election as zealously as ever, while the workingmen in the manufacturing centres voted in increasing numbers in opposition to that policy, is a fact now generally recognized and taken as a landmark for future contests. The Tribune makes it the basis of an argument in favor of an increase of duties on farm products. "The Democratic House," it says, "proposed to cut off more than half of all the duties collected to protect farm industry. The answer of the people was to elect a Republican President, a Republican House, and the astonishing votes in the farming States are still ringing in the ears of tariff reformers. The logical inference is that the majorities in these farming States want the things done which they petitioned Congress to have done, they want the tariff made to serve its purpose, and do not want it broken down or left just as it is," quoth the Tribune.

We shall not deny that the American farmer is still willing and even anxious to be plucked for the benefit of other people; but we deny that he was harmed by the Mills bill in any degree whatsoever. The only farm product put on the free list by the Mills bill was wool, and as to that it has been shown that the three largest wool-producing States showed a loss rather than a gain of Republican votes in the election. The duties on wheat and other cereals, on dairy products, on hops, hay, honey, potatoes, and live animals were not changed by the Mills bill. If these duties had all been repealed the farmers would not have been injured, and if they had been doubled they would have received no benefit. We import a few potatoes when we have a short crop, and we export some when we have a large crop; but the amount is insignificant, and it affects only the Atlantic seaboard and the northwestern border line in any case. As to the great bulk of agricultural produce, no tariff, however high, would raise the price a penny, for the reason that they constitute the major part of our exports, and have to be sold in foreign markets alongside and in competition with the like produce of every country on the globe. The American farmer is thus brought face to face with the labor of the Russian peasant, the Indian ryot, and the Egyptian fellah. What they get for their productions he can get. Not a farthing more could he get if the importation of grain were prohibited by law. But as a matter of fact the Mills bill did not touch the duties on these articles at all.

Notwithstanding the vote of the farming States in the recent election, the superstition of the agricultural classes are not incurable. There is no mind so dull that it cannot be made to comprehend the fact that the tariff is an injury to the man who sells in a cheap market and buys in one made artificially dear. Nor is it true that abstract ideas regarding the tariff were the most moving considerations among the farmers in the recent campaign. The fact that the proposed reform of the tariff was of Southern parentage had a great influence in the rural districts. It revived the memories of the war and rekindled a sectional feeling that would otherwise have remained dormant. If the Mills bill had been the Scott bill or the Springer bill, it would have been by far the more acceptable to the farmers of the North. It is easy to say now that, without any change in its provisions, a measure having a Northern origin and name would have been much stronger in the North. It is not the fault of Mr. Mills, of the two Breckinridges, of Mr. Wilson of West Virginia, and other Southern members that they were the most conspicuous advocates of the measure; but their prominence was not without its influence in the farming communities, where new ideas are slow to gain lodgment, and where old memories have their strongest hold.

The battle joined in the recent campaign is only begun. When we consider how short a time was allowed for the work of education, and how great a gain was made among those who could be reached, and what odds of money and intimidation were arrayed on the other side, the advocates of tariff reform have abundant cause for encouragement, and every reason to believe that when they shall have had equal opportunity to reach American farmers their success with them will be commensurate with that which they have undeniably achieved among the operatives in towns and cities. —N. Y. Weekly Post.

White House Social Duties.

Mrs. Cleveland's social duties are greater than is generally supposed. She assists the president at his state receptions, and sits opposite him at state dinners. She is considered the social head of the administration, and she is, indeed, the mistress of the white house. The gorgeous floral decorations of the state reception rooms are subject to her approval; and she stands with the president whenever he receives his guests in a social way. The state dinners of the president are perhaps the grandest social affairs of the American court, and to be invited to the white house to one of these is the social event of a lifetime. The white house blazes with light. The Marine Band plays in the vestibule. The great east room becomes a tropical flower garden, and its white and silver pillars are wreathed with garlands and hung with flower shields, upon which have been woven American eagles of pink and roses. It is here that Mrs. Cleveland stands with the president and receives the thirty or fifty guests who have been invited to the dinner, and it is from here that she is escorted to the state dining room by the most honored of the party. The dining-room sparkles with cut glass and silver, and the dinner of many courses is gotten up by French cooks. The daintiest of viands are washed down with rare old wines, and a number of glasses stand by each plate save that of Mrs. Cleveland. The president's wife has, as far as her own example goes, espoused the cause of temperance. She drinks nothing at these dinners but Apollinaris water, and though she does not endeavor to regulate the tastes of others, she does not touch wine herself. At her state receptions she shakes hands with from 300 to 500 persons on every such night during the season. It is said that she has shaken hands with more than 100,000 people during the past winter. She is a good hand shaker and each caller receives a warm grasp and a decided pressure. In most cases this is accompanied by a cordial smile, and those who have the pleasure of chatting with Mrs. Cleveland for a short time become her friends.—Cosmopolitan.

The Vermont Legislature has prohibited the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

"He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Wonderful promise spoken by God himself. "I" and "thee" together, the Infinite God in Christ and finite man constant companion! So He says, and so we walk side by side along our pilgrim pathway. If we really believe this, surely it would simplify, and hallow, and calm our daily life. In these few words every Christian may find the sweetest solaces of pain, and the most blessed inspirations of heroism.—Rev. S. M. Hamilton.

FRUIT.—In Northern Germany the highways are shaded with fruit trees. This was started fifty years ago by a peddler who planted every seed with his staff while travelling through the country. If the enterprising farmer's boy would make it his habit to drop the seed of fruit he may be eating in the fence corner, when passing from place to place, it would not be long until there would be plenty of fruit, which could be improved by grafting; and not only this, but new varieties would be produced that would prove of value.

Put it in Writing.

Verbal contracts occasion more trouble, dispute and litigation than any other business transactions. The wise merchant taught by experience will endeavor to have a writing executed by the party to be charged, in every case of importance arising in his business. This is especially necessary of gurantees. A man enters your office whom you know to be perfectly responsible. He tells you to sell Brown a thousand dollars' worth of goods. Brown is all right; he will answer for that, etc. Make him sign a memorandum.

A customer gives you a large order for future and installment deliveries. Make him sign it in writing.

You engage a salesman for a year, or for a month, or for a trial trip. Have it all put down in writing and signed.

You save taking your chances before a jury, who nine times out of ten prove uncertain and too sympathetic with that party they consider is the "under dog."

It is only a little trouble at the time, but it usually saves a heap of trouble in the future.—Trade Mark Record.

Chief Inspector James, of St. Paul, says: The amount of wheat in sight this year in Minnesota and Dakota is about 30,000,000 bushels less than last year at this time.

The number of female medical students entered at Paris this term is 114, of whom 90 are Russian, 12 French and 6 English, with 1 American, 1 Austrian, 1 Greek and 1 Turk. The number of students at the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia this fall is 144.

Richard A. Proctor left the Roman Catholic Church because the priests told him that his scientific beliefs were heretical.

Never sun feather beds, air them thoroughly on a windy day in a cool place. The sun draws the oil and gives the feathers a rancid smell.

According to Rev. Elizabeth W. Greenwood, there are 3,432 physicians and surgeons, 165 ministers and 75 lawyers in this country who are women.

The official canvass of the vote of New York shows Harrison's plurality is 13,399. Hill's plurality is 18,126. Total vote, 1,284,892. Total Prohibition vote, 30,692; about 8,000 more than in 1884.

Much damage is reported by recent violent gales on the west coast of Great Britain. At the city of Glasgow, where the storm assumed the force of a hurricane the exhibition building was partly wrecked.

Very dirty furniture should be washed off with a flannel cloth dipped in equal parts of strong vinegar and water before it is polished. It not only removes the dirt, but has a tendency to smooth the varnish that has become rough through long use. After applying the vinegar, dry the furniture instantly and thoroughly, and at once rub it with a flannel that has been dipped in linseed oil and carefully wrung out. Finish with a dry flannel, rubbing hard and long, and your furniture will look like new.

Eggs can be kept perfectly for six months, by coating each one with the white of egg. Apply it with the finger so that every spot is touched, then pack the eggs in a box, in any position you wish, putting a layer of paper between every layer of eggs, and set the box away in a cool, dry place. The white of one egg will coat from eight to ten dozen. I have tried this recipe for five years, and have never known it to fail.—Mrs. Addie Smith.

GRAPES.—There is no fruit that takes so little space and makes so large a return for the labor as grapes. Now is the time to get cuttings. They should be cut with three or four eyes. Put them in a bundle, bury them in the ground below frost until spring, when they may be taken up after all danger of frost is gone, and set with two eyes in the ground. It is best to put two or three together, for some may die, and if all live they can be removed in another year. On farms they may be set in the fence corners or near small trees, and in two or three years a fine crop of grapes will reward the effort.

Havanna Journal.—A bushel of corn makes four gallons of whisky. It sells for $16 at retail. The Government gets $3.60, the farmer 40 cents, the railroad $1, the manufacturer $4, the vender $7, and the drinker all that is left—delirium tremens.

The best housekeeper could find a book somewhere, if she only knew in which direction to look. With many, it is to be found in the cupboard. There was more provided than used and she didn't know how to utilize it. The making of appetizing little dishes from odds and ends is not sufficiently considered in this country and should be made a study by all good housewives.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

Preventing Fermentation of Cider.

There are many different ways of preventing fermentation; but in any case the cider ought to stand in large open casks long enough to ferment slightly, so as to cause a considerable scum to rise to the surface, when it may be skimmed off, and also give time for the sediment to settle at the bottom before anything else is done with it. Nothing is more important than to abstract by natural means the minute particles of pomace that are held in solution by the cider.

A quite effective way of cleansing the cider and preventing after fermentation is to scald it just after it has been slightly fermented and settled. To do this it may be drawn off or dipped out of the casks into large copper kettles, or for large quantities an old copper still, holding three or four barrels, will be better. When fire is applied the heat will cause a large amount of scum to rise at once to the top to be skimmed off.

The heating should cease as soon as the boiling is reached, when the cider is again placed in clean, open casks to stand and settle until it has become entirely cold, when it may be drawn into barrels and tightly bunged.

The effect of the scalding, if done at the right time, is two-fold. It quite thoroughly cleanses the cider and stops the fermentation at the right point to leave it a sweet and pleasant drink. While cider thus treated will afterward taste somewhat of the scalding, it will not be unpleasant to those who like it sweet, and is to be preferred to cider in which the fermentation has been arrested by mustard seed or chemicals. Cider in any of these ways will not afterward make good vinegar.

Where the quantity of cider to be made will not justify the expense of casks, the cider may be fermented and settled in barrels, bungs open, by drawing from one to another.—New York World.

Plows and Plowing.

The plow has long been used as the symbol of agriculture. The finely made and beautifully ornamented steel plow which Victoria sent to the Queen of Madagascar was years afterward found by some missionaries, who had penetrated into the interior of the island, in a temple. It had its place among the representation of the deities the natives worshipped and was recognized as the God of agriculture. They did not employ it in their fields, or leave it in a furrow to rest, as western farmers might have done. They prostrated themselves before it and prayed that they might have large crops of grain. In a museum in Canada is a collection of the plows used in all ages and in most countries. They are arranged in a long row. The first plow is a portion of a tree, one branch being used to attach an animal to and another used as a handle. By their order they show the evolution of the plow that is now employed in the most advanced countries. Attempts have been made to show that the progress of agriculture may best be shown by improvements in the plow that turns the soil.

It is generally acknowledged that the best plows in the world are made in this country. It is also admitted that the work done with them is very poor. Observing travelers state that much better plowing is done in Great Britain and in many portions of the continent of Europe than in this country. This state of things is explained by assuming that very excellent plows lead to carelessness in the use of them. When an implement can be depended upon to do good work it is often if not generally placed in the hands of a person who has little judgment, experience or skill. None but an expert can do good plowing with a poor plow. In England, as in some other countries, the plowman ranks above the common farm laborer. He is regarded as a skilled workman. Ordinarily he does nothing but guide the plow. He makes a careful study of the business and becomes very expert. In this country boys and girls tend machines in great manufacturing establishments and turn out articles that can only be made by skilled mechanics who use common tools. On our farms incompetent persons are trusted with the use of plows and are expected to do good work because the plows are so easy to manage.

Large farms and low prices for grain have a tendency to make plowing poor. When a plow can be run half a mile without meeting with an impediment the person holding it does not acquire the skill of one who plows among stumps and stones. He relies on his plow to do everything. He seems to forget that a tool is not endowed with intelligence. The appearance of fields in many parts of the country show that skillful plowing has become a lost art. Perhaps it would be more nearly correct to say that it is an art that has never been acquired. Plowing is so badly done in many parts of the country that it is not strange that a variety of implements have been brought out for supplementing the work that should be done with the plow. The first settlers of the country had nothing but a wooden plow and a home-made harrow, which was often no more than some branches of trees bound together, with which to prepare land for raising a crop of grain. Farmers of the present day have clod-crushers, revolving pulverizers, rollers, and half a dozen kinds of harrows with which to do the same work. Still old farmers declare that soil is not as well prepared for seeding as it was in the good old days when they were young.—Chicago Times.

[illegible]

[illegible]

prepares the ground, can grow profitable crops of wheat on almost every soil.

It is a general rule, with not more than the usual exceptions, that the finer the seed-bed the larger the yield of wheat.

Wheat can be safely grown on lands that would be ruined by washing and gullying were cultivated crops kept on them.

It pays richly to save wheat straw carefully, though it is used only as an absorbent. Western farmers may smile, but it is true.

The man who whitewashed his granaries with boiling hot wash, putting it in all the cracks, did not fear the miller's examination of his wheat.

Treat your grain crops with an eye to the value of the straw as well as of the grain, and in the spring it will not be said of your cattle, as it was said of Ephraim, that they "feed upon wind."

A patch of rye and timothy seeded together always comes "pat." The rye will make pasture in the spring even earlier than bluegrass, and by the time the rye fails the timothy will be ready. There is nothing like a steady succession of pasturage.

Rye may be sown in the fall and clover on it in the spring. The rye can be cut for the straw (which frequently sells for the same price per ton as the best hay) as soon as the blossom falls, and there will be a good growth of clover for pasture. In this way poor land may be made to yield a respectable income while being improved.—American Agriculturist.

The Prince of Wales Spanked.

The following, taken from a paper printed in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1844, is now going the rounds of the press: Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, accompanied by the Prince Consort and the royal children, visited Scotland for the first time, and tarried a long time on her way at Balmoral. On the trip the yacht, in which the people traveled by water, called at Aberdeen, and, of course, the loyal inhabitants of that city turned out in large numbers to do honor to their beloved sovereign. A guard of honor, consisting of the merchants of the place, was formed, and, in all the glory of black broadcloth and white kids, paraded on the edge of the dock to which the vessel moored at just sufficient distance to prevent people from stepping on board. Seats were erected on the bank, tier above tier, like those of a circus, to accommodate the thousands that assembled to gaze on the spectacle of an anointed Queen.

Her Majesty good naturedly remained on deck to gratify as much as possible the curiosity of the bonny Scots, and promenaded about in full view of the immense crowd. The Prince of Wales, a child of about five or six years, was with her. Among other things placed on the deck for the accommodation of the Queen was a costly and very splendid sofa, ornamented with tassels; and the Prince, like other boys of that age, being of a destructive turn, began to pull at one in a manner that threatened to detach it. His mother observed the act, and ordered him to desist. He did so, but as soon as her back was turned seized the tassel again to give another jerk. The Queen appeared to have expected something of the kind, for she was at that moment watching him from the corner of her eye. In an instant she turned, and seizing the luckless heir apparent of England by the "scruff of the neck," elevated one of her feet upon the sofa, hoisted the youngster over her knee, adjusted him in the position mutually familiar to parents and children generally, when such ceremonies are to be performed, and gave him a sound spanking.

It may be proper to mention, en passant, for the information of youths who sometimes find themselves similarly circumstanced, that the illustrious sufferer kicked and bellowed under the afflictive dispensation quite as lustily as boys of lowlier birth are wont to do. The amazement with which the spectators witnessed the example of royal domestic discipline may be imagined, but scarcely described in fitting terms. A dead silence prevailed for a moment, but was suddenly broken by a tremendous roar of laughter, which could not be suppressed by any thought of decorum, respect for the Queen, or sympathy for the victim of her displeasure. The explosion recalled the royal mother to a sense of her position, and, having turned toward the crowd for a moment, her face suffused with crimson, she hastily descended into the cabin, and was seen no more by the expectant populace.

Feeding a Mare With a Spoon.

John H. Wilson, of Norristown, Penn., owns a pure white Arabian mare, which is being fed with the aid of a spoon to keep it from starving. The animal is suffering from a singular fracture of the jaw bone, the result of being kicked by a horse. The injury is known in veterinary surgery as a fracture of the lower maxilla posterior to the incisor teeth. Both bones of the jaw were broken completely off, and the lower portion of the jaw is now being held in place by a mask of pliable copper, lined with cotton.

Three veterinary surgeons reduced the fracture, and the case is without a parallel in veterinary surgery. An entire day was consumed in dressing the injury. The copper mask is kept tightly pressed against her head, and her mouth is kept in a basket of water to reduce the swelling of the jaw. She is kept in canvas slings, and is in a comfortable position. The nourishment consists of milk, eggs, oatmeal, butter and gruel. This diet is administered with a spoon, the mouth being open only about an inch. The attending veterinary surgeon, Dr. H. O. Dangler of this place, has hopes that the animal will entirely recover.—New York Times.

A ladder of [illegible] is often a [illegible]

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

To Clean Paint Work.

A steamboat steward says that housekeepers should go to a steamboat for lessons on cleaning paint work. The cabin of a steamboat, painted a clear white, is kept quite as if the painter had just left it, being not only clear, but having a beautiful polish. All that is necessary is a little water, a sponge, pure castile soap, and a smooth cloth for rubbing after the dirt has been washed off with the sponge. The rubbing restores the polish. Many people paint every year, whereas if the paint is washed in this way it will show clear and with a high polish for four or five years.—Prairie Farmer.

Use Plenty of Apples.

Apples are abundant and cheap this year, says the New York Witness, and there is no more useful fruit. Raw, stewed, baked or preserved, they are wholesome, toothsome and nutritious. The fall apples are the most juicy and delicious, but do not keep, and for that reason have to be sold cheap. Every good-sized family should buy a barrel of them at once for immediate use, and save them from spoiling by eating them up. A considerable portion of them might also be made into jelly by coring them and boiling skin and all. [illegible] apples are best for this purpose, as the color of the skin gives a fine rich tint to the jelly. A liberal allowance of lemon juice should be added to the apple juice and an equal weight of sugar, and the whole boiled into a jelly. It is the cheapest of all jellies, and remarkably good when well made. Bought apple jelly is not nearly so nice, and can seldom be relied upon. It is frequently made from the refuse of the evaporating establishments, that is, the cores, and skins and wormy apples.

Pickles.

For pickles of all kinds use the best cider vinegar and not an acid, vinegar, so-called. It cannot be too strong, as it is weakened when scalded. Unscalded vinegar does not keep well with pickles. Never use a metal vessel in pickling; it should be either granite ware or porcelain. Pickles should be examined frequently and the soft ones taken out. If white specks appear in the vinegar drain it off and scald; add a half teacup of sugar to each gallon and pour again over the pickles. A few bits of horse radish or a few cloves added will improve the flavor.

All vegetables or fruits for pickling, except for sweet pickles, should be sound, but not quite ripe. Do not scald cucumbers, but soak them in salt and water. Boiled beets can be pickled whole, first removing the outer skin, to be sliced when required. Vegetables that require to be boiled or scalded before pickling will be whiter if a little lemon or green grape juice is added to the water, as cabbage, cauliflower, white beets or onions. For green vegetables put a little soda in the water to preserve the color. Care should be taken not to scald too much, or they will be soft and tasteless.

Always have the vegetables or fruit perfectly cold before pouring over the vinegar, which should be in all cases very hot.

A good average of spices to a quart of pickles is an even teaspoon each of allspice and peppercorns, one-half a teaspoon of mustard seed, a piece of Jamaica ginger one inch long and a tablespoon of stick cinnamon broken.—Detroit Free Press.

Household Hints.

Use a warm knife in cutting warm bread and the like.

A paste of whiting and benzine will remove spots from marble.

A salt ham should be soaked over night in plenty of soft water previous to boiling.

After washing a wooden bowl place it where it will dry equally on all sides, away from the stove.

Fruit stains on white goods can be removed by pouring boiling water directly from the kettle over the spots.

Hive sirup is good for croup or inflammation of the lungs. It must be kept in a cool place, for if it sours it is very poisonous.

If you want poached eggs to look particularly nice cook each egg in a muffin ring placed in the bottom of a saucepan of boiling water.

A creaking hinge can be cured by the use of a black lead pencil of the softest number, the point rubbed into all the crevices of the hinge.

Corks may be made air and water tight by keeping them for five minutes under melted paraffine. They must be kept down with a wire screen.

For cleaning brass use a thin paste of plate powder, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, four tablespoonfuls of alcohol. Rub with a piece of flannel; polish with chamois.

[illegible] should be cooked before it is stale. Boil for two or three hours, then strain through a linen cloth. One-fourth of this fat and three-fourths lard is a good mixture for frying doughnuts.

Be very particular about disinfecting the kitchen sink. Washing soda, two tablespoonfuls to a gallon of boiling water, makes an excellent wash to pour hot into the sink at after you have finished using it.

It has been estimated that if the heat generated within the body were allowed to accumulate within us, and none to be given off, it would be sufficient to raise the body to the boiling point in thirty-six hours.

According to Pasteur and Chamberland, typhoid bacillus is in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred communicated through drinking water.

STRANGE SHIPS.

A NOVEL EXHIBITION IN THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Queer Boats From All Parts of the World—Secrets of Navigation Known By Rude Savages.

There is a department in the National Museum that would delight any rightly constituted boy, or man, either—for a man never outgrows his boyhood interest in boats and ships and the mysteries of navigation. This department tells the story of the ship. It is not a written or printed story, but one told by the collection of rafts, canoes, catamarans and ships that fill a large exhibition hall.

An old idea was that the first boat was a log. There are, however, treeless lands, where the people have no logs to begin with. They start, perhaps, by making boats of skins. In some parts of the world, where there are neither logs nor skins available savage men construct boats or rafts by binding together in sheaves.

From the log the next step is to the dug-out, which savages fashioned by hollowing out a log with fire or rude tools. When savages began to make bark canoes they took quite a step toward the modern ship, as a bark canoe, with its frame-work and outer covering, illustrates in a rudimentary way important principles involved in the shipbuilder's art. Savages, too, observed that the wind could be used to propel their boats. It is supposed that the first sail was a bush. From the bush the savage went to a piece of skin or bark, or a matting rudely triced up on a pole. It is curious to note that the forms of sails used on yachts and ships of the most highly civilized people have been developed naturally from the primitive forms used by savage people.

The primitive is either a square or a lateen or triangular sail. The lateen sail is so named because it is the form used on the Mediterranean by people of the Latin races. When men learned more of the shipbuilding art, and boats grew bigger, the lateen sail was enlarged, booms were projected fore and aft, and the sail extended so as to reach beyond the bows in front and beyond the stern in the rear.

Near the centre of the hall a kyak from the Greenland coast, made of skins by the Esquimaux, hangs from the ceiling. It is decked over as tight as a drum, and the ends are sharpened and curved up. In the centre is a hole in the deck just large enough to admit a man's body. The Esquimaux, when in his kyak, sits squarely on the bottom, his legs stretched out before him, all of his body below the waist being under deck. He has a garment or coat of skin, the lower edges of which are fastened to the rim of the hole or cockpit, thus making it water-tight. In this cockel-shell of a boat the Esquimaux, with paddle and spear in hand, hazards his life on rough Arctic seas in pursuit of seal or walrus, "a human nautilus upon the tide." There are kyaks, too, from Alaska, and from other Arctic regions. Bidarkas, or skin boats from the Aleutian Islands, are decked over like Esquimaux kyaks, and are ornamented with colored fringes at the seams, just as Indians love to ornament their clothing.

Some of the bidarkas are "three-holed," or have places for three men to sit in them, and to the little models shown in the Museum miniature spears are lashed just as the Indians lash their spears to their boats when they start out to hunt seal.

The rudest form of the bark canoe shown in the collection is from British Guiana. It was made merely by taking a single sheet of bark of suitable size, curling up the sides and then stiffening the edges by means of slender splints bound to them with thongs. The ends of the canoe are left open and the savage navigator has to use much skill to prevent water from washing in at stem or stern. An Indian canoe, made by the Passamaquoddy Indians of Maine, is shown as a model of this type. It is made of birch bark, over light wooden frame, with one thwart amidships. The bark is sewed together at the ends and to the gunwales with dyed wooden fiber. It has a round bottom—the ends being alike, sharp and curved upward.

A balsa or swimming raft from the East Indies is made simply of long bundles of rushes bound together. A catamaran from Madras, India, is made of logs, bound together with ropes and fashioned so that they tend to a point and bend upward slightly in front. This is used as a surf boat. When a heavy swell threatens the craft the native mariner deserts it altogether, jumping into the wave and then clambering upon it when he comes to the surface again. On this craft, too, he sometimes sets up a tiny mast and hoists a bit of cotton as a sail.

A simple dugout, perhaps the simplest, is a "donga" from Jessore, India. It is made from the stem of the tar palm. The natural form of the tree, with its bulbous end, is preserved, and the boat looks like a big spoon. The native sits in the bow of the spoon or boat, and his weight keeps the other end out of the water.

A dugout made by Chinese fishermen is a log completely hollowed out from end to end. Instead of [illegible] the logs so as to leave the ends solid, the simple Chinaman cuts out the ends then stops them up again with pieces of wood made to fit the apertures. A dugout from Patna, India, made from the trunk of a Semul tree, looks much like a shallow wooden trough with square ends.

The Indians of the northwest coast of America developed the art of making boats from single logs to the highest degree. The huge cedar trees that grow on the coast, the wood being soft enough to be worked with their rude tools, afforded them a natural opportunity that they did not neglect. The great canoe that is suspended from the ceiling on one side of the hall and makes all other canoes look like pigmies, is a specimen of the work of the Haidah Indians and was brought to the museum from the Queen Charlotte Islands, British Columbia. It was hewn out of a single log of yellow cedar. The length is fifty-nine feet and the beam eight feet. The ends are sharp and alike, the stem being carried up and finished in an angular sort of ornament suggested the outline of a head of some aquatic animal. The body of the canoe is painted a dingy white, and at each end is a series of figures painted in white, blue and green, rude circles and rhomboids enclosing representations of eyes. These figures are symbols of totems of the chief who owned the canoe, representing the traditions of his family, like the heraldic coat-of-arms of some royal or noble family of Europe. In this canoe a chief would set out with fifty or more men, on a war-like expedition. None but men of consequence, who could command the labor of many hands could own such a canoe. To cut down the immense tree, hollow out the log, and fashion the canoe with the rude stone hatchets and chisels with which these Indians worked, required the labor of many men for months and years. A dugout canoe in which Hoopah Indians sailed on Trinity River, California, is made like an old fashioned wooden cradle, almost as broad as it is long. It has a gunwale that curls inboard, and round and square ends that rise to a point.

There are several boats placed together showing how people in different parts of the world hit upon the same form. These are boats of the corracle pattern, round as a bowl that the old nursery rhyme says three wise men of Gotham went to sea in. There is a Boyne corracle in which Irish fishermen take out their snap nets and fish for salmon on the Boyne. It is almost perfectly round. The frame is made of willow like a huge basket, and over it hides are stretched.

Another corracle similar in construction is from the River Dee and another is from India. The latter is a child's corracle, plaited like a basket of stiff rushes and has no outer covering. Near it stands a bull boat, used by Indians of Dakota. It is a round boat, about four feet in diameter, the same being made of pliant wood and the coverings of kins.—Washington Star.

Bean Lore.

The flowering beans were anciently supposed to give out a perfume that made men light-headed; hence, when a person seemed unusually silly, the expression used of him was: "Beans are in flower." Another saying connected with beans was: "Ogni grano ha la sua semola"—"Every bean has its black," that is its black eye. This was equivalent to saying: "Every person has his fault."

Beans have always had something mysterious connected with them ever since the days when Pliny wrote of Pythagoras's rule against eating them, "that beans contain the souls of the dead." And long ago in the city of Rome the priests said that the dark lines on bean-blossoms were letters. Still the modern mind is doubtful as to the success of the said priests in reading such alphabet. But the land of mysterious beans was Egypt, where the priests dared not look upon the vegetable.

To Pope Euticianus is attributed "the blessynge of benes upon the aultar," and the ghosts of the dead were appeased by the Romans, during the Lemuria, by throwing beans on the fire of the altar every other night for three times.

And an ancient Popish book, of 1565, says of some ceremony to which beans belonged: "We do not use to seeth ten or twelve beans together, but as many as we meane to eate; no more must be steepe, that is, meditate, upon ten or twelve sinnes only, neither for ten or twelve dayes, but upon all the sinnes that ever we committed even from our birth, if it were possible to remember them."—Independent.

A Primitive Mexican Mill.

The ordinary Mexican corn-mill is of the pattern that has been in use from time immemorial, sometimes as a hand-mill, but turned by a horse, camel, ox or ass when constructed on a larger scale. Livingstone describes, in South Africa, "a mill, such as in Biblical times Sarah used, when told by her lord to do the thing handsomely and in a hurry for the strangers—i. e.: a big stone worn quite hollow by the operations of grinding. The upper stone is grasped by both hands, and the weight of the body is brought down on it as it is shoved to the lower part." In the Mexican mill the upper stone is large and heavy enough to grind by its own weight the meal for the daily tortillas. The patient, circumambulating mule is not muzzled, but he is blindfolded by a pair of singular-looking conical extinguishers, which prevent his being distracted from his work by the sight of the grist he is pulverizing.

A Duel to the Death.

Two young men in France who were engaged to two sisters quarreled over some trifling matter, and agreed to settle their dispute by a duel, in which both should be wounded and one at least should be killed. The conditions agreed upon were that the right foot of the one should be tied to the left foot of the other, and then, each being armed with a dagger, they were to stab one another by turns until one should die. Each of the combatants received seven wounds before one of them expired, while still tied to his antagonist. The other was also removed in a dying [illegible] York Press.

The Methodist Epi[illegible] 132 theological [illegible] leges, 137 [illegible] amounting to [illegible]

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

Baby Has Gone to School.

The baby has gone to school; ah, me!
What will the mother do,
With never a call to button or pin,
Or tie a little shoe!
How can she keep herself busy all day
With the little "hindering thing" away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good bye" to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away;
And turns with a sigh that is half relief,
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a [illegible] future morn,
When the [illegible]
Will go from th[illegible] into the world,
To battle with [illegible]
And not even the [illegible] left to cheer
The desolate [illegible] of that future year.

She picks up garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced;
If the house was always as still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness!

—Graphic.

No More Bustles.

The fiat of fashion has gone forth that bustles shall be banished from the toilets of the fair sex, at which the unfair sex profess to be rejoicing merrily. "There will be more room in the street cars," says one. "We shall see graceful draperies," adds another, while a third delicately phrases his idea of clinging skirts and graceful outlines. The initiated smile with derisive pity, remembering that the unfair sex knows nothing of reeds. Only two small reeds which will be worn in every feminine skirt. The poor little bustle took up very little room in the street cars. It was the reeds that usurped space. The bustle fitted snugly to the small of the back, incommoding no one but the wearer; the reeds spread out in sitting down, and in walking were shaken by the wind. But what will become of all the bustle manufactories? There were a great number of them, and if this change in the fashion prevails their occupation will be gone. It serves them right, too, because they were all conducted by men, and it is men who have always howled about bustles. The story runs that a certain Parisian leader of fashion owed a bill for bustles which she was not prepared to pay. The bustle man sued her, and out of revenge she discarded bustles, and introduced the adjustable reed. Hence a very large industry received a serious blow. It seems hard upon all the work people who made the wire for the bustles, and the greater number who constructed the articles, and the young women employed to sell them, to say nothing of those who have bought a collection of bustles and don't know how to get rid of them.—Toppart's Times.

Splendid Jewels a Heavy Care.

The care of splendid jewels weighs very heavily upon their owners sometimes, and the women whose diamonds are too small to be mentioned in the letters from the summer watering-places, can console themselves with the fact that all the crooks and sharps in the country are not intently perusing such articles concerning them, and laying plans to render them diamondless. Some women at these summer resorts, who carry fortunes about with them in their jewel-cases, are extremely reckless in the care of them, and send cold shivers down the hotel clerk's spine by coming sleepily at midnight, dropping one hundred thousand dollars' worth of precious stones on the desk and making off before they stop to see whether he is looking or not. One bold snatch, on these occasions, would make a hotel thief comfortable for life. The rich cottagers, however, are more careful. They are aware that they are known all over the country, and the value of their gems accurately registered in burglars' note-books, and so they take proper precautions. Nearly all have heavy burglar and fire-proof safes set into the wall of their bed-rooms, and their costly possessions are deposited there every night. Mrs. William Astor and Mrs. Ogden Goelet both have alarms attached to the safes in their boudoirs, so that the slightest effort to tamper with the door will let loose a noise that can be heard a mile, and is calculated to induce nervous prostration in even the hardiest pilferer. When any of the Astors, Vanderbilts, Winthrops, Lorillards, or Van Rensselaers travel, a special courier is sent by their jeweler to guard their diamonds, and he is responsible for their safe delivery. He even goes abroad with them, it being his business to go to the safe deposit company, give a receipt for the jewels, see them safely in the Captain's safe aboard the steamer, take them out on the other side, and get a receipt from the London or Paris banker who has them in charge while the owners remain in Europe. Some women, however, will not trust their most treasured jewels to the hands of even a detective, and their methods of personally transporting them are as varied and queer as only feminine methods ever are. Mrs. Paran Stevens, who is nothing if not original, carries thousands of dollars' worth of blazing gems done up in a brown paper parcel and tied with a white cotton string. Her argument is that thieves would never suspect that so shabby a looking bundle, carelessly fastened into a shawl strap, was worth while carrying away. Mrs. Hicks-Lord —whose divorce, by the way, is on the eve of marriage with a French duke— transports that superb one-hundred-thousand dollar necklace and some quarter [illegible] worth of diamonds in a [illegible] about her waist. Mrs. [illegible] has some dear particular [illegible] to carry in the little [illegible] that served [illegible] that bustles are [illegible] obliged to pro-[illegible]

—Argonaut.

Fashion Notes.

Onyx is given a dead finish for mourning.

The fashionable tints of the fall are green, red and gray, in myriads of new variations.

New black woolens intended for mourning wear have crinkled stripes like crape.

Among the recently imported novelties in jewelry we note a tiny gold watch in fan shape.

Earrings in form of stirrups, one side set with diamonds, the other with sapphires, are a novelty.

Linked sleeve buttons are seen resembling coupled coffee beans. One will be silver, the other a copper tint, a third gold, and a fourth oxidized silver.

Cloths for the street, jackets and short wraps in beaver cloth, will be chiefly worn in red, terra cotta, slate, serpent, golden brown, marine blue, and black.

Directoire styles have again come to the fore, and broad lapping revers, high waisted evening bodices and redingotes street wear, will be a feature of the season.

A bodice that will be much favored for evening gowns this winter is cut low and square in front, with embroidered lappets falling down from the embroidered collar and the opening filled in with a chemisette of fine pleated white surah.

Cape overcoats grow in favor and fifty inches is their correct length for the average man, but to our mind the well-cut sack, of dark blue or black, full fitted but not loose, with velvet collar and stitched cuffs and edges, is far and away more stylish.

Long loops of ribbon velvet, that do not even pretend any connection with the girdle, flaunt or dangle at the sides of many new flat skirts, and save their wearers many of the complications necessarily incident to the empire sash or an awkward wearer.

Creature Comforts for Cattle.

Saturday afternoon there passed through this city Benjamin F. Holmes, general manager of the American Live Stock Express Company, in charge of the first train of rapid transit stock cars ever run west of Chicago. This company has devised a new car for the transportation of live stock, such as will prevent the bruising and suffering of animals while being shipped. This car will provide for the feeding and watering of stock while in transit, and it can be so divided that each animal will have a separate compartment or stall. These compartments or stalls are formed by a very simple, yet practicable device, which consist of a series of slats made of hickory and strapped with steel or iron, and operating transversely in grooves or channels formed in the side parts of the cars and being attached at each end with endless belt chains which engage with sprocket wheels situated close to the roof of the car and mounted upon countershafts situated in the sills, to which power is applied by means of a crank to move the partitions from a horizontal position in the cars, up longitudinally close under the roof, or in either direction, to form the stalls or make an open car. The cars carry the same number of head of stocks as ordinary cars, and when loaded by means of the above device, the stock can be separated very readily. The hay or grain is carried to the top or attic of the car, and the manner of placing it in the mangers is as convenient as it would be in a stable, and can be fed at any time while the train is in motion. Water is furnished by means of supply pipes, extending on the outside around the car, to which troughs are attached by short pipes, tapped into the main supply pipe, and by rotating the main pipe water, which is received in a tank at the end of the car, every trough will instantly fill up to the water level in the main pipe, furnishing eight gallons to each animal. The troughs, like the mangers, are built into the side walls in such a manner that the interior of the cars are smooth. The ventilation of these cars is by means of fan wheels, situated in the top and side of the feed bins.

The train was composed of seventeen stock cars and a way car. The way car is a model of elegance and comfort, being supplied with sleeping, cooking and dining rooms to accommodate three men, who are furnished by the company, the number required to take care of the stock while in transit. The cars are supplied with elliptic springs, Westinghouse air brakes, automatic couplers and the Sisum canting lever trucks, the same equipments now used on the best sleeping cars. These trains will be run on the Union Pacific and Milwaukee from Soda Springs, Idaho, to Chicago or any point in the East, and will run at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.—Omaha Bee.

The Barber's Delicate Art.

A barber says in the Globe-Democrat: Few people have an idea how few there are who could become barbers by any amount of application. I have had nineteen apprentices at various times, only seven of whom are tonsorial artists. Some boys are too nervous to acquire the ability, and particularly cigarette smokers. Others are too lazy. Still others have not the suaveness necessary, for a successful barber must be a polite man. Others have not the essential mechanism or cannot attain to the requisite lightness of touch. But morbid peculiarities are great factors in unfitting a candidate. For instance, I have just dismissed an apprentice because of his inordinate antipathy to warts. When a customer who is the possessor of a wart is down in a chair at the boy's mercy he shaves all around it with the utmost care; then a devilish grin distorts his features, the expression being the funniest I ever saw, and he cuts off the wart. The customer rises and discovers his face bleeding terribly, and the result is a row and a lost customer.

HAPPY SMILES.

It is the police who ma-nip-u-late.—Duluth Paragrapher.

An Eastern publisher announces for fall, "How to Get a Husband." We respectfully suggest that the safest place to get him is by the ear.

GOLDSMITH'S love for "everything that's old" would have been gratified if Goldsmith could have lived to read the humor of the last half of the nineteenth century.

"HOW STORMS ARE MADE" is the subject of a learned article in an exchange. The quickest way to make them is to leave your umbrella at home.—Dansville Breeze.

HUSBAND (of economical views)—"That's a very becoming bonnet, my dear." Wife of (sarcastic turn)—"Oh, yes, becoming very old and decrepit."—Washington Critic.

Isn't it a little strange that when a ship is loaded she is generally well balanced, but when a man gets that way he is pretty certain to lose his balance?—Yonkers Statesman.

Why women kiss women no one has ever yet been able to determine, but it is generally agreed, we believe, that men kiss women because the women want them to.—Somerville Journal.

FARMER'S wife (limping into the house)—"That brindle cow kicked me, John, an' I'm afraid my leg is broken." Farmer—"Gash ding that critter! Is the milk spilled?"—Texas Siftings.

MOTHER (to meddlesome child)—Edwin, if you don't stop putting your fingers in that oxalic acid, the first thing you know you will be on the way to heaven. Elder sister—Yes, and if you do go, just think, you would never see your dear mother again!—Harper's Bazar.

CUSTOMER (to barber)—"Shave down, please, as it makes my face sore to shave against the grain." "I'd just as soon shave down as not," replied the loquacious torturer, "but can't find any on your grizzly old face. The down on your face turned to bristles years ago."—Dansville Breeze.

The ruling passion is said to be very strong in the Czar of Russia.

On the brink—the abyss.

A knot is a division of a ship's log line corresponding to a nautical line.

More twins are born in May and July than in any other months.

Convicts are the only persons who do no believe in their convictions.

Where Lo, Cabins Flourish.

A party of American gentlemen, who had been camping out on an island in the great Lake Nipissing, Canada, last Summer, were recruiting in a sail boat and were yet seven miles from port when the sun went down, and with it the [illegible] breeze.

A discouraging situation, truly.

"Never mind, I can row you there inside of two hours," said the guide who had charge of the party, as their murmurs arose.

"Why, man, it is seven miles, there are four of us in this heavy boat—its a big job you undertake," said one.

"No matter, I have done the likes before and can do it again," cheerfully replied the broad shouldered Irishman, as he stowed away the sail and bent to the oars. He was a splendid oarsman, and the boat was soon under headway again.

"What would I not give to enjoy your health and strength," remarked the Professor.

"Yes, I am pretty healthy, and though I am past sixty I feel as strong as ever," replied the guide. "But only three years ago I stood at death's door and never thought to pull an oar again. You see, I was in the woods all winter, logging, and I got into the water one day and caught cold. It settled on my lungs and I had a bad cough, which hung on till I ran down almost to a skeleton."

"Call in a physician?"

"Yes, I went twenty miles through the bush to see a doctor. He gave me some medicine, but it didn't help me much."

"How was the cure effected?"

"An old Scotch lady, who had come over from the States gave me a preparation of balsams and herbs, which she said the early settlers in America used, and it soon stopped my cough and put me on my feet again."

One has but to travel along the frontier to learn how easy it is to get along without doctors, and how effective are the natural remedies which the old grandmothers know how to prepare. They often cure where the best physicians fail.

Every mother of a family knows how coughs and colds are quickly and radically cured with syrups and teas made from balsams and herbs which "grandmother taught us how to make."

Warner's Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy was, after long investigation into the merits and comparison with other old-time preparations, selected from them because proved to be the very best of them all. It has brought back the roses to many a pallid cheek—there is no known remedy its equal as a cure for coughs and colds.

Brethren of the cloth—tailors.

Pocahontas Times.

R. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.50 in advance; after 6 months, $1.75; after 12 months, $2.00.

These terms will be strictly complied with, to the millionaire and school boy alike.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Dec. 6, 1888.

Party Discipline.

The recent success of the Republican party has been attributed to various causes, all of which, no doubt, had some bearing on the result; but, if any one thing had more to do with it than all else, we believe the thorough organization and discipline of the party did. Republicans long ago accepted as true the Bible maxim that "a house divided against itself cannot stand," hence the invariable unanimity of their action. On the other hand the democrats have time and again brought about their own defeat by senseless and bitter internal strife. Never was this more forcibly nor disastriously illustrated than in the local New York fight of the last campaign, by which Grover Cleveland was defeated and the national policy for the next four years completely changed. But the democrats of New York are not the only one who committed this great blunder; while the effect of their folly may by more far reaching, the same unwise and undemocratic conduct existed in various other states. In our own state, West Virginia, the legislature came near passing into the hands of the Republican party principally on account of division in our own ranks. In a number of counties there were two democrats running against one republican; but you didn't hear of two republicans against one democrat. How are we to account for this? Is it because there are more men hungering and thirsting for office in the democratic party than in the republican? Is it because we have more men born to be leaders? No, the true cause lies in the fact that the discipline of the democratic party has in the past been less rigid than the discipline of the other party. What an army needs most is not men to command, but men to obey. So it is with a political party; its success depends not as much on the number of its leaders as on the number led. The democratic party seems never to have learned that in politics individual plans and individual interests should when necessary be sacrificed to the will and interests of the party. So deficient indeed has been our training in this respect that it often happens that the behests of the party are less heeded than personal inclination and individual promotion more sought after than party triumph. This was true to a great extent in the last campaign, and behold th result. Never can we hope again to control and guide by our own hands the ship of state until doctrines and practices so false and pernicious be entirely abandoned. No man is a true democrat or true republican who insists that he is wiser than his party, or that the country would receive greater benefit from his individual success than from the success of his party. In politics, as in everything else, selfishness is extremely unprofitable and greatly to be dreaded. But they ask us, "What are we going to do when the party nominates a man that we don't like to support?" Our answer is that in such cases the nomination perhaps went by default, but few took any interest in it; if so, those who without reason gave themselves no concern and took no pains to help put forward whom they believed to be the right man shouldn't complain of the action of those who did take enough interests to represent their party. If, on the other hand, a nomination were made by the entire party we must fall back on the underlying principle of our government that the majority shall rule. So in neither case is there ground for complaint or excuse for opposition. It would seem that our recent defeat would so forcibly teach us this lesson that it need never be referred to again. Let us hope so at least; and now that we begin to rebuild our broken ship, see to it that none but the best materials are used. Permit no unsound nor warped nor wind-shaken timber to enter into the structure. As for those who lead us against the rock of our destruction, allow them to remain on board, but never again entrust to their hands the guidance of the ship. If we do these things and ourselves remain true, it is only a question of time when we shall regain all that we have lost and more.

Secretary Whitney's annual report records the greatest administrative success of Mr. Cleveland's term. Whatever has happened in other departments of the Government, every Democrat may be proud of the manner in which the Secretary of the Navy has done his work.

This is all the more satisfactory because under Republican rule the Navy Department became the most conspicious seat of maladministration, corruption, and incompetency in the whole Government. Nowhere else was there such an urgent demand for radical and honest reform. Nowhere else has there been so intelligent and thorough an interpretation of the commission entrusted to the Democratic party by the vote of the people four years ago.

Mr. Whitney has rendered the country a service of inestimable value, and we perceive no disposition on the part of anybody, Democrat or Republican, to deny him the credit that belongs to fidelity, integrity, and remarkable ability. He has indeed administered the affairs of the Navy Department as a public trust.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. Harrison and his party will have a Republican Congress which can be relied upon to pass almost any measure he may recommend, and which can rely upon him to approve almost any legislation it may pass. It is better for the country that there should be a check upon legislation in Congress by the existence of either an adverse majority in one House or an adverse President, as there are far two many laws already; but it is to the advantage of the Democratic party that the Republicans should have full sweep and no obstruction to the execution of their purposes. With plenty of rope the Republican calf will hang itself before another election comes around, unless its education has progressed amazingly since it was last in position to move at its own sweet will.—Fayette Democrat.

The rush has begun. Thousands of patriots who are willing to serve their country for glory and a salary are deluging members of Congress with their offers of service. Republican statesmen are just beginning to see how popular they are, and how miserable their lives can be made. Republican hold over clerks are realising the awful seriousness of the rush and are wishing they hadn't. Democratic clerks have their grip-sacks packed ready for the exodus, or ought to have.

And the merry fun goes on. These things have to occur once or twice in a lifetime, and maybe oftener. So must it be. There will be another shake-up in '93.—Wheeling Register.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered on the 17th day of October, 1888, in the Chancery cause of George N. Tacy vs. Hamilton Collins etc., I, as special commissioner appointed in the said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court-House of said county, on the

1st DAY OF JANUARY, 1888,

the following real estate, to-wit:

A tract of land containing One Hundred acres, more or less, lying on the waters of Clover Creek, in Pocahontas county, West Virginia, adjoining the lands of S. B. Hannah, B. Doyle and others, being the same land heretofore sold to Hamilton Collins by said George N. Tacy.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue, the purchaser to execute three several bonds with good security, falling due respectively in Six, Twelve and Eighteen months from day of sale, said bonds bearing interest from day of sale. A lien will also be retained on said land as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Sp'l Commissioner.

C. B. SWECKER, Auctioneer.

Bond has been given by the above Special Commissioner as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k of Ct. Cr't.

Dec. 6 4-t. Printers fee $8.25.

JOB WORK

Done with neatness and on short notice at THE TIMES office, Huntersville

...—Rev. J. Luster Henderson will preach for this year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd "	Sunset,	11 A. M.
" "	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd "	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th "	Bethel,	11 A. M.
" "	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Fisher killed somebody's pet ...er last Saturday.

—It is reported that Nelson ...ore, who was a short time ago ...leased from jail on bail, has disappeared.

—Jno. E. Campbell, who for ...metime has been working at ...harlottesville, Va., has returned to ...s old place in the TIMES office.

—Mr. L. M. McClintic and Miss ...lie Slaven were united in marriage, Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, at the Huntersville Hotel. ...e extend hearty congratulations ...d good wishes.

—Rev. H. W. Kinzer, who has ...r some days been ill at the residence of C. P. Moore, started for ...s home in Lewisburg yesterday morning, accompanied by his wife.

—Sacramental meeting at the Presbyterian church next sabbath. Preliminary services on Saturday.

—I hereby gratefully acknowledge the earnest solicitude of the ...l people of Huntersville and community in my behalf, and their ...eeding kindness to me during ...y late illness, and invoke upon ...em the richest blessings of heaven.

H. W. KINZER.

—Jas. B. Canfield, Esq., former ...itor of THE TIMES, will shortly remove to Gordonsville, Va., to ...ke charge of the Orange County Gazette, which paper he recently purchased. We regret very much ...o lose Mr. Canfield, but as he has determined to go we wish him and ...Gazette abundant success.

—The first genuine, old time ...n paid the new managers of ...E TIMES for subscription, was ...d by Peter Hill, Esq., of Jacox. ...ank you, sir.

—Isaac McNeel, Esq., of Mill ...int, spent Tuesday night in town.

—Miss Lizzie Ligon, of Clover ...ck, was at the Huntersville Ho... Tuesday night. The object of ...r visit will be seen by reading the marriage notice in another column.

—Now is the time to renew your subscription to THE TIMES; or, if ...have never before been a subscriber, begin it with the new year. ...shall try hard to give you the ...rth of your money.

Christmas Tree.

The people of Dunmore and vicinity contemplate having a big Christmas tree during the Holli...ays. The tree will be for every...dy, and all are invited to help ...t up the Xmas. tricks. It will be ...r young and old. Let everybody ...o to work and help to make the ...e interesting.

OLD KRIS.

FOR SALE.

...ave for sale in Huntersville ...following property: One good ..., one cooking stove, two heat... stoves, one bedstead, cupboards, ...bles, chairs, one marble top par...r table, washstand, bureau, and ...ny other things useful about a ...use. If you desire any of the a...ve articles call early.

Respectfully,
JAS. B. CANFIELD.

WANTED

...ressed Deer Skins, Hides and ...ow for cash or exchange.

A. P. LEIST,
..., Harness, Sad...
...W. Va.

School Reports.

The following is the report of Fairview school for the 2nd month ending November 23rd, 1888:

No. enrolled—Girls, 15; boys, 11.

Average daily attendance—Girls, 11; boys, 8.

Per cent. of daily attendance—Girls, 90; boys, 81.

No. of pupils neither absent nor tardy—Minnie Johnson, Carry Friel, Lena Friel, Frances Sharp, Josie Friel, Amos Sharp, Jerry Friel, Jiles Johnson.

JOHN A. MCLAUGHLIN,
Teacher.

The following is the report of the Swago school for the month ending November 23rd:

No. of pupils enrolled—Boys 14, girls 12.

Average daily attendance, 17.

Per cent. of daily attendance, 84.

Pupils neither absent nor tardy, Olive Overholt, Laura Overholt, Joe Hannah and Malvin Overholt.

A. S. OVERHOLT,
Teacher.

Closing Accounts.

I have sold THE TIMES office to Mr. S. B. Loury, Jr., and Atty. C. F. Moore, and am now settling up all accounts due me on Subscription, Job Work and Advertising. I ask each and every one to give immediate attention to the statements sent to each this week, as I expect to leave the county on December 17th and wish all accounts closed before that time. All accounts not paid before December 15th will be given to L. M. McClintic for collection. Each account is made out at the advance rates, but if any remain unpaid December 15, they will be put in Mr. McClintic's hands at the rate of $2 per year. Honor the statements you receive with cash at once and save time and cost to us both.

Very Truly,
JAS. B. CANFIELD.

McClintic-Slaven.

The marriage of L. M. McClintic, Esq. and Miss Alice Slaven, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Slaven, was celebrated Wednesday morning 5th, inst. No cards. Wm. T. Price officiating minister. The attendants were Misses Minnie Gammon, of Missouri and Lizzie Ligon, of Clover Lick, along with Messrs. Dr. McClintic, of Edray and Harry Patterson, of Huntersville. This auspicious event in the society of our town passed off in a very quiet and appropriate manner, and it was difficult to realize that the nuptials of young persons, so widely known and highly esteemed were being solemnized. W.

Who is to be the next Governor of West Virginia is a question that will most likely remain unsettled till the legislature convenes and decides it. The democrats and republicans are equally loud and confident in their claims. It seems, however, to be generally conceded that the rest of the democratic State ticket is elected, and that the state has gone for Cleveland by about 1,000 majority.

The legislature will be democratic by one majority on joint ballot, insuring the election of a democrat to succeed John E. Kenna in the United States Senate, unless there be some purchasable property among the democrats.

A correspondent of the New York Sun predicts that Grover Cleveland will make his future home in Orange, N. J., and will succeed Blodgett in the U. S. Senate.

The closing session of the Fiftieth Congress met at Washington last Monday. The President's Message, which is said to be a lengthy paper, will now be given the public.

Benjamin and Levi have won the presidential race and Daniel will shortly have to give way to Elijah, and still Bob Ingersoll and a few other Republicans do not believe in the Bible.

AN ANECDOTE OF LONGFELLOW.

A New York paper, in some pleasant gossip about Mr. Longfellow, tells a story of the way he treated the charges of plagiarism against the Indian poem, "Hiawatha," in following closely both the form and substance of The Kalevala, the national epic of Finland. When they began to appear, he showed a profound indifference on the subject; but before long his publisher thought best to call his attention to them, and suggested that a reply from the poet be written. "Well, I'll think about it," said Mr. Longfellow, and there the matter dropped. The press continued to echo and re-echo the charge; and the publisher again called on the poet, saying, "Really, Mr. Longfellow, I think it is high time this charge was answered." Again Longfellow said "I'll see about it," adding, quietly. "How is the book selling?" "Oh, wonderfully well," said the publisher. "Better than my other books?" "Oh much better," and he named the figures. Shortly after his interview (Mr. Longfellow still keeping silence), the Tribune came out with almost a page of broadside on the subject. The publisher was now really excited. He called on the poet again. "It will not do," he said, very decidedly, "to let this thing go on any longer." "How does the book sell?" asked Longfellow. "Amazingly—the sale is already equal to the combined sales of your other books." "Then," said Longfellow. "I think we ought to be thankful to these critics. Let them talk. Seems to me they are giving us a large amount of gratuitous advertising. Better let them alone." And let alone they were. The fact that at that time there was no existing translation into English which would enable readers to make comparisons, rendered Mr. Longfellow's silence comparatively safe. Now that a complete translation is published in fine and popular form by ALDEN, readers will have a justifiable curiosity to investigate, and see wherein the resemblance lies. And, as commonly is true in comparing originals and imitations, it will be found that great as the merit is of Mr. Longfellow's work, and characteristic of his own individuality, The Kalevala is a work of almost infinitely higher order.

Cocaine, the latest discovered anæsthetic, is, it seems, like its predecessors, chloroform, chloral, and morphine, claiming its victims. A Swiss physician tells the story of a medical friend of his who has succumbed to its fatal allurements. The victim began with morphine, which he eventually exchanged for cocaine. As usual, his first experiments were attended by increased vigor of mind and boby. This, however, was soon followed by mental and nervous depression. After increased doses of the drug, he experienced hallucinations, was compelled to walk round and round in circles, to endeavor to pick up needles where he knew none were to be found, and was at length left utterly sleepless and without appetite. To escape the fatal influence of the drug he gave up his practice, and went as surgeon in a ship bound for the east. At length, by means of long sea voyages, he overcame his craving, and was restored to health, only, as he knew, to fall a victim to the poison once more on finding it accessible. Persistent indulgence in the drug resulted in one of the most terrible of deaths—exhaustion from tetanus.—St. James Gazette.

BOOKS AND READING.

Desultory habits of study are not to be commended; but I do not advise you to pursue any systematic course of reading, because I am looking upon reading, for the moment, not as an exercise but as a recreation, and I fear lest, if it were reduced to a rigid and regular system it should become a wearisome task I would have you omnivorous of books; devour all the good books that you come across, your life will certainly not last long enough to leave you time for the temporary ones.

However warmly you may admire a particular author, do not permit yourself to lose the consciousness of fallibility. Do not accept as gospel what any man, however great, he says or writes. Never make a blind surrender of your own judgment, either to the author whose writings you affect or to the society which for the time sets him up as an idol. There is a fashion in these things which is very like affectation. Yesterday the rage was for Carlyle; to-day it is for Matthew Arnold or Herbert Spencer; to morrow it may be for some as yet undiscovered literary planet. Do not let yourself be swept away by the stream. Form your own judgment on the best materials you have and do not hesitate modestly to express your own preference or dislike, even if it be out of harmony with the popular sentiment of the moment.

"Books are a guide in youth, and an entertainment for age. They support us under solitude and keep us from becoming a burden to ourselves. They help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and passions and lay our disappointments asleep. When we are weary of the living we may repair to the dead, who have nothing of peevishness, pride or design in their conversation."—Notes for Boys.

Notice to Creditors.

To the creditors of Allen D. Grimes, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said Allen D. Grimes to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Allen D. Grimes for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 27th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this 15th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov23-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.85.

Notice to Creditors.

To the Creditors of John Sharp, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subjet the real estate of the said John Sharp to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said John Sharp for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 28th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this the 16th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov23-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.85.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va.,
November, 16th, 1888.

John Sharp's Adm'r
vs.
John Sharp's Legatees, etc.

All parties interested in the above cause take notice that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, W. Va., on THURSDAY, THE 28th DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889,

to take the following accounts:

1 A settlement of the account of J. C. Arbogast as Administrator, with the will annexed of John Sharp, dec'd;

2 Who the creditors are and the amount of their claims, if any, severally and collectively, with their dignities and priorities;

3 What amount remains in the hands of the Administrator after discharging the debts, if anything, and to whom payable;

4 Any matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest as required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, pronounced in above cause at its October Term, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, Jr.,
Com'r Cir. Ct. P.C.

Nov.22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.67.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va.,
Nov. 16th, 1888.

Rosella Smith, etc.,
vs.
Mary F. Malcomb, etc.

IN CHANCERY.

All parties interested in above cause are hereby notified that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, in said county, on to take the following accounts:

THURSDAY, THE 20th DAY OF DECEMBER, 1888,

1 The names of the persons who have interest in the 202 acres of land in the bill and proceedings mentioned and the amount of their several interests:

2 The value of the personal estate of George W. Moore, dec'd, with which Mary F. Malcomb and John W. Malcomb, or either of them should be charged;

3 Any other matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest to be specially stated, as required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county rendered in above cause at the October Term thereof, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r Cir. Ct, P. C.

Nov22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.67.

TAKE A LESSON FROM THE FARMER.

There's a lesson in the saying of a farmer in the West
That of other things in life, as well, might answer for a test.
Shall I give the lesson to you? Will you heed its teachings? Well,
Listen to me but a moment and the story I will tell.

We were out among the milch cows, speaking of the best ones there,
When the farmer of my first choice said, with patronizing air:
"She's as plump as any pigeon, and her coat's as soft as silk,
But the slickest-looking heifer ain't the one that gives the milk."

Oft 'neath clumsy outward bearing beats a heart both true and brave,
And the smooth and winning manners may conceal the vilest knave.
So the lean horse does the pulling and is not afraid of work,
While the fat and lazy pony is contriving how to shirk.

Would you back a city dandy to engage in any strife,
Or the one whose hands are smoothest for the heavy work of life?
Choose the homely for your milch cow and we'll then, sir, by your leave,
Send the short-horn to the butcher, she will make him splendid beef.

Take a lesson from the farmer, with his sturdy common sense,
Who, unlike the politician, never sits astride the fence;
Watch the smoothest talking fellow, he may prove the biggest bilk;
Know "the slickest looking heifer ain't the one that gives the milk."

—[Matt W. Anderson in the Mercury.

VERNEENA'S FORTUNE;

—OR,—

The Stolen Heiress.

A TALE OF NEW YORK IN 1835.

BY PROF. WM. HENRY PECK,

AUTHOR OF

"The Queen's Secret," "The Tower of Gold," "The Half-Breed," "Harold's Hate," "The Bride of Barcelona," Etc.

[CONTINUED.]

The eyes of the dame flashed rage, but she restrained a spoken expression of her wrath. Edward smiled scornfully and continued:

"Mr. Bratton states frankly to my father, dame, that he has lost temporarily all he borrowed from you."

"The scoundrel! The unholy villain!" muttered the dame.

"And also," added Edward, "that he has good cause to believe that if he should fail to pay you the borrowed money, and every dollar he unfortunately owes you, you will not hesitate to have him arrested upon a false but plausible charge of fraud, and do all you can to imprison and disgrace him."

"Bah! So I will! Lost my fifty thousand dollars has he! The unmitigated wretch! He shall pay me every cent this very day——"

"The gate is open, Dame Grippard!" exclaimed Pettis at this moment—Jansen having had more difficulty with the locks than he had expected when he promised to have the gate open so speedily.

"Very well, Pettis," responded the dame, checking herself in what she had intended to say in regard to her tenant. "Come here, Pettis, and give me your aid to get into my chariot. I sprained my ankle just now when I forgot for the moment that I am now merely a poor, old, decrepit woman, full of aches, weaknesses and infirmities."

Pettis lost no time in helping her into the chaise, and she continued, to Verneena, in an exhausted tone:

"Oh, my dear! I am so weak. So weak. I feel as if I were a hundred years old—and I am sure I look it this minute. Now drive into the yard, my dear, and halt the chariot near the office door. I'll get out there. Shouldn't wonder a bit if I have to order the door to be battered down. I have not the least doubt that Bratton has run away," she added to herself.

Verneena began to drive into the yard. The dame beckoned to Edward to ride at her side of the vehicle, and he complied.

"My dear Mr. Hawksworthy," she said in a voice too low to be heard by others, "have you the large sum you named just now?"

"Every dollar of it, Dame Grippard—and more."

"More!" exclaimed the dame in her heart. "More than a hundred thousand dollars! He must be the son of a very rich man. Richer than Captain [illegible], by a long shot! But this fellow and his father are doubtless too honest, too scrupulous, and all that, and the rest of what the world pretends to admire so much—bah!—and would [illegible] at any proposition of mine to share with me the inheritance that belongs to this minx at my side—and which she can never get a dollar of without my aid. No, Captain [illegible] is my man for the game I am playing—every time. Yah, I see that I have been much too hasty in trying to make a bargain with the Captain."

She turned again to Edward, as the chaise rolled slowly across the spacious yard, and whispered:

"My dear good Mr. Hawksworthy, I [illegible] worthy? And then from the rest of the money which your father so nobly lends to him, he can pay me the rent he owes me.

[illegible]

"And," she added quickly, "this is only a part of the dower I intend to give to our Verneena on her wedding day, Mr. Hawksworthy. I mean to give her all I am worth when I die—and it will be a handsome pile, I assure you. Oh, yes, a very handsome pile—up in the hundreds of thousands, perhaps—but don't whisper a word of this to any one else in the wide world. I don't wish people in general to know how rich I can make our dear Verneena on her marriage day. Here is Mr. Bratton's note, Mr. Hawksworthy. Of course you have no objection to giving me the money for it, under the circumstances, right now?"

The above was whispered by the dame with wonderful fluency, in her most ingratiating style of manner and tone, her eyes flaming with desire to have in her possession the large sum concerning which she was so extremely anxious.

"The money," she said to herself, "if this whipper-snapper is not lying—and sometimes I suspect he is—has been very slow in getting near Old Anchors. Bratton has received no reply, it seems, to his appeal for aid. In sheer despair, if for no other reason, Bratton may have fled during last night—with money which should be in my hands. I do not at all like the looks of things about the premises. I am sure that Bratton has been playing the rascal. Oh, if this young fool would only pay that money to me now—here on the spot."

"Dame Grippard," replied Edward, curtly to her request, "by my father's special order I am to pay the money into Mr. Bratton's own hand, and not until he and I shall have had some conversation in reference to its use hereafter."

This reply filled the soul of the dame with furious chagrin, but the chaise was now too near the office door, and the presence of others around it, to permit her to give vent to her wrath. Besides, Pettis advanced at this moment and said:

"I have knocked and hammered on the office door, Dame Grippard, and failed to obtain the least reply from within. What shall be done now? I am wholly at your service."

"Of course you are that, you simpleton," snapped the dame, as she arose from her seat with assumed decrepitude. "At whose service should you be, if not at mine, you fool? Here, give me your aid to get out of this chariot. I shall not be such an idiot as to jump from it again, and nearly break my ankle—as I did yonder at the gate."

With the help of Pettis, she was soon on the ground, and no sooner was she there than she cried angrily to him:

"Force the door, man. Make quick entrance in some way. By door or window. Haste! I believe Bratton has run away. Haste!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

SUSPICIONS OF FOUL PLAY.

Now to obey Dame Grippard's command, Pettis instantly flashed his eyes round in search of something to use against the door.

But she suddenly remembered that the lock and frame of the portal would be greatly damaged by forcing an entrance, and exclaimed:

"No, no! No smashing of locks and door frames, Pettis. A broken shutter and a shattered pane of glass are less costly. Jansen, force open a shutter, break a pane, unlock a sash and raise a window. Quick! I am anxious to learn why Bratton has dared to keep himself hidden so long this morning. Haste, Jansen."

The Swede quickly forced open a shutter of one of the windows, the sill being not more than breast high to him as he stood on the ground; but as he was about to shatter a pane of glass he noticed that the sash bolt used to lock the lower sash down was not in place. He at once exclaimed in a tone of surprise:

"Hello! This sash is unlocked. That is strange. However, had not Mr. Bratton discharged me from his service before sundown yesterday this window would now be bolted down on the inside. It was always my duty to see to the sash bolts of the windows——"

"Well, well!" snapped the dame, impatiently, "are you going to talk about yourself and your late duties all day? Open the window and then the doors."

Jansen opened the window and sprang over its sill into the counting-room of Old Anchors. Scarcely had his feet struck the floor ere he stooped, picked up something that had caught his notice, and slipped it into one of his pockets. This act was unobserved by any one. He then unlocked, unbolted and opened the door.

By this time Edward had dismounted and tied his horse to a post near the door. He whispered to Verneena, who was still seated in the chaise:

"I do not like the appearance of affairs here, my love. However, I will say no more of that at present. I am exceedingly anxious to see Mr. Bratton, and to prove to him that had my father received his petition sooner this wretched old cormorant would have had no cause to be croaking at his door to-day."

"Ah," replied the beautiful girl, in the same guarded manner, "I am very happy to know that you have it in your power, and are here to free the good gentleman from her clutches. I know well how merciless she delights to be toward any delinquent debtor."

"Yes," said Edward, with some bitterness, as he glanced at the dame; "it is easy to see fiendishness of intent in her flaming eyes and fierce looks. I too am very happy in my hope that all will hereafter go well with Mr. Bratton, for my father has a high opinion of his integrity—having had many business transactions with him years ago, before my father retired from active business life in this city to reside quietly in Albany.

"But I was about to say to you, my love," he added, "that the money which I have for Mr. Bratton reached me only a few hours ago. As I told you in my last letter, I had to hasten to Washington upon official business. The Secretary of the Navy detained me in that city longer than I desired or expected. I was able to return to New York only at a late hour last night. Scarcely had I arrived when a special messenger from my father placed in my hand the letter of which you have just heard me speak to Dame Grippard. As soon as I had read my father's letter I hired a boy to [illegible] entered the office, and was immediately followed by Edward, Verneena and others.

[illegible]

The counting-room of Old Anchors was quite spacious, and much greater in length than in width. In it were many articles pertaining to the ship-chandlery business, besides such furniture as is usually found in business offices. The greater portion of this furniture, however, was now covered with dust which had been gathered for weeks from disuse. Trade had not been brisk at Old Anchors for many days.

The room had several doors as well as many windows. Some of the doors gave entrance into rear warerooms, and one was open at the foot of a stairway that gave access to the upper part of the edifice, and the dwelling place of the Bratton family.

All the windows and their shutters were closed as the party of visitors entered the office—that is, all save the window by which the Swede had got in. To admit light, he at once began to unlock and open the windows. As he was thus occupied he noticed that every window sash was securely bolted down, and that all the shutters were fastened on the inside. The shutters were so arranged that they fastened themselves when closed from within. Jansen, as we have intimated, had found the shutter which he forced from the outside fastened on the inside. This fastening of the shutter could have been done by a pressure exerted from the outside.

Jansen, keeping his thoughts to himself the while, but muttering, as was his habit when perplexed, moved rapidly from window to window, looking sharply at the fastenings of every sash ere he threw open the shutters.

Meanwhile Dame Grippard had dropped herself into a large arm-chair near the middle of the office, feigning to be very feeble and weary, but with swiftly sweeping glances which seemed to devour everything in the place. Suddenly she raised her head arrogantly, struck the point of her staff upon the floor and croaked:

"Know all that I now take possession, full and entire possession, of these premises, from garret to cellar, from front to rear, from river to street. I am the owner, sole owner, here, and here I intend to do as I please this day."

"No one disputes that, Dame Grippard. So much the worse for everybody, say I," exclaimed Jansen, bluffly—for he detested the dame, having once been her debtor, to his great grief.

The dame glared angrily at the Swede for a moment, but restraining her desire to hurl a curse at him, said sharply to Pettis:

"Pettis, there is a bell-cord at the back of Bratton's desk. He used it when he desired the presence of any one from above. The bell hangs in the hall near his bedroom. Ring it. If he is above—awake or asleep—he will be sure to hear it. If he does not come down speedily I'll soon know the reason why. Ring the bell, I say."

Pettis obeyed instantly, and the bell sounded loud and shrill throughout the great vacant rooms above and below.

"That ought to rouse him," said the dame, nodding her head viciously. "But it will not. Why not? Because he is not up there to hear anything we may do down here. He has run away. I say I know he has run away, Pettis. I had bad tidings about him yesterday morning, early in the day, from the clerk he discharged last week—the last clerk he had in his employ—Townly. That clerk told me to look out for my money, for he knew that Bratton would certainly go bankrupt in less than a month. So I am here, as you ought to know by this time, to get my money. But I was a fool not to come here yesterday morning and have Bratton arrested. Bratton is undoubtedly a thief—a robber of helpless widows—a——"

"Say no more about that, Dame Grippard," interrupted Edward, indignantly. "I do not believe that Mr. Bratton has run from his debts by flight. It is possible that he may have been driven to take his life with his own hand rather than be cast into prison and disgraced by you."

"Eh? What do you mean by that, Mr. Hawksworthy?" cried the dame, sharply, and turning pale for an instant, though her scowling face seemed nearly black the next moment.

"Dame Grippard," responded Edward, sternly, "my mind has not been at ease for Mr. Bratton's life since I halted before yonder gate and found it closed and locked. My father writes in his letter to me—the letter containing money for Mr. Bratton—that Mr. Bratton wrote to him in the delayed letter that he, Mr. Bratton, saw nothing between his future and disgraceful imprisonment, under a false but plausible charge of fraud, save death by his own hand. Now, from what my father writes in regard to Mr. Bratton's upright character, I cannot believe that James Bratton could be a thief, even if he tried to be one."

Before Edward could say more, Dame Grippard sprang to her feet and struck the floor furious blows with the point of her staff—a sure sign that her rage and other emotions were beyond her power to articulate. She glared mingled rage, hate, and terror around her. A foam seemed to be [illegible] his set teeth and pallid lips, Jansen bounded to the stairway and vanished instantly upward. His heavily shod but active feet could be heard loudly as they clattered on the stairway after he had vanished so swiftly.

[illegible]

Dame Grippard glared around her in a dazed and dismayed way for a few moments, muttering, with ashy white lips:

"Have I, indeed, lost all that money? Have I? Murdered? I will not believe it. Suicide? James Bratton dead and I not paid? Fifty-five thousand dollars! All paid by his death? I will not believe it! It is a horrible lie! Dead, and I robbed by him, and he not punished by me? I say it is a foul lie!"

CHAPTER XIX.

THE SWEDE'S [illegible].

Dame Grippard quickly regained her usual aspect of feature. Laughing scornfully, she said:

"The Swede is crazy, or rather he is an ass. Any one who knows James Bratton as I do knows very well that he would not harm himself. Run from what he owes me he probably has. You will see I am not mistaken, Mr. Hawksworthy. There is neither death by murder nor suicide in this matter."

"I see no reason why murder should be suspected, dame; but I do suspect suicide has been committed," replied Edward, gravely.

"May his murderer, if he has been murdered, be hanged ten times as high as Haman, and be ten times as long in dying! He has not been murdered, nor has he committed suicide. Upon either will I stake my life. Come, Pettis, and you, my dear Verneena, and you, Mr. Hawksworthy, if you will be so kind, let us all go above. Others that are here may also come, if they wish. Let us see whatever is to be seen above by that crazy Swede. Suicide? Bah! Murder? Bosh! Come, my friends. Come on!"

Forgetful, in her excitement, of her feigned decrepitude, she hurried up the stairway scarcely less swiftly than Jansen had.

But on arriving at the first landing she suddenly remembered the role she was wont to play in public, and instantly resuming her usual slowness and tottering deliberateness of step, feigned to be forced to lean against the wall, as from utter weakness of all her joints and muscles.

"Oh!" she gasped, panting for breath. "Oh! I am about to faint. Oh, me! Oh, Mr. Hawksworthy, please give the support of your arm for a few moments! Do!"

All had hastened up the stairway after the dame. Edward was near her. He supposed she really was about to swoon. Mindful only of the fact that she was a woman who seemed to stand in great need of support, he at once gave her his arm.

He was barely able to repress a shudder of detestation, however, as she grasped his arm and clutched it tenaciously, forcing her long, strong, and bony fingers gripingly upon his flesh.

In her heart she said at this moment:

"Some day, some day not far away, young man, I will have my grasp upon you—upon your throat, upon your heart—more ferociously than ever was claw of a tigress on the flesh of her shrinking prey. I will, young Hawksworthy; I will!"

She then said aloud, in a gasping voice, and with many breaks in her speech:

[illegible]

him to his death while he flees! May he live to be hanged, and may I be there to see him strangle! Pull up those shades, Pettis. The light you saw shining through them last night deceived you, Pettis. He left the candles and lamp burning to deceive any one who might be on the watch. Cunning villain! Oh, how I wish he was right now in reach of this staff! I'd pin him!"

Pallid and ashy again from ungovernable and impotent rage and disappointed avarice, the dame sank into a large arm-chair, glaring at everything around her the fury she could not gratify.

All present were silent, gazing curiously at her. Pettis soon advanced humbly, and bowing low. He said softly:

"My dear Dame Grippard—if I am permitted to speak on this grievous subject—it seems to me that it is possible, barely possible, that—that—that you may be a little—a very little—mistaken—that is, hasty—if I may presume to use so strong a word in connection with one so wise as yourself——"

"Pettis," snapped the dame, fiercely, "you are simply the greatest ass that ever brayed."

"Thank you, Dame Grippard. It may be true that I am, as you are pleased to call me. I would not presume to dispute your opinion of any one. But we have not yet——"

"Pettis," interrupted the dame, "you are a deceived idiot."

At this moment a middle-aged and neatly attired mulatto woman, who was one of Mrs. Bratton's servants, paused on the threshold of the room, and looked toward Dame Grippard with a face full of terror.

This woman had just arrived at Old Anchors, and heard below that her master had run away, or committed suicide, or been murdered. Her usually yellow visage was now tallowy white. Her eyes rolled with wonder and alarm in every glance.

Dame Grippard darted fierce eyes and words at the woman instantly.

[illegible]

no, we did not hear your blows.' You are a fool. Finish your story. I am very sure that Fred on did not hear them either. Did you force up the trap door?"

"I did not. I could not. Ten men ten times as strong as I am can not force upward that trap-door without tools, dame. I resolved to get tools immediately. There are plenty of tools of many kinds in the office below. I ran from the room under the cupola, on my way to the office—I was nearly at this door, and out in the hall yonder—when I chanced to look at my hands for the first time since I had beaten the under side of the trap-door with them. Look at my hands, dame."

Here Jansen suddenly flashed his hands from behind him and extended them, each wide open and rigid in finger, toward the dame.

Both hands were smeared and discolored with dark red spots and stains. They and Jansen's aspect were terrible.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Miscellaneous Quotations.

I shall die before I speak anything unworthy of myself.—King Philip.

Laughter dissipates the tedium of any place.—General John McDonald.

If any one attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot.—General John A. Dix.

Paint me as I am.—Oliver Cromwell.

I have the first prize.—Last words of Colonel E. E. Ellsworth.

With our faces to the setting sun we tread the declining path of life, and the shadows lengthen and darken behind us.—Henry Brown Anthony.

The habit of looking at the best side of any event is worth far more than a thousand pounds a year.—Doctor Samuel Johnson.

The world is God's epistle to mankind.—Plato.

After speech, silence is the greatest power in the world.—Lacordaire.

I would have nothing to do with a man who can not be moved to indignation.—Perthes.

There are more good people than bad in the world, and the bad get the upper hand merely because they are bolder.—Perthes.

A goose's quill often hurts more than a lion's claw.—Spanish proverb.

Be silent, or say something better than silence.—Pythagoras.

It cannot be denied that fear of women, and not love of men, makes the fair sex submit to the tyranny of fashion.—Ben: Perley Poore.

If I were to be idle, I should go mad.—Sir Walter Scott.

No man who has opinions can expect the universal concurrence of his party in all his views, and no man without opinions is worthy of the support of a great party.—James A. Garfield.

Happy is the nation whose annals are tiresome.—Montesquieu.

It is not from the billows, but the calm level of the sea, from which all heights and depths are measured.—James A. Garfield.

A handful of good life is worth a bushel of learning.—George Herbert.

A restlessness to have something which we have not, and to be something which we are not, is the root of all immorality.—Shaftesbury.

Duty is the cement which binds the whole moral edifice together.—Dr. Samuel Johnson.

> How happy is he born and taught
> That serveth not another's will!
> Whose armor is his honest thought,
> And simple truth his utmost skill.
> —Wotton.

Be mindful of your honor, which raises you above fortune and above kings.—Vittoria Colonna.

To none is life so sweet as to those who have lost all fear to die.—George Wilson.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

He who gives becomes rich.

Charity is more than sacrifices.

Great plenty breeds much dainty.

Economy is of itself a great revenue.

The corn grows on the prettiest food.

The cat and the rat make peace over a carcass.

A myrtle, even in the desert, remains a myrtle.

The hangman has no grudge against the murderer.

Do not talk of your private, personal or family matters.

If thou tellest thy secret to three persons, all know it.

Never kick unless you find you are getting the worst of it.

It is hard to catch a fish if you haven't the right kind of bait.

A man wants a great many things he doesn't need in this world.

Success in most things depends on knowing how long it takes to succeed.

A failure establishes only this—our determination to succeed was not strong enough.

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time for that is the stuff life is made of.

If a word spoken in its time is worth one piece of money, silence in its time is worth two.

When thou art the only purchaser, then buy; when other buyers are present, be thou nobody.

Flowers are the hieroglyphics of nature, with which she indicates how much she loves us.

The etymology of the word honeymoon is thus given by a good authority: "Among the northern nations of Europe there was ancient practice of newly married couples to drink metheglin or mead, a kind of wine made from honey (hydromel) for thirty days after marriage. Hence the term honeymonth or honeymoon. Attila, the Hun, drank so much mead at his wedding feast that he died."

THERE is a "Congressional Bootblack," and his name is Dan Appleton, aged 10. He managed to make his way from St. Paul to Washington, and going up to the house asked for Congressman Nelson. The Congressman came out, and the boy said: "I am Dan Appleton, a bootblack from Minnesota, and I want [illegible] give me the privilege of blacking [illegible]men's boots here in this build[illegible] [illegible] took the boy to Architect [illegible] give him the privilege, and [illegible] money.

DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "The Divine Mission of Pictures."

TEXT: "The way of the Lord of Hosts shall be upon all pleasant pictures."—Isaiah ii., parts of the 12th and 16th verses.

Pictures are by some relegated to the realm of the trivial, accidental, sentimental or worldly, but my text shows that God scrutinizes pictures, and whether they are good are bad, whether used for right or wrong purposes, is a matter of Divine observation and arraignment. The divine mission of pictures is my subject.

That the artist's pencil and the engraver's knife have sometimes been made subservient to the kingdom of the bad is frankly admitted. After the ashes and scoria were removed from Herculaneum and Pompeii the walls of those cities discovered to the explorers a degradation in art which cannot be exaggerated. Satan and all his imps have always wanted the fingering of the easel; they would rather have possession of that than the art of printing, for types are not so potent and quick for evil as pictures. The powers of darkness think they have gained a triumph, and they have, when in some respectable parlor or public art gallery they can hang a canvas embarrassing to the good, but fascinating to the evil.

It is not in a spirit of prudery, but backed up by God's eternal truth when I say that you have no right to hang in your art rooms or your dwelling house that which would be offensive to good people if the figures pictured were alive in your parlor and the guests of your household. A picture that you have to hang in a somewhat secluded place, or that in a public hall you cannot with a group of friends deliberately stand before and discuss, ought to have a knife stabbed into it at the top and cut clear through to the bottom, and a stout finger thrust in on the right side ripping clear through to the left. Pliny, the elder, lost his life by going near enough to see the inside of Vesuvius, and the further you can stand off from the burning crater of sin the better. Never till the Books of the Last Day are opened shall we know what has been the dire harvest of evil pictorials and unbecoming art galleries. Despoil a man's imagination and he becomes a moral carcass. The show windows of English and American cities in which the low theatres have sometimes hung long lines of brazen actors and actresses in style insulting to all propriety, have made a broad path to death for multitudes of people. But so have all the other arts been at times suborned of evil. How has music been bedraggled! Is there any place so low down in dissoluteness that into it has not been carried David's harp, and Handel's organ, and Gottschalk's piano and Ole Bull's violin; and the flute, which though named after so insignificant a thing as the Sicilian eel, which has seven spots on the side like flute holes, yet for thousands of years has had an exalted mission. Architecture, born in the heart of Him who made the worlds, under its arces and across its floors what bacchanalian revelries have been enacted! It is not against any of these arts that they have been so led into captivity. What a poor world this would be if it were not for what my text calls "pleasant pictures!" I refer to your memory and mine when I ask if your knowledge of the Holy Scriptures has not been mightily augmented by the woodcuts or engravings in the old family Bible, which father and mother read out of, and laid on the table in the old homestead when you were boys and girls. The Bible scenes which we all carry in our minds were not gotten from the Bible typology, but from the Bible pictures. To prove the truth of it in my own case, the other day I took up the old family Bible, which I inherited. Sure enough, what I have carried in my mind of Jacob's ladder was exactly the Bible engraving of Jacob's ladder; and so with Samson carrying off the gates of Gaza; Elisha restoring the Shunamite's son; the massacre of the innocents; Christ blessing little children; the Crucifixion and the Last Judgment. My idea of all these is that of the old Bible engravings which I scanned before I could read a word. That is true with nine-tenths of you. If I could swing open the door of your foreheads I would find that you are walking picture galleries. The great intelligence abroad about the Bible did not come from the general reading of the book, for the majority of the people read it but little, if they read it at all; but all the sacred scenes have been put before the great masses, and not printer's ink but the pictorial art must have the credit of the achievement. First, painter's pencil for the favored few, and then engraver's plate or woodcut for millions on millions! What overwhelming commentary on the Bible, what reinforcement for patriarchs, prophets, apostles and Christ, what distribution of Scriptural knowledge of all nations, in the paintings and engravings therefrom of Holman Hunt's "Christ in the Temple;" Paul Veronese's "Magdalen Washing the Feet of Christ;" Raphael's "Michael the Archangel;" Albert Durer's "Dragon of the Apocalypse;" Michael Angelo's "Plague of the Fiery Serpents;" Tintoret's "Flight into Egypt;" Ruben's "Descent from the Cross;" Leonardo Da Vinci's "Last Supper;" Claude's "Queen of Sheba;" Bellini's "Madonna at Milan;" Orcagna's "Last Judgment," and hundreds of miles of pictures if they were put in line, illustrating, displaying, dramatizing, irradiating Bible truths until the Scriptures are not to-day so much on paper as on canvas, not so much in ink as in all the colors of the spectrum. In 1833 forth from Strasburg, Germany, there came a child that was to eclipse in speed and boldness and grandeur anything and everything that the world had seen since the first color appeared on the sky at the creation, Paul Gustav Dore. At eleven years of age he published marvelous lithographs of his own. Saying nothing of what he did for Milton's "Paradise Lost," emblazoning it on the attention of the world, he takes up the Book of Books, the monarch of literature, the Bible, and in his pictures, "The Creation of Light," "The Trial of Abraham's Faith," "The Burial of Sarah," "Joseph Sold by his Brethren," "The Brazen Serpent," "Boaz and Ruth," "David and Goliath," "The Transfiguration," "The Marriage in Cana," "Babylon Fallen," and two hundred and five Scriptural scenes in all, with a boldness and a grasp and almost supernatural afflatus that make the heart throb, and the brain reel, and the tears start, and the cheeks blanch, and the entire nature quake with the tremendous things of God and eternity and the dead. I actually staggered down the steps of the London Art Gallery under the power of Dore's "Christ leaving the Praetorium." Profess you to be a Christian man or woman, and see no divine mission in art, and acknowledge you no obligation either in thanks to God or man?

It is no more the word of God when put before us in printer's ink than by skillfully laying on of colors, or designs on metal through incision or corrosion. What a lesson in morals was presented by Hogarth, the painter, in his two pictures, "The Rake's Progress," and "The Miser's Feast," and by Thomas Cole's engravings of the "Voyage of Human Life," and the "Course of Empire," and by "Turner's Slave Ship." God in Art! Christ in Art! Patriarchs, prophets and apostles in art! Angels in art! Heaven in art!

The world and the church ought to come to the higher appreciation of the divine mission of pictures, yet the authors of them have generally been left to semi-starvation. West, the great painter, toiled in unappreciation till, being a great skater, while on the ice he formed the acquaintance of General Howe, of the English army, and through coming to admire West as a skater, they gradually came to appreciate as much that which he accomplished by his hand as by his heel. Poussin, the mighty painter, was pursued, and had nothing with which to defend himself against the mob but the artist's portfolio, which he held over his head to keep off the stones hurled at him. The pictures of Richard Wilson, of England, were sold for fabulous sums of money after his death, but the living painter was glad to get for his "Alcyone" a piece of Stilton cheese. From 1640 to 1643 there were 4000 pictures willfully destroyed. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth it was the habit of some people to spend much of their time in knocking pictures to pieces. In the reign of Charles the First it was ordered by Parliament that all pictures of Christ be burnt. Painters were so badly treated and humiliated in the beginning of the eighteenth century that they were lowered clear down out of the sublimity of their art, and obliged to give minute accounts of what they did with their colors, as a painter's bill which came to publication in Scotland, in 1707, indicated. The painter had been touching up some old pictures in the church, and he sends in this itemized bill to the vestry: "To filling up a chink in the Red Sea and repairing the damages to Pharoah's host;" "to a new pair of hands for Daniel in the lion's den, and a new set of teeth for the lioness;" "to repairing Nebuchadnezzar's beard;" "to giving a blush to the cheek of Eve on presenting the apple to Adam;" "to making a bridle for the Good Samaritan's horse, and mending one of his legs;" "to putting on a new handle on Moses' basket and fitting bulrushes, and adding more fuel to the fire in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace." So painters were humiliated clear down below the majesty of their art. The oldest picture in England, a portrait of Chaucer, though now of great value, was picked out of a lumber garret. Great were the trials of Quentin Matsys, who toiled on from blacksmith's anvil till as a painter he won wide recognition. The first missionaries to Mexico made the fatal mistake of destroying pictures, for the loss of which art and religion must ever lament. But why go so far back when in this year of our Lord, 1888, and within twelve years of the twentieth century, to be a painter except in rare exceptions, means poverty and neglect? Poorly fed, poorly clad, poorly housed, because poorly appreciated! When I hear a man is a painter, I have two feelings, one of admiration for the greatness of his soul, and the other of commiseration for the needs of his body.

But so it has been in all departments of noble work. Some of the mightiest have been hardly bested. Oliver Goldsmith had such a big patch on the coat of his left breast that when he went anywhere he kept his hat in his hand closely pressed over the patch. The world renowned Bishop Asbury had a salary of $64 a year. Painters are not the only ones who have endured the lack of appreciation. Let men of wealth take under their patronage the suffering men of art. They lift no complaint; they make no strike for higher wages. But with a keenness of nervous organization which almost always characterizes genius, these artists suffer more than anyone but God can realize. There needs to be a concerted effort for the suffering artists of America, not sentimental discourse about what we owe to artists, but contracts that will give them a livelihood; for I am in full sympathy with the Christian farmer, who was very busy gathering his fall apples, and some one asked him to pray for a poor family, the father of which had broken his leg; and the busy farmer said: "I cannot stop now to pray, but you can go down into the cellar and get some corned beef, and butter, and eggs and potatoes; that is all I can do now." Artists may wish for our prayers but they also want practical help from men who can give them work. You have heard scores of sermons for all other kinds of suffering men and women, but I think this is the first sermon ever preached that made a plea for the suffering men and women of American art. Their work is more true to nature and life than any of the masterpieces that have become immortal on the other side of the sea, but it is the fashion of Americans to mention foreign artists, and to know little or nothing about our own Copley, and Allston and Inman, and Greenough and Kensett. Let the affluent fling out of their windows and into the back yard valueless daubs on canvas, and call in these splendid but unrewarded men, and tell them to adorn your walls, not only with that which shall please the taste, but enlarge the mind, and improve the morals, and save the souls of those who gaze upon them.

Brooklyn and all other American cities need great galleries of art, not only open annually for a few days on exhibition, but which shall stand open all the year round, and from early morning until ten o'clock at night, and free to all who would come and go. What a preparation for the wear and tear of the day, a five minutes' look in the morning at some picture that will open a door into some larger realm than that in which our population daily drudge! Of what a good thing the half hour of artistic opportunity on the way home in the evening from exhaustion that demands recuperation for mind and soul as well as body! Who will do for Brooklyn or the city where you live what W. W. Corcoran did for Washington, and what I am told John Wannamaker, by the donation of De Munkacsy's great picture, "Christ before Pilate," is going to do for Philadelphia? Men of wealth, if you are too modest to build and endow such a place during your lifetime, why not go to your iron safe, and take out your last will and testament, and make a codicil that shall build for the city of your residence, a throne for American art! Take some of the money that would otherwise spoil your children, and build an art gallery that shall associate your name forever, not only with the great masters of painting who are gone, but with the great masters who are trying to live; and also win the admiration and love of tens of thousands of people who, unable to have fine pictures of their own, would be advantaged by your benefaction. Build your own monuments, and not leave it to the whim of others. Some of the best people sleeping in Greenwood have no monuments at all, or some crumbling stones that in a few years will let the rain wash out name and epitaph; while some men whose death was the abatement of a nuisance, have a pile of polished Aberdeen high enough for a king, and eulogium enough to embarrass a seraph. Oh, man of large wealth, instead of leaving to the whim of others your monumental commemoration and epitaphology to be looked at when people are going to and fro at the burial of others, build right down in the heart of our great city, or the city where you live, an immense free reading room, or a free musical conservatory, or a free art gallery, the niches for sculpture, and the walls aflame with the rise and fall of nations, and lessons of courage for the disheartened, and rest for the weary, and life for the dead; and one hundred and fifty years from now you will be wielding influences in this world for good among those whose great-grandfather was your great-grandchild. How much better than white marble that chills you if you put your hand on it when you touch it in the cemetery would be a monument in colors, in beaming eyes, in living possession, in splendors which under the chandelier would be glowing and warm, and looked at by strolling groups with catalogue in hand on the January night, when the necropolis where the body sleeps is all snowed under. The tower of David was hung with one thousand dented shields of battle; but you, oh man of wealth, may have a grander tower named after you, one that shall be hung not with the symbols of carnage, but with the victories of that art which was so long ago recognized in my text as "pleasant pictures." Oh, the power of pictures! I cannot deride, as some have done, Cardinal Mazarin, who, when told that he must die, took his last walk through the art gallery of his palace, saying: "Must I quit all this? Look at that Titian! Look at that Correggio! Look at that deluge of Caracci! Farewell, dear pictures!" As the day of the Lord of Hosts, according to this text, will scrutinize the pictures, I implore all parents to see that in their households they have neither in book or newspaper or on canvas anything that will deprave. Pictures are no longer the exclusive possession of the affluent. There is not a respectable home in these cities that has not specimens of woodcut or steel engraving, if not of painting, and your whole family will feel the moral uplifting or depression. Have nothing on your wall or in books that will familiarize the young with scenes of cruelty or wassail; have only those sketches made by artists in elevated moods, and none of those scenes that seem the product of artistic delirium tremens. Pictures are not only a strong but a universal language. The human race is divided into almost as many languages as there are nations, but the pictures may speak to people of all tongues. Volapuk many have hoped, with little reason, would become a world-wide language; but the pictorial is always a world-wide language, and printer's types have no emphasis compared with it. We say that children are fond of pictures; but notice any man when he takes up a book, and you will see that the first thing that he looks at is the pictures. Have only those in your house that appeal to the better nature. One engraving has sometimes decided an eternal destiny. Under the title of fine arts there have come here from France a class of pictures which elaborate argument has tried to prove irreproachable. They would disgrace a barroom, and they need to be confiscated. Your children will carry the pictures of their father's house with them clear on to the grave, and, passing that marble pillar, will take them through eternity.

Furthermore, let all reformers, and all Sabbath school teachers, and all Christian workers realize that if they would be effective for good, they must make pictures, if not by chalk on black-boards, or kindergarten designs, or by pencil on canvas, then by words. Arguments are soon forgotten: but pictures, whether in language or in colors, are what produce strongest effects. Christ was always telling what a thing was like, and His Sermon on the Mount was a great picture gallery, beginning with a sketch of a "city on a hill that cannot be hid," and ending with a tempest beating against two houses, one on the rock and the other on the sand. The parable of the prodigal son, a picture; parable of the sower, who went forth to sow, a picture; parable of the unmerciful servant, a picture; parable of the ten virgins, a picture; parable of the talents, a picture. The world wants pictures, and the appetite begins with the child, who consents to go early to bed if the mother will sit beside him and rehearse a story, which is only a picture. When we see how much has been accomplished in secular directions by pictures—Shakespeare's tragedies a picture, Victor Hugo's writings all pictures, John Ruskin's and Tennyson's and Longfellow's works all pictures—why not enlist, as far as possible, for our churches and schools and reformatory work and evangelistic endeavor, the power of thought that can be put into word pictures, if not pictures in color? Yea, why not all young men draw for themselves on paper, with pen or pencil, their coming career, of virtue if they prefer that, of vice if they prefer that. After making the picture, put it on the wall, or paste it on the fly leaf of some favorite book, that you may have it before you. I read the other day of a man who had been executed for murder, and the jailor found afterward a picture made on the wall of the cell by the assassin's own hand, a picture of a flight of stairs. On the lowest step he had written: "Disobedience of parents;" on the second: "Sabbath breaking;" on the third: "Drunkenness and gambling;" on the fourth: "Murder," and on the fifth and top step: "A gallows." If that man had made that picture before he took the first step, he never would have taken any of them. Oh, man, make another picture, a bright picture, an evangelical picture; I will help you make it! I suggest six steps for this flight of stairs. On the first step write the words: "A nature changed by the Holy Ghost and washed in the blood of the Lamb;" on the second step: "Industry and good companionship;" on the third step: "A Christian home with a family altar;" on the fourth step: "Ever widening usefulness;" on the fifth step: "A glorious departure from this world;" on the sixth step: "Heaven! heaven! heaven!" Write it three times, and let the letters of the one word be made up of banners, the second of coronets, and the third of thrones! Promise me that you will do that, and I will promise to meet you on the sixth step, if the Lord will through His pardoning grace bring me there too.

And here I am going to say a word of cheer to people who have never had a word of consolation on that subject. There are men and women in this world by hundreds of thousands, and some of them are here today, who have a fine natural taste, and yet all their lives that taste has been suppressed, and although they could appreciate the galleries of Dresden and Vienna and Naples for more than nine hundred and ninety-nine out of one thousand who visit them, they never may go, for they must support their households, and bread and schooling for their children are of more importance than pictures. Though fond of music, they are compelled to live amid discord, and though fond of architecture, they dwell in clumsy abodes, and though appreciative of all that engravings and paintings can do, they are in perpetual deprivation. You are going, after you get on the sixth step of that stairs just spoken of, to find yourselves in the royal gallery of the universe, the concentered splendors of all worlds before your transported vision. In some way all the thrilling scenes through which we and the Church of God have passed in our earthly state will be pictured or brought to mind. At the cyclorama of Gettysburg, which we had in Brooklyn, one day a blind man, who lost his sight in that battle, was with his child heard talking while standing before that picture. The blind man said to the daughter: "Are there at the right of the picture some regiments marching up a hill?" "Yes," she said. "Well," said the blind man, "is there a General on horseback leading them on?" "Yes," she said. "Well, is there rushing down on these men a cavalry charge?" "Yes," was the reply. "And do there seem to be many dying and dead?" "Yes," was the answer. "Well, now, do you see a shell from the woods bursting near the wheel of a cannon?" "Yes," she said. "Stop right there!" said the blind man. "That is the last thing I ever saw on earth. What a time it was, Jenny, when I lost my eye-sight!" But when you, who have found life a hard battle, a very Gettysburg, shall stand in the Royal Gallery of Heaven, and with your new vision begin to see and understand that which in your earthly blindness you could not see at all, you will point out to your celestial comrades, perhaps to your own dear children who have gone before, the scenes of the earthly conflicts in which you participated, saying: "There from that hill of prosperity I was driven back; in that valley of humiliation I was wounded. There I lost my eyesight. That was the way the world looked when I last saw it. But what a grand thing to get celestial vision, and stand here before the cyclorama of all worlds while the Rider on the white horse goes on 'conquering and to conquer,' the moon under His feet and the stars of Heaven for his tiara!

CURIOUS FACTS.

Wisconsin has a champion player of the game of draughts.

No gold or silver coins are issued by the Chinese Government.

Edith Brinkham of Racine, Wis., lost her life by falling out of bed.

The leap year privilege is said to be six hundred and sixty years old.

Ben Franklin recognized the value of time. He invented three clocks.

A skipping rope has been patented which sets in motion a small musical box in one of the handles.

Mary Goodwin of Atlanta, Ga., is thirty-eight years of age and the mother of twenty-seven children.

It is against municipal law in China to dig over 190 feet to find well water. It is the idea that the bottom would fall through.

Ice was produced in summer by means of chemical mixtures by Mr. Walker, in 1788. This was the first known attempt in this direction.

The first patent in America was issued in 1790 to Samuel Hopkins, of Philadelphia, for an improvement in the manufacture of potash.

Near Oakland, Tenn., an express train struck a fallen tree and every car left the rails, yet not a single passenger was either killed or wounded.

A Washington Territory man left $2000 for all the delicacies of the season to be fed to his dog, while his old father was made heir to his watch and chain only.

Eighty-four children belong to four mothers of Media, Penn. Mrs. Samuel Field has 28, Mrs. Joseph Chandler 25, Mrs. James Barrett 16, and Mrs. William Wright 15.

A Missouri horse fell over a cliff thirty-five feet high and escaped with only a scratch on his leg. Next day he got a piece of corn-cob in his throat and choked to death.

The Bermudas take their name from their discoverer, John Bermudas, who visited them in 1522. The first settler was Sir George Summers, who was cast away on them in 160[illegible].

While Charles Cogswell was courting a pretty young woman of Birmingham, Conn., the other day, he dropped dead by her side. She fainted from the shock, and was for a time likely to die.

Timothy Carter is believed to be the oldest stereotyper. He introduced the trade in Boston. School books spoke of him in 1817. He is still a living man, lives at Newton, and is ninety years of age.

At Texarkana the other day a long-horned steer undertook to knock out the elephant of a traveling circus, but even on his native heath was no match for the big foreigner, and was laid out stiff and stark in just half a round.

At Kearney, N. J., a factory chimney is being erected, which will, when finished, be the tallest in the country, and the fourth highest in the world. It will be 335 feet high. There are two taller chimneys in Scotland and one in England.

A hotel waiter in Cincinnati who stole from a guest, hid the money in his "turn-down" collar. He was suspected of the theft, and, while being conducted to the stationhouse, the officer noticed a greenback protruding from the novel hiding place.

A beetle as large as a sparrow has been received by the State Entomologist of New York. It came from Central America. He has another curiosity that resembles two green leaves attached to a twig. It is called a camel cricket, and was produced in Texas.

A Massachusetts cat, which lived to the age of twenty years and two months, is buried under a granite obelisk shaped to resemble Bunker Hill monument, and deeply chiselled with the name "Beverly," the which high sounding appellation belonged in life to the cat.

There was a race lately in Zanzibar between a zebra and an ostrich, and, though the bird came in a hundred yards ahead, the beast won the purse. It was done in this wise: The zebra's rider claimed that he had been passed by a fowl, which nobody with a sense of orthography could deny, and so the race was awarded where it did not belong.

Sailors believe religiously that the frigate bird can start at daybreak with the trade winds from the coast of Africa and roost the same night upon the American shore. Whether or not this is a fact has not yet been conclusively determined, but it is certain that the bird is the swiftest of winged creatures, and is ably to fly, under favoring condition, 200 miles an hour.

The Ainos are Bearded Like Pards.

The British Consul at Hakodate states that the Ainos—who are a remarkable tribe of small, hairy people, originally living by hunting and fishing—have been in great straits since the occupation of their fishing grounds by the Japanese in 1868. Since 1882 efforts have been made to relieve their distress and to teach them farming, and in 1886 about 800 acres were cultivated by them. In their chief home in the island of Yesso, the Ainos are estimated to number 15,000 individuals, with 3000 houses. They are supposed to be gradually disappearing.—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Queen of Italy has distinguished herself as an Alpine tourist.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

Europe to be Governed by Women.

The close of the nineteenth century promises or threatens to be a period of petticoat government. A probable Empress-Queen is growing up in Austria, there is a regent in Spain, and next a baby king afflicted with a nervous disease. Two healthier children, girls both, stand in the order of succession. The heiress-apparent to the throne of the Netherlands is a girl. Said to me an ex minister to the court of St. Petersburg, "the Czar's two sons are malingres et chétifs, and there is a prospect of a Czarina in her own right. The imperial crown of Brazil must soon fall to the crown princess, a woman of moral stamina and fine emotions. She has carried against a high and threatening tide of opposition, the abolition of slavery.

The Czar has been brought to entertain the idea of marrying the czarewitch to a young lady of a hardy mountain race not consanguine in any degree with him. Her offspring, if she had any, might be an improvement on the existing Romanoffs. Montenegrin Princess and the Czarwitch would form such a couple as Mary Stuart and Francis II. The Queen of Greece, the same diplomatist tells me, has gone to St. Petersburg to induce the Czar to prefer her daughter to the princess from the Black mountain, Wealth of the Presidents.

Washington married a rich widow and left an estate worth $3,000,000, but John Adams was not worth one-sixth of that sum. Jefferson died so poor that if Congress had not given him $23,000 for his library he would have been bankrupt. Madison was economical, and yet left but a small estate. Monroe died poor. John Quincy Adams left $50,000, the result of prudence. Jackson left a large landed estate. Van Buren died worth $300,000; it is said that during his entire administration he never drew any portion of his salary but on leaving took the whole $100,000 in a lump. Polk left one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Filmore was always an economical man, and added to his wealth by his last marriage. Pierce saved fifty thousand dollars. Buchanan left two hundred thousand dollars. Lincoln left seventy-five thousand dollars, and Johnson fifty thousand. Grant, notwithstanding the losses to which he has subject, had a handsome support in the fund provided for him by his friends, and the sales of his book enrich the family. Hayes is said to be in a handsome financial condition, and the Garfields enjoy a liberal pension and the income from a large fund contributed by the public. Cleveland will no doubt save fifty thousand dollars from his Presidential salary.

The President-elect has tendered Elijah W. Halford, managing editor of the Indianapolis Journal, the position of private secretary. Mr. Halford is forty-five years of age, and came from England when a child with his parents, who settled in Cincinnati. He began his newspaper career as a reporter on the Indianapolis Journal twenty-five years ago, and rose, in a few years through successive positions, to the managing editorship.

A fully authenticated case of longevity is that of Rev. Wm. Stoddard, of the parish of Moderty, in Scotland. The baptismal register shows that he was baptized on the 28th of March, 1787, and is now at least in his 102d year.

The condition of Hon. Jno. Bright, the venerable English statesman, who has been in a critical state of health, is reported improving.

PRESIDENT AND HOUSE.

Mr. Lycurgus Dalton, the Post master of the House, said to-day that each House of Representatives elected ever since the foundation of the Government had been in political accord with the President elected the same year. Many people he went to say, make the mistake of supposing that this was not true when Henry Clay was Speaker. They forgot, though that at the time Clay was first elected Speaker he was a Democrat and not a Whig, having changed his politics later on. The republicans had control of the House from Lincoln's first election until the tidal wave in 1874, or during Grant's second administration, when the democrats got the upper hand in the Congressional contests, and held the House right along until 1880, when it was once more lost. Garfield was chosen President that year, and the republicans secured a bare majority in the lower branch, and by working the election committee vigorously they soon made a majority that enabled them to wag along smoothly. The democrats carried the House by a large majority in 1876 also, and that year they also elected Samuel J. Tilden President but he was counted out, and Rutherford B. Hayes became de facto President. This year Harrison has been elected President, and it looks as if the republicans have also secured control of the House by a slender majority. In "off years" the Democrats have regained ascendancy in the House, and history is apt to repeat itself next year.—St. Louis Republic.

Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, of the New York World, who is spending the winter in France for the benefit of his eyes, now sends instructions as to the management of his paper on the cylinder of a graphophone. He speaks into a graphophone in Paris and forwards the cylinder to his New York office, where his speech is heard as distinctly as if he were there himself.

WEEDS.—Every farmer is interested in destroying weeds on the farm and highway, and nothing but persistent, united effort will do any good. If every boy would make it his business to destroy the weeds about the house before the seed is mature, and every farmer would see to it that the farm is kept clean, it would not be long until there would be a marked decrease in the whole country.

It was a pretty mean man who, when asked to umpire a baseball game between two colored nines, immediately called the game on account of darkness.

The German Government has sent a torpedo boat and a dispatch boat to assist in the blockade of East African ports.

The Government pays the Adams Express Company $175,000 annually for the transportation of bonds and specie to different sections of the United States.

Sensible words from Dr. Cuyler: "Never commit the idiotic crime of writing a sermon on saturday evening! Sleep all night if you want to keep your people awake all Sunday."

The "meanest man" in Kansas has been found. He lives in Reno County, and in writing to the treasurer of Sedgewick county he used a postal card that had done duty once before, spending nearly three hours in effacing the old address, postmark and message. The postal is to be framed and hung in the treasurer's office.

A smart Chicago baby was asked by his doting father "whose boy he was." "I give it up," he replied. "The Judge hasn't decided whether you or mother gets me."—N. Y. Press.

Sanctum Visitor, "Yours is an excellent paper, sir, I have read it regularly for years." Editor: "I am very glad that it has won your good opinion. I trust that you will always like it." "Like it? Why, my next door neighbor has loaned it to me for so long that were he to move away I'd miss the paper awfully."—Boston Budget.

A five-year old boy for the first time saw the electric lights illuminating the streets. He looked at one of them some moments in silent astonishment, and then ran over to his mother, and exclaimed: "Mamma, come here! Here's a star on the top of a pole!"

"Doctor, I have come to see you about my little boy." "What ails him?" "One leg is shorter than the other and he limps. Now, what would you do in such a case?" "I think I should limp, too."

"That's it!" exclaimed Mrs. Bascom at the concert as the singers came out again in response to an encore. "Make 'em do it over again until they get the thing right."

Burglars and thieves are getting so bold in Chicago that the policemen are having their silver-plated badges sewed on.—Yonkers Statesman.

When a man pays five dollars for a little piece of quinine it is hard to convince him that it is a drug on the market.

The base-ball batter will soon give way to the buckwheat batter. —Pittsburg Chronicle.

"Please I want to buy a shilling's worth of hay." "Is it for your father?" "Oh, no; it's for the horse"

A "good man gone wrong" is usually a bad man found out.—Buffalo Express.

Even at $7,000 a year a judge's life is full of trials.

Republican to Democrat—"Well, how do you feel since you've been licked?"

Democrat—"I feel like Lazarus did when he was licked by dogs."

Learn to forgive.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, EDITOR. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Dec. 13, 1888. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. | No. 21.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney, R. S. Turk.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, B. C. Hill.
Clerk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. S. H. Clark, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

President's Message.

A RUNNING SKETCH OF THE MESSAGE.—The President notes in the outset of the message that with the expiration of the present session of Congress the first century of our constitutional existence as a nation will be completed, and this circumstance, he, observes, admonishes us to inquire soberly whether in the past we have kept closely in the course of safety marked out in the constitution, and whether the way before us is plain and clear. Equal and exact justice between the government and citizens, as well as between citizen and citizen, is the underlying principle of our institutions. In the early days of the republic this principle was rigidly insisted on. The tribute of the citizen to the support of the government was measured strictly by the cost of its maintenance. In those days the frugality of the people was stamped upon their government and enforced by a thoughtful and intelligent suffrage. Combinations, monopolies and aggregations of capital were avoided or sternly regulated. A century has passed. Now our cities are filled with wealth and luxury; our manufactories yield fortunes never dreamed of by the fathers of the republic, and immense aggregations of capital outrun the imagination in the magnitude of their undertakings. At first view this is a bright picture, but closer scrutiny reveals a sombre shading. Side by side with the wealth of our cities we see poverty and unremunerative toil. Increased urban population suggests the impoverishment of rural sections. The fortunes of our manufactories are no longer solely the reward of sturdy industry and foresight, but result largely from the discriminating favor of the government, being built upon undue exactions from the people. Two well-defined classes are being formed—on one side the very rich and the powerful, on the other the toiling poor. Closer inspection discloses the existence of trusts and other like monopolies trampling upon the unorganized masses, while corporations which should be the carefully-restrained servants of the people are fast becoming their masters. The cause and cure of these invasions of the principle of equality before the law lies in our system of taxation. The high tariff, in the interest of a favored few, exacts unneeded millions from taxpayers, part of which millions go to swell the surplus in the treasury, while the rest and much the larger part go to the making of millionaires. The effect is to injure the health of the entire body politic. In the beneficiaries of high tariff taxes it stifles all patriotic love of country, and its place is taken by selfish greed and grasping avarice. The government is regarded by the favored class, not as an embodiment of equality, but as an instrumentality through which individual advantages are to be gained. This view is unconcealed. It is manifested in a sordid disregard of all but personal interests, the refusal to abate for the benefit of others one iota of selfish advantage, and in combinations to control legislation and improperly influence the suffrages of the people. On the other hand, a spirit of discontent is generated among those not included within the circle of tariff benefits. Farmers selling in foreign markets and buying under compulsion only in the home market find themselves impoverished, their lands declining in value and their debts increasing. Working men and others not engaged in farming are likewise victims of the unequal laws. Communism is a hateful thing, but here is a communism of combined capital, the outgrowth of cupidity and selfishness. It exasperates the discontented and threatens with wild disorder the citadel of rule. The idea that the government shall protect the rich so that they shall protect the poor is wrong and absurd. No intermediary between the people and their government is required; its existence makes the boast of free institutions a glittering delusion. What is wanted is a just and sensible revision of our tariff laws for the relief of the forgotten masses. The necessity of a reduction of our revenue is conceded. Extravagant appropriations should not be accepted in lieu of it. There should be no cessation of the struggle for tariff reform until a plan is perfected which is fair to existing industries, which will reduce to consumers the cost of the necessaries of life, and which will give our manufacturers freer raw materials, without injury to American labor. The cause is the people's. It should never be compromised. There is a growing assumption that the government must relieve with paternal care every individual and community that makes a claim upon it. This is seen in the ready concessions to inefficient contractors, to unfounded claims for pensions and to demands for unnecessary public buildings. Meanwhile the real needs of the government and people are neglected. Relief of the Supreme Court, improved land laws, plans of Indian management, the need of United States prisons, revision of pension laws—these have been urged upon Congress time and again, and yet are deferred, while favors are voted to energetic claimants whose claims are without merit. Regard for the constitution would correct these errors of the legislative body. President Jackson's determination to restore to the people unimpaired the trust committed to his charge and to dissuade the people from admiration of powerful monopolies and aristocratic establishments is worthy of all imitation. The foreign relations of the government are peaceful. The fisheries question remains to be settled. There has not, however, since March, 1887, been any case of unfriendly or unlawful treatment of American fishing vessels. The interference of Lord Sackville in the very crisis of the presidential election, by counsel and advice, with the suffrages of American citizens, and subsequent impugnment of the Executive and Senate, was unpardonable conduct, especially in view of the fact that the counsel and advice had reference to important questions now pending between the British and United States governments. Further recognition of the diplomatic character of Lord Sackville was therefore declined. A survey of the boundary between Alaska and Canada is recommended. The Samoan question is mentioned as of interest to the people of the United States, and also the question of the preservation of our influence in the Hawaiin Islands. The establishment of diplomatic intercourse with Corea and Persia are notable events of the past year. The disturbances in Hayti are noted, and steps taken for the protection of American interests in that republic. A treaty of commercial reciprocity with Mexico is advised in view of our increasing commercial intercourse with that country in recent years. Treaties have been made with Peru and Ecuador, in the case of the latter looking to the settlement of the well-known claim of Santos, an American citizen, for loss of property at the hands of the government of Ecuador. Preliminary steps have been taken for the meeting in Washington, in 1889, of representatives of South and Central American States, together with those of Mexico, Hayti, and San Domingo, and the prospect of improving commerce by co-operative legislation is adverted to. In April next will be held also at Washington a conference of maratime powers to devise uniform rules of the security of life and property at sea—a desideratum in view of the many recent collisions at sea. Naturalization is at present too easy a process and is much abused. Our laws in regard to passports need revision, and a central bureau for the registration of cases of naturalization is required. Instances of spurious citizenship would thus be detected and unjust responsibilities of this government be avoided. The consular service should be reorganized. There should be fewer principal consular offices, and such as are continued should be better sustained. The contennial celebration at New York on April 30, 1889, of the inauguration of Washington as President, in an event of national interest in which Congress, it is suggested, should provide for the government's participation. The revenues of the government for the year 1888 show an increase, and the expenditures show a decrease, notwithstanding an increased payment of over $5,000,000 for pensions. For that year the surplus, including the sinking fund provison of $47,000,000, was $119,612,116; for 1889 the estimated surplus is $104,000,000; for 1890, $101,222,511. Up to December 1, 1888, the purchases of bonds with surplus funds in the treasury aggregated $94,660,400, including premiums amounting to $17,508,613. The transaction was not a good one, it is urged, for the people, as it means to them a loss—in interest on money uselessly taken out of their business—of $55,760,000. At the date last mentioned the surplus in the treasury was $52,234,610, exclusive of $20,000,000 allotted to pensions. The amount of silver dollars coined is $312,570,990, of which $60,970,990 are in circulation. The further coinage of silver, it is reccommended, should be discontinued. The army numbers 24,540, exclusive of 2,179 officers. Great progress is being made in preparations for the production of efficient modern ordnance for both army and navy. Ship building is going on apace, and within 12 months eleven efficient, modern, steel men of-war will be added to the navy. This building has been paid for and of the savings of the department under the present administration. The large increase of the business and facilities of the Postal Department is noted. Since 1860 its revenues have increased from $19,772,009 to $52,700,000, and its services to the country to a more than corresponding extent. Increased compensation for the 54,874 postmasters of the fourth class and for other classes of postal employes is recommended. The efficiency of the Department of Justice has greatly increased, but a sentiment prevails unfavorable to the payment of judgments obtained by the government. The right disposition of our public lands is an important question requiring the attention of Congress. Over 80,000,000 acres have been recovered from illegal usurpation, but new legislation is needed to give the people their own. The enactment of a general pension law is urged. The expenditure last year under this head was $82,038,386 or 31 per cent. of the total expenditure of the year. The existence of great laxity of ideas on the subject of pensions is called to the attention of Congress and the discontinuance of vicious precedents in granting pensions for partisan and irrelevant considerations is advised. The adjustment of the relations between the government and the land-grant railroads is a pressing matter. The subject, it is suggested, should be treated as a business proposition with a view to getting back the people's money. Legislation is needed to secure a proper collection and arrangement of the laws of the District of Columbia. There is at present inconvenience and danger to life and property attending the operation of steam railroads in Washington. Legislation to correct this state of things is likewise urged as necessary for the safety of the citizens.—Baltimore Sun.

An estimate of the education and intelligence of a country may be made from its postal business; and the report of the Postmaster General of its interest in this respect. He shows that the United States surpasses every other country in the volume of mail matter transmitted, in the cheapness of postage, in the postal revenue and expenditure, in the extent of mail routes, in the number of Post Offices, and in the average number of pieces of mail matter to each inhabitant. The countries that come next in order are Great Britian, Germany, and France; but Russia, Austria, Spain and Italy are so far behind that they form a subject of contrast rather than of comparison. The reading and writing habits of the people of the United States are the result of the school system which pervades all parts of our country.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew ought to know something about the manner in which Republican campaigns are conducted and he says: "The enormous sum increasing with each campaign, which the exigencies of our canvasses impel the committees to collect and disburse, are the menace and the disgrace of our suffrage."

It appears that one of the candidates for the Speakership of the next House has long been systematically working to get votes. Mr. Burrows of Michigan began last session, upon the theory that the Republicans would carry the House, and has made such progress that his friends say he will be the lead candidate in the caucus.

DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUNDAY SERMON.

Subject: "The Ark of the American Covenant."

TEXT: "Two cubits and a half was the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it, and a cubit and a half the height of it."—Exodus xxxvii, 1.

Look at it—the sacred chest of the ancients. It was about five feet long, three feet wide and three feet high. It was within and out of pure gold. On the top of it stood two angels facing each other with outspread wings. In that sacred box was the law, and there were in it a great many precious stones. With that box went the fate of the nation. Carried in front of the host, the waters of the Jordan parted. Divinely charged, costly, precious, momentous box. No unholy hands might lay hold of it. It was called the ark of the covenant. But you will understand it was a box, the most precious box of the ages. Where is it now? Gone forever. Not a crypt of church or museum of the world has a fragment of it.

But is not this nation God's chosen people? Have we not passed through the Red Sea? Have we not been led with a pillar of fire by night? Has this nation no ark of the covenant? Yes, the ballot box, the sacred chest of the nation, the ark of the American covenant.

In it is the law, in it is the divine and the human will, in it is the fate of the nation. Carried in front of our host again and again the waters of national trouble have parted. Mighty ark of the covenant, the American ballot box! It is a very old box.

In Athens, long before the art of printing, the people dropped pebbles into it to give expression to their sentiments. After that beans were dropped into it—a white bean for [illegible] prayer. The prayer may be mightier than the vote. Oh, as citizens of this beautiful city, and of this State, and of this nation, let us do our whole duty. We cannot live under any other form of government than that which God has given us in this country. The stars on our flag are not the stars of a thickening night, but the stars sprinkled amid the bars of morning cloud. We are going to have one government on this entire continent. Let the despotisms of Asia keep their feet off the Pacific coast, and let the tyrannies of Europe keep their feet off the Atlantic coast. We are going to have one government. Mexico will follow Texas into the Union, and Christianity and civilization will stand side by side in the halls of the Montezumas. And if not in our day, then in the day of our children, Yucatan and Central America will come in dominion, while on the north Canada will be ours, not by conquest—oh, no, American and English swords may never clash blades—but we will woo our fair neighbor of the North, and then England will say to Canada: "You are old enough for the marriage day," and then, turning, will say: "Giant of the West, go take your bride." And then from Baffin's Bay to the Carribean there will be one government under one flag, with one destiny—a free, undisputed, Christianized American continent. God save the city of Brooklyn! God save the commonwealth of New York! God save the Union!

[illegible]

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

The Mikado of Japan is said to have become intemperate.

E. C. Stedman, the poet, is at his cottage at Newcastle, N. H.

M. Chevreul, the French scientist, who is now in his 103d year, has never used tobacco.

Mrs. Ellen Olney Kirke, the novel-writer, has been the object of much social attention at Boston recently.

The Rev. Newman Hall, the distinguished English divine who is so well known throughout Canada, is still well and hearty.

Professor A. Lacroix, of the College of France, Paris, is visiting Professor G. H. Williams, of Johns Hopkins, and gathering geological specimens.

Colonel J. W. Bennett, of Philadelphia, Pa., has added $25,000 to his former gifts of $110,000 to the Methodist Episcopal Orphanage at that place.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has resigned the Presidency of the Massachusetts Medical Library Association after thirteen years of continuous service.

A nephew of the late Roscoe Conkling, Alfred B. Conkling, is gathering material and making preparation for the publication of his uncle's biography in 1889.

Harriet Beecher Stowe, though by no means well, is in much better condition than she was before her recent serious illness. Her recovery has astonished her physicians.

Mr. John Drew, the "leading man" of Daly's Theatre, who has just returned from England with the rest of the company, being a Philadelphian, is a famous cricketer.

It is reported that President Cleveland will sell Oak View and purchase an estate on the heights of Georgetown, where Lafayette was entertained on his last visit to this country.

Miss Paul Rochester, of New York, has just completed an extraordinary mule-back journey of nearly 400 miles across the wild and mountainous Central American republic of Honduras.

Hon. George Bancroft, the historian, has reached his eighty-eighth birthday. He is still at his Newport cottage, and is looking wonderfully well for a man who began his life with the century.

Alive Instead of Dead.

According to a Paris letter, an elderly gentleman residing in the Rue Rochechouart, who was supposed to be dead, has suddenly come to life. He has a nephew in Paris, who, being duly informed of his demise, repaired at once to the house, with his wife, to keep watch over the mortal remains of his uncle until they should be borne to their last resting place. Next evening, as the lady was tired, her husband sent her to the drawing room to take some repose on a sofa, and a servant having placed some wine and broth on a table, he threw himself into an armchair in the bedroom and soon went soundly to sleep. On awaking at 4 in the morning he found that the broth had disappeared and that the bottle of wine was half empty. Becoming alarmed, he went to his wife in the drawing room, roused her, and told her what had happened. She returned to the bedroom with him, but the pair had hardly reached the door when they heard a noise. They paused on the threshold, and, to their consternation, a voice bade them not to be afraid but to come in. The husband entered the room, but soon rushed out with his hair standing on end. He had seen his uncle's ghost. The old man was sitting, enveloped in a sheet, on the side of his bed. The supposed corpse had the utmost difficulty in getting his panic-stricken relatives to understand that he was not dead after all. "I am alive!" he repeated, adding that the preparations for his funeral had not escaped his notice. He had been in a lethargy, and, waking up, had helped himself to the broth, which had done him good. Hearing someone approaching he had jumped into bed, as he was anxious not to cause any alarm; but Richard was himself again. He felt perfectly recovered, and certainly on closer examination the uncle's appearance by no means belied his words. The refreshments had come in most opportunely to restore him, and, as he was much pleased with the affectionate attention which his relatives had shown him after his supposed departure from this world, everything was soon made happy and comfortable all round. I should add that the doctor of the quarter had not yet officially confirmed the demise of the wealthy uncle, who seems to have taken a new lease of life.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

How to Bleach Beeswax.

It is said by the New York Witness that in 1861 the following plan was employed to bleach beeswax, the plan not being protected by patent, but the secret very carefully kept. Mr. Langstroth was the originator. The wax was put into a kettle with water, the water being added to keep the wax from burning. Wax is more inflammable than oil. The melted wax was put into a tin box having holes in the bottom, which allowed it to fall on a roller that revolved in water. It was then placed on cloths and exposed to the sun. Three meltings were necessary before the operation was complete. It was broken up in the morning before the sun arose to heat it. The dirt would fall into the water.

Preserving Seed Corn.

After seed corn is dried clear through to the center of the cob care is still required in keeping it until ready for use. Many leave it hanging in a dry place in which it was cured, which is unobjectionable if always protected from dampness, frost and vermin—the great requisites in keeping the seed properly after it is cured. Corn in traces may well be stripped of its husks and dried on a floor before packing away, to be sure all moisture in the butts is dried out. A well dried ear will snap like a dry stick when broken. If it is properly dry, many good farmers prefer to leave the seed on the ear until about ready to plant, believing that this guards against the sweating process which it passes through when stored in any quantity. If the ears are packed in barrels, avoid using salt barrels.

Others prefer shelling and sacking (sacks are not so retentive of heat or moisture as boxes or barrels), small bags not over one bushel in capacity being better than larger ones. Careful shelling by hand, rather than by machine, so as not to crack the grains or injure the germ, is a good practice. This shelling may not be done until midwinter or later, but many advocate doing it as soon as the corn is well dried, to secure it against dampness caused by warm spells in winter. Too much care cannot be taken to keep the cured seeds dry and away from frost. N. M. Luiton stores it in the cellar in boxes or sacks on supports nailed to the joists of the first floor, where it is always dry and warm, especially if there is a furnace in the cellar. E. J. Heat puts the seed in slatted boxes hung under the joists of the second story of his workshop, the lower story having a fire in it in cold weather. That frost will not injure the germ of well cured seed is believed by some, but the most careful growers keep the seed away from the frost the year around.

Farmers who carefully follow the above method with seed corn will not have to replant, even in unfavorable seasons. From ninety-five to ninety-nine per cent. of such seed will germinate in practice. This last statement is based on long experience by many careful observers; it is not theory. It is poor vitality, not cold or wet, that causes so much seed corn to rot in the ground. John Gould proved this by germinating one hundred per cent. of good seed in mud at a temperature of forty-five degrees, although it took twenty days. Above all, such seed will steadily improve the yield and ripen the crop within ninety to one hundred days in average seasons.—American Agriculturist.

Fruit in Cellars.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer has the following advice to offer on the subject of the storage of fruit in cellars: When the late apples and pears are first gathered they are hard and inedible, but soon after they are stored away important changes take place in them. They become mellow and juicy, the change taking place slowly or rapidly, according to the temperature of the place where the fruit is kept. For the sake of the fruit it is desirable that the change should take place slowly, for the fruit thus ripened always proves superior to that whose maturity has been forced by a warmer temperature. The warmer the room the faster the apples and pears ripen, and for this reason it is desirable that the temperature should be kept at only a few degrees above the freezing point.

As the fruit ripens one of the most important changes that will take place is the absorption of oxygen from the air and the giving out of carbonic acid gas. This change is so important and so detrimental to the health of those living in the same house, that if allowed to go on it will in time very likely cause severe illness. If a room is used only for the storage of apples, and the place kept perfectly closed, the carbonic acid gas that will be given out in a short time will be sufficient to extinguish the flame of a lamp when carried into the room, and if a person should breathe the air long enough death would inevitably result. The gas taken in large quantities is a poison, and even in partly closed rooms where fruit is stored, severe headaches and other unpleasant feelings are produced by breathing the impure air.

It is a common practice to store large quantities of fruit in the cellar of the dwelling house, and a great deal of discomfort and unpleasantness are caused thereby, the source of which is not suspected. Farmers who make a scientific and intelligent study of their surroundings have detached cellars, or those under some out-building, where the fruit is stored. Where large quantities are kept, a pit is dug in the earth below the frost line, and some of the later pears and apples buried there with straw until February or March. This is a good practice with those who can afford the space and time for the work; but many have to keep the fruit in the house cellar, if they keep it at all. To these a few hints may be the means of preventing much discomfort and even sickness in the family.

During the month of February stored fruit ripens more rapidly than earlier in the year, and more of the poisonous carbonic acid gas is given off as a result. This gas must not be allowed to permeate the dwelling house; it must be turned off in some other channel. If there is no chance to communicate the cellar with the chimney and a flue thus opened, the poisonous exhalation must be carried away by thorough ventilation. If the flue can be opened a current of air can be kept in motion at all times, and the poison will be readily removed from the building; but if this is impossible the door and windows of the cellar should be opened on every mild day. A thermometer should be kept hanging in the store-room or cellar, and when the mercury is four or five degrees above the freezing point, ventilate freely, taking care to shut up before the temperature falls.

To do all this will require considerable watchfulness and labor, but when we consider that it is a question of health or unhealthfulness there can be but little doubt that few will object to doing it. Wherever possible fruit should be stored in cellars away from the dwelling house, as it was never meant to be kept in the latter place.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Horses need plenty of bedding.

Do not let plants bear seed unless you need it.

It requires two persons to set out a tree properly.

If the soil is not naturally dry, let it be well drained.

Pure-bred stock can be raised almost as cheaply as mongrels. "Breed from the best."

The soil around newly set trees should be kept mellow—this by stirring or mulching.

Keep your young chicks out of the wet grass if you wish to have them thrive and do well.

Sentiment does not replace the money expended to winter the broken down, useless farm horse.

Do not forget that the best place for hot soapsuds on washing day is the cucumber and melon patch.

Which is the cheaper to keep a pound of flesh on the animal during the winter or replace it in the spring?

When you notice a caterpillar nest on the roadside or field, destroy it. If neglected, your orchard will suffer.

It is said that "butter-making, as now practiced on many farms, is an absolute waste of valuable raw material."

Sound feet and limbs, a level head and rapid walk, are points to be preferred in a draft horse, regardless of breed.

Imperfect compacting of the soil around the seed, in which is included undue hardening of the surface by rains, is the chief cause of failure in seed germination.

If the warts are of a large size and have a well-defined neck, they may be safely removed by tying a thread tightly about the neck, and this will prevent the circulation of blood in them, and in a few days they will die, after which remove with a sharp knife.

The Toad and Cat Are Friends.

Mrs. Jansen, of Little Ferry, N. J. owns a cat that has formed a curious attachment for a large toad that has its home in a swampy garden. How far the toad is a contented party to the cat's affectionate demonstrations Mrs. Jansen has not been able to ascertain, for the fat, ungainly creature cannot boast of an expressive countenance. Pussy, however, evidently enjoys the strange friendship she has formed, and since the first day she found the toad peacefully sleeping on a stone in the sunshine and joyously took it in gently by its shoulder with her teeth and carried it into the house, she has done the same thing every day. She is a very intelligent cat, and she always mews loudly to call the children to see the fun. Then she spends an hour in tossing the toad into the air and catching it, like a ball, allowing it to move a few yards away from her, and crawling slowly after it, or bounding straight upon it from a distance, and flattening it upon the floor by pressing both her fore paws upon its back.

When she tires of the sport she carries it carefully into the garden and lays it down on the spot where she picked it up. The toad makes no effort to escape, probably knowing the futility of such a course. The shoulder by which it is always carried begins to look as though it needed repairs; but the cat seems determined to continue the familiar relations existing between them, whether the toad likes them or not.—New York Sun.

Scotch Proverbs.

A gude word is as soon said as an ill.

A dog winna growl if ye fell him wi' a bone.

Far sought and dear bought is good for ladies.

Birth's good; but breeding's better.

Better keep well than make well.

He is worth no weal that can bide no woe.

He that winna when he may, shanna when he wad.

Take a pint and 'gree; the law's costly.

Be the same thing that ye would be called.

Fiddlers' dogs and flees come to a feast uncalled.

Fair words break never a bone; foul words many a ane.—Wise Sayings of the Common Folk.

"If a man is a complete wreck after an accident, how can he be said to recover?" "From the railroad company, you idiot," was the answer.—Somerville Sun.

HASH: A ESSAY.

BY PROFESSOR PALAVER.

Hash are known and at the hull world over, from North and South to East and West people likes it.

It are the most popular vittles ever got up, and the feller, be he mail or female, wat first inventid hash shood uv sent down to prosperity arm in arm with B. Franklin.

He or she are deservin uv it, fur without them bordin houses wood uv bin a faleyer, and hash wood uv cum up missing.

It are amoosin after consoomin a plat or two uv bang-up hash to rekline back in your cheer and wunder what was the ingredients uv hash away back in the times uv Noey.

I speck Noey's partner put her most fittin best forward, and applyed the flavorin to sute Noey to a dot, but uv wat were it made uv.

Commentaters says the pottidge uv them days were most likely a sort uv hash konsistin uv watter and flower biled up and varyus yurbs throwed in.

Esaw swopped his berthrite fur wun mess uv it. Eyther it were furst klass and hard to git or else Esaw didn't valyou his berth nuthin.

But knowin minds and willin hands has labored on a improovin tell now we hev got a hash wich are a hash.

Wen it are put together rite thare haint no diskount on it. Its the feed fur me.

I kin liv on it 3 times a day, and eat it tween meals fur a rellish.

Furthermore I never yet seen 2 dorgs wich woodnt fite over a morsel uv hash.

I hev offen thort how is it sumboddy haint investid consekratid hash done up in cans like Bordin's milk or Lewises's lie.

Seems to me it wood be a bully thing fur picknicks and sich.

Only just conseeve uv a feller cartin aroun 2 or 3 mess uv hash in his pockit.

Or mitent it be turned out in the form desikated cokynut cums in, dry like, so as to be carrid in paper bags.

Sum feller with a hed on him mite make a fortyun out uv this.

Ef I were yunger I wood go into it eye tooth and nale, purvidin I cood borry a few shackels to push it with.

The ideo is too subblime to be forgot.

Giv us sum consekrated hash, yung man, in 5 pound cans.

Thare is all kinds uv ways, vulger and unvulger, uv devourin hash. Sum puts it away with a kase-nife; uthers uses a fork; and varsahus pursons spoons it down.

The heathen Chinees transfurs it with a wooden nittin-needel (by the way wun needel full uv their hash wood be suffishunt fur me), and the copper injuns eats it with a piece uv bark.

Thare be lots uv ways uv makin hash. Not evry wun knows the korect method.

I dont perfess to kno it my own self. The most pervalin plan uv preparin it kan only be obtained in a bordin house. —Chicago Ledger.

What They Were Thinking Of.

They had been talking for a long time. Arabella's chair was tired, and just for a change, she sat upon John's lap. There was a good deal of silence for a few minutes.

"What are you thinking of, John dear?" asked Arabella.

"Just what you are, sweet," replied John.

"Oh, you horrid, horrid man," exclaimed the sweet one, springing to her feet; "if I'd have known that you were thinking of kissing I wouldn't have sat there one minute. And you won't catch me sitting there again, sir, you may depend."—Texas Siftings.

CHEERFUL PROSPECT.

Mr. Naggers (who has been having his customary breakfast table growl)—Well, when I die I hope I won't go where I'll have to make a fire every morning.

Mrs. N.—No fear. The fire will be all ready for you.

Why He Never Wavered.

Sunday school teacher—Why did Jacob's faith in God never waver?

Bad boy—'Cause he never had to wind a Waterbury watch. He'd cuss if he had to wind mine.—Arcola Record.

The owners of furniture wagons are possessed of a moving spirit.

Evening Up the Score.

A young society lady of Cincinnati, whose passion to be up with the prevailing styles leads her at times to go to extremes, brought home a most elaborate hat from a modiste the other night. Mamma was wrothy, sisters scolded, and the two elder brothers flew off into a rage. The young lady declared to fight it out on that line if it took all winter, and that she would wear that hat in the faces of the family veto. A council of war was held between the two brothers, and with a sacrilegious hand and a sharp penknife they undid the artistic work of the milliner, and left the duck of a hat shorn of its rich plumage. Amanda next morning wept, stormed, relapsed into silence and brooding thoughts, and the following morning one brother found his bicycle in sections, part of it in the cellar and part in the garret, and the other is looking for parts of his shotgun divorced from the stock. Amanda sits sweetly smiling, the picture of conscious innocence.

THE heart of man is like the love of the Master.

We presume that Cork has a large floating population.

A grade necessity—The abolition of grade crossings by railway tracks.

Many a political candidate beats his opponent by a scratch.

The poet is often saddest when he sings, and so are the readers.

A "Put and Call."

Got the cold shoulder—the tramp who stole the fore-quarter of mutton.

Athletes of social propensities mostly prefer the Indian Club.

Western miners as a rule, prefer buying their liquor by the quarts.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.50 in advance; after 6 months, $1.75; after 12 months, $2.00.

These terms will be strictly complied with, to the millionaire and school boy alike.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Dec. 13, 1888.

A recent public test of the consolidated railway telegraph system of train telegraphy, made on the Lehigh Valley railroad, gave very satisfactory results. On a train moving sixty miles an hour, messages were sent and received to and from other trains on the road; and communication was had with this city and with different stations on the line.—Boston Budget.

President Cleveland's last message to Congress is before the people; and the almost unanimous verdict is that in wisdom and abilaty it compares favorably with his former state papers which have given him high rank as a statesman. Those who expected the President to abandon the reform ideas of his previous utterances will be very much disappointed when they read his message. He is not the kind of a man to forsake a principle because it happens to be somewhat unpopular; but has the courage to declare what to him seems right, if opposed by the entire people.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

It is now given out that Cardinal Gibbons favors the suspension of Sunday work in the Government's mail and military service and on the inter-State railways. He has written a letter to that effect which will be made public at the next hearing of the Senate Education and Labor Committee on the subject, to be given during the forthcoming meeting of the American Sunday Convention in this city.

The question is thus made to assume an importance that it has never reached before. The Catholic and Protestant churches in the country once substantially united in support of legislation looking to the observance of Sunday in the manner indicated, it will be difficult for Congress to resist so powerful a pressure. Yet it is much to be doubted whether the moral benefits gained by the stoppage of Sunday mail and railway traffic would compensate for the serious interruption to many important and not wholly mercenary interests that would be occasioned thereby.

The question is a somewhat complex one and will not admit of hasty action in obedience to a religious impulse. While it might be pleasing to us all could the country once a week throw off its enormous burdens and return to the quietude and simplicity of a country Sabbath, it is much to be questioned whether a general cessation of the wheels of travel and transportation on that day would tend to make us a better or more God fearing people or advance the standard of true piety.

The subject will be considered in all its bearings at the approaching convention and no doubt excite a wide spread interest.—Washington Post.

The race for the Speakership of the House is beginning to warm up. Already some good thoroughbred Democratic stock has been entered and there may be more to follow. Gen. Sprigg, Hon. R. P. Chew, Hon. W. E. Lively, Hon. C. P. Dorr and Hon. Joe Woods have all been favorably mentioned, and none would be adverse to the honor. They are all good men and true, and the House could make no mistake in selecting any one of them. —Wheeling Register.

The New Chief Justice.

The Chief Justice sits between Justices Miller and Field. To the latter he rarely or never speaks while on the bench, but he frequently consults with the former. Between Miller and Fuller there appears to be a close fellowship, and the Iowa Justice has been a sort of mentor and adviser of the new chief. When in doubt about anything or lacking in confidence in his knowledge of court etiquette or precedent it is to Justice Miller that he invariably turns for counsel. Probably there never was a more alert man than the Chief Justice on the bench. Lawyer like, he is found of consulting authorities, and occasionly he writes a long note and sends it by a page to one or another of the Justices who sittoo far away to be whispered to, but he catches every word that is uttered by the lawyers. Nothing escapes him. He likes to smile over his glasses at an attorney, and generally is inclined to relax the stiff dignity of the great tribunal.—Chicago Tribune.

In an address before the Georgia House of Representatives, Senator Colquitt, who is a tariff-reformer and was re-elected, while Henry W. Grady, the high-tariff candidate, withdrew, said: "It has been whispered in this hall that since the defeat of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency we should abandon our principles, repudiate the declaration of our State Convention and county meetings, and of the 60,000 Democratic majority of the State. I am proud to know that the General Assembly of Georgia has not been reduced into betrayal of her professed principles. The resolutions of the talented member from Bibb, unanimously adopted by this body, give assurance that you stand steadfast and immovable. Only a trimmer or a traitor would abandon the effort to reduce the burden of taxation because of our defeat. We will not desert our post because it is difficult to hold, We will not fly to the rear in the presence of danger. Is our fidelity to a cause to last only so long as we can rejoice in its triumph? Are our convictions so faint and heartless that they will be abandoned because of temrary defeat?"

Mrs. Ellen Ewing Sherman, the wife of Gen. William T. Sherman, died Wednesday at her home in this city. She had suffered from heart trouble for many years, and had been especially ill from this cause during the last few weeks. On Sunday her condition became alarming, and Dr. Pepper of Philadelphia was summoned to consult with her attending physician, Dr. Smith. Mrs. Sherman continued to sink steadily, and since Tuesday morning had been unconscious. Mrs. Sherman was a daughter of Gen. Thomas Ewing of Ohio. She was well known as a very active and devout member of the Roman Catholic Church, in which one of her sons is a priest. She was one of the trustees of "Peter's Pence" in America. Pope Pius IX., shortly before he died, sent to her a gift of a golden rosary, with a piece of the "true cross" set in the crucifix. Her age was sixty-four years, and her birthplace was Lancaster, Ohio. She leaves two sons and four daughters. She was burried at St. Louis Saturday.—N. Y. Sun.

Poverty.

When we talk of proverty we introduce a subject with which most of us are familiar; yet, while it is so common, it is something about which many people entertain mistaken ideas. One false notion is that poverty is itself something to be ahsamed of; another equally unfounded is that it is itself something to be proud of. Like wealth, its possessor deserves praise or blame not on account of his poverty, but on his own account. The honor due us cannot be measured by the abundance of our possessions nor the extremity of our want, but in each case is to be determined solely by the conduct that has fixed our condition. When riches have been accumulated by honest toil and temperate economy they crown their possessor with honor and may be justly contemplated with pride; if, however, they have been acquired by corrupt and unconscionable practices, or if they be the hoardings of the selfish miser they bring no credit to the owner. So it is with poverty, the victim of misfortune or he that in the unselfishness of his heart exhausts his resources in the performance of noble deeds, has no need to blush on account of his meager possessions; but the man who is forever kept poor by extreme indalence or needless self indulgence ought to be ashamed of his condition.

There are two classes of persons who are of little good either to themselves or to their country, viz. those who want to own everything and those who don't try to own anything: Of these, however, the man of greed is to be prefered to the man who makes no effort, for the energy and activity necessary to the accumulation of riches are a safe-guard against certain vices that naturally result from laziness. The man who lives solely for gain and is successful, contributes something, though unwillingly, to the support of his government and is too much absorbed in his own purposes to meddle with the affairs of other people. It is not true of the indolent. His country receives no benefit, and giving himself no concern about his own affairs, he has a great deal of time to devote to things which do not concern him, thus making of himself a public nuisance. Aside from this, that poverty which comes of laziness is prolific in its generation of crime. The man who thinks himself entitled to live without labor is greatly deficient in that principle that makes good and safe citizens, nor is he often too good to resort to almost any means of supplying his natural wants, which he fails to supply legitimately.

But we have been discussing the willfully poor: on the other hand, among the poorest are to be found very many of our best and most praiseworthy people. Many things that influence the affairs of life are beyond the control of humanity; and it often happens that by misfortune the most deserving fail, while the unworthy succeed. Hence men should be judged by their purposes, so far as we are able to know them, and by the efforts they make; and he who means well and tries well, should be honored though ever so poor, while he that is wrong in purpose and effort should command from us no respect, though the owner of millions.

That Complex Race Problem.

The negro problem is of vastly more importance to the South than any other question or issue that can be raised. It is more important than Protection or Free Trade; it is more important than tariff reform; it is more important to the South, individually and collectively than even the fundamental principles of Democracy. It is not a question of partisanship; it is not even a question of politics, though the Republican haters of the South have striven to make it so. It is a vital and momentous question that cannot be adequately described in all its dangerous bearings and aspects. It is a question that can be settled definitely and peaceably only by the patience, the moderation and the wisdom of far-seeing statesmen. Every thoughtful man is willing to admit that the solidity of the South is an unfortunate thing in some respects. It practically assures a solid North, and deprives this section of the political power that, under ordinary circumstances it would wield in the Government. Nevertheless, this solidity is not only necessary, but inevitable. It is not based on sectionalism, nor, at bottom, is the compact a political one. It is simply the result of a situation pregnant with doubt and danger—a situation which can not be remedied by the politicians. —Atlanta Constitution.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lester Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,		Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Sunset,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Read Jake Boner's new advertisement.

—H. M. Lockridge, Esq., was in town last Friday for the first time since his protracted illness. He is not yet entirely recovered, but very much improved.

—Last week Dick Mayes, Esq., of Split Rock passed through Huntersville on his way to Millboro with five large deer that had been killed in the Elk neighborhood.

—We are informed that a rail road is now being located from the White Sulphur up Anthony's Creek toward Huntersville. We hope it is true. The outside world has certainly been shut off from Huntersville long enough.

—Geo. W. Wagner has purchased the Hotel Pocahontas of J. W. Milligan and J. C. Loury, Sr. and Jas. H. Doyle have bought the Huntersville Hotel of Jno. R. Slaven. Not a good day for selling hotels either.

—A recent letter from Rev. H. W. Kisser, who left Huntersville Wednesday last, announces his safe arrival at his home in Lewisburg and a continued improvement in his health. We trust his recovery may be speedy and permanent.

—Justices of the peace—old and new, take notice that we have on hand at the TIMES Office all kinds of official blanks, which can be had cheap for cash. Send in your orders and they shall be promptly filled.

—Various and conflicting reports are in circulation concerning the disappearance of Nelson Moore, which was mentioned in the TIMES last week. Some think he has left the country to escape trial, while others believe he has been secretly put to death. The truth may never be known.

—On the first page of this issue will be found a synopsis of the President's recent Message to Congress, taken from the Baltimore Sun. The Message is a document of such length that we could not reproduce it bodily for want of space. The sketch from the Sun is accurate, and substantially sets forth the most important parts of the Message.

—In this issue appears a notice of an entertainment to be given by the students of the Hillsboro Male and Female Academy, on the evening of Dec. 21st. Prof. Landes, who has charge of this school deserves great credit for the manner in which he is conducting it. The people of Pocahontas County should see to it that he is well supported in his worthy enterprise.

—As will be seen from the communication of Vivian, the girls of the Hillsboro Training School, of which Miss G. M. Shearer is principal, will give an entertainment on Christmas Eve. Miss Shearer seems to be building up a school of high order, which work should commend itself to all good citizens and prompt them to lend a helping hand.

WANTED

Dressed Deer Skins, Hides and Tallow for cash or exchange.

A. P. Lacey,
Dealer in Leather, Harness, Saddles, &c.
Ronceverte, W. Va.

—A letter from a reliable party living at Edray dated Dec. 9th, contains the following:

"Among many of the people of this district it is thought that Nelson Moore has been foully dealt with. A company is being organized to day to search for him. It is supposed that, if killed, his body was taken into the Black Mountain Wilderness. Some of the circumstances of his disappearing look very suspicious. He left with no money at all, and had on his old and badly worn clothing. His family know nothing about him and are greatly distressed. So says current and reliable report."

NOTICE.—The students of Hillsboro Male and Female Academy will give an entertainment in the Academy building Friday evening December 21st, 1888, in celebration of the Ciceronian Literary Society. An admission of 25 cents (patrons and officers of the school excepted) will be charged the proceeds to be appropriated toward defraying the expenses of additional necessary furniture to the school room.

W. H. LANDES,
Principal.

FOR SALE.

I have for sale in Huntersville the following property: One good cow, one cooking stove, two heating stoves, one bedstead, copboards, tables, chairs, one marble top parlor table, washstand, bureau, and many other things useful about a house. If you desire any of the above articles call early.

Respectfully,
JAS. B. CANFIELD.

REMEMBER

That after December 17th all accounts due me will be placed in Atty. L. M. McClintic's hands for collection. To save time and costs, all who have received statements from me and have not already paid them, should remit at once to L. M. McClintic, Huntersville, W. Va.

Cut this out and save it as a reminder.

Respectfully,
[illegible] B. CANFIELD.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mrs. Mary Darst of Fincastle Va. is the guest of Mrs. H. W. Wysong.

Miss Belle Eskridge and E. I. Holt are on the sick list.

The children are talking about "Santa Claus," and wondering what presents he will bring them.

Maj. J. C. Arbogast of Green Bank spent Friday and Saturday in our village.

The girls of the M. P. Society H. T. School, (Miss G. M. Shearer prin.) will give an entertainment Monday night Dec. 24th, Admission 25cts. doors open at seven o'clock "Rock of Ages" will be acted in five scenes. Those who have seen this piece acted will say that it alone, is worth 25 cts. They will have many other beautiful pieces with both vocal and instrumental music. There is a rare treat in store for all who enjoy good entertainments.

Dec. 10. VIVIAN.

Douthard's Creek Items.

Mr. Sherman Kincaid, who has been ill for some time, we are glad to say, is able to be out again.

Miss Docia Sharp is visiting friends and relatives at Frost.

Miss Bertha Sharp has been on the sick list for some time.

Mr. B. F. White has gone to Elk on a hunting expedition.

The Douthard's creek Debating Society was largely attended on last Friday night. The question for debate was, "Resolved that war is a greater evil to the human family than Intemperance." Decided in the negative.

Miss Lena McGlaughlin is teaching a flourishing school at Lonely Dale. We wish her success.

Miss Elva Friel is calling on friends in this neighborhood.

Railroad men around here, look out for the iron horse.

We are sorry to hear that Mr. J. B. Canfield the former editor of the TIMES is going to leave us but as he has decided to go, we wish him success and also the new firm.

Dec. 10. PHIL. O. SOPHER.

Married

Nov. 29th, 1888, at the residence of the bride's parents, by the Rev. Geo. P. Moore, Mr. Giles S. Sharp and Miss Catharine J. Cochran, all of Pocahontas County.

Married.

At the Huntersville Hotel, Wednesday morning Dec. 5th, Mr. L. M. McClintic and Miss Allie Slaven were quietly united in the holy bonds of matrimony; Rev. Wm. T. Price afficiating.

The attendants were Miss Minnie Gammon of Odessa, Mo. and Miss Lizzie Ligon of Clover Lick, Mr. Harry Patterson, of Huntersville and Dr. McClintic, of Edray.

The bride looked very sweet in a handsome costume of tan colored cloth elaborately trimmed in golden brown plush and brown and ecrue braid.

Miss Gammon was becomingly dressed in an olive green Duchess satin, prettily trimmed in bronze green bugle braid.

Miss Ligon's costume was a dark blue silk, extensively ornamented with bronze bugle ornaments.

The groom and groomsmen wore the conventional black dress suits.

After partaking an excellent breakfast the bridal party proceeded to the home of the groom, where a splendid reception was held.

The bride is well known in society circles as a most charming and beautiful lady, and the groom is to be congratulated in winning such a fair and worthy bride.

The groom is one of Pocahontas' most promising young men. The majority he attained at the recent Election to the office of Prosecuting Attorney, is an evidence how he is honored and esteemed in this county.

May their life be as bright calm and serence as their wedding day, and may prosperity and happiness ever attend them.

AN OBSERVER.

Report of Schools.

Report of the Mill Point School for the month ending Nov. 30th.

No. enrolled in School 34.
Whole No. of days present 474.
Average daily attendance 25.
Per cent. of daily attendance 85½.
Per cent. of daily absence 14½
Average Age 11½
Names of pupils neither absent nor tardy.

John L. McNeel, David E. Ruckman, Wm. E. Jackson, Mary M. Ruckman, Mary G. McNeel, and Elva Maggie Bird.

JNO. S. MOORE, Teacher.
Dec. 10th 1888.

The following is the roll of honor for the Harper school near Hillsboro

Mattie Curry, Nera Kinnison, Jennie Bolton, Rena Coulter, Wolhe Kinnison, Blanche Harper, Ethel Curry, Blanche Coulter, Grace McCarty.—Boys De Kalb Kinnison, Posse Curry, Summers Kinnison, Forrest Harper, Richard Kinnison, Freddie Wade, Amos Payne, No. enrolled, 27. Average daily attendance, 24 Per cent. of daily attendance 92 highest grade. 92.

BELLA F. CLARK, Teacher.

The following is the report of the Lonely Dale school, for the month ending Nov. 30th.

No. enrolled—Girls, 7, Boys, 9.
Average daily attendance, 13.
Per cent of daily attendance 85,
Pupils neither absent nor tardy. Bertha Alderman, Lucie Sharp Anise Underwood, Tim Alderman, Hoxie Alderman, and Doctor Alderman.

LENA A. MCGLAUGHLIN, Teacher.

Fiduciary Notices.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

Isaac McNeel, guardian of Lydia E. McNeel.

S. H. Clark, executor of Wm. Cleek, deceased.

L. M. MCCLINTIC,
Comr. accts.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered on the 17th day of October, 1888, in the Chancery cause of George N. Tacy vs. Hamilton Collins etc., I, as special commissioner appointed in the said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court-House of said county, on the

1st DAY OF JANUARY, 1888,

the following real estate, to-wit:

A tract of land containing One Hundred acres, more or less, lying on the waters of Clover Creek, in Pocahontas county, West Virginia, adjoining the lands of S. B. Hannah, W. Doyle and others, being the same land heroiofore sold to Hamilton Collins by said George N. Tacy.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue, the purchaser to execute three several bonds with good security, falling due respectively in Six, Twelve and Eighteen months from day of sale, said bonds bearing interest from day of sale. A lien will also be retained on said land as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spc'l Commissioner.
C. B. SWECKER, Auctioneer.

Bond has been given by the above Special Commissioner as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k of Ct. Ct'.
Dec. 6 4 t- Printers fee $8.25.

Notice to Creditors.

To the creditors of Allen D. Grimes, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said Allen D. Grimes to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Allen D. Grimes for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 27th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this 15th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.
Nov22-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.55.

Notice to Creditors.

To the Creditors of John Sharp, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subjet the real estate of the said John Sharp to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said John Sharp for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 28th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this the 16th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.
Nov22-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.55.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va.,
November, 16th, 1888.

John Sharp's Adm'r
vs.
John Sharp's Legatees, etc.

All parties interested in the above cause take notice that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, W. Va., on THURSDAY, THE 28th DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889,

to take the following accounts:

1 A settlement of the account of J. C. Arbegast as Administrator, with the will annexed of John Sharp, dec'd;

2 Who the creditors are and the amount of their claims, if any, severally and collectively, with their dignities and priorities;

3 What amount remains in the hands of the Administrator after discharging the debts, if anything, and to whom payable;

4 Any matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest as required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, pronounced in above cause at its October Term, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r Cir. Ct. P.C.
Nov.22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.67.

Commissioner's Office,

Huntersville, W. Va.,
Nov. 16th, 1888.

Rosella Smith, etc.,
vs.
Mary F. Malcomb, etc.

IN CHANCERY.

All parties interested in above cause are hereby notified that I will proceed at my office in Huntersville, in said county, on THURSDAY, THE 20th DAY OF DECEMBER, 1888,

to take the following accounts:

1 The names of the persons who have interest in the 202 acres of land in the bill and proceedings mentioned and the amount of their several interests;

2 The value of the personal estate of George W. Moore, dec'd, with which Mary F. Malcomb and John W. Malcomb, or either of them should be charged;

3 Any other matter deemed pertinent or required by any party in interest to be specially stated, as required by a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county rendered in above cause at the October Term thereof, 1888, at which time and place you are required to attend.

JAS. W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r Cir. Ct. P. C.
Nov22-4t.] Printer's fee, $8.67.

THE LAMB LOST AND FOUND.

A lamb had left the fold,
And wandered far away,
In search of greener grass,
And flowers more sweet and gay.

But no true food it found;
The flowers that seemed so fair
Were bitter to the taste;
Poison was present there.

The lamb still further strayed,
But searched and searched in vain;
Stumbling along the ground,
Weary and weak with pain.

It sank in miry bogs,
With thorns its fleece was torn;
In fear of wolves, it soon
Began to bleat and mourn.

The Shepherd heard its voice
And sought the lamb astray;
He gladly gave His life
To drive the wolf away.

Within His loving arms
The wandering lamb He brought,
Rejoicing He had found
The treasure He had sought.

Now, welcomed by the flock,
Happy and safe at home,
The grateful lamb resolves
It ne'er again will roam.

Dear Shepherd! give me grace
Never to leave Thy side,
Nor seek strange food, content
With all Thou dost provide.

VERNEENA'S FORTUNE;

—OR,—

The Stolen Heiress.

A TALE OF NEW YORK IN 1835.

BY PROF. WM. HENRY PECK,

AUTHOR OF

"The Queen's Secret," "The Tower of Gold," "The Half-Breed," "Harold's Hate," "The Bride of Barcelona," Etc.

[CONTINUED.]

"My hands are stained with human blood, Dame Grippard," almost grunted the excited Swede, as he continued to thrust them toward the startled old woman. "The blood of my good and murdered master, James Bratton, Dame Grippard," he added, and advancing closer to her. "Look at it! Touch it! You wanted to shed it!—had he fled and you caught him as a fleeing thief! Look at it! I am sure it is the blood of Mr. James Bratton."

"Stand back, you villainous wretch!" screeched the dame, as she sprang to her feet and snatched high her staff. "Stand back, I say, or I will beat out your brains, Jans Jansen! Keep him from me, some of you! Don't let him put his bloody hands on me, Pettis! Villain of a Swede, put no stain of Bratton's blood on me! Why do wish to do so? Why should any stain of his blood be put upon me? Hold him back, Pettis!"

Pettis by this time had thrown his arms around Jansen—whose excitement was for a few moments almost uncontrollable—and was now trying to calm him. Edward also advanced to aid Pettis, and between them they soon forced him to be seated.

The dame then asked him sternly why he believed the stains on his hands were the blood of Mr. Bratton, when he had not seen his dead nor living body.

"These stains on my hands," replied Jansen, in a low and now steady voice, "came from blood that has dripped through cracks between the trap-door edges and its frame in the cupola floor. I did not, while I was beating against the door, notice how slimy and moist it was, but I remembered that fact as soon as I saw the awful stains in clear light. I have no doubt that the blood was my dear late master's—I am sure of it!"

"Bosh, Jansen! You have not yet looked into the cupola," responded the dame, very loath to believe that her debtor was indeed forever beyond her reach. "You have not seen him, dead or alive. The stains on your hands may not be from blood."

"But they are from blood," remarked Edward, "after a close scrutiny of the Swede's hands, "though the blood is not freshly shed blood."

"And may it not be the blood of a rat that chanced to be crushed when the trap-door up there was last closed, Mr. Hawksworthy? I have often smashed the head of a chased rat or mouse in that way—with a door suddenly shut upon the beast. However, we shall soon see the upshot of this matter. Your arm, if you please, Mr. Hawksworthy."

But Edward did not seem to hear this request. He began to converse in whispers with Verneena. After a bitter glance at the lovers, the dame turned suspiciously to Pettis, who offered his arm instantly and with great fervency.

"Your arm is the best after all, Pettis," she said in low one. "But mind, you—you and others—have been making such a rumpus over Bratton's absence that my poor nerves are all of a tremble, and my heart in a flutter, and I can barely totter along on my feet. But come on."

Clinging ostentatiously to the arm of Pettis she led the way from the room, followed by Edward, Verneena, and others.

CHAPTER XX.

UNDER THE CUPOLA.

All were soon in the small apartment beneath the cupola floor. The room had no ceiling, save the under side of the cupola floor, which was laid across heavy beams.

There was but one window to this room—a dormer window which admitted sufficient light to reveal clearly all the interior, save the upper steps of ladder-like stairs that led to the closed trap-door in the floor of the cupola. The top of these stairs rested against the frame work of the trap-door, and could be seen but dimly by the persons below.

Dame Grippard halted not far from the ladder, and looking keenly upward, said, imperiously:

"Nonsense! I see nothing unusual up there. Mount the ladder, Pettis, and [illegible] what may be seen to prove the wild [illegible] of that [illegible] Swede."

Pettis mounted up the ladder, and hurried [illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible] his hands, rapidly upon [illegible] and said:

"Ugh! Jansen did not lie, Dame Grippard! Ugh! How I hate this kind of work! Uff! There is quite a pool of it up there on the steps just under the trap, dame—quite a pool! Ugh! Uff!"

"What a fuss you make about it, Pettis!" cried the dame. "Is the trap bolted on this side?"

"No, dame, but it is on the other side—the upper side. Uff! I gave the trap a hard shove with my shoulder, and couldn't move it a bit. Oh!—see how I have soiled my coat! Oh!"

"So Jansen was not lying, or simply fancying things," mused the dame. "I wonder if he thought to examine the scuttle in the south garret-room? Perhaps he didn't, for probably he does not know anything about that scuttle. I am quite sure it has not been unnailed since the cupola was built—and that was ten years ago. If there is any dead or live man in the cupola Jansen shall be the first to see it. Where is Jansen?" she asked aloud, and turning about.

"I am here, Dame Grippard," replied the Swede, who had just entered the room.

"Do you know that there is a scuttle in the south garret-room?"

"Yes, dame, I have just examined that scuttle. It is as it has been for many years—fastened below, as well as nailed down on its upper side. It has not been opened since I was first employed by Mr. Bratton. I found a ladder in that room, and used to examine the scuttle. Therefore I know that whoever fastened down the trap-door in the cupola did not disturb the scuttle."

Jansen's hearers exchanged glances of great interest in what he said. A grayish pallor again seized the dame's complexion, imparting to her harsh and forbidding features a most ghastly aspect.

"But," continued Jansen, after a moment's pause, and hastening to the solitary window, which pierced the slanting roof of that part of the dwelling, "a very active and daring man might bolt the trap-door above, climb out of one of the cupola windows to the roof, climb down the roof to this window and enter it—provided the sash fastening were loose."

He examined the window carefully. All watched his movements attentively.

"Ah," he soon said, "if any one did that he did not fail to bolt down this sash after he entered the window. The assassin was no doubt a very bold and cunning rascal."

"The assassin!" repeated the dame, scornfully, for her desire to find her debtor alive would not permit her to believe that he was dead. "The assassin! You are very fast! You speak in this matter as if you were perfectly sure that James Bratton has been murdered."

"I do not think anything but murder has prevented Mr. Bratton from meeting you below or at the gate this morning, Dame Grippard," replied Jansen, moodily.

"And I," remarked Edward, gloomily, "think that nothing else than suicide has robbed him of his life."

"And I declare here, before all," said Jansen, in an agitated voice, and flashing looks of hate at the dame as he spoke, "that if Mr. James Bratton has committed suicide his blood will be on the head and soul of this woman—this Helen Grippard. He owed her more than he could possibly pay; he told me so yesterday morning, poor gentleman! And he told me, too, that he expected to be cast into prison by this woman if he failed to pay her her dues to-day. But I will not believe that he has killed himself. I believe he ——"

But here the dame exclaimed furiously:

"You shall suffer for what you have dared to say of me, you dog! Hear all. I am mistress here. I am going to have that trap door raised. Pettis, see that tools, implements of some kind, be brought from below at once."

Pettis beckoned to several of the men who had followed the party from below, and hastened from the room. Edward then said to the dame:

"Dame Grippard, the body, if there is one on the trap door, should not be disturbed from where it is before its appearance and position have been accurately noted and commented upon. If a wounded man is there he should not be rudely moved by the violent raising of the trap. Let the scuttle you have mentioned be forced, and entrance of the cupola be made from one of its windows."

"If James Bratton lies dead on that trap," said the dame, darting malignant glances at Jansen, who scowled in return, "I believe this Swede has had a hand in his death. I call all to witness how strangely and mysteriously he has acted ever since he appeared at the gate this morning. A fox knows his own scent best; every dog knows where he has hidden his bone. Who knows the ins and outs of Old Anchors better than this Swede? Who was the first to hint that something serious may have chanced to Bratton? Who will persist in declaring his belief that James Bratton has been murdered? Who but Jans Jansen! Look at him! To me he looks like a murderer. I expect to see him hanged for what he has done in this place. I do, Jans Jansen! I do!"

She continued to voice her rage and spleen in this style for several minutes, during which few paid any attention to her save Jansen, who held his dark blue eyes steadily and defiantly upon her angry face throughout. She was still speaking venomously when the sudden entrance of several persons caused her to turn about and look at them.

These persons were Pettis and the men who had accompanied him to procure tools from below. With these men were three others. One was Captain Balbata, another was Bazilio, the third was the outlaw, Herman Urbandt, so-called.

Balbata and Bazilio were well clad in citizen's attire, which they wore as persons well accustomed to such. There was nothing nautical in their appearance.

The outlaw was clad in the garment of a first-mate of a Spanish merchant ship, and he wore it with every sign of the sailor he pretended to be. A large wig of light brown hair, curly and careless, covered and disguised his huge head—closely cropped now—of sooty iron gray locks. The wig was crowned by a Spanish holiday hat, whose broad brim shaded and half concealed his closely shaven and repulsive features.

The Captain swept a grand glance of salutation over all in the room, bowed low, and said, in excellent English:

"Good and fortunate day to all here, and especially to Senora Grippard. Ah, my dear Senora, you see that I, Alfonso Balbata, never fail to keep appointments with handsome ladies like yourself. But, dios mio! what is this that I have heard below?"

Without pausing for a reply, the Captain designated Bazilio and the outlaw, with two sweeping and rapid gestures, and continued:

"You are well acquainted with my secretary and supercargo, Senor Bazilio Alfandi, Senora Grippard. This is my first-mate, Senor Herman Urbandt."

The persons indicated bowed low to the dame. She did not turn her eyes upon the outlaw, and scarcely glanced at Bazilio. She wished in her heart that the Captain had not appeared just there and then, and held her gaze downward for the moment.

Verneena had found an opportunity ere this to speak to her lover of much that we have told the reader in reference to the dame's desire to sell her to the Spanish Captain, and Edward's eyes were fixed keenly upon the Captain's face while the latter was addressing the dame, as we have quoted.

Without yet having noticed the others in the room, the Captain continued to the dame:

"But what is this that we hear? The noble Senor Bratton not to be found? Believed to have come to some great harm? Impossible! Run away owing you a great sum? Impossible!"

Here the Captain chanced to turn his eyes squarely upon Edward. The gaze of these two remained steadily fixed for a few seconds, during which no one spoke.

"Who is this young cockerel?" said the Captain to himself, instinctively recognizing a rival in Edward. "The old hag told me that the girl had no lover—had never had a lover. I suppose this is the girl that was to be shown to me here to-day. Let me take a good look at the damsel."

He withdrew his eyes from Edward's aggressive gaze, and turned them for the first time squarely upon Verneena's wonderfully beautiful and angelic face.

She chanced to be gazing steadily at the Captain as he flashed his bold eyes toward her. Her fair face became instantly suffused with deepest blushes, for she remembered then why he was at Old Anchors. His gaze held hers for a long moment, and then she turned her eyes from him quickly and with a secret shudder of mingled dread and disgust.

Scarcely had the eyes of the Captain fallen upon her sweet countenance squarely, when he started violently and stared at her with a most wondering stare.

"Saints of Spain!" he mentally exclaimed. "What a wonderful resemblance! The living image of the only woman I ever truly loved. Ha! The hag did not lie about this maiden's rare beauty."

CHAPTER XXI.

DAME GRIPPARD ACCUSES JANSEN OF MURDER.

Captain Balbata stared so keenly at Verneena that Edward was about to advance and address him sharply, when he again turned to Dame Grippard, and said, in his effusive manner and rolling voice:

"Ah, Senora Grippard, I really hope all will be right with Senor Bratton. I had an interview with him in his office yesterday afternoon—elsewhere after that. True, he seemed in low spirits—exceedingly despondent, in fact. Come to think of his parting words, I am not sure they did not intimate an intention to commit suicide. He was, indeed, very despondent, senora, and had a wild way about him I never saw upon him before."

The dame flashed her gaze from the floor. She had apparently as yet scarcely glanced at the Captain. She exclaimed, eagerly:

"Do you say he spoke of killing himself, Captain?"

"Let me think, senora," replied the Captain, with feigned reflectiveness. "Let me try to remember. I have such a poor memory for particulars."

"He spoke of suicide," said Bazilio. "I was present, Captain, and of course heard all he said."

"Yes, I remember now," said the Captain. "He said he had a very large sum of money to pay you, Senora Grippard, and that he feared you would use severe measures toward him if he failed to pay you here this day; that he had no hope of being able to raise even a tenth part of the sum he owed you. He wanted to borrow from me. What did he say as he asked me to lend him money, Senor Bazilio?"

"He muttered," replied Bazilio, quickly, "that he feared death by his own hand would be his only way to pay Senora Grippard."

"True," exclaimed the Captain; "and that it was either death or flight with him. Something of that kind I am sure he said. But what was it that I heard below? That his dead body may be up here somewhere. That blood from it has gotten upon some one's hands?"

"Oh," remarked Bazilio, confidently, "if his body has been found, no doubt he killed himself, poor man."

"Captain Balbata and Senor Bazilio," said Dame Grippard, gloomily, and turning her eyes maliciously upon Jansen, "if James Bratton does lie dead on the floor of the cupola of Old Anchors, I shall not believe that he killed himself. This Swede knows more about the affair than he has told or hinted. He was the first to hint that any harm had come to Bratton; he was the first to say that Bratton's dead body is up there. He was the first and only one to say that Bratton was murdered in this house last night."

"What!" cried the Captain, exchanging an uneasy glance with Bazilio. "Has the body been seen yet? I was told below that the body had not yet been found. Why do you fancy that Senor Bratton was murdered last night, my good man?" he added, turning to Jansen.

"Oh, I have my reasons for that belief, Captain Balbata, but I shall keep them to myself for a time. I must see the body before I say more. I am now going to force that scuttle, Dame Grippard—that is, if you have no objection."

"Why should I have any objection, you fool?" demanded the dame, angrily, and thrusting her staff vindictively at the Swede. "Be at it, you idiot, and no doubt you will look upon your own work, if you find a dead man up there!"

"Man, follow me with the tools," cried Jansen to those who had brought implements from below. And with these words on his lips he hurried from the room.

"Your arm, if you please, Captain Balbata, and we will also follow that man," said Dame Grippard.

"With honor and pleasure to me, senora," responded the Captain, as he gave his arm to the dame.

All then quitted the room beneath the cupola and hastened after the Swede.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE OUTLAW RECOGNIZES VERNEENA.

Dame Grippard quitted the room under the cupola without having bestowed a single glance upon the man who had once been her husband, and who, she supposed, had been dead sixteen years.

She had scarcely more than glanced at Bazilio when the Captain spoke of him and the outlaw, or while Bazilio was speaking of Mr. Bratton. She had never had the least suspicion that Bazilio might be the son whose death she had secretly mourned during all those years, and for whose possible survival she had, nevertheless, always vaguely hoped. Though she had often met and conversed with Bazilio upon business matters of the Captain, she had never found her heart turning tenderly toward the young man. On the contrary, she had secretly detested him from the first moment of their acquaintance. Had she been asked why she thus detested him, she could have given no reason.

Bazilio and his father, after entering her presence in the room under the cupola, had used keenly every opportunity to study the dame's features and individualities.

Urbandt, as we will continue to call the outlaw, had done this because he desired to further assure himself that he had not been mistaken in asserting to Bazilio that the old woman was his former wife and Bazilio's mother.

Bazilio had studied her peculiarities sharply, because he wished to see whether he could detect in them any that were associated with his memory of his long-supposed dead mother.

When Bazilio had last seen and spoken to his mother, as his mother, he was but ten years old. Sixteen years had passed since that time, and therefore his recollections of his mother's features and other peculiarities were few and exceedingly vague.

Still, he remembered her as a very tall, large-framed, well-formed, active, and strong woman; that her front teeth were large and irregular, her chin square, massive, and protrusive; that her anger was always easily aroused to fury; that at times she was very cruel to him, and at other times most fond and caressing in her speech and manner; that she loved him at times most dotingly—solely because he was her only child—and hated him most bitterly at other times—solely because he was the son of her husband, and loved his father much more than he loved his mother.

Especially did Bazilio remember that his mother and father hated each other with a hatred that often flashed from angry speech to furious strife, in which blows with fists and missiles of anything at hand were swiftly exchanged; also, that when they last fought the battle ended only with the supposed death of his mother by a blow dealt by his father.

The harsh and croaking voice of Dame Grippard had nothing in its tones to remind him of the sweet, persuasive, and caressing voice which he remembered his mother used toward him when she fondled him; but the voice of the dame did somewhat recall to his memory the voice of his mother in one of her terrific rages, after she had become hoarse from much tempestuous vituperation of his father, or of any one with whom she was contending.

"She may be my mother," he mused, as he and his father followed the others from the room beneath the cupola; "but I cannot believe it to be so yet. She is certainly as hideous an old woman as I have ever met, and so I told Captain Balbata last year, when I, as his supercargo, first met her. A most villainous-eyed old woman she is! My mother? Well, I shall never permit her to gain my love. The hag!"

With this outspoken contempt of the dame, he turned his glance and thoughts upon Verneena, who, leaning on her lover's arm, was in advance of Bazilio and his father, following the others, to witness Jansen's removal of the scuttle fastenings.

"Ah," thought Bazilio, "and the very first time I saw this old woman I saw also, for the first time, yonder most beautiful girl. Her image as it was then, not less beautiful now, has never quitted my brain since that instant. My whole soul rushed toward her then. Her image has been in my memory day and night, and often in my dreams, ever since. But for the few and far between and brief visits of our brig to this port, I might have become as much loved by her as she now seems to love this navy officer. Dame Grippard asserted to the Captain that the girl had no lover, and had never had a lover. The dame lied, or was mistaken. It is easy to see the girl adores this fellow and that he is as devoted to her. But if he bars my plan he shall die the death of a meddling dog as sure as to-day is to-day."

His father was at his side. He turned to him and whispered:

"What think you now? Is the old woman our dame?"

"She is certainly. I have not the least doubt now of it."

"Have you any suspicion that she has recognized or begun to suspect who you are?"

"None, my son. She has not yet even glanced at my face."

"But are you sure of that, father? Our dame, you remember, was often looking keenly at people on the sly."

"I know that, but I am not afraid of her slyness now. She still believes, of course, that you and I were found dead in the Seine sixteen years ago, and our bodies recognized by persons who knew us well in London—as she read, no doubt, in the Paris and London papers at the time. I have watched keenly her every glance since we entered her presence, and I know she has not yet cast one at my face."

"I fear that glance—if she is indeed our dame, father. We must move before her as if we were in a powder magazine with flaming torches in our hands. The least spark of suspicion flashed into her brain—if she is our dame—will blow our scheme to bits."

"Have no fear, my son, that I shall not be closely on my guard. But all are coming to a halt."

Meanwhile the Captain and the dame had moved onward together, whispering of their own matters. Balbata had no suspicion that Bazilio and his newly engaged first-mate were at all related to each other. They had concocted a plausible story to tell him, and Balbata had put implicit faith in the story. He believed that Bazilio was devoted to his interests simply because Bazilio expected to thrive under his protection and patronage. Bazilio, who had been in his service several years, had never betrayed any of his secrets—simply because it had not been to Bazilio's interest to play the traitor to the Captain. The Captain therefore put full faith in Bazilio's devotion to his desires.

To fully gain the Captain's confidence, so far as the outlaw was concerned, Bazilio had told him why Urbandt had been outlawed in New York, and Balbata had then eagerly engaged Urbandt's services, supposing the man would be forced to serve him in anything, from fear that Balbata might deliver him to the police were he to refuse to be the Captain's unquestioning slave. Balbata had already resolved to make use of Urbandt to abduct Verneena, should he and Dame Grippard come to terms this morning.

But the outlaw and his son had determined that Verneena should be Bazilio's prize, and also that she should be abducted as the intended prize of the Captain. Their plan of capture demanded the assistance of the Captain, without arousing his suspicion that he was used simply as their tool in the matter.

The whole party were now in the room toward which Jansen's intentions had led them. Jansen and another man were already busily at work in an effort to force upward the scuttle we have mentioned. The task was found to be far more difficult than Jansen had expected. It demanded hard work and several minutes to execute it.

Meanwhile those who had entered this room had separated into little groups to await the forcing of the scuttle, and to cautiously exchange opinions of the affair.

Well apart from the others, the Captain and the dame discussed their scheme concerning Verneena. Edward and Verneena, also remote from others, conversed in whispers of their matters. After taking in the scene with one of his sweeping and covert glances, Bazilio whispered to his father:

"Are you as confident concerning the origin of her reputed grand-daughter as you are about the old woman's?"

"Is the girl here, my son?"

"Of course! Have you not looked at her also?"

"No, my son. I have been so keenly engaged in studying the dame's face and ways that I have not even glanced twice at any one else. Is that the girl whose hand is clinging to that young officer's arm?"

"Yes. What do you think of her?"

"Wait till her face is turned fully toward me, my son. So. Ah! What a wonderful resemblance! She is undoubtedly the child of whom we were speaking this morning, and whom your mother stole when she stole the six thousand pounds and the jewels. I did not have a fair view of her face the other day when I was spying about our dame's cottage at Yorkville. My faith, she is indeed the living and exact image of her mother. What a wonderful resemblance!"

In fact Urbandt's eyes had no sooner gotten a full view of Verneena's lovely features than he started as suddenly and almost as markedly as Balbata had in the room under the cupola when he first beheld the same angelic countenance.

Just as Urbandt whispered to his son the last word we have quoted as his, Verneena chanced to turn her eyes in that direction and to meet Bazilio's ardent stare. A deep and sudden flush of indignant modesty swept over her face, and she turned her eyes quickly from Bazilio to another quarter of the room, saying to herself:

"How dares he stare at me in this manner! He is the same insolent-eyed wretch who has more than once tried to attract my notice when he was at the cottage to see Dame Grippard. I detest him! Maggie told me that he twice offered her money to consent to take a letter from him to me; and that she would not do so. If I were not sure Edward would instantly knock him down, I would tell him of this fellow's impertinence now."

Verneena had already found an opportunity to reveal to Edward all she knew and suspected of the dame's purpose to place her in Balbata's power, and the young officer would certainly have made hot work for the Spaniard ere this time had he and Verneena not agreed to carry out a plan whose success demanded pretended ignorance of the design of Dame Grippard and Captain Balbata.

"She blushes! She reads my passion in my eyes!" mentally exclaimed Bazilio, as he noted Verneena's crimsoned cheeks. "After all, she may not be so deeply in love with this naval jackanapes as not to leave me a chance to win her heart even before she is at my mercy! However, it will be most prudent to conceal my love until I have a better opportunity to urge it upon her acceptance. So—the scuttle is forced."

At this moment Jansen and his helper freed the obstinate scuttle from all its fastenings and cast it upward, leaving access to the roof clear and open. Jansen was about to spring through the opening to hurry to enter the cupola, when Edward called out:

"Wait where you are, Jansen. Take care what you do, my good man. Wait where you are a moment."

"I am at your service, Mr. Hawksworthy," replied Jansen, who had formed a very high estimate of Edward's character already.

"Should you be the first and only one to find in the cupola what I fear you will, my good man," continued Edward, at the foot of the ladder, "and be alone there a few minutes, some person now here may venture to declare that you moved the body to prevent others from seeing it exactly as you found it."

"True, sir," replied the Swede, gratefully. "I forgot Dame Grippard's malicious hints and assertions. She is mean enough to try to do me any injury. Will you please come up, sir, and go with me to the cupola."

But by this time two men who had just entered the room advanced so far as to bring them in range with Jansen's sight, and, recognizing them instantly, he called out before Edward could reply:

"Ah, here are Coroner Addfast and Dr. Bomar. Very glad to see you, gentlemen, and especially at this time."

"What! A Coroner and a doctor here so soon!" cried Dame Grippard, quite amazed. "I am glad you are come, Mr. Addfast, and you also, Dr. Bomar; but I can't see how you have heard so soon that there might be need of your presence at Old Anchors."

"Are you really sure, Dame Grippard," responded the Coroner, blandly, "that there will be need of my services here this morning? I hope it is a false alarm. Both Dr. Bomar and myself had an appointment with Mr. Bratton—made with him one day before yesterday—to meet him here to-day about this hour. He is our creditor in a [illegible] joint affair of ours, and we are to pay him to-day. But I have just heard below that there is a rumor of Mr. Bratton's death by violence, or something of the kind, and the doctor and I hurried up to learn the truth as speedily as possible, [illegible] as I am to hold an inquest in an hour in another quarter of the city, and cannot remain here long, unless there is real need for my presence ——"

"Come right up, Mr. Addfast, and the doctor, too," called out Jansen, eager to have his doubts solved. "I am sure that Mr. Bratton is badly hurt, if not dead, in the cupola."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

In France last year many more women than men applied for divorce and judicial separation.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

Long Lost Tapestry.

"When Marguerite of France was married to Victor Amadeus of Savoy, she took with her to Italy twenty pieces of the very finest Gobelin tapestry, illustrating classical legends," says London Truth. "This unique tapestry, which was of immense value, disappeared mysteriously when Napoleon invaded Italy, for it had been hidden away in case the French might think proper to carry it off, which they would certainly have done. It had been so carefully concealed that, after some years, when calm was restored, it was found impossible to discover it and the two officials who had put it away were both dead. The tapestry had been almost forgotten till about a month ago, when the Marquis Villamarina, the Master of the Royal Household, was making a thorough investigation of the palace at Turin from roof to cellar, and behind some huge chests in a storeroom in the highest story he found a secret chamber, in which was concealed the long-lost tapestry, and it has been very little injured by its hundred years of hiding. King Humbert has ordered that the tapestry is to be carefully repaired and cleaned, after which it is to be sent to Rome and hung in the Quirinal, in the apartments which the Emperor William is to occupy during his visit next month."

The Corsetiere of Gotham.

There's a dressmaker here in New York, says a correspondent of the Chicago News, who has borrowed an idea from the famous Parisian corsetiere, upon which Worth fits his dresses, for he won't touch you until you have gone and provided yourself with one of Mme. Quelquechose's corsets, which cost like fun and fit like gloves. Now this corsetiere was a very splendid and elegant personage indeed. Worth always made her gowns, too, and took especial pains with them. Her house was on a fashionable avenue, and was luxuriously furnished. It had the air of a private dwelling. Every afternoon she had tea and chocolate set out on tables with the daintiest of silver, napery and china, and she received her customers like guests. They dropped in for a cup of tea after their drive, they met every one they knew, and madame, in the most adorable tea gowns, flitted about circulating the very latest and most piquant bit of news. Her parlors were always full, she always had something fresh and amusing to tell, and she preserved with infinite tact an attitude that, while easy and not subservient, never offended the haughtiest Duchess. She made a great fortune and owns the ancestral chateau of a ruined marquis, but her daughter-in-law still carries on the business. Now, a certain clever costumer of this city heard of this, and has to a certain extent imitated the Parisian example. Last spring she began to fit up her front drawing room with artistic upholstery and hired a pretty, graceful girl to look after a little tea table and serve her customers with a steaming cup when they came in out of the cold air. This girl was also learned in all the latest freaks of fashion and stood ready to give information where all sorts of things were to be found, the shops that were likely to have goods like samples hard to match, where the prettiest and cheapest bargains in town were to be had, and could give excellent suggestions as to a vexed question of becoming colors and styles. Out of this drawing room opened two other apartments where gorgeously arrayed dummies posed in attitudes to best display the imported gowns they wore. She found the greatest increase in her custom as a result of this innovation, and it is to be continued.

Queen Emma of Holland.

Quite a singular style of woman is Queen Emma, says a Hague letter to the Philadelphia Bulletin, to whom the Dutch are reconciled only because she is a good nurse for their King; popular she could never be, because the Dutch detest even the most talented Germans, and Emma is a princess of Waldeck-Pyrmont. However, the King adores her and is only contented in her society and she seems to think there is no difference between thirty years and three-score and ten. When William went to Potsdam to attend the marriage of his brother he little dreamed of marrying, but he met Helen of Waldeck-Pyrmont, now Duchess of Albany, and felt that at sixty-one life might recommence were she to become the Queen of Holland. Helen looked upon her aged admirer with scorn and refused his flowers and jewels. One day William overheard Emma say to her sister: "I should never refuse to become a Queen." "Ah," he exclaimed, "as you find your sister is wrong will you marry me?" Immediately she accepted, and in 1879 became Queen of Holland. Those who were at the Dutch court when Emma made her entree say she was simple as a child; that she looked upon her palace as a marvel, danced and laughed as though she were not conscious that the courtiers were criticising her every gesture. The aged husband was shocked, but very kindly led her to the portrait of his mother, the proud Marie Paulowna, and said: "She never deemed a Queen should never laugh in public." Emma, like a "country gretchen," accepted the rebuke with good grace, and "since then," say the Dutch, "we have nothing serious to criticise in her deportment, but the manner in which she murders our language we can hardly forgive." Already has Emma begun to teach the Princess Wilhelmina the duties of a sovereign. When, in 1886, the King was ill and the socialists very daring, Queen Emma, without a word to her husband, calmed the disturbance in three days. Of her daughter she wishes to make a king, not a queen. Not long ago her horses ran away. The coachman was thrown out, and she, with Wilhemina, just escaped. Orders were given to bring out fresh horses, for "if we do not start again my daughter will learn the meaning of the word fear."

Queen Emma is a brunette rather pretty, according to the German's beautiful, but a peculiar habit of winking detracts much from her appearance. Over the king she has control, and if he objects to any decision made by her she threatens to leave the palace to him—a dream of unhappiness. Every day the royal family dines at 7 o'clock; afterward there is music and reading by the queen, whose audience consists usually of her husband, daughter, and the Jonkheer Alewyn, the only person whom William cares to see.

Fashion Notes.

Cloth jackets are as popular as ever.

Oriental combinations of color are in vogue.

Russia leather in all colors is worn for house shoes.

Lace skirts are generally accompanied by silk blouse waists.

Ostrich tips and plumes are extensively used on fashionable hats.

Braiding is without question the favorite trimming of the season.

Ribbons for hat trimmings vary from two inches to a quarter of a yard in width.

Some of the elegant winter wraps just imported are long cloaks in cloth, plush or velvet.

The most elegant winter wraps are cloaks of the new cloths, matelasse, plush, or velvet.

Heavy lines of broad stitching on the backs of gloves will not be worn this season, the narrow lines of former seasons superseding them in podular favor.

A Stopper of Runaway Horses.

A Boston correspondent of the Woonsocket (R. I.) Patriot, tells how a young policeman, Charles Maynes, stops a runaway horse: "When you see a runaway coming, do not try to check him by a rush from the opposite direction or the side, for you will be immediately knocked flat by the collision, but instead prepare yourself for a short run with the horse. Measure with your eye the distance, and start for the run while he is yet some way off, perhaps ten feet in the case of fair to medium runaways. You may depend upon his keeping a straight line, for a really frightened horse is half blind and would not veer for a steam engine. He will go straight ahead until he smashes into something. So do you get close to the line on which he is rushing, and as he passes you, grab the reins near the saddle. Gather the reins firmly, and then, leaning backward as you run, give them a powerful yank. You may be able to brace yourself as you give this yank, half sliding on your feet. The strong jerk on the bit tells the horse that he again has a master and prepares him for the final struggle. A step or two forward after the first yank, do it again. This is the finishing stroke. It never fails when given by a determined man. The horse is on its haunches. Keep a firm pull on the reins till you grasp the horse by the nostrils, and hold him so till he is pacified."

In stopping a span of horses, Maynes tries to get on the side of the wilder one, as, if pulled to its senses, the other one can be managed. The task is easier if the horse has a curb bit. A runaway may also be stopped by the driver in the same manner: "If you pull steadily with all your strength on a curb bit," says Maynes, "the effect on the horse's jaw is just what it is if you tie a cord tightly about your finger. The blood doesn't flow and the finger becomes numb. After a firm pull has been maintained on the horse's mouth for awhile it ceases to have any effect. You cannot then force him out of a run if he is frightened. But give him his head a little till the mouth recovers from its numbness, lash him with the whip if you have a free road, and then give a sudden yank. He will come down. If the first yank isn't enough give him one more. There isn't a horse on earth which can run away with a competent driver if the harness holds." Maynes has risked his life a number of times, and has had some perilous encounters before subduing frightened animals. He has received a medal from the Humane Society and $50 from the cab company.

Climbing Mount St. Elias.

Mount St. Elias promises to be the future mountain climbing center of this country. A traveler who has returned from there, after failing to ascend to the summit, reports that his party, after surmounting great difficulties, reached a height of 11,500 feet, and were then compelled to abandon the enterprise. The ascent was covered with ice mounds, strewn with boulders. The party were at one time knee deep in snow, and at another were wading through icy waters fed by glaciers. He believes the mountain cannot be ascended without the assistance of trained Swiss mountaineers. The packers with the party could not climb.—Chicago Herald.

One Sermon a Week a Hard Task.

The English Bishop of Ely has forbidden the deacons in his diocese preaching more than one sermon of "their own composition" each Sunday. If they require to preach twice they are directed to "write out some sermon by a standard divine" and read it to the people. One good sermon a week is as much as many a veteran in the pulpit can well supply, and the young non-clerical recruits may well be permitted to concentrate all the opportunities for study a week will give them on one discourse.—New York Observer.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

The boughs that bear most hang lowest.

One hour to-day is worth two to-morrow.

Proud looks make foul work in fair faces.

Zeal without knowledge is fire without light.

Not to hear conscience is the way to silence it.

Small faults indulged are little thieves that let in greater.

Commit a sin twice, and it will not seem to thee a crime.

Do not to others what you would not have others do to you.

The camel desired horns and his ears were taken from him.

A simple light answers as well for a hundred men as for one.

Many a colt's skin is fastened to the saddle its mother bears.

Cleverness is a sort of genius for instrumentality. It is the brain of the hand.

A man lives by believing something, not by debating and arguing about many things.

It is with antiquity as with ancestry; nations are proud of the one, and individuals of the other.

Truth is the most powerful thing in the world, since fiction can only please by its resemblance to it.

Great men begin enterprises because they think them great, and fools because they think them easy.

The voice of conscience is so delicate that it is easy to stifle it; but it is also so clear that it is impossible to mistake it.

General observations drawn from particulars are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room.

Empty Bottle Collectors.

Those who have seen the empty bottle collectors in their daily rambles about the city would little think, observes the New York Telegram, that intellect is required for such business. The truth is, a large amount of knowledge may be profitably utilized even in this humble calling.

A Telegram reporter visited an old bottle establishment, and while wandering through the building learned a few secrets of the trade. Hot water and soda tanks and rows of bins on both sides of the room, built like mammoth pigeon holes and extending to the ceiling, were the principal fixtures in the apartment. The bins were full of different kinds of bottles.

"In this age of patent medicine and wildcat whisky," said one of the bottle washers, "it keeps a man busy to keep track of all the differet kinds of bottles."

The number of different brands run far into the thousands, and as they are not of value it is easy to see that a dealer in old bottles has to keep his eyes peeled. Many of the patent medicine concerns are so dignified that they will not use the same bottles twice, and if the name of the firm is blown in the glass, such bottles are of no value except for old glass. Hundreds of the various compound and extract companies, however, are glad to pay fair prices for their old bottles, and on this fact the success of the gatherer depends. New brands of medicine, etc., are being constantly put upon the market, and as soon as the live merchant finds them floating about in the garbage boxes he sets to work to find out if they can be profitably returned. Plain bottles such as are used for pop, table sauces and spirituous liquors have standard prices, and can be sold at many places.

The old bottle business is much like that of collecting old coin, and no doubt we shall soon see the many brands of bottles catalogued with as much precision as is noted in the books of coin.

Praying on Brooklyn Bridge.

"Do you see that old woman there?" said a bridge policeman who is stationed at the New York end of the big aerial thoroughfare to Brooklyn to a Sun man. "Just watch her and see what she does."

She was a tidily-dressed old woman, with a pale, sad face, and she was making her way slowly through the tangle of trucks, carriages and pedestrians in Park row, opposite the bridge entrance. She reached the curb at last and slowly mounted the steps to the bridge entrance. Instead of following the crowd to the cars or footway, she went over to the north wall of the entrance, where she stood a moment as though meditating. Then she suddenly knelt down, and, with her eyes closed and her head bowed, began moving her lips as if in prayer. She was on her knees but a moment, when she got nimbly to her feet and moved toward the promenade entrance, where she paid her cent and started on foot toward Brooklyn.

"Every day at about this hour that same woman comes here and goes through precisely that same programme. I asked her one day when she started away what was the matter, and she said, 'I was only praying,' and that is all I ever got out of her. Whether she is afraid the bridge will fall when she gets on it, and so prays before setting out on the dangerous journey, or whether she is in the habit of praying at about that time of day and finds the bridge entrance a nice retired spot for religious exercise, I never could find out. All I know is that she comes every day and prays every day, and seems a perfectly rational, respectable old body. The fact is that we here on the bridge do see some queer specimens of humanity among the tens of thousands who go by us every day."

The Bohemian element is rapidly multiplying in New York city.

CURIOUS FACTS.

Bolivia declared its independence in 1824.

There is a Russian (Greek) church in New York.

Aristotle founded the science of botany about 347 B. C.

The world's consumption of wheat is about 2,165,000,000 bushels.

It is proposed to make a canal connection between Paris and the sea.

Bottles are made of paper, and are lighter and more durable than glass.

During the hard times in the Confederacy a needle cost twenty-five cents.

The cocoa tree is an evergreen, and resembles a young cherry tree in appearance.

Monrovia, Cal., boasts of plenty of Crawford peaches weighing a pound apiece.

The oldest college in the United States is Harvard, Cambridge, Mass., founded in 1638.

Henry Clay was in the Senate of the United States at twenty-nine, contrary to the Constitution.

Goliath was over six cubits tall, which would make him between nine and eleven feet high.

A century ago the population of Europe was about 150,000,000; now it is over 350,000,000.

The deaf often hear conversation when there is music going on, which they could not hear when there was no music.

Gustavus Adolphus ascended the Swedish throne at sixteen; before he was thirty four he was one of the great rulers of Europe.

The Bessemer process of making steel was invented in England in 1856. It was introduced in this country about 1868-1870.

William Pool, of Limestone Hill, W. Va., has a powder horn that General Washington gave to his grandfather over a hundred years ago.

A Syracuse (N. Y.) dentist furnished a horse with five false teeth, but had only begun to brag about it when the old sorrel swallowed them down with his oats.

A Frenchman spent ten years of his life to invent a noiseless clock, and when he had succeeded nobody would buy it. A clock is bought for its tick as much as for its time.

There are 493 mountain peaks in the United States more than 10,000 feet in height. The highest mountain east of the Mississippi is Mount Balsam Cone, in the Black Mountains of North Carolina, that is 6671 feet high.

The Justice of the Peace at Cossville, Mo., is Samuel Gilmore, who is forty years of age and only two feet nine inches tall. He weighs only forty-six pounds. Mr. Gilmore is a successful farmer and a prominent man in the county.

The Rev. Frank M. Bristol, of Chicago, has a "Cato Major," printed by Ben Franklin in 1744, that is said to be as fine a specimen of typography as one could find anywhere. It was printed when Franklin trundled his forms from his composition room to the building where his presses were set up.

The greatest span of a cantilever bridge is that of the Forth Bridge, which will be finished in October, 1889. It has two of seventeen hundred and ten feet each. Its extreme height will be three hundred and sixty-one feet above high water, the foundations going ninety-one feet below high water.

Cane importers and manufacturers have a new cane in stock, which from present indications, they say, promises in time to become as popular as the hazel stick, or the buckhorn handled ash cane. The new importation comes from Austria, and is called weichtel. It is similar to the home cherry and has a straight handle. The weight is peculiarly proportioned, being light at the top and becoming heavy near the end. They are worth $1 and $1.50.

Ancient Galley Compared With a Cunarder.

In an article on modern ocean steamers an English authority says in the Fortnightly Review: Compare a galley, a vessel propelled by oars, with the modern Atlantic liner; and first let us assume that prime movers are non existent and that this vessel is to be propelled galley fashion. Take her length as some 600 feet, and assume that place be found for as many as 400 oars on each side, each oar worked by three men, or 2400 men and allow that six men under these conditions could develop work equal to one horse power, we should have 400-horse power. Double the number of men, and we should have 800-horse power, with 4800 men at work, and at least the same number in reserve if the journey is to be carried on continuously. Contrast the puny result thus obtained with 19,500-horse power given forth by a large prime mover of the present day, such a power requiring, on the above mode of calculation, 117,000 men at work and 117,000 in reserve, and these to be carried in a vessel less than 600 feet in length. To what and to whom are these meritorious prime movers due? I answer: To the application of science, and to the labors of the civil engineer, using that term in its full and proper sense as embracing all engineering other than military. I am, as you know, a civil engineer, and I desire to laud my profession and to magnify mine office; and I know of no better means of doing this than by quoting to you the definition of "civil engineering," given in the charter of the Institution of Civil Engineers, namely, that it is "the art of directing the great sources of power in nature for the use and convenience of man."

The fan which the Bonapartist ladies of Paris sent Princess Letitia as a wedding gift actually cost $5000.

"AS A BELL IN A CHIME."

As a bell in a chime
Sets its twin-note a-ringing,
As one poet's rhyme
Wakes another to singing,
So, once she has smiled,
All your thoughts are beguiled,
And flowers and song from your childhood are bringing.

Though moving through sorrow
As the star through the night,
She needs not to borrow,
She lavishes, light.
The path of yon star
Seemeth dark but afar:
Like hers it is sure, and like hers it is bright.

Each grace is a jewel
Would ransom the town,
Her speech has no cruel,
Her praise is renown;
'T is in her as though Beauty,
Resigning to Duty
The scepter, had still kept the purple and crown.

—Robert Johnson, in the Century.

PITH AND POINT.

High sees—Astronomers.

A scaly trick—Catching a fish.

There is an idol in a Chinese temple that weeps tears, idol tears.

Crooked work will always bring a man into straights.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Some plays are so solemn that men have to go out of the theater to smile.

Nobody knows where flies go to. Perhaps they go up the "flew."—Detroit Free Press.

They buried the milkman in the old-fashioned way. He took no stock in cremation.

The dentist should make a good working politician. He is always ready to take the stump.—Boston Transcript.

It was complained at a child's party, where the grown-up people were in the majority, that it was too much adulterated.

While cost of living may be reduced down to a mere nominal sum, the trouble remains with many to get the nominal sum.—Siftings.

A fashion article in one of our exchanges says that terra-cotta is much worn this fall. We suppose it is either in the shape of tiles for gentlemen or piping for ladies' dresses.—Lowell Courier.

Two Strike is the name of an Indian chief at the Pine Ridge agency in Dakota. There is evidently baseball talent on the Sioux reservation. Mr. Anson should look into this matter.—Chicago News.

When the frost is on the pound cake and the spareribs in the pot
The chilly autumn's here and the furnace fire is hot,
And the man who has dyspepsia eats those things which he should not.
—Chicago News.

This comes from the West as frozen fact, but we more than suspect it is made to order: "Miss Clam has married Mr. Fritter and now signs herself Mrs. Clam-Fritter." As the tale comes from "Bad Man's Gulch," out in Arizona, the maritime favor is all the more remarkable.—Commercial Advertiser.

Judge Tree, of Illinois, it is said, is to be the Minister to Russia. It will, therefore, be in order to say that his bark will soon be on the sea to stem its way to the other side of the Atlantic. There will, of course, be proper leave taking, and as soon as he arrives at his destination he will make his bough to the Czar. There is little doubt but that he will soon take deep root in the esteem of the Russian court.—Boston Courier.

Why Chinamen Escape Yellow Fever.

The New York Sun's Chinese reporter asked Dr. Yong Tsye Hong, of Pell street, about his experience with yellow fever in China. "In Kwong Tung, Foo Kien and Kwong Si," he said, "there were a few cases of yellow fever several years ago. The fever was called by the natives 'wun bian.' It never became epidemic, owing to the people's habit of smoking opium."

"Does the smoking of opium prevent or cure yellow fever?"

"Certainly it does. Wherever opium is smoked it destroys yellow fever."

"But is not the opium smoking habit as dangerous as the fever?"

"No. It takes at least a year of constant smoking to acquire the habit, as all old opium smokers will testify. There might be yellow fever all over the United States, but the Chinese opium smokers would not be affected."

Dr. Li Shi Loon, of 19 Mott street, said: "Why, certainly, opium smoking cures yellow fever. I had two cousins in Memphis during that terrible yellow fever scourge in 1878, who simply smoked their pipes the moment they had caught the fever, and got well in less than twenty hours. So, there is no danger of getting the opium habit if the patient does not smoke longer than six months; but, then, it is a hard thing to learn how to use the pipe."

A Combination Piece of Furniture.

A bureau exhibited at the Brussels Exhibition is a source of great surprise when taken to pieces. In the space of five minutes the bureau can be transformed into a complete set of bedroom furniture, consisting of the following articles: First, a bed (including mattress and blankets); 2d, a table; 3d, a leather trunk; 4th, a washstand, with basin, ewer, etc., complete; 5th, a towel rail; 6th, a looking glass; 7th, an armchair, etc. There is nothing short, in fact. The inventor is a Mr. Zwicker Lotar, of Brussels. Of course, the bureau contains all the usual accessories in the shape of drawers for papers, letters, account books, etc. In the morning, after a comfortable night's rest, the bed is again transformed into a writing table and washstand, table, etc., and restored to their places in a few minutes.

Many mothers are disposed to regard the "growing pains" of their children too lightly; an article on "Rheumatism in Early Life," by Dr. Chapin, in the December number of BABYHOOD, will show them that children suffer from rheumatism more frequently than is popularly supposed. The symptoms, attending complications, and treatment of that insidious affection are clearly described in the article. The medical editor, Dr. L. M. Yale, contributes a popular illustrated article on "Household Surgery," which will prove of great value in the emergencies which arise even in the best regulated nursery. The wide range of nursery problems discussed is indicated by such titles as "Mitigating the Pains of Childbirth," "Removing extra Teeth," "Mild Forms of Rickets," "The Causes of Restlessness at Night," etc. That BABYHOOD during the four years of its existence has not exhausted its subject, is very evident from the variety of interesting topics treated of under "Mothers, Parliament," "Baby's Wardrobe," and in other departments. The practical character of the magazine is apparent also in its seasonable articles on "Eating a Christmas pie," which furnishes many novel suggestions, and "A Plea for Fewer Playthings and More Substantial Ones." These and the article on "Christmas Books for Children," will prove useful guides to many a perplexed parent. 15c a number; $1.50 per year. BABYHOOD Publishing Co., 5 Beckman street, New York.

THE BEST OF BACON.

The lighter pigs will make bacon—you need not be so particular about the size—as a pig which weighs dressed 150 pounds will make choice bacon. Cut the sides into strips and put them for six weeks into a brine made as follows: For 100 pounds of meat, use six pounds of salt, four ounces of saltpetre and six pounds of brown sugar with water enough to cover the meat closly packed in a clean cask; sprinkle a thin layer of salt on the bottom so that the meat will not come in direct contact with the wood. Put the skin side down and be sure the whole contents are covered with the brine. At the end of six weeks take up the meat and smoke it, using corn cobs or hard wood—smoke till it is a light brown or tan color. The pieces should be sewn up in muslin bags and covered with whitewash on the outside. When prepared in this way bacon can be cooked without any freshening and it will keep sweet for a year or more. It should be stored in a dry cool place. Bacon prepared and preserved in the above way will always come handy for a side dish, or for a special meat taking the place of pork. It is excellent to cook with greens, and in various other ways that a thrift and skilled housewife could devise.—Farm Journal.

Wonder what the five thousand miners who have been thrown out of employment in the Monongahela valley, think of the result of the late election? Whenever a slight increase of wages is reported anywhere, the Republican press immediately points to it as "a result of Harrison's election." Why wouldn't it do just as well to call attention to this wholesale shut down as a result of Cleveland's defeat? It's a poor rule that won't work both ways.

About 1,000 pounds of nitro-glycerine exploded on a wagon at Pleasantville, Pa., on Monday. The driver was literally annihilated. Parts of his two horses were found in neighboring trees. A piece of the wagon was found half a mile away. Mrs. Gottschow, in a house in the vicinity, was seriously injured by the side of it being blown in. The explosion was heard in Oil City, [illegible] miles distant.

The talk of making Republican States out of Territories in the Northwest has suggested to some Northern Democrats the idea of making Democratic States out of Texas in the Southwest. The joint resolution of March 1, 1845, consenting to the annexation of Texas stipulated that "new States of convenient size, not exceeding four in number, in addition to the said State of Texas, and having sufficient population, may hereafter, by the consent of said State, be formed out of the territory thereof." Not unnaturally, therefore, a Democratic editor in Boston asked, "Why should not the Democrats cut up Texas into three or four States?" He pointed out that Texas has territory enough, and population enough, and inquired, with the air of a man who had put an unanswerable question, "If the Republicans are going into the business of manufacturing States, why shouldn't the Democrats do the same?"—N. Y. Post.

One "trusted man" in Indiana, who was put in charge of a "block of five floaters," took them fourteen miles on a fishing trip in hopes of keeping them away from the polls. He has been bound over to await the action of the Federal court. He admits that he was trying to handle his "block of five," and the fishing trip was the best scheme he could think of.

American Wars.

Since Columbus first discovered this country, 396 years ago, sixteen wars have raged in what are now the United States, or been waged by this Government. They were the Dutch war of 1655, King Philip's war of 1675, King Williams war of 1689, Queen Anne's war of 1713, the French and Indian war, 1757; the Revolution, 1775; the Indian war, 1790: the Barbary war, 1803; the Tecumsee war, 1811; the war of 1812; the war on the Algerian pirates in 1815, the first Seminole war in 1817, the second Seminole war in 1835, the Black Hawk war of 1832, the Mexican war, 1846; and the Rebellion, 1861.

The duration and cost of the four great wars were: Revolutionary, seven years, $135,103,700; 1812, two and a half years, $107,159,000; Mexican, two years, $66,000,000; and the Rebellion, four years, over $3,000,000,000, or a total cost of nearly three and a half billion. In the revolutionary war the number of American troops engaged was 231,791, and in the rebellion the Northern soldiers numbered 2,688,523

There have also been so-called rebellions or attempts to overthrow the Government. The first was in 1782, when some officers of the Federal army tried to consolidate the thirteen States into one and confer supreme power on Washington The second was in 1787, called "Shay's Insurrection," in Massachusetts. The third was in 1794, popularly called "The Whisky Insurrection of Pennsylvania." The fourth instance was in 1814, by the Hartford Convention Federalists. The fifth, on which occasion the different sections of the Union came into collision, was in 1820, under the administration of President Monroe, and occurred on the question of the admission of Missouri into the Union. The sixth was a collision between the Legislature of Georgia and the Federal Government in regard to certain lands given by the latter to the Creek Indians. The seventh was in 1829 with the Cherokees in Georgia. The eighth was the memorable nullifying ordinance of South Carolina in 1832. The ninth was in 1842, and occurred in Rhode Island between the Suffrage Association and the State authorities. The tenth was in 1856, on the part of the Mormons, who resisted the Federal authority. The eleventh was the Southern rebellion.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. C. F. Moore, Editor. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Dec. [illegible] 1888. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year, in advance. No. 22.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court,	H. A. Holt.
Prosecuting Attorney,	R. S. Turk.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	B. C. Hill.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts,	J. J. Beard.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	S. B. Clark, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

SANTA CLAUS.—HOW OLD?

BY MRS. ANNA L. PRICE.

"How old is Santa Claus, mamma'?"
Said Anna unto me;
Has he white hair and long gray beard,
And spectacles to see?

And does he travel very fast,
So many children wait
For Christmas-morning's early hours,
And he might be too late.

He used to come to Grandma's house,
When snows were on the tree;
And bring you pretty Christmas things,
When you were small like me,

Then Santa Claus is very old,
I hope he will not die;
For what would little children do,
When Christmas-time is nigh!

How old is Santa Claus, mamma,
Tell me, I want to know;
And is he like our Andrew, strong,
And does he bigger grow?

Sometimes he's young, sometimes he's old,
Why, that is funny too:
But this is it, when he wears out,
They make him up "brand new."

Then little Anna truly wise,
Turns from her mothers knee;
Well, it don't matter, so he brings
A Christmas doll to me.

Inhumanity to Horses.

Slavery, as far as it consists in buying and selling men, women and children, has been abolished, and our legal and moral obligations toward humanity at large are becoming more clearly defined; but the slave-holding and slave-driving fever still boils in the blood of our people. For proof look at the dumb beasts in our streets who are not yet admitted to have rights which men and women are bound to respect—who are over-worked, over-loaded, whipped, jerked, cursed, curbed, clipped, blinded, checked, until their lives are one long burden of misery. There have always been men who were patient, gentle and firm with animals, and who knew how to bring out their best qualities, but alas! there have also always been men (and such men still exist) who are guided by that instinct of dull-minded savagery which only the slow work of progress can eradicate—the idea of government by brute force. The horse will be abused as long as he is in the power of human beings who have not learned that the ill-treatment of any dumb or helpless creature places them far lower in the scale of conscious existence than the object of their brutality. He will be abused as long as men are too stolid to heed his suffering or too thoughtless to perceive it. He will be abused as long as men believe that they know more about him than the Power which created him. The mouth of a colt is as sensitive as a child's. That will never do, so in the process of breaking—a term which ought to be as inappropriate when applied to a child—it is frequently torn and bruised with rough bits until when it heals a strong man can pull on it with all his might. If it had been left normally sensitive, the animal could have been guided by a turn of the finger. His eyes can be covered by pieces of leather, and a lock of his mane can be pulled forward under the forehead strap so that it can fall into the eyes and irritate them.

The tail, his defence against the annoyance of insects, can be strung or docked—although, as we are happy to mention, these offences are now punishable in several of our States by fine or imprisonment. The head affords another opportunity to readjust creation. It is of it the opinion of many that its natural position is one of those mistakes of a stupid unknown First Cause, which man, with his superior judgment, ought to rectify; so it is strapped high in the air, and the restless movements and foaming mouth occasioned thereby are supposed to indicate the suffering creature's unconquerable mettle.

Even if it is not raised to the point of torture, but merely to that of discomfort, what object can be more disconsolate to the eye of a human and humane being who admires the natural form of a horse than to see his nose poked out stiffly and his whole pose suggesting jaded patience and disgust? No wonder, poor fellow!—he knows in his dumb way how little his driver knows, but he would probably be pounded or jerked if he showed any resentment, so he does what few men would do if they were compelled to work with their heads tied back—suffers in silence. I imagine there would be a worse strike than any we have had yet if the proprietor of some large establishment should insist upon having all his employes wear straps over back from the tops of their heads to belts at the waist, in order to give them style, keep their heads up, make them breathe better and go faster; for their is just as much sense in applying any of these ideas to a man or a woman as to a horse. What a pity that our slaves were freed before the invention of that supreme instrument of horse-torture, the over-check! Think of the cases in which it might have been used for discipline when it was not needed for style! But there is no chance now to torment any creature with it unless he is dumb and helpless, and the chance for that is lessening every day as public opinion becomes gradually alive to the injustice of such treatment.—Hartford (Conn.) Times.

Educated to a Trade.

Trade schools, as institutions where the industrial arts are specially taught are called, are rapidly gaining a foothold in this country. The apprentice system never can be revived in this country to such an extent as will enable the hundreds of young men who desire to learn a trade to do so. The master workmen in the various trades have neither the time nor disposition to teach young men the secrets of their business. Even if they had, the rules of the various unions limit the number of apprentices, and an apprenticeship is about as hard to obtain as a scholarship in the army or naval schools of the government. The establishment of trade schools is, therefore, a practical educational movement that meets with encouragement from the associations of master workmen in the various trades. These schools, if they do not turn out thoroughly skilled workmen, do furnish young men with a ground work which, with practical experience, will very quickly convert them into skilled artisans.

This fact is shown by the experience of the hundreds of young men, between 17 and 21 years of age, who have laid the foundation of their knowledge of their trades in New York trade schools during the past six years. The instructors there are skilled workmen, and the personal attention by them to each individual student results in the very rapid acquirement by the scholar of the necessary rudiments of his trade. In a busy workshop such personal and constant attention and the immediate correction of false methods or errors of judgment are not possible. It is no wonder, then, that young men seeking to learn a trade make such very rapid and seemingly phenomenal progress as they do [illegible] the New York trade schools. [illegible] faults are corrected immediately [illegible] being made, and they are taught [illegible] to correct and avoid them.—New York Times.

When Men Cross Their Legs.

Men generally cross their legs when there is least pressure on their minds. You will never find a man actively engaged in business with his legs crossed. The limbs at those times are straighter than at any other, because the mind and body work together. A man engaged in auditing accounts will never cross his legs, neither will a man who is writing an article, or who is employed in any manner where his brain is actively engaged. When at work in a sitting posture his limbs naturally extend to the floor in a perfectly straight line. A man may cross his legs if he is sitting in an office chair discussing some proposition with another man but the instant he becomes really in earnest and perceiving something to be gained his limbs uncross quick as a flash, he bends forward toward his neighbor and begins to use his hands. That is a phase that I believe you will always observe.

Men often cross their legs at public meetings, because they go there to listen or to be entertained; they are not the factors in the performance, and they naturally place themselves in the most comfortable position known to them—leaning well back in their chairs and crossing their legs. A man always crosses his legs when he reads a newspaper, but is more apt to lie down when he reads a book. He reads the paper, of course, to inform himself, but at the same time the perusal of its contents is recreation to him, and his body again seeks its position of relaxxtion. When a man is reading a newspaper and waiting for his breakfast his legs are always crossed, but as soon as the breakfast is brought to him he puts the paper aside, straightens out his legs and goes to work—that is, begins to eat, his mind now turning on the duties of the day before him.—N. Y. Press.

Looking For Things.

We have all looked for things, sometimes, alas, vainly. We have looked for health and happiness, for Susie's bonnet and the meat knife, for our last led-pencil, and our other slipper.

It is not an agreeable occupation, particularly if the thing is wanted in a hurry. And the more precise and careful the person the more disgusted she is apt to be when she realizes that she has mislaid the article that she new just where to put her hands on.

It is entertaining only to the spectator to see you look wildly over the house for the feather duster. To look until you are exhausted and drop panting into a chair upon the handle of the duster that has been lying composedly here while you were searching the rest of the house.

One of the most unpleasant ways of looking for things is to be obliged to sit down or lie in bed and direct somebody else in the looking. With what exasperation you hear the poor man say: "Well, it isn't in that drawer" stirring the contents about as with a stick. "Now, where else shall I look, my dear?"

And you know you could find it immediately, if you could only get up.

The best way to find things is to put them always in their places. It often seems burdensome to walk the extra steps to put an article in the place appropriated to it, but we are well repaid when we go there and find it without any flurry the first time it is wanted. It is really the easiest way, and in the end will [illegible] our peace of mind and much [illegible]. But accidents may happen [illegible] the most careful and methodical people; and there is besides, the "total depravity of inanimate things" [illegible] be taken into account. Through [illegible] mischance things may be dropped and mislaid even after the utmost care has been taken to put them just where they properly belong. When you meet with the mishaps which it is the fate of all housekeepers sometimes to meet, do not lose your temper and your time by getting excited, and insisting that you must have that particular thing and can use nothing else. Often a substitute for the lost article can be arranged, not so good, perhaps but we sometimes have to do with second-best things. When the hurry of the moment is over, and your mind is at rest, it will be easier to quietly find the lost keys, or duster, or perhaps wait till they turn up, as they surely will, in the course of your round of duties through the house. It is not always pleasant to do with something else, but when we see the worry and fuss sometimes made by the loser, and the discomfort and annoyance caused to the rest of the family by a tiresome insistence upon finding some special lost article and being satisfied with no other, we are tempted to think that there is such a thing in this world as being too particular.—N. Y. Evening Post.

If Gov. Foraker is unable to cope with the "White Caps" of Ohio, he had better let out the job to Sheriff Smith, of Birmingham.

Pocahontas Times.

S. P. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 4 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Dec. 20, 1888.

The Direct Tax Bill.

The measure known as the Direct Tax bill has passed the House by a vote of 178 to 96. It had already passed the Senate, but must go back to that body for concurrence in the amendments now adopted. The question of interest is whether Mr. Cleveland will veto the bill; and in that event, whether it can pass over his veto.

Not only the amount of money, but in the principles involved, this bill is one of the most important that has come before the Fiftieth Congress. It proposes to refund to the States what they paid to the Federal Government on account of the direct tax laid by Congress in August, 1861, and also to forgive the debt still due to the Federal Government by those States which never paid their full share of that tax. About $16,000,000 would go back to the States and Territories in various sums, ranging from New York's $2,213,000 and Pennsylvania's $1,654,000 down to Nevada's $4,592 and Dakota's $3,241. Of the Balances due and still carried on the Treasury books, which the bill wipes out of existence, the largest are Alabama's $511,028, Georgia's $477,494, and Tennesee's $281,763.

This bill passed the Senate last January, after full discussion, by a vote of 48 to 10. There was little opposition to the measure. Only five Democratic Senators voted against it. The Southern Democrats in the Senate, as a rule acknowledged the equity of the proposal to refund the direct tax. Of the ten Senators voting against the bill, five were Northern Republicans, including Mr. Blair of New Hampshire.

Three months later, when the measure came up in the House with the approval of the Judiciary Committee of that body, there was suddenly developed a fierce and pertinacious opposition, led by Gen. Oates of Alabama, and this resulted in the memorable deadlock of last April, when every expedient of obstructive tactics was resorted to in order to prevent the consideration of the Direct Tax bill. The deadlock lasted for days, and was only broken by a compromise which postponed consideration of the bill until after the election.

The vote in the House on Wednesday showed a curious fracture of the party lines. Members were influenced apparently by no other consideration than their individual judgment. Although no Republican voted against the bill, forty Democrats voted for it. Mr. Randall voted with Mr. Mills, Mr. Carlisle, the two Breckenridges, and Gen. Oates against the measure; Mr. Holman and Mr. Bowden stood with Mr. Scott, Mr. Butterworth, and Mr. McKinley in favor of taking the money from the United States Treasury. The New York city delegation was equally divided—Cummings, Bryce, Cox, and Spinola against the bill, and Campbell, Merriman, Cockran, and Fitch for it. It is a long time since there has been any vote in the House so difficult to explain on any general policy of local interest or party.

The whole history of the Direct Tax bill up to date forms one of the most singular chapters in recent legislation. The measure has been advocated and opposed on broad principles of equity and justice, and on honest difference of opinion as to the constitutional powers of Congress. More than two-thirds of the Senators voting, and almost two-thirds of the Representatives voting have declared for it. It is neither a job nor a steal, nor a spasmodic indulgence of extravagant propensities; nor has it been pushed in the interest of any gang of claim agents. But it involves taking from the Treasury, and consequently from the cherished surplus, many millions of dollars, and the question is, Will the President Sign it.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. Oates (Ala.) has introduced a bill providing that no alien shall be admitted into the United States who is an idiot, insane, a pauper, or liable to come a public charge, or who has been legally convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, or who is a polygamist, anarchist or socialist, or who is afflicted with any loathsome or contagious disease, or who has entered into contract to perform labor or service for any person, firm or corporation. A penality by fine not to exceed one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not to exceed three years, is imposed.

Section 3 provides that no vessel shall bring more than five immigrants for each one hundred tons of the capacity of the vessel. A fine of five hundred for each passengers in exces of the limit, is provided.

A tax of twenty-five dollars per head is levied upon every alien who comes into the United States, the tax to be collected by the Collector of Customs at the port of entry from the owner or master of the vessel upon which the alien is brought.

Exemptions are made of diplomatic representatives, consuls or agents accredited to foreign governments, of persons who come for travel, instruction or temporary residence. Upon the latter class making affidavit to that effect, they are given an acknowledgement of the collection of twenty-five dollars, which is good for three years, payable at any port upon re-embarkation. It further provides that United States consuls abroad shall, after inquiry, issue certificates of emigration to persons desiring to emigrate to the United States, and without a certificate from a United States consul, no person shall be landed. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to see that the provisions of the bill are carried into effect.

The Democratic House caucus on Tuesday night discussed the admission of Territories, but took no action. Mr. S. S. Cox favored the admission of all the Territories except Utah and New Mexico. Mr. Oates of Alabama dissented from the views advanced by Mr. Cox. He regarded the question of the admission of the Territories as largely politicial, and believed that the interests of the Democratic party should be considered. Mr. Spinola said that the question was purely political. He would oppose the admission of Territories in every way he could, and in 1892, with a stanch, sterling Democrat at the head of the Democratic ticket, that party would march on to victory. He did not believe in sentimental measures.

[Secret]ary of State of Tennessee [refuses] to affix the State seal to [the cert]ificate of election of Rep[resen]tative Evans (Rep.) of that [S]tate, although Gov. Taylor has signed it. A Secretary of State is sometimes the largest man in the government.

The President's Honesty.

However one may differ from President Cleveland on public questions, says Charles P. Bryan, in the Chicago America, one must recognize in him an official sensible of the dignity of his place. I learn from a recent guest of the Clevelands that the President has always been most scrupulous in forbiding any appropriation to personal uses of public property. When the gardener of the White House grounds made up a box of bautiful plants to be dispatched to Oak View the President ordered them to be sent back, with the direction that what plants were needed should be purchased. He even requested that a guest of Mrs. Cleveland's should return to the donor an expensive present made her by a minor official. Such evidence of honesty should be gratifying to good Americans of all parties. National loyalty ought to inspire us all with the hope that the time may never come when the President of the United States shall forfeit the respect of fair minded countrymen, either for himself or for his exalted office. Allow the British plenipotentiary and the London press a monopoly of arrogant and envious criticism.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Luster Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,		Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Sunset,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—We congratulate George Bambrick, of Dunmore, on the recent addition to his family. They say its a fine boy.

—Mr. Lee Notingham, while working at the lumber camp last week, was badly hurt by a falling tree. At this time he is much improved.

—The County Court meets on the 1st day of January. It will be a term of unusual interest, as the newly elected County officers qualify at that time.

—E. I. Holt, of Hillsboro was in town Saturday. His recent sickness has somewhat reduced his surplus flesh.

J. B. Canfield and family left for their new home at Gordonsville, Va., last Tusday morning. Pocahontas loses a good citizen in the departure of Mr. Canfield. We wish him success.

—The impression seems to be gaining ground that Nelson Moore still lives. Several things have occurred that indicate it. We hope it may finally so appear.

—Trout Shoe, who was some time ago committed to jail charged with horse stealing, was last Saturday taken to Hillsboro and given a preliminary examination before justice Kennison. In default of bail he was recommitted to await the action of the grand jury.

—Sparker writes us that a recent telegram from Santa Claus announces that he will be at Dunmore on the night of Dec. 24th if the roads are not too bad, and old Mrs. Claus's heath will permit him to leave home.

—We sincerely hope that in re-letting the carrying of our mails the contracts will be awarded to parties who will stock the routes in a manner that will insure a prompt and reliable service. This thing of taking a contract at half price and then half doing the work does not suit the public at all.

—Dr. R. M. Harper, of Falling Springs, Greenbrier Co., well known to many of our readrs, died at his home on Saturday night, Dec. 9th. He had been riding all day, visting his patients; late in the evening came home complaining of a severe pain in his head. He soon retired and applied to his head a cloth saturated with chloriform. Next morning he was found dead in his bed. It is supposed that his death was caused by inhaling the chloriform too freely. His wife was not at home at the time. The Doctor was was peculiarly successful in the practice of medicine, and generally liked by those who knew him.

Last week at Birmingham, Ala., a crowd advanced on the County jail with the intention of lynching R. R. Hawes, who was there imprisoned on the charge of murdering his wife and child. The jail was guarded by Sheriff Smith and his posse. Several times the crowd was warned against further advance, but failing to heed, the sheriff gave command to fire, which was done and resulted in the death of fifteen persons, among whom were some of the most prominent citizens of Birmingham. Several were killed who at the time were vainly endeavored to persuade the mob to desist.

At the second test of the Bessemer cast-steel gun at the proving grounds at the Naval Academy at Annapolis last week the gun burst into numberless pieces, breaking the heavy timbered platform it was on into fragments. The first charge was thirty-six pounds, the second forty-eight, the regulation charge. The gun made by the Pittsburg Steel Casting Company was sixteen feet one inch in length and weighed 18,000 pounds. The attempt to cast steel guns will be given up for the present.

Last week the Secretary of the Navy ordered three men-of-war to Hayti to release the American vessel there seized and held. Instructions were given to demand a release, which demand if disregarded should be enforced. It is rumored that Hayti is making preparations to warmly welcome the American fleet, and a lively contest may result.

"Chief," the largest elephant in America, belonging to Robison's Circus, has been condemned to die for the murder of his keepers. This elephant is about twenty five years old and weighs ten thousand pounds. He is worth $10,000, or would be worth it if not so dangerous a brute. Three of his keepers have been killed by him and still his murderous inclination is unchecked. The Robison boys, fearing he may some day break loose and cause them a greater loss than will be sustained by his death, have determined to kill him, and the sentence will shortly be executed. It is proposed to put him to death by means of an electric current.

After the 1st of January, 1889, hanging as a mode of paying the death penalty will be abolished and death by means of electricity substituted in the state of New York. This we believe to be a step in the right direction. The purpose of the law in executing the sentence of death is not to torture the individual, but to deprive him of his life: Yet how often it happens that our hangings are so badly conducted that they amount to nothing less than torture in its worst form. If, however, the statements of our best scientists are true the work can be accomplished instantaneously, thus avoiding the slow and barbarous process of the gallows.

The "City of New York," the latest transatlantic steamer launched on the Clyde, is under contract, with heavy penalities upon the part of the builders, to make the distance between Liverpool and New York in five days and fifteen hours. The penality will not be enforced for two or three months, until the men handling her have learned best how to develop her steampower. The "Etruria" did not reach her best record until she had been running over four years. The new steamer has over nineteen thousand horsepower. There is only one vessel, and that belongs to the Spanish navy, which has greater driving power. A statistician connected with the builders has estimated that if the steel used in the "City of New York" were made into needles, there would be enough to reach to the moon and back four times. Her average consumption of coal is 350 tons a day. She made the fastest trip ever made on the Atlantic.—Herald and Presbyter.

ALLEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA

The issue of the tenth volume calls attention to the rapid progress which this excellent popular cyclopedia is making. The publisher promised the volumes at intervals of about a month; he is recently more than keeping his word. The volume extends from Cosmography to Debry, contains about 640 pages and about 100 illustrations, handsomely printed and neatly bound in cloth, all for 50 cents! The Manifold is more comprehensive than any other cyclopedia except Cassell's (which costs several times as much), including an unabridged dictionary of the English language in addition to ordinary cyclopedia matter, and though many of the articles are necessarily brief, they are sufficiently full for practical people, and some articles are surprisingly extended - for instance, Cotton occupies 20 pages; Craniology, 8 pages; Creeds and Confessions, 5 pages; Cricket, 4 pages; Crusades, 8 pages; Darwin and Darwinian Theory, 17 pages, and so on. It would be strange indeed if a cyclopedia of such great merit, published at a cost so surprisingly low, did not reach an enormous circulation. A specimen volume may be ordered and returned if not wanted. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, New York, Chicago, Atlanta and San Francisco.

School Report.

The following is the roll of honor for the first month of the McGlaughlin School, near Dunmore:

Lillie Carpenter, Minnie McGlaughlin, Effie Carpenter, Annie McGlaughlin, Russel McGlaughlin, Charlie McGlaughlin, George Carpenter.

No. enrolled 24.

Average daily attendance 19.

Per cent. of daily attendance 90.

M. ALICE MCGLAUGHLIN,
Teacher.

An extensive manufactory of coffins in New York has failed. Its trade was principally in the Southern States, which speaks well for the general well-doing of that section. Nobody wants to see a business interest destroyed, yet there are few persons who would grieve if every coffin factory in the country had to close up owing to the lack of demand for its product.

The Cost of All Attainment.

Hard work is the cost of all attainment that is worth having; yet while every body wants the atainment, only now and then one is willing to do the hard work that is essential to its securing. So it comes to pass that the measure of a man's prospects of attainment, is, practically, his willingness to work hard and tirelessly. No man works harder than a great genius. If more men were willing to work as hard as the man of genius, more men would be credited with the possession of genius, because of their achieving results which are supposed to come from the inspirations of genius.—S. S. Times.

Temperance in the Senate.

Senator Frye is sometimes laughed at because he opposed the sale of whisky in the Senate restaurant and compelled resort to the subterfuge of "cold tea," or whisky served in a teacup. But the Senator's protest against the open sale of spirituous liquors is only one of the signs of a developing criticism of the use of liquor in an open way about Congress. His position, says Dunnell, in the New York Times, is a great advance upon that of the mass of Congressmen in service here twenty-five years ago. At that time whisky was not more objectionable as a beverage than water. I am told by an old employe that at the beginning of the Thirty-eighth Congress the room of one of the principal clerks of the House was always supplied with at least a bottle of whisky, that stood out upon a table free to all comers as soon as the superior clerk had given the signal by taking the first drink. Three prominent men from as many different States made this room a "badging" resort, and it was not a rare sight to see champagne opened by the case for the promotion of some interest in the House, the celebrated Congressman making it a point to be on hand whenever the champagne was fizzing. This liquor was supplied by men who were disposed to keep the members of the House in good humor, and to subdue any violent opposition that might otherwise be developed. Two of the celebrated drunkards of that time have gone to a place where there can be no use for lobbyists. The third is still here, but has reformed, and has a "razzledazzle" time of it at long intervals. Champagne is still to be had in the restaurants of both Houses, and whisky without disguise in one of them. But in the open committee rooms the whisky bottle has given way to the ice pitcher, which neither cheers nor inebriates. The habitually drunken member is now almost as extinct as the dodo, and the free drinker of 1864 is a spiritual reminiscence.—Washington Post.

It is said that J. N. Camden, Gov. Wilson, and Henry G. Davis, as well as others too numerous to mention, would be glad to succeed John E. Kenna in the United States Senate. Present indications seem to bespeak a hotly contested election.

Col. Elihu Hutton, of Randolph Co., has made an assignment. His liabilities amount to $35,000

Notice to Creditors.

To the Creditors of John Sharp, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subjet the real estate of the said John Sharp to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said John Sharp for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 28th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this the 16th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov22-4t] Printer's fee, $4.85.

Fiduciary Notices

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

Isaac McNeel, guardian of Lydia E. McNeel.

S. H. Clark, executor of Wm. Clark, deceased.

C. A. Lightner, Admr. Wm. Lightner, Dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Comr. accts.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered the 17th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of George N. Tacy vs. Hamilton Collins etc., I, as special commissioner appointed in the said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court-House of said county, on the

1st DAY OF JANUARY, 1889,

the following real estate, to-wit:

A tract of land containing One Hundred acres, more or less, lying on the waters of Clover Creek, in Pocahontas county, West Virginia, adjoining the lands of S. B. Hannah, W. Doyle and others, being the same land heretofore sold to Hamilton Collins by said George N. Tacy.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue, the purchaser to execute three several bonds with good security, falling due respectively in Six, Twelve and Eighteen months from day of sale, said bonds bearing interest from day of sale. A lien will also be retained on said land as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spc'l Commissioner.

C. B. SWECKER, Auctioneer.

Bond has been given by the above Special Commissioner as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k of Ct. Ct.

Dec. 6 4 t- Printers fee $8.85.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	4 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Dec 20, 1888.

"Keep away from that," said a restaurant-keeper to an Irishman who was standing in front of a newly-arrived box of turtles, holding his finger in evident pain. "What are you doing there, anyhow?" "I wor investigating." "Investigating what?" "I wor trying to see which wor the head and which wor the tail of that baste over there in the corner of the box." "What do you want to know for?" "I've a curiosity to know whether I've been bit or stung."

Wife: Now look here, Henry you've come home drunk three nights in succession, and you've got to reform or I'll leave you.

Husband: M-my dear don't talk (hic) that way. Reform (hic) knocked out on 'lection day, and it's re-vision we're (hic) after now.

THE LEGISLATURE

Will convene at Charleston on January 9th, and the session will be an unusually interesting one The "Daily Star" of that city will contain everything of interest transpiring at that place, while its report of the legislative proceedings will be complete every day. 50 cents will pay for it during the session. The "Weekly Star" stands without a rival in that section of the state and will also give the proceedings in full. 25 cents will secure it for three months. We advise our readers to subscribe at once for either the daily or weekly edition if they wish to keep posted as to what our state solons are doing.

...liable to come a public charge, or who has been legally convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, or who is a polygamist, anarchist or socialist, or who is afflicted with any loathsome or contagious disease, or who has entered into contract to perform labor or service for any person, firm or corporation. A penality by fine not to exceed one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not to exceed three years, is imposed.

Section ...

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. P. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 3 1889. | Terms of Subscription. $1.10 per year. in advance. | No. 24.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, R. V. Hill.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. F. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

[illegible]

Tales of Duelists.

The story of "Old Hickory's" duel, in which he was the challenged party and by right had the choice of weapons has been often told. He stipulated that his opponent and himself should sit upon two kegs of gunpowder with a lighted fuse attached to each. The climax of this novel affair was reached when "Old Hickory's" fighting enemy ran as the lighted fuse was burning dangerously near the bung-hole of his keg of powder. And as he fled he heard "Old Hickory" derisively calling to him to "come back, you durned fool; there is nothing but onion seeds in these kegs."

Another story about the man, who, when challenged by a farmer friend aggrieved at some trivial matter, suggested that they join hands and jump from the top of the highest building in New York, created a laugh when it was in its prime. But it has grown gray-haired and decrepit through long years of faithful service and has been shelved.

The man who was challenged by a wooden-legged man has become historical on account of his queer demand when he and his antagonist met upon the field of honor. He did not know until the pistols were loaded and the ground paced off that the man who thirsted for his blood was possessed with a timber limb. He protested and cited that section of the code which prescribes that neither party shall have any advantage over his adversary, contending that his wooden-legged opponent had an advantage. "But rather than break up the affair, gentlemen," remarked the man who had two sound and natural legs. "I make the following proposition: If you will get a beegum for me to put one of my legs in, I will go ahead with the fight."

That duel didn't come off.

There was a good one told in Georgia a few years ago and it has lost none of its vitality with age. A couple of gentlemen had decided that nothing but a shot at one another with adult pistols would satisfy a difference they enjoyed. By reason of a failure to make a railroad connection one of the principals did not arrive at the place selected for the battle and his second brought the news of his detention to the others, who were impatient for the slaughter to begin. When the other principal heard of the delay that was to debar him from the privilege of shooting at his enemy he promptly sent word that the code made provisions for such emergencies. That when either of the principals failed to appear at the time and place set for the duel his second must answer to the demand of the other side. But the second in this case did not take kindly to this and said that it would be impossible for him to fight as he was not naturalized. That duel was declared off and a champagne supper restored good feeling all around.

In the days when it was the proper thing to lock the duelists in a darkened room and arm them with pistols there were good stories told. One of them has been preserved. A German and a Frenchman were the fighters. They were locked in a room which was so dark that they could not see each other. The Frenchman described what transpired in his own peculiar style: "I know of I shoot my pistol at Dutchman see by the flash and shoot me. So I say to myself, I [illegible] and [illegible] Dutchman as he shoot his pistol and [illegible] I can kill him. I keep me still and ze Dutchman I not hear at all. But when I shoot my pistol up ze chimney to scare him, down he come."

Ability.

Success may not always s be the test of ability, but it is so in enough cases to warrant one in saying that the universally unsuccessful man is incompetent. We feel that there is a screw loose somewhere. If he really had ability, and all that is included in that name, he would succeed in something. Ability implies enough energy to surmount small difficulties, and not only small obstacles, but obstacles that would daunt and discourage the man of little determination. To such a one a rebuff only furnishes fresh incentive to succeed—at all hazards.

Those who sit down, and cry weakly that they are more able to do great deeds that such-a-one if they only had the opportunity; that they have as much talent as So-and-so, but they only lack the chance to display it; that they have no time to do anything; that circumstances are against them or they would certainly succeed—probably possess neither talent nor ability, except in their own imagination. If they had the talent, they would accomplish something, no matter what circumstances were against them. They might perhaps do better when they had more time, more foothold, more chance to show what they could do; but it is hardly likely, if they did nothing at all while the fates were against them, that would make a shining success when things were more favorable.

Ability makes its possessors resolve that they will do something with it; that they will work to improve the talent, small though it be, that they feel is theirs; that they will not be beaten, and that nothing shall daunt them. This faith and energy may really serve to remove the mountains that confront them, or at least enable stout hearts to so far surmount them that, though the way may be rough and toilsome at first, it will become easier and straighter as they climb upwards. Therefore, if you are persuaded in your mind that you are really and truly able to do a certain thing, do not go about crying that you could do it, only—you can't; but go to work earnestly and doggedly and do it. Do it, no matter what happens to "keep you back." Do it with all the powers of your mind and body. Do it, at first, it may be, blunderingly, in a blind, faltering way, but feeling confident that if you have the talent or genius it will show itself, though after a long time perhaps, and only by hard and persistent work. And be assured the one-half of the ability to do a thing lies in the determination to do it.—N. Y. Post.

Meaning of the Word "Limited."

A subscriber asks for an explanation of the word "limited," which frequently follows the name of a corporation, as the "Sunrise Blacking Company, limited," or "Smith & Jones, limited." In the last case, as in the first, the concern is a corporation, with shareholders, not one of whom, possibly, is a Smith or a Jones.

The old principles of corporations created by legislative act was that the entire property of every stockholder was liable for the whole debts of the company, as the whole property of every member of a general partnership is still liable for the debts of the firm.

But this system made every stockholder responsible for bad management of which he might not be guilty, and deterred wealthy men from becoming interested in the shares of corporations. To remove this objection the principle of limited liability was introduced, and in order to notify the public that only the separate property of the corporation was liable for the debts of the corporation the English law requires that the word "limited" shall be used in every case by the company.

Most American corporations are constituted on the principle of limited liability, but few, if any, of the States enjoin companies to append the word limited to their corporate titles. The matter is so well understood in this country, indeed, that it is not necessary.

The most noteworthy exception to the general rule is the case of the national banks, and even in this instance liability is limited to an amount equal to the par value of the shares. That is, if a national bank fails, each stockholder may not only lose what he has invested, but $100 more for each share of stocks he holds, if so much is necessary to pay the debts of the bank.

Until within a few years all the Scottish banks were organized with unlimited liability, and when, eight or ten years ago, a Glascow bank failed, disasterously, there were cases of men who only owned a share or two, valued before the failure at not much more than a hundred dollars each, who were assessed thousands of pounds sterling, to meet the debts of the bank. Since that time the Scottish banks have been allowed to reorganize on a basis of limited liability.—Youth's Companion.

BUSINESS AMIABILITY.

Courteous Treatment of the Rich and Poor, and its Commercial Value.

Bishop Ames, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, once delivered a sermon in Washington in the presence of members of Congress, the President and a large number of other Government officials on the subject of amiability in business. His text related to the personal characteristic of the prophet Daniel, the leading characteristic of whom was amiability of deportment, winning to Daniel by his traits, nearly all with whom he came in contact. From this starting point the Bishop proceeded to sum up some of the observations of his own long life, showing how men of his acquaintance had succeeded in their several occupations by the practice of habitual courtesy without insincerity, this trait, of course, accompanied by honesty and industry. "Other things being equal," said the great preacher, "I always prefer to buy my goods at the store from that clerk who has a friendly word and a kindly look of recognition. So, too, I prefer to deal with that business man who has a pleasant demeanor, and treats me like a brother. Other things being equal, such a clerk and such a business man will win where others of different social qualities will fail."

The good Bishop long since passed to final rest, but the lesson he sought to impress upon the young, on the occasion of which we speak, is as important now as it was then, and employer and employed in all branches of trade and industry could heed it with profit. In politics, the lack of amiability has sent many a candidate to the rear, and in business depending upon the voluntary favor of the public (and what business does not?) it marked the line between success and failure for many a firm. Courteous treatment of the rich and poor alike thus has not only a commercial value above estimate, but it comes very near to the fulfillment of a divine command.—Laundry Journal.

The Art of Not Hearing.

The art of not hearing should be learned by all. It is fully as important to domestic happiness as a cultivated ear, for which so much money and time are expended. There are so many things which it is painful to hear many of which we ought not to hear, will disturb the temper, corrupt simplicity and modesty, detract from contentment and happiness, that every one should be educated to take in or out sounds according to his own pleasure.

If a man falls into a violent passion and calls us all manner of names, at the first word we should shut our ears and hear no more. If, in our quiet voyage of life, we find ourselves caught in one of those domestic whirl-winds of scolding we should shut our ears as a sailor would furl his sail, and, making all tight, scud before the gale. If a hot and restless man begins to inflame our feelings we should consider what mischief those fiery sparks may do in our magazine below, our temper is kept, and instantly close the door.

If, as has been remarked, all the petty things said of one by heedless or ill-natured idlers were to be brought home to him, he would be a mere walking pincushion, stuck full of sharp remarks. If we would be happy when among good men we should open our ears; when among bad men shut them. It is not worth while to hear what our neighbor says concerning our children, what our rivals say about our business, our dress or our affairs.

The art of not hearing though untaught in our schools, is by no means unpracticed in society. We have noticed that a well-bred woman never hears a vulgar or impertinent remark. A kind of discreet deafness saves one from many insults, from much blame, from not a little connivance in dishonorable conversation.

The steamer Kate Adams, the fastest and finest boat of her type on the Missippi, was burned to the water's edge on Sunday morning forty miles south of Memphis. Twenty-three or more persons, a great majority of them colored, were drowned or died from exposure in the water, which was unusually cold. The fire broke out among cotton bales, when the boat was 300 yards from shore. It was run aground, but the fire cut off the passengers from the bow, and they leaped overboard. There were 100 persons on board, and the exact number of the lost is not known.

"John, you've been smoking again. Your cloths are reeking with the odor." "Maria, you are mistaken. I rode home in a smoking car. Had to do that or stand up." (Next day.) "John, you've been drinking again." "M'ria, 'pon my word I haven't. I rode home in a —with a—(no, that won't do this time). M'ria, you're (hic) thinking 'bout that other time I came home kind o' tired out 'fore I swore off." —Chicago Tribune.

Henry Cheatham will be the only negro in the Fifty-first Congress. He is a mulatto, a graduate of Shaw University, and a teacher by profession. He will represent the Second District of North Carolina.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1.00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00	$ 8.00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20.00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 3, 1889.

Well Said.

A few days ago a republican began crowing over Harrison's election to a certain Democrat when the disciple of Cleveland promptly replied, "Well, we have this consolation, if you have a good President we have!"

This unmeasured reply most truly and aptly expresses the pollical situation of the Country. If the republicans have a good president the democrats have. In other words, if Benj. Harrison the President elect is a good President, he is of course good in the sence of being a leader and defender of his country and not of his party alone. Grover Cleveland was a worthy President, not because of the interest he took in the democratic party, but because of his faithful discharge of duty to the entire people.

And this is the principle that should apply to politics universally.

What a wonderful advance will have been made in political affairs when it is conceded and acted upon that "he serves his party best who serves his country best."

It is necessary, of course, that different parties exist, but at the same time it should always be remembered that after one has been exalted to high position he is no longer the mere leader of a faction but of all under his authority, and duty demands that he guard with equal diligence and solicitude the interest of all. This principle being once fully recognized, the truth of the sentence above quoted becomes apparent; and it is reduced to an axiom that, if the republicans have a good President the democrats have a good one too, and vice versa.

It applies not alone to national affairs, but likewise to State and County matters. No man is worthy to fill any office in the gift of the people who is so dwarfed and contracted by prejudice that he can only be the servant of that political party from which he sprang.

Parties and the Judiciary

One of the most interesting questions decided by the recent election was the future character of the Federal judiciary as regards the partisan affiliations of its members.

When the Republican party came into power, the United States courts were officered by Democrats. Fortune had long been favorable to that party. After the sweeping victory of the Whigs in 1840, William Henry Harrison missed a chance to make an appointment to the Supreme bench by only a week, the death of Philip P. Barbour occurring on the 24th of February, 1841, and the appointment of Peter V. Daniel as his successor being made on the 3rd of March. Only a single vacancy occurred among the judges of the highest court during the Presidential term, and that had to be filled by Tyler, who named Samuel Nelson. One vacancy occurred during the other term for which the Whigs elected their candidates, and Benjamin R. Curtis was appointed by Fillmore in 1851.

A quarter of a century almost sufficed to make the Federal judiciary as unanimously opposed in politics to Cleveland in 1885 as it had been to Lincoln in 1861. Every one of the nine judges of the Supreme Court had been appointed by a Republican President, although Field, who came in as a sort of war Democrat, had gone back to his old party; every one of the nine judges of the Circuit Court was a Republican; and of the fifty-six judges of the district courts, only half a dozen bore commissions which had been made out before Lincoln's accession. Mr. Cleveland has given the Supreme Court a new Chief Justice in the person of Melville W. Fuller, and appointed one associate justice, Mr. Lamar; he has made one judge of the Circuit Court, ex-Senator Jackson of Tennessee, for the district which covers the States of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee; and he has appointed judges of the Cistrict Court, in Alabama, California, Georgia Illinois, Michigan, Missouri and South Carolina. There are now two vacancies in that court in Southern States, and a nomination for Florida has just been made, but it is regarded as doubtful whether the Senate will confirm such nominations.

Gen. Harrison will undoubtedly have the opportunity of making more than one appointment to the Supreme bench. One of its members is in his seventy-sixth year, and two others are past seventy-two, all three being eligible for retirement upon a full-pay pension. Another member, Judge Matthews, has been in such poor health for some time that much doubt is felt as to whether he will prove capable of long service. Moreover, it is probable that President and both branches of Congress being now of the same party, some measure will at last be carried through for the relief of the Supreme Court, either by the addition of new members or by the establishment of appelate courts, the new judges in either case to be named by Gen. Harrison. A larger number of appointments to the District bench will probably fall to his lot than his predecessor was called upon to make. Among such judges is one Daniel Clark of New Hampshire, who is in his eightieth year; another, Arnold Krekel of Missouri, who is seventy-three; and several others who will reach the age of seventy, with the privilege of retiring upon a pension, before 1893.

Fortunately it is a matter of slight concern to anybody but the Democratic lawyers that a Republican President is to have the appointment of a great many judges. There is no longer the old sharp line of division between the parties in the matter of constitutional interpretation; the States' rights decisions rendered by the appointees of Lincoln and Grant have shown that the old landmarks are restored; and Southern Democrats made Chief Justice Waite's appointment the occasion for frank confessions that they had no complaint to make against Northern Republican's who made such a record on the Federal bench as he had done.—N. Y. Post.

A war of Races, on a small scale, is reported from Stafford County, Va., all growing out of a political quarrel over the results of the late election. At latest advices the sheriff had succeeded in quelling the disturbances, but not until one white man and one negro had been killed, and a large number of rioters had been badly injured. The race question may settle itself, but it's a rough process.—Washington Post.

General Sherman's Unwisdom.

In a large sense General William T. Sherman is responsible for the dozen lives lost in Wahalak, Miss., in the last week and for the blood-shed that will follow. The incendiary course of the negroes—their absurd and irrational rage—was the astonishing feature of the race conflict over which that town is still agitated. All is explained by the statement that the Sunday preceding a negro preacher had read from his pulpit the assertion of General Sherman that a war of races, of dagger and torch, was imminent, and that "when the negro struck the first blow in securing justice, millions of northern men would be ready to help!" The great name of General Sherman, behind such a remarkable appeal, explains the otherwise inexplicable course of the negroes.

Few men understand how quick the negro is to respond to an appeal to his ignorance or passion. In Oglethorpe county, in this state, a few years since, some wags wrote a letter to a prominent negro, signed by General Grant, and appointing him postmaster at Lexington. The negro took the matter in dead earnest, and no subsequent explanation convinced him that it was a joke. He organized a crowd to take the office by force, and the agitation was kept up until there was a riot and several negroes were sent to the penitentiary for implication therein. When Cleveland was elected thousands of negroes were sure they would be put back into slavery, and their fear on the subject was pitiful and their excitement dangerous. In one case known to the writer a negro sought his old master and seriously begged him to buy him when the sale came off.

Out of this ignorance the city negroes are rapidly emerging by contact with masses of people and by their close association with whites and the country negroes slowly by three months' education in the public schools. Among the country negroes, clustered in their scattered cabins, this ignorance is still dense. The man who would appeal to its worst side or inflame its passions for partisan or personal purposes does a great and immeasurable wrong.

What possible good can come of General Sherman's terrible words! They scare nobody. The evil complained of does not exist, and even if the whites were frightened by his incendiary threat, they could not right a wrong when there is no wrong. And what good can they do the negro! They simply arouse a blind and unreasoning rage that impels him to seek his own ruin by throwing himself against the steadfast ranks of the whites. He can never get anything by fighting for it, and every sane man knows this to be true. Such words as General Sherman's will produce, everywhere they are read or circulated among negro crowds, just such results as at Wahalak! Is he satisfied with this work!

The sword of General Sherman was terrible in war, and ruin and the torch went with it. Let us hope, for America's sake and for humanity's sake, that his pen will not be deadlier in peace, and ruin and the torch be invoked from its point.—Atlanta Constitution.

Indianapolis seems to have become very popular all at once as a winter resorts for politicians. Numerous pilgrimages have recently been made to that city. Of course, their visits to Harrison don't have any political significance.

The Richmond Whig, one of Virginia's oldest landmarks, has suspended publication, and a new daily The Times [illegible] of the Pocahontas Times is published in its stead.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Laster Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	[illegible]	4 P. M.
2nd "	[illegible]	11 A. M.
" "	[illegible]	3 P. M.
3rd "	[illegible]terville,	11 A. M.
" "	[illegible] Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th "	Bethel,	11 A. M.
" "	School,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—O. B. Sharp, of Frost, qualified as Notary Public Tuesday.

—C. R. Moore, Esq., of Dunmore, was in town Tuesday and Wednesday.

—Geo. W. Calhoon, of Locust, was in town Tuesday and remembered us in a substantial way.

—Edbert Hill, of Washington Territory, was in town Tuesday and Wednesday.

—Not a few of those who attended Court this week subscribed for The TIMES. Thanks.

—Geo. M. Kee, Esq., of Marlinton has been commissioned as Notary Public by the Governor.

—The County Court ought to make an appropriation for the repairing of the road up Salt River. The recent increase in travel over that route makes it a necessity.

—Lee Dever, (son of Fancis Dever, Esq.) who is located at Duluth, Minn., is visiting his relatives on Knapp's creek. We are glad to learn that he has done well in the west.

—A number of persons who had expected cabinet positions under Cleveland were before the County Court this week asking to be appointed road overseers.

—C. O. Arbogast, Esq. is off on a flying trip to Charleston. He wants to be sargent-at-arms of the next house of delegates. If Charley gets the place he'll make an efficient officer.

—Quite a number of persons were in town Tuesday and Wednesday attending County Court. The new officers were all on hand to qualify, and the like of Justices and Constables was never before seen.

—We are requested by the pastors of the Churches at this place to say to the people that it is very much desired that they should assemble promptly at the hour appointed for services. When preaching is announced for 11 o'clock be sure you are in your place by 60 minutes past 10.

—The County Court met last Tuesday. It began its work by installing C. E. Beard, the Commissioner elected to succeed S. H. Clark. Mr Beard was also elected President of the Court. In our next issue we shall give our readers an account of the Court's proceedings.

—We were sorry to hear of the misconduct of some who attended the Christmas trees at Dunmore and Frost. Many persons we are told who attended the tree at Dunmore went away thoroughly disgusted and with the determination never to go to such a place again. It is very strange that some people feel called upon to exhibit bad manners whenever an occasion presents itself.

—The order entered by the County Court on Wednesday morning requiring all persons to address the Court from the bar is a move in the right direction, and we sincerely hope it will be strictly enforced. The custom that has prevailed in the past, of allowing any body and everybody at any time and all times to step up and whisper in the ear of the Court, or [illegible] in front of the bench for an [illegible] time, facing the assemblage with his back to a good [illegible] to business and certainly a gross violation of Court House decorum.

—We are informed that on last Sunday, Quincy W. Poage met with a very painful and perhaps fatal accident. He was on his way home from Edray, riding at a rapid rate, when his horse threw him and trampled him under foot, fracturing his skull and inflicting other painful injuries. At this writing his condition is still critical.

A Card to the Public.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned have this day mutually dissolved the partnership hitherto existing between them in the practice of law under the firm name and style of McClintic and Moore. All business undertaken by the firm previous to this date will receive the attention of both parties until completed, just as if the partnership still continued. We would also remind those indebted to the firm that this is a most excellent time to come forward and pay up.

Respectfully,
L. M. McCLINTIC.
C. F. MOORE.

Huntersville, W. Va.
Jany. 1st 1889.

Dunmore Doings.

The Christmas dinner given at the lumber camp of Capt. E. A. Smith, was largely attended and greatly enjoyed. Mr. Gay, the expert French cook of the camp is hard to excel in his art, as all will testify who have ever partaken of his preparations.

A little child aged 16 months, daughter of Melvin Gum, who lives near Glade Hill, died last Saturday night from the effects of being burned. Nearly a week previous to its death the mother left her two children in the house while she went to break the ice for the cow. Ypon her return she found her little daughter had been wrapt in the flames and its clothing almost entirely consumed.

The hearts of the old bachelors are sad. Leap year gone, and no proposals. Such is life.

Robert McGlaughlin has a new boarder—a 9-pounder.

Entertainment at Hillsboro Male and Female Academy.

According to previous Announcement a large and appreciative Audience Assembled at the Academy in Hillsboro on the evening of Dec. 21st to be entertained by the pupils of Hillsboro Male and Female Academy of which Prof. W. H. Landes is Principal and Miss Emma N. Warwick Assistant.

The exercises were varied consisting of Music Dialogues, Declamations, Recitations and discussings. Beginning with a Salutatory by Master Willie Wysong, the entire programme was rendered in a manner highly entertaining to the Audience and which reflected much credit upon the pupils.

We would like to refer seperately to the rendition of each piece but to do so would take too much space.

The little folks acquitted themselves admirably and showed conclusively they were under the training of those who are well versed in the Art of teaching.

Probably the most interesting feature of the programme was the discussion by four young men of the question—Resolved that George Washington was a greater man than Robert E. Lee. The young debaters handled the question with much ability and showed a familiarity with the subject that no doubt far surpassed that of much older and maturer minds, and as we sat and listened we were constrained to say that perhaps the world will yet know more Demosthenes and Ciceros. So evenly was the question discussed that it would have been difficult for a Committee of cultured gentlemen to have decided to whom the laurels of victory belonged.

The Audience expressed itself as much pleased with the entire programme and each one felt that he had been amply compensated fo his attendance.

This was the first entertainment given by Prof. Landes and so creditably did the school acquit itself that the people cannot fail to recognize that they have a sound and thorough teacher. Prof. Landes is a gentleman of refinement culture and learning and we trust he will receive that support from the public of this and neighboring counties to which he is fully entitled. No one need be afraid to trust the training of his child both morally and mentally to his hands. He comes highly reccommended and his stay in our midst even the short time he has been here has most favorably impressed the community with his worth. He is ably assisted by Miss Emma N. Warwick a lady well known to the people of the entire county and we hope that the future support he received will be comensurate with the success he deserves.

X.

Hon. C. P. Dorr, representative of Pocahontas and Webster Counties, is a candidate for the Speakership of the next house of delegates. Should he succeed in securing the place be will, no doubt, fill it creditably.

The West Virginia legislature meets at Charleston on Wednesday 9th. The most important work to be done is the election of a United States Senator to succeed the Hon. John E. Kenna. It is hoped that in this particular instance history will not repeat itself in a reproduction of the scene of two years ago. Such a fight as was made at that time is never desirable, but at this time it would be especially disastrous. So meager is the democratic majority that nothing short of absolute harmony and constant unanimity can assure democratic success.

Fiduciary Notices.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

Isaac McNeel, guardian of Lydia E. McNeel.

S. H. Clark, executor of Wm. Clark, deceased.

A. Lightner, Admr. Wm. Lightner, Dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Comr. accts.

Notice to Creditors.

To the creditors of Allen D. Grimes, dec'd:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said Allen D. Grimes to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Allen D. Grimes for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 27th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this 15th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov22-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.55.

Notice to Creditors.

To the Creditors of John Sharp, dec'd

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the county of Pocahontas, made in a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John Sharp to the payment of his debts; you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said John Sharp for adjudication to James W. Warwick, Jr., Commissioner, at his office in the said county, on or before the 25th day of February, 1889.

Witness: John J. Beard, Clerk of the said court, this the 16th day of November, 1888.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Nov22-6t.] Printer's fee, $4.55.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$4 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	10 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	36 00	56 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1,00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.50; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan 3, 1889.

"Hobson's Choice."

Did you know that this familiar phrase, "Hobson's choice," preserves the memory of a very good and useful man?

Thomas Hobson was born in 1844; he was for sixty years a carrier between London and Cambridge, conveying to and from the University, letters and packages, also passengers. In addition to his express business, he had a livery stable and let horses to the University students. He made it a rule that all the horses should have, according to their ability, a proper division of work and rest. They were taken out in regular order, as they stood, beginning with the one nearest the door. No choice was allowed, and if any man refused to take the animal assigned him he might go without any. That or none. Hence the phrase, "Hobson's choice."

In the spring of 1630, the plague broke out in England. The colleges of Cambridge were closed, and among the precautions taken by the authorities to prevent infection, Hobson was forbidden to go to London.

He died in January, 1631, partly, it is said, from anxiety and fretting at his enforced leisure. Hobson was one of the wealthiest citizens of Cambridge, and did much for the benefit of the city, to which he left several legacies. His death called forth many poems from members of the University, officers and students, among them two by the poet Milton, when a student at Christ's College.—Wide Awake.

The Wives of Statesmen.

Not long ago, when speaking of his wife, Prince Bismark is reported to have said: "She it is who has made me what I am." There have been English statesmen who could say quite as much. Burke was sustained amid the anxiety and agitation of public life by domestic felicity. "Every care vanishes," he said, "the moment I enter my own roof!" His description of his wife is too long to quote, but we must give an epitome of it. Of her beauty he said it did not arise from features, from complexion or from shape; "she has all three in a high degree, but it is not by these that she touches the heart, it is all that sweetness of temper benevolence, innocence and sensibility which a face can express, that forms her beauty. Her eyes have a mild light, but they awe you when she pleases; they command like a good man out of office, not by authority, but by virtue. Her stature is not tall, she is not made to be the admiration of everybody, but the happiness of [illegible]. She has all the firmness that does not exclude delicacy; she has all the softness that does not imply weakness. Her voice is a low, soft music, not formed to rule in public assemblies, but to charm those who can distinguish a company from a crowd; it has this advantage, you must come close to her to hear it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Virginia gave us Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe and John Tyler. Massachusetts was the home of John Adams and John Quincy Adams; Tennessee supplied Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk and Andrew Johnson. Zachary Taylor was from Louisiana. New York has had the Presidency under Martin Van Buren, Millard Fillmore, Chester A. Arthur and Grover Cleveland. William Henry Harrison came from Ohio, and so did Rutherford B. Hays and James A. Garfield. The great State of Pennsylvania supplied the country with one President—James Buchanan; New Hampshire another in the person of Franklin Pierce, and Illinois was the State from which Abraham Lincoln and General Grant hailed when they were elected, and Indiana gives us Harrison, but he was born in Ohio.

Benjamin Harrison will be 55 years, 6 months and 17 days old when he is inaugurated President of the United States. His distinguished grandfather was 68 years old at the time of taking the oath of office, forty-seven years ago. Three other Presidents were 55 years old at the begininning of their administrations. They were Martin Van Buren, Zachary Taylor and Rutherford B. Hayes. Lincoln became President at 52. John Tyler and Chester A. Arthur were 51. Millard Fillmore was 50. Franklin Pierce and James A. Garfield were 49. Grover Cleveland was 48. Grant was 47. All the other Presidents were older than General Harrison.

UNHAPPY CHRISTMAS.

The Christmas Turkey wails this wail
 And makes his farewell bow:
"If I had died Thanksgiving Day
 I wouldn't have to now."

Lady (to clerk—I want to look at something that would be suitable for a Christmas gift for my husband.

Clerk—Yes'm; large or small?

Lady—What do you mean?

Clerk—Do you want a large or small flask?—Oil City Blizzard.

"Pa," inquired Bobby, "are all the people made of dust?"

"Yes, yes," replied his father who was reading.

"And is everybody made of the same kind?" continued Bobby.

"No, no, some of them are made of the cheapest kind of dust to be had."

Uncle Rastus (at Dinner)—Lem, you young raskil, take yo' feet offen de corner ob de table.

Aunt Dinah—Yes, an I decla' to goodness ef he aint eatin chicken broff from de end ob de spoon 'stid ob frum de side. When you grows up, Lem, eberybody'll take yo' fur a low down niggah what nevah had nb manners larned to him.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. C. F. Moore, EDITOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 10, 1889. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 25.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, R. V. Hill.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Devil.

Men don't believe in a devil now, as their fathers used to do;
They've forced the door of the broadest creed to let his majesty through;
There isn't a print of his cloven foot, or a fiery dart from his bow,
To be found in earth or air to-day, for the world has voted so.

But who is mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain?
Who blights the bloom of the land to-day with the fiery breath of hell,
If the Devil isn't and never was? Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saints, and digs the pits for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the field of Time wherever God sows His wheat?
The Devil is voted not to be, and of course the thing is true;
But who is doing the kind of work the Devil alone should do?

We are told he does not go about as a roaring lion now;
But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row
To be heard in home, in Church and State, to the earth's remotest bound,
If the devil by a unanimous vote, is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith and make his bow and show
How the frauds and crimes of a single day spring up? We want to know.
The Devil was fairly voted out, and of course the Devil is gone!
But simple people would like to know who carries his business on.

Striking a Light.

In the days before the invention of friction matches the difficulty of procuring fire was so great that all pains were taken to prevent the fire on the hearth from going out. All winter long it was kept by covering the coal and brands with ashes at night. This was one of the domestic cares of our forefathers, and Homer alludes to the practice as common in his day, 3,000 years ago.

But fire could not be kept with comfort in the summer, and there would be times in the winter when the hearth would become cold. Then some coals must be brought from a neighbor's, or a new fire must be kindled in the house.

This latter process was usually accomplished by means of flint and steel. Most readers have no doubt seen a spark of fire struck out from a horse's shoe hitting a stone in the road, or from the shoes of sleigh runner grinding over rocks.

To obtain fire by this method a piece of steel, such as a file or rasp, was struck with a flint or a bit of white quartz from a granite ledge, and the spark was caught in tinder—charred cotton rags. The flint lock musket, with a few grains of powder and some tinder in the pan, was looked upon by our grandmothers as a domestic utensil. Sometimes, on a clear day, a burning glass—a lens for collecting at one point the rays of the sun—was used.

The method of producing fire by rubbing together two dry sticks is known to most boys, but it has not been often adopted by civilized people. It belongs to the ruder conditions of life.

In Thibet Capt. William Gill found practiced a more scientific method than any of these. The natives strike a light by compressed air. The apparatus used consists of a wooden cylinder, two and a half inches long by three quarters of an inch in diameter. This is closed at one end, the base being about the size of a quill pen; an air tight piston fits into this with a large, flat knob at the top. The other end of the piston is slightly hollowed out and a very small piece of tinder is placed in the cup thus formed.

To use this the cylinder is held in one hand, the piston inserted and pushed about half way down. A very sharp blow is then given with the palm of the hand on the top of the knob. The hand must at the same time close on the kob and instantly withdraw the piston, when the tinder will be found alight. It requires skill to use the apparatus as well as science to invent it.—Youth's Companion.

The Value of Salt.

Now that there is a prospect of salt being admitted duty free, I wish to make a few remarks to the farmer readers of the New York World, says a correspondent, on what I believe to be its incomparable value. I have used it many years in the garden and on the farm in various ways, and believe it to be profitable to all who cultivate the soil. It is needless to speak of its many uses in the household or domestic economy, nor shall I urge the great advantage of supplying it to stock—cattle, sheep, hogs and horses. It is well known to be beneficial to these in keeping up good condition, and in the three last named helps to keep down internal parasites.

Salt, in modarate quantities, is good for the land—improves grass and grain and is good for nearly all vegetable crops. I have found it particularly good for onions, carrots and cabbages. Some seem to think it is only a stimulant; the same is said of lime. Be that as it will both improve the crops. Salt, in some respects, seems to have opposite properties—to be in some measure paradoxical—for, while it preserves animal fibre, it hastens the decay of many vegetable substances, insomuch that sprinkled through leaves or weeds, it helps to decompose them; and, while heavy doses kill weeds and grass, duly distributed and mixed with the soil, it is an excellent fertilizer. This is why many people have an aversion to salting their land.

But what I chiefly wish to shows is its property in destroying insects of almost every kind. Either alone or mixed with other substances it is an insecticide. Before the crop is committed to the ground it should be sown in its purity over the land wherein your insects generate in myriads. This done, one or two weeks before sowing the seed and thoroughly harrowed in through the soil, it will be absorbed thereby and will not evaporate, but remain in the ground to perform a twofold operation. When applied to the growing grain it should be incorporated with lime and distributed evenly over the crop. Worms, maggots, grubs or other insects cannot breed or live in salted earth, and if the gardner or florist, when making up his pile of compost in the spring, would add a good sprinkling of salt all through it he would have little to complain of in the way of grubs or other insects eating the roots of his roses or carnations. There are other things exceptionally good for this purpose but salt will effect the end desired.

As an instance of its immediate power on some insects, take any number of either earthworms or snails, make a pile of them and put a ring of salt around them. They will never cross the fence till they die; or sprinkle a little salt over the pile and see how many minutes they will live. Many people in mowing their lawns are greatly annoyed by the earthworm casts sticking fast to the roller, whereas a very slight sprinkling of salt would prevent this, keep down the worms and be good for the grass.

Bill Nye is now spoken of as William Adjectival, Esq.

Dogs that Learn Trades.

The dog corps, long since established in the French army, has been recently much increased, so efficient have these little soldiers become. At an early stage of the trials they gave satisfaction at advanced posts, scenting or hearing a stranger approaching even in the darkness, and quickly learning the difference between a friendly and a foreign uniform. The latest trick the military dog has learned is that of carrying dispatches between distant sections of an army or reliefs or reenforcements presumably advancing through hostile country. The system is an offshoot of the dog smugler system, which is described in the current number of Blackwood's and the steps by which the animals are taught to understand what is wanted of them are best shown by reference to that article.

The smuggler in broad day walks across the frontier, his dog by his side, leaving the latter at the house of his accomplice and returning without him. When night falls, the dog is given a beating and turned loose to find his way home. Next he has a small packet fastened to his collar, and gradually the burden is increased. Then half a dozen or more are employed at the some time; the most intelligent being given no burden, that he may the more readily act as a scout for the others. He goes ahead, they keeping well back, till he gives them the signal that the coast is clear. The customs dog from its earliest years is made to play hide and seek with bags of coffee, rolls of lace, packages of tobacco, and the like. They do not bark, being taught to sit silently in ambush and give a low growl or simply cock up their ears and point the true direction of the advancing pack.

The French army dogs, mastiffs, like the smugglers' dogs, though first they must be taken from point to point to find them again, when they get to understand the idea, and what is wanted of them, will find a distant column or command with little difficulty if given the general direction, unless it be at too great a distance, and carry messages to and fro with commendable zeal.—Scientific American.

Expensive Needles.

From an article entitled "Hard Times in the Confederacy" in the Century we quote the following: "In August, 1864, a private citizen's coat and vest, made of five yards of coarse homespun cloth, cost two hundred and thirty dollars exclusive of the price paid for the making. The trimmings consisted of old cravats; and for the cutting and putting together, a country tailor charged fifty dollars. It is safe to say that the private citizen looked a veritable guy in his new suit, in spite of its heavy drain upon his pocket-book.

"In January, 1865, the material for a lady's dress which before the war would have cost ten dollars could not be bought for less than five hundred. The masculine mind is unequal to the task of guessing how great a sum might have been had for bonnets 'brought through the lines'; for in spite of patient self-sacrifice and unfaltering devotion at the bedside of the wounded in the hospital, or in ministering to the needs of relatives and dependents at home, the Southern women of those days are credited with as keen an interest in the fashions as women everywhere in civilized lands are apt to be in times of peace. It was natural that they should be so interested, even though that interest could in the main not reach beyond theory. Without it they often would have had a charm the less and a pang the more. Any feminine garment in the shape of cloak or bonnet or dress which chanced to come from the North was readily awarded its meed of praise, and reproduced by sharp-eyed observers, so far as the scarcity of materials would admit.

"But fashion's rules were necessarily much relaxed in the Southern Confederacy so far as practice went when even such articles as pins brought through the blockade sold for twelve dollars a paper, and needles for ten, with not enough of either."

Pedal Adaptability.

The Eskimo dog has the snow-shoe foot, the water dog the paddle foot, while the greyhound, for example, has a foot formed on the model best adapted too speed, that is to say, it is small, light and hard. But this modification of a foot to suit land, water or snow is to common an occurence to cause the surprise it otherwise would, although there happens now and then a failure to adapt, which serves to emphasize the fact—as in the case of the deer, which, instead of being so modified that it can bear itself up as if on snowshoes, is obliged to let skill step in where modification fails to come. When the snow is soft it sinks helplessly in and flounders about as clumsily as any other animal less used to the feathery material; but when there is crust on the snow, as there generally is in the northern regions, even though that crust would sink under the same weight of horse flesh, the deer knows how to glide over it in safety. How much of an art this is can be best appreciated by watching how the light-footed cat will come to grief on the glistening surface of crusted snow. In spite of its sharp claws it will slip this way and that, and finally break through, where five times the weight of reindeer or moose flesh would have skimmed along with ease, speed and safety.—Scientific American.

Slightly coiled woolen articles, knitted or crocheted, may be made to look as well as new if they are carefully rubbed in flour. Cover them with flour and rub gently, as if washing, until the flour becomes dark. Take out the article and rub in clean flour until all soil is removed. Shake well and hang in the wind until no atom of flour remains in the wool. Of course one would not care to clean in this way articles that are worn next to the body but for shawls, capes and head-coverings flour answers admirably.—Boston budget.

Gladstone Has Written 395 Books.

"I had the curiosity the other day," says a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette, "in turning over a volume of the British Museum Catalogue, to examine the literary entries under the name of 'Gladstone (Right Hon. William Ewart.)' The total number of them, exclusive of 'other editions' and 'other copies,' is 395. Of these, eight are in Italian, seven in French, five in German, two in Greek, two in Russian, two in Dutch, two in Welsh, one in Danish and one in Spanish. The diversity in subject is not less remarkable, but it is characteristic of Mr. Gladstone's pursuits that at least half the entries are on theological subjects."

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 10, 1889.

THE NAME OF OUR STATE.

The Wheeling Intelligencer, anxious to take the lead in some new movement, has for several weeks been earnestly advocating a change of the name of our State from West Virginia to Kanawha. So far as we are concerned, and we believe it to be the sentiment of the people of Pocahontas county, our answer is, let it alone; and if anybody don't like the name let him go to Texas. We are opposed to the change, first because there is no reason for it, and, second, because there are many reasons against it. In the history of the individual but two occasions can arise when a change of name is needful, one is marriage and the other commission of crime. The same rule applies to States. Now, our State is too young to get married; and if she were old enough, it would not be lawful to wed one so closely related as Kanawha. As to the other ground, if, as the Intelligencer contends, the State has gone republican, we can understand how a democrat might feel that the second occasion mentioned has arisen; but we can't see how the Intelligencer can consistently admit that West Virginia did something mean at the last election. Thus it is clear there is no good reason why the change should be made. Now let us note a few of the many reasons why it should not be made. When our State was born she was given the name of her mother; to change it now would be a virtual admission that the child is illegitimate; but we are not willing to admit anything of the kind. West Virginia's conception and birth were the most honorable. But there are better reasons than this why the name should not be changed. We are recorded in history, painted on canvass, written in verse, and chanted in song as West Virginia. To change our name would be to lose our identity: A thousand traditions legends and associations would forever be meaningless.

Then think of the great inconvenience and confusion that would necessarily follow the change suggested by brother Hart. We are laid down on the maps as West Virginia, our public records and documents recognize us as West Virginia, and our tongues are trained to speak it so. Change the name and we would be continually making blunders, just as we do when we write 1888 meaning 1889.

Beside all this change is not practicable. The law may call us what it pleases, but we'll call ourselves West Virginia as long as we live. The present generation will have to pass away before the people would recognize the change. But if a change were necessary, it would not be proper to call the State for any county in it. We have a Kanawha county and a Kanawha river. Now think how it would sound to say "Charleston is the Capital of Kanawha situated on the Kanawha in Kanawha!" or how would a news item of this kind read? "The steamer Kanawha, running on the Kanawha, was sunk at Kanawha Falls, Kanawha Co., Kanawha." Or this? "In passing through the Kanawha Valley, down the Kanawha, don't stop for dinner at Kanawha Falls, Kanawha Co., Kanawha, unless you Kanawha roasting ear and be satisfied."

Think too of the confusion in our mails; persons who have been accustomed to addressing their letters to W. Va. have no time nor inclination to write Kanawha instead; so as to make it short they would simply put it down Kan., and our letters would all go to Kansas.

Perhaps the terms East and West are not classical enough for the Intelligencer. If not, we will permit brother Hart to say Oriental Virginia and Occidental Virginia.

In conclusion the change would ruin the meter of one of our most popular songs:—

"Oh! the West Virginia hills,
How majestic and how grand:
With their summits bathed in glory,
Like our Prince Immanuel's land."

Now try to sing it,

"Oh! the Kanawha hills,"

and you'll break down on the first line.

No, let the name alone. West Virginia doesn't need a change of name so much as the Intelligencer needs a change of Hart.

Marriage and Divorce Laws.

Among the many sensible and practical suggestions in Gov. Hill's message is one in reference to securing uniformity throughout the country in its marriage and divorce laws. He proposes that the New York Legislature take steps during the present session to arrange a conference between representatives from the different States, such representatives to be "able jurists, each especially qualified by education and experience" for the work mentioned.

We doubt not that if Gov. Hill and the New York Legislature take the initiative in this commendable undertaking they will meet with the hearty approval and co-opperation of the Legislatures and Executives of every State in the Union. Gov. Hill very truthfully says that under existing laws and decisions very different rules prevail as to what constitutes a marriage, and, while a certain divorced person may legally marry in some States, to do so in others, perhaps adjoining, would be a crime, even though no criminal intent existed.

It is a humiliating confession to make that such a condition exists in a country of the moral and educational advancement of this, and it is astonishing that there has not been some concerted attempt to remedy the evil long ago.

There is no institution of organized society in the United States about which there is so vague an idea as to its legal status as the institution of marriage, for what constitutes marriage in one State does not necessarily constitute it in another, and what would be cause for severing the marriage tie in one State might not be a cause in another.

The churches have their own and separate rules and customs as to both marriage and divorce, all of them, however, except the Catholic Church, leaving the actual annullment of marriage to the civil law. The churches could never agree to its adoption. The State assumes that marriage is a civil contract, must not only be made, but unmade under statutory regulations.

The first thought that naturally arises is that if the State is consistent with itself as well as mindful of the happiness and social decorum of its citizens, it should be uniform in its requirements so that what is made a fact under the law for one would be a fact for all.

It is to be hoped that Gov. Hill will not stop with simply making a proposition for a conference on this subject, but that he will follow it up with real and practical effort and have the moral support of every well-wisher for the good of society in the country.—Washington Post.

Gen. Harrison has added $10,000 to his life insurance. He sees trouble ahead.

The West Virginia Legislature will convene on Wednesday, January 9th.

One-half, or nearly one-half, of the Congressmen in the House will rise to their feet if some one suddenly calls out "Mr. Speaker."

The newspapers are giving themselves a great deal of trouble on account of Chief Justice Fuller's wearing a moustache. But it is all for nothing. He goes ahead in his usual way, and doesn't seem in the least disturbed by the cry.

The railroads of the United States represent a capital of five billion dollars, they have 150,000 miles of railway, their gross annual earnings are over $900,000,000, and they employ over three quarters of a million men.

Harrison is in a "straight betwixt the two." If he puts Blaine in the Cabinet, there will be trouble, and if he don't put him in, there will be trouble. The question for him to decide is which would be the greater trouble. Mr. Harrison has our sympathies, and if there is anything we can do to help him out of the difficulty our services are at his disposal.

Inasmuch as recently Uncle Sam's fancy lightly turned to thoughts of war, there may be interest in information as to the number of his boys he could muster were they needed to help in the battle. Besides the regular army there are over 8,000,000 men available for duty, and more than 100,000 of these already enrolled in the militia service. New York could furnish 650,000 men, Pennsylvania 580,000 Ohio and Illinois a round million together. But there is no danger of all these brave boys being called out.

We clip the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel.

Probably no Republican pilgrims ever left the city more disgusted with themselves than the West Virginia delegation was after calling on Gen. Harrison yesterday afternoon.

This delegation, composed of Chas. Burdett Hart, editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer; W. J. W. Cowden, Chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee; Charles E. Dana, a large coal operator and leading Republican of the Kanawha valley, and N. B. Scott, of Wheeling, member of the National Republican Committee for West Virginia, arrived late Wednesday night and waited impatiently till late yesterday afternoon before securing an audience with Gen. Harrison. The General, having discontinued his afternoon receptions, visitors can only see him by appointment. They were very reluctant to talk politics until they found out that they would have to wait nearly eighteen hours after their arrival before being allowed to meet Gen. Harrison.

When Gen. Harrison finally opened his door to the West Virginians they told him that the Republicans of West Virginia preferred to have their wishes made known to him by Republicans than by a Democrat like ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, and if he cared to hear them they would address him in behalf of Nathan Goff for the Cabinet. Gen. Harrison assented and dismissed them after listening impatiently for fifteen minutes.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Laster Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd "	Sunset,	11 A. M.
" "	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd "	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th "	Bethel,	11 A. M.
" "	Sunset,	3P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Well, there it is again!
I thought I had it fine;
But down I wrote it 88,
Instead of 89.

—The County Court meets again to-morrow to attend to unfinished business.

—Miss Mary Curry, of this place has gone to the Levels to attend the Academy.

—The child of Jas. Harris, (Col.) aged about five months, died last Friday night.

—The snow storm set for the first week in Jan. by the prophets has been postponed on account of the weather.

—In this issue will be seen a card announcing a change to take place in the firm of J. C. Loury & Son, on the 15th day of Jany.

—Peter L. Cleek, Esq. of Knapp's Creek, has been right sick for some time. He is now said to be improving slowly.

—Mrs. Margaret Jackson, wife of Jas. H. Jackson, Esq., died at her home on Elk last Saturday night, of dropsy of the heart.

—Capt. Stofer, who has just returned from Elk, reports that two Mr. Gibsons, from Indiana, are visiting at Mr. Wm. Gibsons.

—The wife of W. W. Arbogast made him a New Year's present of a fine boy baby. Very appropriate indeed.

—During the last two weeks we have received so many monthly school reports for publication that it is impossible to give place to them all, so we have concluded to make no distinctions and omit all. Hope this explanation will be sufficient to satisfy those who have sent in reports.

—Literature, an illustrated weekly magazine, published by John B. Alden, 393 Pearl st., N. Y., at 50 cents a year, is one of the best and cheapest literary productions of the age. The extremely low figures at which Alden's books are sold is wonderful. The reading public owes him a liberal patronage on account of the revolution he has brought about in book making.

—A few of the Huntersville boys are in the habit of using the new bridge across Knapp's Creek for a shooting gallery. Now that the bridge is open for travel this practice should cease as there is great danger of frightening horses. We are satisfied it is done thoughtlessly and no harm is intended, and believe all the boys need is to have their attention called to the matter.

—We see from the Valley Messenger that Daniel O'Connell, Esq., who has been in charge of the lumber camps on Anthony's Creek, was very badly, if not seriously hurt last week while attempting to cross the Creek on a jam of logs. It seems that the logs broke loose, and coming down suddenly caught and crushed him, injuring him internally. The same paper also says that Mr. George Shires, Boom boss of the St. Lawrence Boom and Mfg. Co., had his leg broken, while at work on the Boom.

—Various and conflicting reports concerning Nelson Moore are being circulated. Of the last we have heard, one is that he was killed and his body burned in a steam engine, and another that he was shipped to the depot safe and sound in a goods box marked, "Poultry." If the first report be true it was foul play; and if the second be correct it was still foul play.

—A sea monster of enormous proportions was seen by Capt. Stofer last week in the Greenbrier river. The Capt. think it was an Elephosocerous. When seen it was going up the river towards Galford's mill parting the water and ice like a snow-plow.

LATER: A muskrat was seen in the river near Levi Gay's, at 17 minutes past 2 this morning. Excitement intense.

—In this issue will be seen an account of the entertainment given by the Hillsboro Training school. This should have appeared in last weeks issue but was omitted by accident. The Misses Shearer, who are in charge of this school, have good cause to be proud of their success. The school is very much larger this year than it was last, and is patronized by some of our very best citizens, all of whom, so far as we have heard, are well pleased. There is no reason why it should not continue to grow and widen its influence.

Southard's Creek Items.

Xmas and holidays are gone accompanied by Leap year. We are sorry we have to give the boys possession of the next four pears.

Miss Bertha Sharp who has been sick for sometime is improving.

Messers Albert and Gilbert Sharp and Perry Jackson, who spent holidays visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity returned to their work near Hillsboro last week.

The Literary and Debating Society which met at Lonely Dale school house last Friday night was largely attended.

Jan. 7. PHIL. O. SOPHER.

Edray Notes.

Miss Sarah Sharp, who has been critically ill with Pneumonia, is improving slowly.

N. G. Barlow has been quite ill, but is now better.

J. O. Warwick is off for Charleston this week.

Black-leg has made its appearance among the calves in this neighborhood. A full half pint of Spirits Turpentine given in sweet milk to a calf when first attacked will save it, as your correspondent can attist from experience.

Jan. 8. X.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. E. I. Holt is off on a business trip to Randolph. He was accompanied by his aunt, Mrs. Mary Darst, who will visit Mr. S. W. Holt of Mingo Flats.

Mrs. John Peters has been visiting her children at the H. T. Schol the past few days.

The Division of the Sons of Temperance at this place, are doing good work. Every week new members are aded. We had the pleasure of attending a public meeting, given by them, on Saturday night. The exercises were very interesting. It consisted of Public installation of the officers. J. H. Weiford gave his experience as one who had realized the dreadful effects of whiskey. W. H. Overholt made an excellent speech on intemperance. The exercises closed with music and the reading of the Temperace Journal. This band of workers are engaged in a good cause, and we hope to see every lady and gentleman a member of this Division.

VIVIAN.

Hillsboro Training School Entertainment.

The following is a programme of the entertainment given by the girls of H. T. School on Dec. 24th, 1888:

Long before the time for opening a large audience assembled at the public school building. There was not one vacant seat when the exercises opened.

PART I.

SALUTORY:

Christmas is here—Chorus.

Bell of H. T. School—Tableau.

Nellie Brown—Vocal Trio.

Infancy—Charade, one word, three sylables, three acts.

PANTOMIME:

I want to be somebody's darling—Vocal Solo.

Recollections of childhood—Tablean.

Bridle scene—Tablean.

PART II.

O! Thou Enfinite Jehovah—Quartette.

Rock of Ages—Cantata five scenes.

Ring out the Bells—Chorus.

Longfellow—Charade, one word, three sylables, one act.

Rock Me to Sleep—Illustrated Recitation.

Sleeping Beauty—Tableau.

In the Starlight—Vocal Trio.

Virginia as it was and as it is—Tableau.

Son, sit on the Rind—Tableau.

Waiting and and Watching for Three—Vocal Duet.

Prayer.

V.

The County Court

The County Court convened on the 1st day of January. The first day was mostly consumed in the installation of the new County officers.

Levi Gay was allowed $22-00 for services rendered in cases of lunacy during his term of office.

Randolph Harris was allowed $20.00 for making road to the bridge near Huntersville.

A settlement was made with Sheriff J. C. Arbogast and ordered to be recorded.

It was ordered that R. V. Hill appear before the Court on Friday, January 11th and show that he is eligable to qualify as Sheriff of Pocahontas County.

A rule was awarded against Levi Gay, late Sheriff of the County, returnable on January 11th, to show causewhy he should not be proceeded against by the County for failure to make settlement as required by law.

H. S. Rucker and F. J. Snyder were appointed to examine the Clerk's office and make report to a future term of the Court.

The following official salaries were fixed for the term beginnin g January 1, 1889:

Sheriff, $175.00; Jailor, $75.00; Assessor, $325.00; Prosecuting Attorney, $350.00

Wm. H. Auldridge was appointed Superintendent of the Marlington and Lewisburg Turnpike on the sections now in charge of J. L. Cleek.

Amos Barlow was appointed Superintendent of the Knapp's Creek Bridge near Huntersville, with authority to keep same in repair.

The land owners along the Greenbrier river and Thorney creek road, and the Swago and Ratliff road, are summoned by the Court to appear before it on the first day of the next regular term to show cause why said roads should not be established.

Court adjourned till the 11th day of Jannary, at 11 o'clock.

James McMillan, of Detroit Mich., has been selected to succeed Senator Palmer in the U. S. Senate.

McMillan is a millionaire manufacturer of Detroit.

Judge Flemming's Attorneys have served notice of contrest on Gen. Goff. They claim to be able to establish beyond doubt that 1040 illegal votes were cast for Goff.

This makes work for the Legislature.

Some of the leading colored politicians are clamoring for Cabinet recognition. They say it is time the republican party should give some such substantial evidence of its professed love for the brother in black. The colored man has yet to learn that he is not wanted in the republican party for any purpose but to cast his vote.

NOTICE.

On and after the 15th of January 1889, the firm of J. C. Loury & Son will have dissolved. By that date the accounts due the firm will be ready for settlement when we hope all who know themselves indebted to it will come forward and pay at least a part of their indebtedness. We need money badly to meet our obligations. J. H. Doyle will be received into the copartnership—the style of the firm being Loury & Doyle; the business to be under the management of Joe Loury, Jr. and J. H. Doyle, who will sell goods at rock bottom prices for cash or trade. Please do not ask for goods on credit.

J. C. LOURY, Sr.,
J. C. LOURY, Jr.,
J. H. DOYLE.

SHOEMAKER'S SHOP,
at
Huntersville, W. Va.

I am prepared to make in the best style and order, Boots and Shoes of all kinds, also repairing done in neat style.

J. C. THOMPSON.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-4 Printers fee $4.68.

Commissioner,s Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan, 10 4-4 Printers fee $8,78.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 8th day of Jan., 1889,

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-4 Printers fee $6.56.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 10, 1889.

White House Pets.

Nellie Arthur had a spotted Indian pony for the apple of her eye.

Mrs. Pierce was very fond of the black nag that her husband rode.

Mrs. Monroe brought the first white rabbit to the National premises.

Harriet Lane had a large staghound that was presented to her in England.

"Dolly" Madison's particular pet was a fine saddle nag. At Montpelier she had a pet sheep.

Mrs. Adams had a great goldfish and one of a bluish tint, sent her by a New England sea Captain.

Mrs. Hayes had a magnificent imported Japnese cat that was presented to her by a naval officer.

Martha Washington's chief pet was a beautiful green parrot. Mrs. Washington was also very fond of a fallow deer.

Mrs. Grant had a "strawberry roan" cow that was a suberb milker and supplied her table with milk and cream.

Mrs. Bliss, President Taylor's daughter, who presided over the White House until her father's death, had a splendid white owl.

Miss Cleveland's pet while at White House was a beautiful rose which she found in the conservatory and which now bears her name.

An eagle occupied a cage at the mansion for a part of President Filmore's term, a gift from a political admirer, and the noble bird was often fed by Mrs. Filmore.

Mrs. Jackson never presided at the White House, but a large black and white coon that had been caught when young and trained by one of her faithful slaves had the run of the household.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Limit of a Horse's Speed.

Professor Brewer said, in a recent speech before the National Academy of Sciences: The English thoroughbred is a finished breed, and it has undoubtedly arrived at the summit of its excellence. There has been practically no new blood in this breed since 1760. This breed has been finished and completed in two senses: First, as to its grade, heredity, blood and character, and, secondly, as to its speed, in which the limit has been undoubtedly reached. We have faster horses than our grandfathers, but it is not likely that our grandchildren will have a faster breed than we have now.

In the case of trotters there has been a steady increase of speed. The fastest record is 2.08¾. Less than a dozen horses have ever trotted in less than 2.14.

The best record in running was made in Louisville, the time being 39½.

The speaker showed a table, on which were the number of horses in the last few years which had made a record within five seconds of this time.

The nearest that any horse has come to this record is 1.40, which was done last year. A very large number of horses have made their record but once. There are many that have made as fast time as those that have records, but in not winning the race they got no record. The record as it now stands may be lowered. When I said that speed had reached its maximum I didn't think but that better time would be made. I think about 1.39 will be the speed of runners. Hereafter breeders will be expected to keep up this high standard of excellence rather than to making better time. I believe the thoroughbred has finished his evolution.—Washington Star.

The Heroes Are Not All Dead.

It is generally believed in these prosaic days that heroism and chivalry are dead, that the material of which martyrs were made has all been exhausted, and that men are now controlled almost entirely by selfish motives.

This is the common talk of the day—we hear it on the street corners and read it in our newspapers and novels; in fact we can not go anywhere without hearing some cynical expression of disbelief in the nobility of human nature.

We do not believe that the heroes are all dead. We do not believe that James Givens who died the other day, was the last of his race. This man, Givens, was a common deck hand on the ill-fated steamer John H. Hanna. When the pilot house was on fire, the pilot unable to stand the heat of the flames, abandoned his post. At this supreme moment Givens took his place, and steered the vessel to the bank at the cost of his life.

This humble deck hand had no special incentive to urge him on. He did not rush to his death to save wife, children or sweetheart. He was simply a poor, ignorant fellow who loved his kind, and his great heart would not allow him to seek his own safety when he saw the lives of hundreds in danger. Blinded by the flame and smoke, he held on until the boat struck the shore. He was willing to die in order that others might live.

From time to time we hear of such men as Givens, and they will be heard from again. God will not let such heroes perish entirely from the face of the earth. Their shining examples blaze like beacon lights, and when they lay down their lives for their fellows there will always be others to take their places. Men are not all selfish and heartless. In the higher walks of life we have our "Chinese" Gordons; in the middle classe our Stanleys, and among the humble poor such men as James Givens, the deck hand of the steamer Hanna. While these names are on every lip it will not do to say that our heroes are all dead.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Southern Immigation Convention has adopted resolutions requesting the Legislature of Southern States to take co-opperative measures in the general plan to induce immigration toward. The tide of immigration Westward is ebbing and the South is the coming great section of the country.

We have greater natural advantages than any other portion of the continent. Our soil is richer, our mines inexhaustible. Our climate for salubrity is unequaled; our scenery is renowned, and, political falsehoods to the contrary notwithstanding, our people are among the most genial, generous, hospitable and law abiding to be found on the globe.

All the South lacks is capital and population to develop her unequaled resources to make her commercially, socially and politically what she is naturally, the grandest portion of our country.

To this end the Southern Inter-State Immigration bureau has been established by the Montgomery Convention. It asks the aid of the Legislature of the States to be benefited.

The Legislature of West Virginia should and will examine into the subject carefully. West Virginia is probably the richest in natural advantages of all the Southern States, and has most to gain by incoming capital, population and the other advantages proposed by the Montgomery Convention, whose proceedings we commend to the attention of each individual member of the next Legislature.—Register.

An Odd Postal Regulation.

It is rather an odd thing that if you paste a printed slip on a postal card the Government will charge the receiver letter postage, while if the same matter is printed directly on the card nothing extra is demanded. The same slip which if pasted on a postal card would be charged extra for, may be put into an unsealed envelope and it will then go at printed matter rates, or the whole paper from which the clipping is taken may be sent, containing the article marked, at a much less rate than the Government would charge for the same article attached to the card. That is, the Government would rather carry four ounces for a cent than the four-fifths of an ounce for the same money.—Detroit Free Press.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 17, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 26.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, R. V. Hill.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, G. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. B. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. F. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Rosary of My Years.

BY FATHER RYAN.

Some reckon their age by years,
Some measure their life by art,
But some tell their days by the flow of their tears,
And their life by the moans of their heart,
The dials of earth may show
The length, not the depth, of years;
Few or many may come, few or many may go;
But our time is best measured by tears.

Ah! not by the silver gray
That creeps through the sunny hair,
And not by the scenes we pass on our way—
And not by the furrows the finger of care
On forehead and face have made;
Not so do we count our years;
Not by the sun of the earth—but the shade
Of our souls—and the fall of our tears.

For the young are oftimes old,
Though their brow be bright and fair,
While their blood beats warm their hearts lie cold—
O'er them the spring time—but winter is there—
And the old are oftimes young,
When their hair is thin and white;
And they sing in age as in youth they sung,
And they laugh, for their cross was light.

But bead by bead I tell
The rosary of my years,
From a cross to a crown they lead—'tis well!
And they are blessed with a blessing of tears.
Better a day of strife
Than a century of sleep;
Give me instead of a long stream of life
The tempest and tears of the deep.

A thousand joys may foam
On the billows of all the years;
But never the foam brings the brave bark home—
It reaches the heaven through tears.

A Meeting.

At a meeting of the citizens of the Little Levels, held Thursday, Dec. 20th, 1889: Isaac McNeel being made Chairman, and W. H. Overholt, Secretary. A committee of three being appointed, consisting of C. J. Stulting, Dr. J. A. Larue and W. H. Overholt to draft resolutions expressive of the objects of this meeting. The following resolutions were reported and unanimously adopted:

Resolved—That as citizens of the Little Levels we are proud of the name and character which our people have acquired as a community, as a temperate peaceful and law abiding people. That we recognize that the prosperity which has been vouchsafed, our community has been the result of good morals and good conduct of our people under the blessing of God. Therefore, desiring to preserve unimpaired the blessings we have so long enjoyed, and learning that there is an effort being made by persons who in disregard and open violation of our laws would introduce into our midst for sale and barter intoxicating drinks, in disregard of every interest which is dear to the citizens of this community.

Resolved—That we desire to express publicly our indignation at the promoters and abettors of such an enterprise and earnestly request the co-operation of every good citizen in an effort to maintain the laws in their spirit as well as letter and to bring to punishment any one who would attempt to destroy the peace, prosperity and happiness of our people by selling intoxicating drinks in in our midst.

Resolved—That we urge upon all persons who may be in any way connected with this nefarious business the wisdom and necessity of abandoning it at once. We entreat them by all that may yet remain sacred to them. In the name of our homes, our wives, our children. In the name of our young men, who are the light of our eyes and the hope of our country, as well as the pride and support of our age; contaminate them not with your foul and unholy business. Desist now from efforts which if successful can only involve you with others in ruin for be sure as God, lives your sin will find you out.

Resolved—That we warn all persons against engaging in anyway in the sale or distribution of ardent spirits in our community and earnestly pledge our united support to every lawful effort which may be made to wipe out this foul blot upon the good name of our citizens and in opposition to those who in disregard of the spirit of the law and the known sentiments of every large majority of the citizens of this community, would introduce spirituous liquors in our midst; we will stand for our homes our families our good names our property, and we warn them that we will find means to enforce our wishes, and in self defense use such means as God has given us to eradicate this evil.

Resolved—That after obtaining the signatures of the citizens of this community to these resolutions, that two copies of the same be posted at suitable places, and that a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the Pocahontas TIMES with a request that they be published.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

ISAAC MCNEEL, Chairman.
W. H. OVERHOLT, Secretary.

A Letter to the Public

To the Public I would like to say that my school has already succeeded beyond anything that I expected. Despite the most excellent Public school with its highly accomplished and energetic faculty my school has grown until now it numbers 30 on roll. I still appeal to the citizens of Pocahontas and adjoining counties for help in building up a school for them. No enterprise of any consequence is without opposition: Therefore, with brave heart, fixed purpose, your help, and a firm trust in God I may make my coming among you a success. Last week appeared in The TIMES a program of an entertainment given by my girls and boys 24th Dec. The pith and humor were only to illustrate the frivolous side of life and the joyousness of the approaching season; while the more solid and serious parts were to characterize the thoughts which should sometimes enter the deepest recess of every heart.

I am well aware that much has been said about the entertainment and against it. Be that as it may, one thing is true, I have given it twice before in different sections of countries and before intelligent people, and nothing of fault was ever made of it before. It is reported too that Rev. Mr. Sydenstricker stopped his children from my school because of the grand failure of the entertainment. I will give you the direct language of Mr. Sydenstricker to myself. "Miss Georgie, owing to some chage to be made in the school over here, and because they lose so many recitations while attending your school. I will not send them any more, not that I have any objections to your teaching." Mr. Sydenstricker's children only took Latin from me and were necessarily absent a while from the other school. He also told me that he had heard no one object to my teaching. And in the course of conversation he told me that he was as much my friend as ever.

I am fully satisfied that the entertainment was all that it promised to be and that nothing of sin was committed, as some say. I wish my neighbor school will and earnestly trust that the efficient faculty may do much to implant and ground thorough principles in those entrusted to their care; for it is indeed a responsible position to be master of a school. Hoping to receive your aid I am yours Respectfully,

G. M. SHEARER.
Principal H. T. School.

Polled vs. Horned Cattle.

Academy, W. Va.,
Jan. 8th, 1889.

ED. TIMES: I venture this letter (if you will allow the space it will occupy) not for the sake of notoriety, nor to see my name in print, but with the hope that it may be of some interest to your readers, and thereby cause better writers to contribute of their views and opinions on matters more interesting, and that will add subscribers to your paper. It appears to me that our business men, in fact all our citizens should give your paper every available aid, both by patronizing it and by contributing to its columns. Our people lack neither the intelligence nor the time necessary to furnish you one page of good readable matter each week. Some two years ago Col. Gatewood, of Big Spring contributed a very interesting article on the subject of Silos and Ensilage. I would suggest to the Col. that another article on the same subject would be in order, as with two years experience he could give us facts demonstrated.

I am now very much interested in the subject of polled vs horned cattle, with my mind fully made up in favor of the farmer. I think there can be no question of doubt that horns will have to go: but the process of change will of necessity be slow. Every reason demands their expulsion, with none for retaining them, viz: safety to mankind as well as to the brutes themselves; comfort to the cattle and their owners in pens, barns and especially in shipping; by not being afraid of each other they will fatten faster; grown animals become like calves, lie down close together, will eat together and as many water from the same trough as can get to it.

The most human way to get rid of horns is to breed them off; and there are several species of hornless cattle that are very fine. I believe the polled Augus to be as fine a breed animal as the Durham or Hereford and quite as good or better for milk; and much hardier than either; especially adapted to our mountain ranges.

But for one I cannot wait for the slow process of breeding off the horns, so I have already dehorned 10 cows and a three year old bull about two months ago.
They are now well over it, and are really improved in appearance. I shall finish up my cows and yearlings about the 1st of April, some 30 head beside those already dehorned. I shall close by saying that on a trip last spring to and through Kansas. I know a great many dehorned cattle of all ages, and met with a gentleman (a farmer and stock raiser who was a Pocahontas boy—Dick Edmiston, son of Jas. Edmiston, dec'd.) He emigrated to Kan. directly after the war, and has been in the dehorning business for a length of time. From him I learned the process, and I am indebted to him for his interest in my welfare while his guest.

Respectfully,
F. A. RENICK.

Rely on Yourself.

For the TIMES.

Rely on yourself, and do not be satisfied with following the beaten track of others. Strike out new paths. Aim at higher attainments.

Only the indolent are satisfied with walking in the steps of others.

On early education, depends the intellectual efforts of children.

Take the child that is surrounded with everything that the young heart desires, and there is nothing left for the exercise of his own powers; nothing to expand the mind, and they never acquire that strength of mind which is necessary for extensive usefulness.

On the other hand take the child that has no luxuries. Give him a few articles and he will add others by his own invention.

The child derives his highest pleasure from doing something for himself—and the forming of self commences, with the first buddings of reason and imagination. The heart and moral affections must be cultivated, as well as the intellect, to form a noble character. Man is the maker of his own mind. God has so constituted the human intellect that it can only grow by its own action. So the childish intellect rises by its own efforts, and becomes an ornament to society, and and a blessing to the world.

BELLA F. CLARK,
Academy, W. Va.

Beecher's Advice.

Henry Ward Beecher in one of his latest sermons said: "To all the young that are coming into the church I say be young be gay, be hopeful, be mirthful. If God has given you a sparkling disposition, thank God and cultivate it. While it may not be the object of your life to have the joy that comes from these qualities, it is the privilege of your life to perform all your duties under its influence, and they can be performed in no other way so well. The world needs just such a development of Christianity. The world is full of sorrow it needs cheer. It is full of despondency; it needs hope. It is full of cowardice; it needs courage. It travails in pain; it wants a healthful atmosphere; sweet and balmy and radiant. It wants a singing Christianity. It wants the messenger of Christ to be a light-bearer, and no man has the right to make a dark lantern, to go home and open the light to himself and family alone. They that carry a burdensome, a woe-smitten face, dishonor God. It is contrary to his word. It is saying substancially to the world that all hope, all the promise of the divine presence, all the love which is poured like an atmosphere around about us every day from the bosom of Jesus Christ, is false and wrong. The man that carries a doubting, weary, saddened face misinterprets the religion of Jesus Christ."

Candidate's Pictures.

Foreman (great daily)—"Here's an order from down stairs to print a cut of Bliffkins, the People's candidate for Mayor. We haven't any cuts of him.

Able Editor—"How much did he pay for it?"

"Five dollars."

"Only $5. Scratch a beard on Lydia Pinkham and run that in.—Philadelphia Record.

A man in a Western town hauled 800 cart loads of dirt in one month, and the booming editor published it as "800 transfers of real estate for the month."

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 17, 1889.

From The Capital City.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 8.—To-day has been a lively day among the candidates for positions in the coming session of the W. Va. Legislature. Men of note from all parts of the mountain state graced the streets of this city to-day, coming principally to see how "the ball" would open up. Among those present were Judge Campbell, of Monroe, Hon. Jno. E. Kenna, Judge Fleming, Jno. D. Alderson, Esq., Danl. B. Lucas and many others who have figured prominently in West Virginia politics, together with numerous applicants for pageship, clerks etc.

At 2 p. m. the Democrats held rather a conferee, but did not go into a caucus until 8 p.m. Everything worked nicely and nominations were made for the various positions to be filled to-morrow upon the convening of the House. Jos. J. Wood, Esq., from Ohio was elected Speaker of the House over Hon. Jos. Sprigg, of Hardy. J. M. Hamilton, Esq., was elected Chief Clerk over Col. J. B. Peyton, of Wheeling; W. B. Gibbs, of Roane, was elected Sergt-at-Arms over three other gentlemen.

Everything passed off as smoothly as could be in the Democratic House, but when we turn to the Republican Senate we find much dissension upon various points and up to this writing they have not brought out a man for the Pres. of that body, and as to how matters will turn out with them remains to be seen.

The Legislature will convene at 12 m. to-morrow. The Democrats will organize the House and it is probable that Col. Carr, the Union Labor Legislator may get the Presidency of the Senate since harmony doesn't reign in the Republican camps. The committees and committee clerks will be appointed Thursday morning.

Jan. 9.—The full Democratic ticket was elected in the house to-day; all by a majority of four.

The Senate stands 12 Dem., 13 Rep. and one Union Labor, (E. S. Carr). The Democrats nominated Mr. Carr for the Presidency of that body, and it has been balloting all day on the Presidency, each ballot standing a tie. So everything is at a stand still and the Senate unorganized.

No business of importance was transacted in the House to-day.

W.

The Legislature

The West Virginia Legislature met in Charleston on Jany. 9th. The House organized with but little difficulty, selecting Hon. J. J. Wood, of Ohio County, Speaker, J. M. Hamilton, of Calhoun County, Clerk, and W. B. Gibbs of Roane County, Sergeant-at-arms.

[illegible] here the whole matter ended and [illegible] present indications may stay ended for some time. The republicans in the Senate seem determined that no organization of that body shall be effected; so from day to day the honorable Senators ballot for President, all to no purpose except that the fun is being had at the expense of the State, to the tune of about $500 a day.

The democrats first cast their votes for Col. Robt. Carr, of Kanawha County, but after several tie votes had been cast they agreed to support anyone the republicans might designate, rather than tie up business by a continued dead lock. No sooner, however, had the democrats gone over to the republican candidate than the republicans deserted him and scattered their vote in such a way as to make an election impossible.

What they hope to gain by this manner of conduct is not evident, unless it is that they hope by this means to prevent an investigation by the Legislature of the alleged election frauds, fearing such investigation might unearth things they prefer should remain buried.

There is certainly no excuse for such conduct, and it by no means argues well for those who indulge in it.

A Man and His Work.

Napoleon used to say that it did not matter what a man's trade was—if he was the best workman in his line he was a very superior man, deserving as much honor as anyone in the empire.

Young men just starting in life with a prejudice against manuel labor would do well to get this idea into their heads. When a man is determined to do his best work he will improve his methods, and his increasing brain-power and skill will be so apparent that the lowest honest occupation will be ennobled, and the toiler will have the respect of all good men.

We have in our mind as we write a man who might easily have made a reputation in literature, journalism or law, but he deliberately chose the occupation of a canvasser for a large publishing house. He knew that his education, abilities and tastes fitted him for a high place in some learned profession, but he was also conscious of the fact that he was born with a certain tact and magnetism which never failed to win men and bend them to his will. He was poor and wanted money, plenty of it, and quick returns for his work. He found that the prejudice against canvassing was so great that heavy commissions were offered to first-class men. So he made a contract with the publishing house, not to sell books, but to secure subscriptions for something in the art line. In fifteen years he accumulated a fortune. Last year his commissions amounted to $17,500, and he has several times refused a salary of $10,000 a year. This man feels a pride in his work. He knew that the only way to make his occupation pleasant and profitable was to go to the very top, and he went there. Men joke and sneer when they speak of book agents canvassers, but they become very thoughtful when this master of his business takes them in hand. They recognize in him great talent, an earnest purpose, and all the points that make a gentleman.

Now, there are hundreds of other occupations less popular, and involving more distasteful work than this business of canvassing, that can be elevated and made remunerative by the right men. When we say right men we mean men who will train every brain cell in their heads and every nerve and muscle in their bodies to aid them in doing absolutely perfect work.

Does all this require an exceptionally gifted person? By no means. It is utterly impossible to work intelligently with one's powers concentrated upon a definite object without achieving a marked degree of success, and the average man will find that this constant application and concentration will take the place of genius. The farmer, mechanic or clerk who will train himself mentally and physically for the best work that is possible in his field may make more or less than the canvasser whose story we have told for their encouragement, but one thing is certain—their measure of success and the development of their faculties will win admiring recognition, and they will take their place among the superior men of the community in which they live. There is more in the man than there is in the occupation.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Hood's Sarsaparilly Calendar for 1889 is one of the neatest and prettiest we have seen. If the medicine is half so good it is well worth taking.

The Baltimore Sun says: "The Senate tariff bill has been getting along swimmingly until now by deferring consideration of items upon which the Republican Senators are not well agreed. Strange to say, sugar is the cause of most of the bitterness that is said to exist. Senators Plumb, Ingalls and Stanford oppose the proposal to cut down the duty on sugar 50 per cent. This opposition might be met by a bounty of 1 cent per pound on all sugar produced in Kansas and elsewhere in this country, but a bounty, too, might develop opposition. There are other features of the bill that are not wholly satisfactory. For a bill that is not to pass it has a great deal of work upon it. A worse tariff bill has never been proposed. No pretense is made now of protecting labor; the object is to "check imports."

Minister Phelps expects to return to the U. S. by March 4th, so that President Harrison can send a new minister to England without delay.

The County Commissioners of Kanawha county have torn down their old Court House, which they will replace by a new one costing over $100,000

The Delineator for February lately received is unusually good. This periodical is a general favorite with the ladies, and is well worth all it costs. Published by the Butterick Publishing Co., New York.

If the Legislature is as long about electing a United States Senator as it is organizing, there is danger of Kenna's term expiring before a successor is chosen.

The "kicking" element of the last Legislature seems to hava fallen into line very gratefully. The trouble is now on the other side of the house.

A very distructive cyclone swept over the country last week; paying special attention to portions of Pennsylvania. Great damage was kone to property and many lives lost at both Pittsburg and Reading.

President-elect Harrison has been persuaded to go this far with brother Blaine—he will tender him the Secretaryship of State, provided a solemn promise is made by brother Blaine that he will not take it.—Charleston Star.

Justice Barrett, of New York, has decided that by entering the sugar trust the North River Sugar Refining Company has violated its charter and forfeited its right to corporate existence. A righteous decision.

Nothing remains of the famous English settlement of Jamestown, Va., begun in 1607, save the ruins of a church tower, and this is crumbling year by year. Tree roots have cracked the monumental slabs in the church yard, and thus one of the few localities recalling the first years of American history is slowly losing its distinctive features.

Not long ago 3,000 tons of pig iron were sent from Birmingham, Ala., to Pittsburg. Since 1879 the iron production of Alabama has increased from forty tons to 292,500 tons a year. Alabama is fourth in rank—after Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois—as an iron producing state. Tennessee holds the fifth place.

The biennial message of Gov. E. W. Wilson to the Legislature of West Virginia is now before the people. We regard it as about the ablest State paper the Governor has given us during his administration. He pays special attention to election laws and their abuses, and make what we deem wise and wholesomes suggestions to our law makers. Gov. Wilson doesn't hesitate to say what he thinks, nor to call a spade by its right name.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lester Henderson will preach at the following places:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	[illegible]	4 P. M.
2nd "	[illegible]	11 A. M.
" "	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd "	[illegible]	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th "	Bethel,	11 A. M.
" "	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—L. M. McClintic made a visit to Bath Co., Va., this week.

—A. W. Moore, Esq., was in town Tuesday.

—Constable Jas. H. Buzzard was down at Hillsboro this week on official business.

—S. B. Moore and J. K. Gay, of Edray were in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Mrs. J. T. Hogsett, of Mill Point was at the Huntersville Hotel Sunday.

—Call at Jacob Boner, if you want "cheap goods." "Say Yesh."

—Guy Slavens, who has been in Nebraska for some time, came home this week.

—J. W. Milligan and family are for the present stopping with H. M. Lockridge, Esq., on Knapp's creek.

—We are glad to learn that Quincy W. Pouge is improving, and is now thought to be out of immediate danger.

—Those who send communications to the TIMES will please do so not later than by Monday's mail. It sometimes puts us to no little inconvenience to have them later.

—Geo. W. Wagoner took charge of Hotel Pocahontas last Tuesday. Mr. Wagoner is full of energy and push and will no doubt make a successful landlord.

—Mr. Lanty Lockridge, who has been stopping for sometime at Hotel Pocahontas, has taken up quarters at the residence of his nephew, H. M. Lockridge; but, as we promised not to put his name in the paper, we are unable to make mention of the fact.

—Justice Shrader held his first Court at this place last Thursday, and will hold his next term beginning on the 24th. Between the County Court and the District Court Huntersville is well supplied with Courts.

—The January number of Babyhood, lately received, is fully up to past issues. This is a most interesting and instructive magazine. No mother should be without it. Published by Babyhood Pub. Co., 5 Beekman St., N. Y.

—Mrs. Wm. L. Brown and Mrs. J. H. Patterson of Green Bank, were down a few days ago to see their brother Jno. B. Slavens, who is quite ill at the Huntersville Hotel.

—The account of the meeting of the Citizens at Hillsboro which appears on the first page of this issue, was signed by seventy nine of the citizens of that vicinity, but to save space we omitted all but the Chairman and Secretary.

—F. Lee Dever, Esq., was in town Monday. He informed us that he would start back to Duluth, Minn. this week. The Northwest seems to have used him well and he has no notion of leaving that section soon.

—Mr. H. M. Lockridge, who has been severely afflicted with rheumatism for some months, is now able to walk about on crutches. He was at church last Sunday for the first time since his recovery.

—Jas. H. Doyle is actively engaged in remodeling the ice house at the Huntersville Hotel. The ice crop just now is not very promising; but, if he should succeed in filling his new house, there will be no lack of the cooling substance at his Hotel next summer.

—We are in receipt of the Gordonsville Gazette, published by J. B. Canfield. Mr. Canfield seems to be making a good beginning in this new field. We hope he may succeed beyond his expectations.

—Our friend C. O. Arbogast returned from Charleston last Saturday. Charlie was an applicant for Sergeant-at-arms of the House of Delegates, and we are informed by those who ought to know that he would have gotten the place, had he been fairly dealt with.

—We hope the County Court will insist on the public respecting the order requiring all persons to address the Court from the bar. It is extremely undignified in a full grown man to spit on his hands, climb up the railing around the bench, whisper to the Court till out of breath and then let go his hold and slide down.

—The Cosmopolitan, for January an illustrated monthly Magazine, published by John B. Walker, 363 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.—is before us. This number in point of excellence is fully up, the standard. We regard the Cosmopolitan as one of the very best periodical of thes day. Its pages are filled with choice illustrations and the writings of our very best English authors.

—On the first page of this issue appears an interesting letter from F. A. Renick, Esq., of Academy. We hope that many of our readers will respond to the suggestion of Mr. Renick by writing us an occasional letter on some timely topic. The contribution he asks for from Col. Gatewood would be very acceptable, and Mr. Renick must not make this his last.

Dunmore Doings.

Fine weather mixed with mud. Every thing looks like spring. The birds are singing, and the hens laying.

Mr. J. B. White begins his subscription school at this place today.

But little sickness in this neighborhood.

Cattle are wintering well, and consuming a small amount of feed.

Robt. McGlaughlin is now thought to be out of danger, and will soon be himself again if he doesn't take a relapse. The child is also doing well.

Jan. 13th. TOM SAWYER.

Edray Notes.

Joe. Gibson, who has been dangerously ill for some time, is better.

A. Patterson Poage left last week for Indiana on a visit to relatives.

Geo. Palser, of Neb., in visiting friends and settling up some business in this neighborhood; he has sold his land on Buck's mountain to Mrs. Mary E. Lange.

Isaac Sharps is getting out a fine lot of cherry lumber at this place. Gay and Moore are also getting out a nice lot of cherry at their mill on crooked fork of Elk.

Esq. Barlow is full of business already; merchants and late sheriffs, as well as other are filling up the docket.

Your editorial of last week on changing the name of the State meets with hearty endorsement on the part of the people of this District. We don't want to be compelled to know a home, or stop singing "West Virginia Hills."

X.

NOTICE.

A reward of $10 will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our birds, etc. that have been stolen from the woods or along the railroad.

ST. LAWRENCE BOOM & M'F'G CO.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

jan 24 4-t

The County Court.

The Court met, pursuant to adjournment, last Friday morning, and continued its sitting until Saturday afternoon. The time was occupied principally in making settlements with the present sheriff and his immediate predecessor, and in deciding who shall fill that office for the next term.

The Court at last declared the office vacant and appointed Geo. W. Callison to act for the term of two years, beginning Jany. 1, 1889.

Mr. Callison, however, declined to accept the office, and the Court proceeded to appoint I. B. Moore.

Mr. Moore not being present at the time, it is not known whether he will accept; so the matter is not settled beyond a doubt yet.

The Court adjourned to meet on Monday, Jany. 21, at which time Mr. Moore will either qualify or resign and give some one else the opportunity to decline the honor.

If the office is to fall into the hands of anyone who was not regularly elected, we don't think it could be placed in charge of a better or more deserving man than I. B. Moore. He is qualified to do the work in an acceptable manner, and we feel sure he would make a good officer.

It is, of course, to be regretted that the office could not be filled by the one chosen at the polls by so handsome a majority.

A Family of Coincidences.

On Glade mountain, this State resides the most peculiar family in the country. It is a family of coincidences. The father and mother were married on the 14th day of October, they have had nine children, all of whom were born on the 14th of October; five of the children are dead, and all of them ceased to breathe on the 14th day of October. The name of the head of the family is Joshua Franklin. He says that he was a confederate soldier; that he was captured twice by the Yankees, and that he had lost two brothers in the war, and that all four of the mishaps or misfortunes of war occurred on the memorable 14th of October. In the neighborhood the Franklin family is regarded with superstition and not a human being can be prevailed upon to stay either in the house or on the premises on either day or night of the 14th of October.—Fayette Democrat.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN has long held the first rank among the leading publications regarding practical information about art, sciences, mechanics, chemistry inventions, and manufactures. No one who wishes to keep acquainted with the rapid advancement along these lines can dispense with it. Munn & Co., 361 Broadway, New York. Price, $3 00 a year. Copies of the paper may be seen at this office, and subscriptions received.

The West Virginia Freeman, Prohibition organ published at Parkersburg, has suspended publication.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 15 4-t Printers fee $4.62.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als,

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road, and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Grify. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4 t Printers fee $6,75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are loins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 5th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-4 Printers fee $6.98.

Pocahontas Times.

G. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 17, 1889.

THE COST OF WAR.

A Washington correspondent has been comparing the statistics of the loss by death of Union soldiers during the rebellion, with the mortality of other wars. Reports show that the northern and southern armies met in more than 2,000 skirmishes and battles. In 148 of these conflicts the loss on the Federal side was more than 500 men, and in at least 19 battles more than 10,000 men were reported lost on each side. The appended table shows that the combined losses of the Federal and Confederate forces, in killed, wounded and missing, in the following engagements were: Shiloh, 24,000; Antietam, 38,000; Stone river, 38,000; Chancellorsville, 28,000; Gettysburg, 54,000; Chickamauga, 33,000; McClellan's peninsular campaign, 180,000, and Sherman's campaign, 125,000.

Waterloo was one of the most desperate and bloody fields chronicled in European history, and yet Wellington's casualties were less than 12 per cent., his losses being 4,232 killed and 958 wounded out of over 100,000 men, while at Shiloh one side lost in killed and wounded 9,730 out of 34,000, while their opponents report their killed and wounded at 9,616, making the casualties about 30 per cent. At the great battle of Wagram Napoleon lost but about 5 per cent. At Wurzburg the French lost but 3 1-2 per cent., and yet the army gave up the field and retreated to the Rhine. At Roucour Marshal Saxe lost but 2 1-2 per cent. At Zurich Massena lost but 8 per cent. At Legnitz Frederick lost but 6 1-2 per cent. At Malplaquet Marlborough lost but 10 per cent., and at Ramillies the same intrepid commander lost but 6 per cent. At Coutras Henry of Navarre was reported as cut to pieces, yet his loss was less than 10 per cent. At Lodi Napoleon lost 1 1-4 per cent. At Valmy Frederick William lost but 3 per cent., and at the great battles of Marengo and Austerlitz, sanguinary as they were, Napoleon lost an average of less than 14 1-2 per cent.

At Magenta and Solferino, in 1859, the average loss of both armies was less than 9 per cent. At Koniggratz, in 1866, it was 6 per cent. At Woerth, Spicheren, Mars la Tour, Gravelotte and Sedan, in 1870, the average loss was 12 per cent., while at Linden Gen. Moreau lost but 1 per cent., and the Archduke John lost but 7 per cent in killed and wounded. Americans would scarcely call this a lively skirmish. At Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Atlanta, Gettysburg, [illegible], the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, the loss frequently reached, and sometimes exceeded, 40 per cent. Official statistics show that of the 2,000,000 men enlisted, there were killed in battle 44,238; died of wounds, 49,205; died of disease, 186,216; died of unknown causes, 25,184; total, 303,843. This includes only those whose death while in the army had been actually proved. To this number should be added, first 26,000 men who are known to have died while in the hands of the enemy as prisoners of war, and many others in the same manner whose deaths are unrecorded; second, a fair percentage of the 205,795 men who are put down on the official reports as deserters and missing in action, for those who participated in the war know that men frequently disappeared who, it was certain had not deserted, yet could not be otherwise officially accounted for; third, thousands who are buried in private cemeteries all over the north, who died while home on furlough. The nation's dead are buried in seventy-three national cemeteries, of which only twelve are in the northern states.

The proportion of deaths from all causes in the troops of each state was as follows: Maine, 1 in 7; New Hampshire, 1 in 7; Vermont, 1 in 6; Massachusetts, 1 in 9; Rhode Island, 1 in 11; Connecticut, 1 in 10; New York, 1 in 12; New Jersey, 1 in 12; Pennsylvania, 1 in 12; Delaware, 1 in 20; Maryland, 1 in 26; Ohio, 1 in 9; Indiana, 1 in 8; Illinois, 1 in 7; Michigan 1 in 6; Wisconsin, 1 in 7; Minnesota, 1 in 8; Iowa, 1 in 5 (nearly 6); Kansas, 1 in 5; California, 1 in 20; West Virginia, 1 in 9; Kentucky, 1 in 19; Missouri, 1 in 9.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Eating by the Alphabet.

"Have you got anything here beginning with 'k' that's good to eat?" inquired a new customer in a well-known local delicacy market last Tuesday. "How will pickled kidneys answer?" replied the clerk, after a moment's thought. "First rate. Give me a dozen cans. The kitten's life is saved," exclaimed the strange patron with enthusiasm. "I told my wife," he continued, "that if I failed to send home a kangaroo, dead or alive, before 2 o'clock I should expect to find the kitten served up for supper in the latest Chinese style. But your happy thought saved her. You see we all got tired of eating the same things day after day, and so last month we agreed that during December we would begin and eat up (or rather down) the alphabet, taking one letter a day, with bread, potatoes, tea and coffee thrown in as staples. So December 1 we inaugurated the dietary system with a bill of fare consisting of apples in many forms, apricots pickled, asparagus, almonds, and the staples. The next day's menu was beef, beets, beans, biscuits, buttermilk, bacon, and bon-bons. The following day we feasted on chicken, codfish balls, clams, celery, cucumbers (fifty cents each), crabs, cheese, cake, crackers, crullers, carrots, canned currants, canned cherries citrons, cider catsup and candy. And so it has gone on. The fifth day would have been a fast day had it not been for eggs, but we made an Easter of it. Yesterday we dined, breakfasted and supped chiefly on jellies. To-day your kidney suggestion saves us from starvation, while to-morrow we will grow fat on liver, lamb, lobster, lettuce, etc. A queer thing about our new food departure is the number of things it has led us to put in our mouths which we never thought of before."—Buffalo Express.

Charles Sumner and his Friends.

Sumner was very careful of the feelings of his personal friends, many of whom disagreed emphatically with him on political subjects. Some of them were not of the same party with himself; some were not of the same wing of the party. After president Grant and his cabinet became estranged from the senator, certain of his friends failed to follow him. Among them was the journalist, Maj. Ben. Perley Poore who, in his letters and telegrams, took strong ground for the president and against the senator. The contest at the time was exceedingly bitter, and "Perley's" dispatches reflected the degree of acerbity felt by the president's friends.

Sumner's friends were inclined to take issue with the journalists, holding that the tone of his letters was incompatible with his personal relations toward the senator and brought them to Sumners attention. He would hear just enough of them to know what was being spoken of, and then, if the paper had been handed him, would throw it into the waste basket, exclaiming "I like him too well to read his letters." He was once asked, "How can you like him when he speaks of you in such terms?" and his reply was: "I like the person, not the writer; I do my duty as I see it; let him do his as he sees it. Why should we quarrel?"—Arnold Burges Johnson, in the Cosmopolitan.

Henry Watterson's Father.

One of the pleasant old young men of Washington, says the New York Tribune, is the Hon. Harvey M. Waterson, the father of Henry Watterson. Imagine to yourself a tall and slightly-built man, with a large head of gray hair, a white beard falling over his chest, and a pair of the brightest and kindest blue eyes you will find anywhere. Imagine this man to be seventy-five years old, but at the same time to move about with as firm a step as though he was but thirty-five. Listen to his voice, and it comes forth in strong chest tones. Talk to him and he will tell you that he feels younger as the years grow older and that he hopes to last for many years yet.

Said Mr. Watterson once to me in response to a question:

The first sign of a man's failing faculties is seen in his voice. I can go on the street and speak in such tones as can be heard 300 yards away. I spend my winters in Washington and my summers in Louisville, and while there I look over the exchanges in the newspaper office and scan about fifty papers a day. I am glad that I am alive and I feel that my good health at this age is due to temperance and in not allowing myself to be worried about anything. I am very careful of my eating and I have not had three unhappy hours from worry in my whole life. When I have stubbed my toe I have not cursed the universe because of my carelessness, but thanked the Lord I did not break my neck."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. C. F. Moore, Editor. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 31, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year in advance. No. 28.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard,
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

DOES ANY ONE KNOW?

Does any one know what's in your heart and mine,
The sorrow and song,
The demon of sin and the angel divine,
The right and the wrong;
The dread of the darkness, the love of the day,
The ebb and the flow
Of hope and of doubt for ever and aye,
Does any one know?

Does any one dream of the love that is yours,
The heart that is mine;
The depth and the width of the cup which each pours
Of richest red wine;
Of the hate that is dark as the midnight of grief,
The anguish and woe,
The doubt clouds of halting and blind unbelief,
Does any one know?

Does any one see what we have in the heart
To love and to hate;
Of life's every motive an intricate part,
Of chance and of fate;
The memory of kisses, of starlight, of songs,
Of roses and snow,
Of women's sweet eyes, of prayers and of wrongs,
Does any know?

Does any one hearken to music of bells,
And the sigh of the sea,
And the whisper of woodlands that mystically swells
For you and for me;
The sound of the fond voices that ever respond,
In tones soft and low,
To the prayer we are breathing into the beyond,
Does any one know?

—[N. Waterman in New York Mercury.

Forest Preservation.

The series of articles by Professor Shaler in Scribner's has ably presented the topic of tree preservation, a topic the American people must positively give heed to. No nation under the sun was in times of peace ever so wasteful as our own. The increasing ease of securing a supply of food has tended for some hundreds of years, if not thousands, to render human beings less economical of means and careful of methods. The older races, like the Chinese, never waste; to them everything has its use. But we have destroyed as much as we have produced. Forests that nature raised by the labor of a thousand years we have burned up in a day. Civilization has invented the phrase clearing up, which means wanton removal of all things that stand in the way of our immediate needs. Where vast stretches of oaks covered millions of acres it is difficult to find a single grove or a single tree; but how inestimable such remains are when found! It is not wholly from the utilitarian standpoint that we look, but the æsthetic. These are like their surroundings. If it be undesirable to dwell in the forest, it is still more undesirable to dwell without the companionship of trees. But as a matter of economy and physical necessity we are compelled to have sympathy for and with the vegetable world. Our destiny, in common with the whole animal kingdom, is identified with the plant kingdom. In the struggle for existence, from the outset, there has been a mutual interdependence of all living things. If we destroy the trees we injure our own progress and prospects. In the present economy of nature protoplasm, or the basis of life, can only be created by the plant kingdom; from it we receive the same at second hand. But our existence is dependent on trees and plants in many other ways, and always has been. The earliest human races were littoral, or shore dwellers. They had no tools to work their way through forests, nor weapons to cope with the denizens of the forest. But with increase of the art of making tools human beings left the shore and roamed the forests as hunters. To the hunting races the destruction of trees was the destruction of their means of existence. The North American Indian saw only starvation in the white man's unsparing ax.

Civilization has brought us into even closer relation to trees, and dependence on vegetation. The equilibrium of the air, adjusting the proportions of carbon gases for our healthy existence, depends on trees. Malaria is not caused, but prevented, by a judicious proportion of forest land. Professor Shaler takes up the case with great energy to show that the most serious result following the destruction of our forests will be the consequent loss of soil, turning vast areas into deserts. "Already a large part of many fertile regions has been sterilized in this fashion; and each year a larger portion of our infinitely precious heritage of soil slips into rivers and finds its way to the sea, because we have deprived it of the protecting coating of vegetation." We have also to consider the immense vegetation deposit which is yearly added to the soil where forests abound. Our own culture takes from the soil, on the contrary, more than it gives. So the waste from the rain is greater in tilled soil than in wooded lands. In forests the soil is ever deepening; in open lands ever decreasing. This evil we must endure, but should be careful not to aggravate. The amount of soil now swept away annually is actually clogging the large rivers, compelling them constantly to change channels. The argument of Professor Shaler is pressed to show that no man has such a right in soil that he may be wasteful of it, or use it for the disadvantage of his neighbors. Gorvernment, he holds, should interfere to prevent waste of forests.

The question of forest preservation has been more or less considered by several of the states, but, in fact, apart from the encouragement of tree planting, little has been done in a systematic manner to regulate the use or prevent the waste of trees. Our relation to the vegetable kingdom grows even more intricate, and our serious dependence more emphasized constanly since the demands of civilization for timber and fuel increase, and must increase.

At present the greatest loss in the way of forest destruction is from fires caused by locomotives, malice or carlessness. Some of the railroads have already taken action to prevent the recurrence of the evil from locomotive sparks. The plan adopted is to clear away all timber growth for 100 feet on each side of the track. A furrow is then run along the outer edge of this space, and the whole kept mowed and clean. The loss from timber fires is not less than an average of $2,000,000 per state annually. This is wholly preventable.

The work of Professor Shaler is notable in this respect, that it makes the subject, which has been rather held to be local, to be a continental matter. He has enlarged the subject, and shown that it vitally touches the very possibility of human existence.—Globe-Democrat.

Royal Salaries in Europe.

A table recently prepared shows the royal salaries paid in Europe, and it forms interesting reading for those who have an idea that our own government is conducted on a wasteful and extravagant plan.

The emperor of Russia receives $8,250,000 per annum; the sultan of Turkey, $6,000,000; the emperor of Austria, $4,000,000; the king of Prussia, $3,000,000; the king of Italy, $2,400,000; the queen of England, $2,200,000; the queen of Spain, $1,800,000, and the king of Belgium, $500,000.

What a sermon against monarchical government this brief table contains. Eight persons, men and women—for kings and queens are nothing more—receive each year in the aggregate $28,150,000 for doing what? For doing nothing that hundreds—maybe thousands—of their subjects could not do just as well and possibly much better. Some of these monarchs get their salaries for really doing nothing. Queen Victoria, for example, has absolutely no function to perform except to represent in her royal person the idea of dominion and sovereignty. She has no part in the government of the country. The most irrepressible Irish member of parliament does more and has more to say about ruling the empire than Victoria has; and yet because she is what she is, the mere eidolon of a bygone autocracy, her loving subjects pay her over $2,000,000 every year for her own use and benefit.

The king of Prussia receives $3,000,000 a year as compensation for his arduous royal duties; and when it is considered that he is the emperor of Germany, that he is a man over 90 years of age, and that the reins of government have been for years in the hands of Bismarck, it must be admitted that, judged by republican standards, he does not earn his salary.

Probably the czar of Russia performs as much or more actual labor than any reigning sovereign in Europe. The form of government of Russia being a despotism, the czar must necessarily center all authority in himself and be in fact as well as name, the fountain and source of all authority. But even for his duties, irksome, multifarious and difficult though they may be, $8,250,000 is more than they are worth, especially in view of the financial condition of Russia and the immense drain upon her resources.

The people of the United States thought they were doing a wonderful thing when they increased the president's salary from $25,000 a year to $50,000; and yet the larger amount is only a trifle over two days' salary of the emperor of Russia, while at the same time the United States is really better able to pay the president the czar's salary than Russia is to pay the czar the president's salary.

Royalty is simply an enormously expensive luxury, with nothing to recommend it except tradition and precedent, and the only wonder is that it can keep its hold so long on intelligent and progressive nations in this age of the world.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Shipping Gold to Europe.

When one recalls the millions upon millions of dollars in gold that annually seek Europe to provide for the necessities of our import trade, the question of how gold is shipped to Europe becomes a curious and interesting one. The Bank of America is the largest single shipper of gold abroad. Shipments are made in stout kegs, very like the ordinary beer kegs. Every one contains $50,000 in coin or in bar gold. The latter is the favorite for these shipments, since the government has permitted the sub-treasury to exchange bar for gold coin, as coin in $1,000,000 shipment is liable to a loss by abrasion of from eight to twenty ounces, of from $128 to $320, and the bars only lose about three-fourths of that amount. Where coin is sent double eagles are preferred. They are put in stout canvas bags, each bag containing 125 double eagles, or $5,000 and ten bags fill each keg.

About the only precaution taken against tampering with kegs is a treatment of the keg ends, technically known as "red taping." Four holes are bored at equal intervals in the projecting rim of the staves above the head. Red tape is run through these, crossing on the keg's head, the ends meeting at the center, where they are sealed to the head by the hardest of wax and stamped with the consignor's name. The average insurance is about $1,500 per $1,000,000. Then there is an expense of $2 a keg for packing and cartage aboard ship, or $200 for the same sum; and the inevitable loss by abrasion, whatever it may prove to be. There are great Wall street firms shipping from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 annually. Some of these have for years insured themselves, and assert that the saving has been sufficient to replace a loss of $1,000,000. These are large figures. But this has become a country of large figures and affairs.—Edgar L. Wakeman in Globe-Democrat.

Left Handed Writing.

"It looks like copperplate," remarked a prominent teacher of penmanship to a reporter, as he exhibited a handsome specimen of chirography from among the many specimens in his large collection.

"It couldn't have been written very rapidly," suggested the reporter.

"It was, though—as rapidly as the writer could make his fingers move."

"Probably he is a professional penman; bookkeeper or teacher likely?"

"Neither, and he only learned to write four years ago. He was a soldier. During the war he lost his right arm. After the war he became a traveling salesman. Five years ago he lost a leg in a railroad accident, and then took up penmanship. He had to learn it all over again. But by perseverance you see how much he has accomplished. He is the secretary of a mining company down town and draws $10,000 a year salary. One odd thing about this is that he never was a good penman when he had both arms. But in learning to use his left hand he acquired the art of making all of his characters plainly. He made them slowly at first, and now he can't write badly, no matter how rapidly he works."

"Did you ever know of a man's learning to use both hands equally well?"

"There are a few instances on record. I heard of a man once who not only wrote with both hands, but wrote with them at the same time and a different sentence with each hand. He was the wonder of the profession, but he was more of a freak than anything else. Ambidexterity is a great accomplishment, but such experiences as that are not valuable, save as curiosities."—New York Mail and Express.

Mrs. Jay Gould died at her home in New York last week.

Senator Frye, of Maine has been re-elected; and Senator Isham G. Harris, of Tenn. has also been returned.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 50	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n.	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n.	10 00,	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 31, 1889.

POST MORTEM REBUKE.

The New York World, and a few other newspapers of less importance, have lately made themselves very busy in condemning Grover Cleveland and charging him with the defeat of the democratic party. A recent editorial of the World is very pronounced and bitter in its charges, and in our opinion inconsistent and unwise.

We do not pretend to say that Cleveland made no mistakes, nor do we doubt that he indirectly contributed to the result of November the 6th; yet we believe his blunders were committed in an honest and brave effort to redeem the pledges of his party and to secure for the people good and pure government. His mistakes consisted not in the end aimed at, but in the means he adopted to reach it.

No doubt his memorable message to Congress, which merged all other questions into the one great issue of tariff reform, was the beginning of our defeat. Not because the recommendations of that message were wrong, but because they were untimely, and resulted in arousing the opposition to such active energy as terminated in a suppression of the will of the people by political craftiness.

In this action Grover Cleveland was only aiming to do what the platform of his party had promised to do, and was urged on by his party leaders of no mean standing nor limited experience, in whom he had reason to place confidence: and among the many voices clamoring for tariff reform could be distinctly heard the deep-toned, persistent cry of the New York World. On the strength of these appeals the issue was made up, the battle fought and the cause lost, though not forever. How inconsistent and unfair it is for those who helped to make the issue, hoping to justify themselves, now to charge the failure entirely to that one man who was brave enough to lead the fight and who never wavered. Granting that to Cleveland only our defeat is chargable, and that the New York World opposed his policy, it would now be extremely ungracious to make such an assault, since all admit that Cleveland endeavored to give the people a fair and upright administration; but as it is, when the World condemns Cleveland it condemns itself. Cleveland is the same man now that he was before the election and our opinion of him is unchanged. Let us not heap upon him the bitterness of our disappointment, but as we stood with him in triumph, let us now stand with him in defeat, nor abandon the cause we all believe to be just, because once defeated.

Judge A. C. Snyder has been elected President of the Supreme Court. Judge Snyder has made a good [illegible] reputation since he has been on the bench.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The dead lock in the West Virginia Legislature was broken on the 21st, after about two weeks had been consumed in doing nothing. Col. R. S. Carr, of Kanawha county was elected President of the Senate on the 126th ballot, receiving ten votes from the democrats and six from the republicans; so that neither side can claim any great victory in the result.

Col. Carr is a union labor man, and it is not known certainly how he will vote when it comes to the election of a United States Senator. He is a man of considerable ability and is said to possess in a large measure the qualities of a good presiding officer. But whether the selection be wise or not, it is a great relief to the people to have the affair ended.

Since the organization several ballots have been taken for U. S. Senator, in which the republicans have voted pretty solidly for Goff and the democrats scattering, with Kenna in the lead. These ballots, however, have but little significance, as the democrats have not been anxious to effect an election. The Constitution provides that balloting for U. S. Senator shall begin the second Tuesday after organization, but as one branch of the Legislature did not organize until a late day, the democrats think it wise to post-pone an election until the second Tuesday after the organization of the Senate. The democrats held a caucus, adopting the two-thirds rule, and agreeing to stand by the caucus nominee. Jno. E. Kenna lacked but one delegate was absent whom it is conceded is a Kenna man. So the defeat of Senator Kenna is not so certain after all. Gen. Goff can no doubt get the full vote of his party whenever he desires it; but it is estimated that he would still lack two votes, giving him the benefit of all the doubtful ones. To be sure, nothing is yet certain as to the outcome.

Nothing of importance has been done aside from political dodging.

The Democratic Party and the Future.

The editorial of the New York World, denouncing President Cleveland for the overthrow of the democratic party, was, as we have before shown, cowardly and unjust.

Here is the one undisputed fact of the late campaign: there was not a cloud in the democratic sky when President Cleveland wrote his message. Had that message not been written we should have had a walk-over. Even after it was written had the democratic convention re-affirmed the platform of 1884, on which it had already carried the country, it would still have been victorious. It made Cleveland's message the platform, and it not only thereby postponed the very tariff reform it was fighting for, but it sacrificed the weighter and more precious principles which it was carrying and which it must carry to the end of time!

President Cleveland is not to be blamed for this. He obeyed the pressing demand of the leaders to whom he had given his confidence—and his loyalty to them, meant loyalty to the party. Nor are these leaders to be blamed. They advised as they thought best.

We have no fear of party harmony in the future. What is best will be agreed on, and every democrat will support it. It is possible that the issue has been already made so aggressively that the democratic party is committed for the future to a fight for tariff reform in the same terms as those on which we have just been defeated. If so, all right. We shall do our part of the work in love and earnestness. It may be that Brother Watterson's "voice of agitation" with which he hoped to "arrest the attention" of the country (and succeeded) will be lowered and the voice of reason substituted therefor. If so, all the better and we shall fight with equal earnestness and more hope. Until the issues for 1892 are made up and their exact terms agreed on their should be the fullest discussion among democrats as to what is best. The policy of one democrat denouncing or suspecting every other democrat who differs with him, is not only unwise but unpatriotic.

When the issues are made up and the platform adopted every democrat must then sink his personal views and fall into ranks. Until then let us keep cool and study the situation seriously. Let us pocket pride and prejudice and put democratic success above every personal consideration. If every democrat will but do this we shall triumph again in 1892 in spite of the admission of republican territories and the apportionment of the new census.—Atlanta Constitution.

Amend the Electoral Law.

The error in the returns of the Presidential electors of Texas, even if not amended, would be immaterial as affecting the general result. It would simply reduce by thirteen Mr. Cleveland's vote in the electoral colleges, and leave Mr. Harrison's vote unchanged.

But the fact that such an error was committed and that the counting of the vote of Texas is thereby endangered suggests the very serious consequences that might ensue where the throwing out of the vote of a sovereign State would give the election to a defeated candidate.

It is necessary of course to have so solemn an act as the choice of a President performed by safe and systematic methods, that no question may arise as to the legitimacy of the election, but it would be well to relieve the law in some way of technicalities that, by misconstruction or oversight, might wholly revolutionize the declared will of the people at the polls.

It is known, beyond all quibble or per-adventure, that the people of Texas chose Cleveland electors at the last election—as well known as it is that the people of Maine chose Harrison electors, and a blunder of the electors in not signing their names in the proper place would never disabuse the minds of the people of the consciousness, amounting to positive knowledge, that the electors were duly and lawfully chosen.

Under no circumstances, short of an absolute failure or refusal of a State to send in its returns, should it be possible to count out the vote. It is not a small matter. It is a matter enough with changed conditions to precipitate the Republic into another civil war. The law must be so amended as to make such a catastrophe impossible.—Washington Post.

The $30,000,000 mortgage of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad was recorded at Richmond, Va., on Tuesday of last week, and is being recorded in every county on the lines of that railroad. The mortgage is made to the Central Mortgage Company of New York, and it is on the property of the road from a point on James river below Richmond, Va., to Huntington, W. Va., thence to a point of connection with the Elizabeth, Lexington & Big Sandy Road. It is also on the extension from Richmond, Va., to Newport News and thence to Phoebus, near Norfolk, Va., and also upon the line from Ashland, Ky., to Covington, Ky., and on the bridge between Covington, Ky., and Cincinnati.

SENATORS RE-ELECTED.

Illinois re-elects Senator Cullom, New Jersey re-elects Senator McPherson, Texas re-elects Senator Coke, Oregon re-elects Senator Dolphin, and North Carolina re-elects Senator Ransom. West Virginia————?

A GOOD MOVE.

Mr. Oates' bill on the subject of naturalization, if it should pass Congress, would go a long way toward reducing some of the evil which the country is undergoing from its lax methods of making citizens of aliens.

The provisions of the bill briefly stated, are requirement that an alien must reside five years in the United States before he can become a citizen; that at the expiration of that time he must appear in court and prove his residence, a good moral character and fitness for citizenship. If the case is in the United States Court, notice of his application for naturalization must be served on the representative of the United States, and likewise in the case of a State Court, the representative of the State Government must be notified and attend the hearing. The bill proposes to dispense with the present requirement of a declaration of intention.

The bill has made a favorable impression, and the indications for its becoming a law are good.—Charleston Star.

The electors who cast the vote of Texas for Mr. Cleveland omitted a material part of the statutory requirement in the business, and the President of the Senate directed the returns to be taken back to Texas for rectification. This will necessitate the re-convening of the electors at the Capitol of the State and the re-transmission of the vote to Washington. It is gravely doubted if this can be done in time to have the vote of Texas counted. It is astonishing that intelligent people will make such blunders in such serious matters. What a condition of excitement would now prevail if Cleveland had carried New York, and this Texas blunder should threaten to nullify his election!—Charleston Gazette.

It seems odd to read that a Governor's message in this country, should be printed in a foreign language at all but still stranger that more copies should be ordered printed in other languages than in English. The Texas Senate adopted a resolution to print 5,000 copies of Governor Ross' message in English, 3,000 in German, 2,000 in Bohemian and 2,000 in Spanish.

The Presidential electors for the State of Texas, in making their returns failed to endorse the envelope containing the vote, which makes it doubtful whether the vote of the Lone Star State will be counted. As the matter stands now it makes but little difference, but, if Cleveland had carried New York, it might have been a fatal mistake.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lester Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Sunset,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS.

—Locals and eggs are scarce at this season of the year.

—Henry Overholt, Esq., of Hillsboro, was in town yesterday.

—We are indebted to Hon. C. P. Dorr for the Journal of the Legislature and other public documents.

—Huntersville looks lonesome this week. No session of the County Court.

—Geo. W. Wagner, went up to Traveler's Repose last Saturday to look after his log drive on the river.

—Several drummers have recently visited our town with a line of Spring goods.

—Five or six communications that should have appeared this week are omitted because they were not communicated.

—Mrs. Pattie Yeager, who lives with her son, Peter D. Yeager, at Traveller's Repose, was so unfortunate as to fall and break both legs last Tuesday.

—A recent letter from Hon. H. A. Yeager announces that he is well pleased with his surroundings and hard at work for Uncle Sam. His address is Cheyene, Wyoming Territory.

—There will be no mail from Huntersville to Dunmore Saturday, Feb. 29, unless it should be a cloudy day. We have prevailed on Andy Hughes to stay in doors if there's any danger of seeing his shadow.

—We have received the first number of the Clipper, a weekly independent newspaper published at Addison W. Va. As a rule we don't have much use for so-called independent papers; hope, however, this may be an exception.

$100 REWARD.—Mitchell D. McGlaughlin offers the above reward to any one who can show a finer boy than the one born at his house on the 24th of Jany. Mitchell to be the Judge himself and the amount to be paid in Confederate money. Trot out your boys.

—The Housekeeper,—a Semi Monthly periodical, devoted to domestic interests, published at Minneapolis, Minn., is among the most valuable exchanges we receive. The issue for Jany. 15, is exceedingly good. Every housekeeper ought to have it.

—The December number of Womans Work, a monthly household paper, published at Athens, Ga., is before us. This is a comparatively new periodical, but has in its short life gained an enviable reputation and has become quite a favorite with the ladies.

—We have just received Vick's Floral Guide for 1889. It is exceptionally well gotten up; even ahead of what it has been in the past, and everybody knows that it has always been good. This Guide is issued by one of the oldest and most reliable houses in the United States. If you want to deal with a thoroughly honest and responsible seedsman, send your orders to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. John H. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats, Feb. 4th and remain 4 days; Edray, Feb. 9th, 8 days; Mill Point, Feb. 20th, 3 days; Huntersville, Feb. 23rd, 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted by the use of Cocaine. Gold fillings inserted in artificial teeth, which add very much to their natural appearance.

jan 24 4-4

Your worthy contemporary the Pocahontas TIMES has changed hands, and under the new management has become too funny for anything. It tells the Wheeling Intelligencer that a change of Hart is more needful for it than a change of name is needed by West Virginia. Time would fail to repeat all the funny squibbs that have appeared. There is some speculation as to who the squibbist can be. The surmises most rife seem pretty equally divided between "Bill Arp" of Georgia, and "Billy Coles" of Brown's Mountain. Your correspondent ventures the conjecture that a member of the Huntersville bar could tell us something that would settle the question, if properly interviewed. Who will do it, is the question.—Pocahontas Correspondent, in Ronceverte News.

Yes, you can find out which Bill it is by consulting a Huntersville attorney. In all probability you will make his acquaintance and find his name to be Fee Bill, and not so funny after all. Try it.

Dunmore Doings.

The lumbermen are busy, getting in shape to move out.

Capt. Smith is done cutting logs and will move to the ark on Greenbrier river this week.

It is to be hoped the fording of the creek at this place will be kept free from logs in the future. A good deal of inconvenience has been occasioned for the last two or three weeks by logs in the ford.

Our people have not laid in a supply of ice yet, and it doesn't look now as if they would.

C. F. Moore, Esq., of Huntersville, was up on a flying business trip last week.

Col. Pritchard is doing a considerable logging business this season.

Greart Items.

Snow and rain.

Look out for ground-hog day, and stay in your dens.

J. C. Harper is back from a trip to Hinton.

Miss Sallie Hamilton has gone to the Levels to attend School.

Robert Pritchard, Esq., of Healing Springs, Va., was in this section last week. Bob is a business man, but wears a smile when on Knapp's Creek not common among drummers.

Miss Edmonia Gum, of Hillsboro, and Otie Rimel, of Stribling Springs, Va., are visiting friends and relatives in this neighborhood

Mrs. Emma Harper, who has been dangerously ill for some time, is now improving.

We wold like to hear something more on the subject of dehorning cattle; it is a matter of interest. Can't somebody tell us how to denose hogs, and deheel mules. Success to you.

DICK.

The Philadelphia Times hears that Gen. Harrison had almost decided that it would seem too much like a public acknowledgement of the money influence in politics to give a Cabinet place to Mr. Wanamaker, who was creditdd with contributing $100,000 and raising an additional $300,000 for the campaign fund. Then Col. Quay came along and said that Mr. Wanamaker gave only $10,000.

"Was the dog fat?" asked the buyer of pelts in the old story.

"Fat!" exclaimed the man who wanted to sell the dogskin. "That dog was so——fat that——"

"Don't want it," interrupted the dealer. "Skins of fat dogs are no good."

"Oh, but he wasn't one of those —— ——fat dogs, you know," replied the man, with the stress on the first word.—N. Y. Sun.

Millionaire Washburne, of Minnesota, will succeed Millionaire Sabin of the same State in the United States Senate on March 3d, next.

AN EXCELLENT PRECEDENT.

There will be general appreciation on the part of public of the delicacy of the President and Mrs. Cleveland in their refusal to encourage the scheme for having a portrait of the present mistress of the White House painted for preservation in that house. This feeling of satisfaction will arise, not because the public would not be pleased to see Mrs. Cleveland's portrait thus conspicuously displayed, but because of gratitude that she has had the good taste, as well as the good sense, to discourage any such attempt at publicity.

If the Executive Mansion could contain, in some retired room set off mainly for this purpose, a complete collection of the portraits of all the estimable ladies who have ever graced the house, and if this could be provided at public expense the result thus obtained would be pleasing to the average American citizen. But this policy has not been persued, so that only an insignificant proportion of such portraits are so displayed, and the art of these few is not such as to encourage their increase or multiplication.

This last remark applies not only to the White House, but to the great mass of portraits in the various departments and in the Capitol. The art is not encouraging and nothing is more certain than that this will continue to be the case until the selection of fourth or fifth rate artists is taken from the subjects to be represented and lodged in some authoritative commission composed largely of artists who have made their careers and who are no longer competing for a work of this character.—Washington Post.

A large corporation for the mining of coal and the manufacture of coke has just been organized under the name of the Davis Coal and Coke Co. The company consists of Hons. H. G. Davis and Stephen B. Elkins, Col. T. B. Davis, Maj. Wm. Armstrong and Harry G. Buxton, Esq. The company's properties are located 50 miles south of Piedmont, on the line of the West Virginia Central Railroad near Thomas Station. Active operations and development of said properties commence at once. This is considered one of the finest coking coals in the country, being absolutely free from all impurities. The company will furnish work for quite a number of men in the near future.

A law in Massachusetts defines intoxicating liquor as any beverage containing more than 3 per cent. of alcohol by volume, at 60 Fahrenheit In a recent case before a jury, the State assayer testified that Jamaica ginger contained over 69 per cent. of alcohol, 8 per cent. of pure Jamaica ginger extract, and 28 per cent. of water. As ordinary whisky conthins only about 50 per cent. of alcohol, it follows that Jamaica ginger must be a pretty lively sort of temperance drink.

A St. Louis doctor has removed the brains from a dozen different frogs and healed the wound and let them go. They went off as if nothing had happened out of the usual, and it was plain that they had lost nothing of value. A frog which depended on his brains instead of his legs would stand a mighty poor show in a puddle near a school house.

General Harrison made the following remark the other day: "I have offered no Cabinet place to any man. I have not yet selected any man in my mind. No person shall be forced on me. I shall not disclose whom I will put into the Cabinet till after I am inaugurated and send their names into the Senate for confirmation." Would-be Cabinet makers can now take a rest.

NOTICE.

A reward of $10 will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our tools, etc. that have been stolen from the woods or along the railroad.

ST. LAWRENCE BOOM & MF'G CO.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

jan 14 4-4

PUBLIC SALE.

I will sell at public auction on the 1st day of March, 1889, the following property 225 Sheep mostly ewes 27 two-year-old Cattle, 4 Cows and 1 two-year old bull, 4 horses, one buggy and harness, one cane mill and household and kitchen furniture.

Terms of sale made known on day of sale. Sale will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JACOB McGLAUGHLIN.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-4 Printers fee $4.62.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the [illegible] day of October, 188[illegible], in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

5TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4-4 Printers fee $8.75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

5TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 9th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-4 Printers fee $6.36.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 31, 1889.

A colored brother in the Alexandria valley, down in Georgia sent the following request for a minister to his bishop: "Send us a bishop to preach. If you can't send us a bishop send us a sliding elder; if you can't send us a slididg elder, send us a stationary preacher; if you can't send him, send us a circus rider; if you can't spare him, send us a locus preacher; if you can't spare a locus preacher, send us an exhauster." That settled it and he got a preacher.—Lincoln Journal.

The following curious story serves as an illustration: "A soldier in the time of William and Mary was tried by a court martial on a charge of having fallen asleep at midnight when on duty upon the terrace at Windsor. He denied the charge, and solemnly declared (as a proof of his having been awake at the time) that he heard St. Paul's clock strike thirteen. While under sentence of death affidavits were made by several persons that the clock actually did strike thirteen instead of twelve; whereupon he received his majesty's pardon." This statement was engraved upon the coffin plate of the old soldier.—Magazine of American History.

The Trouble of Writing.

One reason why women do not write more is because they have no really handy place into which to slip where they can pick up pen and paper. They have to spend as much time gathering materials together as it takes to write the first page; and, in that case, the thinking about writing and making up the mind to it are the worst part of the work. Business men have no such trials. But the farmer who comes in at night tired with the day's tasks finds it very hard indeed to write, even to absent children, unless there is a writing desk eady to almost manufacture a letter. It will do it with a few pen scratch s. It is essential to every real home that such a writing place be provided; for no home has selfishness enough to live entirely to itself. The people who write the most welcome letters are those who write all of the little happenings of each day, and who feel that whatever interests them will interest the correspondent, in short, those who sit down and "talk" with the pen until the [illegible] is as full of what they would [illegible] say that the mood simply [illegible] the fingers.

[illegible]

An Englishman [illegible] to an English [illegible] American says 'sir' [illegible] hundred times where an Englishman [illegible] Why? This is an American [illegible] Dr. Johnson, even in addressing his intimate 'Bozzy,' continually repeated 'sir.' Here, Americans are more polite than English people. It is surely better to err on the right side through excess of courtesy than to address our acquaintances like dogs. We owe gratitude to Americans for setting us a good example, here, at least, as some compensation for the havoc played with our language in other respects." This observation is not only acute but accurate. Educated Englishmen in the last century addressed their friends and equals as "sir," nearly if not quite as often as Americans do to-day. In England this form of address is now seldom used except toward superiors, seniors, or total strangers, or else in an ironical sense toward one regarded as an inferior who has incurred the speaker's displeasure.—San Francisco Argonaut.

One Cent.

It is almost impossible to attach any importance to one cent, but at the same time it is very important coin at times.

It will take a circular to California and it will make you madder than a hatter and a March hare combined when you go to pay your fare on a horse-car and find that you have but four cents and a ten dollar bill. Especially when you see the conductor fold your ten dollar bill, and stow it carefully in his vest pocket, and then begin to deal you out a lot of change that looks as though it had been in circulation since the revolutionary war.

One cent is very small when presented to the organ grinder's monkey but when it is added to the rate of interest you receive on a stock, it possesses a stern magnificent grandeur that carries you away like a strain of music.

The penny, it seems, was made to jolt on church plates; and although a man may say it amounts to nothing, he will strike matches and lift mats and crawl about in the straw on a horse car, to find the one he drops. It is so small a coin that you have to take off your glove to take hold of it in your pocket, and yet it is so large when the baby swallows it, the chances of the baby's living are sometimes not worth a cent.

When a man speaks of a quail he will sarcastically call it a little bit of of a thing about the size of a cent; and he will speak of a girl's freckles, sarcastically, as being great big freckles, the size of a cent.

Although one cent is less than ten cents, yet one cent is a great deal larger than a dime. Many a man has gone thirsty all day with four cents in his pocket. For the want of that one cent the four was as useless as the eleven men on a jury who are held out against by one.

Gray Horses.

Experience, I think, will prove that, while "a good horse may be of any color," gray horses are strongest, healthiest, hardiest and most valuable. The crack regiment of the British army has always been one of calvalry, consisting of gray horses only. This regiment of Scot Grays made a charge at the battle of Waterloo which decided the fate of the great Napoleon, as the unfortunate Emperor afterward declared. The French stage horses are nearly all gray. This is the prevailing color of the horses of La Perche in that country, known as Percherons; also of the gigantic horses of Normandy which formed the cavalry of William the Norman, who subdued England 800 years ago by the aid of these stout horses. Gray horses are rarely unsound in feet or joints. The omnibus (or stage) horses of Paris are mostly of this color, and endure the constant travel over the stone paved streets of that city for an average period of ten years.

There is an old adage that "the gray mare is the better horse," and although this has been distorted in its meaning into an insinuation that the woman overpowers the man and makes of him her slave, this is only a modern misuse of the proverb, which is like most of such sayings the result of common experience.—New York Tribune.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 7, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year in advance. | No. 29.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Itching Piles

Notes by the Way.

Since the deep snow that fell upon the 25th of January, visiting varmints have been making things lively about Marlin's Bottom.

By the way Mr. Editor, the writer regrets you were not on hands to oppose and prevent the change in the name of this historic place, as you did so handsomely and effectively when objecting to any change in the name of West Virginia.

But to return from the digression; Sunday night a large Bear, came near Mr. Hughes house and lunched heartily on the remains of a calf, then retired to the spruce and laurel of Buckley mountain to sleep it off. He could not be found, however, by the party; headed by Andy McGlaughlin; so he must have covered his retreat very skilfully. Two or three nights afterwards, three or four wildcats patrolled the premises near Mr. McGlaughlin's who went in pursuit of them with Messrs. Hughes and Tuke. Their dogs came upon a coon trial which was more to their liking and followed the same to a tree. By the time this interesting animal was done for, the hounds seemed to have lost all relish for wild cat operations or speculations and the chase closed abruptly.

When languor and disease invade
 This trembling house of clay,
'Tis sweet to look beyond my pains,
 And long to fly away.

Sweet to look inward and attend
 The whispers of his love
Sweet to look upward, to the place
 Where Jesus pleads above.

A recent visit to a home on Knapp's creek recalled these words to the writer's mind. He missed the presence of an afflicted lady, whose case had interested him very much the past two or three years. When a mere child, Miss Mary Ann Ruckman became a helpless invalid, and for thirty years required constant attention, as she could not walk nor see and had but little use of her hands. It has not been long since she died at the age of thirty-five years. She opened her mind confidingly to a ministerial friend, during his visits. The last time he met her, she tearfully said: "My afflictions have been great, but all my sufferings are sweetened by my Heavenly Father's love." Her mind was naturally of a superior order, her memory very retentive and well stored with favorite passages of the scriptures, and portions of hymns. The 14th of John was one of her favorites, and among the snatches of spiritual song; nothing seemed more precious to her than this:

Dear Savior be my constant guide,
 And when the word is given
Bid the cold waves of death divide
 And land me safe in Heaven.

Monday, January, 28, will be a memorable day in the writer's history, for he passed over the new road now in course of construction around the McGlaughlin landing.

Viewed from this road, Huntersville looks like a "thing of beauty," and may this pleasant village ever be a joy to our great and interesting county. In the writer's opinion Huntersville is just as good as she is pretty, and that is saying a great deal.

It was a pleasure to meet Billy Moore, of Brown's mountain, with his crowbar, punching the old mountain in the ribs, to tickle her just a little bit, and if I would just wait I would hear her giggle a few. He has a taste for what is amusing, and it will be a gloomy day when he fails to see the bright side of things. Long may he save hiding the horse up a flight of stony stairs, was a novel experience to the writer but it was successfully done, and a few rods more and the old road was reached.

W. T. P.

False Contentment.

With all that is justly said about the virtue of contentment, there is one species of it that lies like a worm at the core of all human progress. It is that which renders a man satisfied with his own achievements, content to remain where he is in the different spheres of activity or thought or usefulness, instead of ascending into others which are open to him and for which he may be fitted. Some men it is true, are too eager to press on beyond their powers, and become victims of "vaulting ambition which o'er-leaps itself," but others, for various reasons, shrink from new tasks, new duties and new responsibilities, and thus greatly retard their own development and lesson their value to humanity.

There is certainly a great temptation to a certain class of minds to holding back, in the fact in every forward step, though a real gain be made, there is always an apparent loss. In the school, each, promotion in a higher class brings with it a certain sense of inferiority. The boy who was even with or superior to his fellows now finds himself behind many of them. His work was easy before, and he was conscious of doing it well; now it is difficult, and he stumbles and perhaps often fails. So when he completes his course and enters college or begins a business life, he who was at the top, and looked down upon others, is now at the bottom, and is looked down upon by others. Last year he easily excelled and felt victorious; this year he has everything to learn and feels inferior. Yet it has been a long step dwards, and having taken it he would not willingly go back. His present stumbling efforts are better than his past triumphs.

Life is full of such changes. As fast as one succeeds in any enterprise another opens up before him. He has grown accustomed to the first, and is conscious of doing fairly well in it. The next is yet untried, and involves not only fresh exertion and energy but a fair certainty of many mistakes and failures. The feeling of power will be replaced by the feeling of weakness, and the pleasure of success will be exchanged for the disappointment of short-coming. Many shrink from these painful sensations and remain satisfied with the peaceful and quiet discharge of the duties to which they have become habituated. They have, perhaps, succeeded well in their business and their domestic life. Every one respects the industry, energy, and fidelity which they have put into their work, and they, too, are satisfied. But in someway they are invited to new and untried paths. Some needed reform claims their activity and judgment, or some political crisis calls upon them to arise and espouse with all their might a cause which they have hitherto held but languidly. Or humanity, in some of its many forms of suffering, demands of them more practical aid than it has ever occurred to them to bestow. Or some truth, to which they have given only a passive assent, now needs the active endeavors of every one of its adherents to promulgate and uphold it. But they hesitate to obey the call, whatever it may be, and find plausible reasons for not responding. It is all new to them, and they doubt their powers; some one else, they think, can be found better fitted than they; their present duties claim all their time; they are contented as they are, and have no ambition to extend their sphere or multiply their obligations. Now, this kind of contentment is the one which works harm instead of good. To be content with the condition of life in which we are placed, and the circumstances which surround us, is a wholesome state of mind; but to be contented with our achievements as to be unwilling to attempt others—to be so satisfied with the height we have gained that we refuse to ascend further, to be so well pleased with our small successes that we decline to risk our reputation in further endeavors—this is an apathy which will crush all advancements and prevent the healthy growth of human power.

There is another practice which grows out of this indolent self-complacency and is the source of much cruel injustice. Such persons very often criticise in a cold and unfeeling manner those who are trying to do the very things which they have themselves refused to attempt. They seem to imagine that, because they will not touch a burden that is to be borne, they are absolved from all obligation concerning it, and that those who do try manfully to carry it are expected neither to faint nor to falter. They will look coolly on while some brave reformer or generous philanthropist is struggling to help his fellow-men, and criticise his methods or his manner, and declare how differently they would conduct the affair if they attempted it. They do not see that, with all the blunders and failures he can make, he is far nobler than they, who, assuming to know better, yet refuse, through indolence or pride, to put forth a single effort in the matter. His feeblest attempts ought rather to fill them with shame and humiliation that they have fallen so far behind him.

No past success or perfectness can be any excuse for such remissness. It only affords more reason why men should press on to farther efforts. As fast as any new duty is revealed to a man, or any great need of humanity appeals to his heart, or any truth or principle requires his assistance, an obligation is at once created which he can by no means repudiate or reason away. It stands there, either to welcome him to a higher life in its fulfillment than he has ever known before, or to reproach him for neglecting its rightful claims.

"Unless above himself he can Erect himself how poor a thing is man."
—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Vanderbilt Marriages.

A quiet citizen, worth his half million or more, said to me: "I always had some respect for the late William Vanderbilt and his wife when I saw how indifferent they were in the marriage of their children to money consideration. In most cases they let their children marry persons of respectability and good parentage, but without fortunes. That has been almost uniformly the case. William K. Vanderbilt, who built the $2,000,000 house, married a Virginia woman who could hardly keep her wardrobe, I have understood, from going to sale. And yet," said he, "in nearly every case they appear to be happy folks who go together. How much better it is than this everlasting greed to make love & [illegible] to avarice."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Senator Vance Loses an Eye.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The intimate friends of Senator Vance of North Carolina were exceedingly anxious about him to-day as they knew that he was undergoing a painful surgical operation. It was successfully accomplished this afternoon, word coming to the Senate at 4 o'clock that the jolly Senator had suffered the loss of an eye, which was removed to prevent the spread of a very painful disease. It is a fact not generally known among the colleagues of Senator Vance that he has been blind in one eye for more than a year, owing to a painful affliction something akin to erysipelas. All during the prolonged tariff debate, just closed, Senator Vance, who took a leading part in upholding the Democratic side of the argument, has experienced great torture, which finally became so unbearable and threatening that treatment became necessary. A few days ago the oculists told the Senator that it would be necessary to remove the blind eye to avoid the loss of sight in the other one. With his characteristic humor Senator Vance replied that as his right eye offended him they might pluck it out, and they did so to-day.

Mr. Vance is one of the most popular men in the Senate—genial, witty, and good-hearted. He is an inimitable mimic and story teller, and is on good terms with Republicans and Democrats. Every man in the Senate was deeply pained to hear of his misfortune and sent many anxious inquiries to his house to-day. When they learned that he had borne the painful operation pluckily, and that he will be in his seat in the Senate again in a few days as well as ever, they were greatly gratified. When Mr. Vance returns to the chamber he will wear an artificial eye, which will answer some purposes, but which will fail to twinkle when its owner relates his quaint anecdotes.—N. Y. Sun.

Conscience Money.

One phase in business life which is not an uncommon one, and which shows that the world wags not as badly as it is said to do, is the returning to the merchants of "conscience money." It very often comes under our notice. The last occasion I observed was the other day at Barr's when a well known Catholic clergyman came up to Mr. Franklin, by whom I was standing, and handed him $30, which a penitent of his had asked him to restore to Barr's. Whether the amount the repentant creature returned had been taken in money or goods of course no one knew, and equally so of course only the priest knew the name of the person making restitution. Not very long ago a widow who had been very wealthy, but had been robbed of everything was surprised by a visit of a gentleman who had formerly known her husband. He handed her $300, which he said had just come to him directed to his care to be delivered to her, simply labeled "Conscience money." You have heard the story of the man who sent $20 anonymously to a shop keeper, with this laconic note: "Here is $20 of money, which I stole from you. I send because my conscience 'gnaws;' when it 'gnaws' again I will send the 'other $20.'" This philosopher, illiterate penitent is a fair sample of the kind we run across.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Pocahontas Times.

S. D. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 7, 1889.

THE LEGISLATURE.

When it was announced some some days ago that the dead-lock had at last been broken and the organization of the Senate effected, the disgusted public indulged the hope that such folly was ended, at least for this session. It was generally believed that, inasmuch as the democrats held the power to elect a United States Senator by so small a majority, they would certainly be too wise to cast anything but a unanimous vote. But, alas! we find ourselves mistaken. History is repeating itself, and the scenes of 1887 are being re-enacted.

The feature we most regret, however, is that the tie-up is partly occasioned by the conduct of our own representative, Mr. C. P. Dorr; which is as much a matter of of surprise as it is of regret. When we recall the fact that Mr. Dorr was nominated by a convention and earnestly supported by many because he was the party's nominee and for no other reason, it seem exceedingly inconsistent for him now to place himself in the attitude of a bolter.

If we properly understand it, Jno. E. Kenna was nominated in caucus by more than a two-thirds vote, thus proving him to be the decided favorite. Furthermore we believe Kenna to be the choice of nine-tenths of Mr. Dorr's constituents, Then we are totally unable to see how Mr. Dorr can fail to support Kenna and at the same time be true to his constituency, true to his party, and true to his pledges virtually made, if not explicitly.

He may have reasons sufficient to satisfy himself that his stand is justly taken: if so, the people have a right to know those reasons. Mr. Dorr has sense enough to know that nothing in the nature of a personal difference or prejudice should keep him from supporting the nominee of the democratic caucus; and he will later discover that nothing of that character will suffice to justify his action in the eyes of those who entrusted to him the right to represent them.

We sincerely hope he will no longer persist in delaying an election, but will at once fall into line and, though it be late, still show us that our confidence was not misplaced when we cast our votes for him on the 6th of Nov. last.

Hon Anthony Higgins is the first Republican to represent Delaware in the United States Senate. Another remarkable thing is that for thirty six years, more than the life time of a generation, either a Bayard or a Saulsbury has occupied that distinguished position.

Congressman Springer, of Illinois, has introduced a resolution in the House, making the Presidential term six years and ineligibility for a second term.

Stand by the Caucus.

From the outset the Gazette has tied itself to no man's interest in the Senatorial contest. It has expressed no preference; it has not decried any gentleman's claims to the support of the democratic majority for the office of Senator. It has expressed itself with genuine sincerity in favor of whomever the democrats should, in the wisdom of the majority, select for its honors, and has remained neutral as to all. It has pleaded with earnestness for harmony; for the laying down of all motives, and the burying of all prejudices that could by possibility interfere with the attainment of that condition of organization necessary to the very preservation of the democratic party. We have asked nothing else and we have desired nothing else.

There is not the shadow of a doubt that our position is in full accord with and has the hearty sympathy of every true democrat of the State. And there is no doubt that to-day, more than ever before, the democrats are fearfully and anxiously looking to the action of the democratic majority in the State Legislature to put an end to the fights and feuds that have demoralized the party, and delivered it almost to absolute defeat, and, by concert of action, repair the damage that it has already suffered.

But what is the spectacle that now presents itself? A democratic caucus by two-thirds vote nominates Mr. Kenna for the office of United States Senator, and yet, when the ballot is taken in the Joint Assembly, the sense of the democratic party, fully and rightfully and fairly expressed by the highest and only authority in the party, is disregarded from motives that form no excuse for disobedience, and that should not be entertained by anyone who occupies his position by virtue of democratic votes.

This is not a question to be determined by any man's personal whims, or by any man's ideas for what is best or worst, expedient or inexpedient for the party. The party judges of all these matters for itself, and in this case it has judged wisely or unwisely, no matter. Mr. Kenna is the regular, legitimately nominated candidate of the democratic party for the United States Senator. It is the duty of the democratic members of the Legislature to elect him.

It is a shame, it is wrong, it is dangerous in the highest degree to defy all the laws and precedents of the party, and risk its only chance of salvation as is being done now.

This is our position on the matter as it now stands, and it would be our position no matter who stood in Mr. Kenna's shoes.

The first principle of democracy is obedience to the will of the majority.—Charleston Gazette.

An appeal is made to the people of this city in behalf of the National Home for Maimed Confederate Veterans at Austin, Texas. We trust that there will be a generous response to it on the part of our fellow citizens, including the Union veterans of the war. It is agreeable to hear that many of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic have already taken an interest in it. A goodly sum has recently been added to the fund by the people of Boston, and an attempt to raise contributions is to be made in other Northern cities. The institution that has been established at Austin for the past two years, is wholly inadequate to meet the demands upon it, and the desire of its managers is to raise means for the erection of a structure to replace the small wooden building which is now the Confederate Home. We trust that they may very soon be able to do this, and that New York will assist them in the philanthropic undertaking.—N. Y. Sun.

A Reservoir Runs Away.

The reservoir at Roanoke, Va., mysteriously sank during a recent night. There were 2,500,000 gallons of water in the reservoir in the morning. Now there is nothing but a water abyss to be seen. The hole in the bottom of the basin is about fifteen feet in diameter, and there are large cracks in the earth extending in very direction. The water disappeared within five minutes. The Roanoke Waterworks Company's reservoir is located on Mill Mountain, about two miles south of the city. Two immense basins were only completed in the latter part of the past summer at a cost of $50,000. They are immense holes dug in the mountain's side, large enough to hold 1,500,000 gallons of water each. They were tamped with white clay and lined with brick laid with cement, after which a heavy coat of the best cement that could be procured was worked over the inside of the brick wall. The work was superintended by Howard Murphy, of Philadelphia, a hydraulic engineer of long and successful experience.

Vice President Trout when asked what he thought was the cause, said it was evidently due to caverns in that section.—Philadelphia Times.

Just what the Samoan trouble will end in is yet unknown. It is not likely that the United States and Germany will go to war; yet such a thing is among the probabilities. While the bone of contention is of little intrinsic value, the principle involved is one of great importance, and our government should act with firmness. The conduct of Secretary Bayard in the matter is highly satisfactory and commendable. Latest advices indicate that Bismark, the Dutchman, is beginning to weaken at the knees. While we are not so well prepared for naval warfare as we should be, still with the recent additions to our navy we could make it lively for the boys.

The House of Delegates unanimously adopted a resolution yesterday, refusing to consider any question connected with West Virginia's supposed share of the indebtedness of Old Virginia. To put the matter beyond all fear of recurring to vex their deliberations during this session, a motion was made to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution, and the motion to reconsider was laid on the table,

This to our mind, was a very wise disposition of the matter. There is no sense in vexing our State with this question until the action of Virginia shall create some basis for it.—Charleston Gazette.

New York city has been having considerable trouble with the employees of her street car lines. About 5,000 men have been on a strike for several days, not only refusing to work but endeavoring to keep others from taking their places. All cars that have been run for the last week have been under police protection. The mob has repeatedly undertaken to terrorize the city authorities, but have been checked in their attempts with but little difficulty. The trouble is not yet ended, but gradually dying out.

General Lawton, of Georgia, the American Minister to Austria, has forwarded his resignation, to take effect on the 5th of March, and will return to this country early in the summer. He is a man of sense and a gentleman, and has filled a diplomatic position in which there was little or nothing to do, as a man of sense and a gentleman should.

West Virginia's share of the money to be returned under the Direct Tax bill will be $181,306.

St. Louis has no less than 78 Chinese laundries, and pays out over $100,000 annually to Mongolians to have its washing done.

It is stated with a good deal of certainty by the leading newspapers that Senator Allison has declined a Cabinet position. A rare man he is, if that be true.

The latest news from Charleston is that one of the kickers has fallen into line and voted for Kenna. Dorr, however, is still unaccountably standing off. He is gaining considerable notoriety by his conduct, but not of a kind to be envied.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The president has notified congress that Count Arco-Valley, the Germay minister, has informed the state department that Germay troops would be withdrawn from Samoa and the neutrality of Samoa preserved.—Charleston Star.

At last China has a railroad. It is eighty one miles in length and cost, so the directors say, $9000 per mile, which is regarded as the cheapest road in the world, considering the number of bridges and the length of the embankments.

It is reported that the Republican senate would probably confirm Hon. Joseph S. Miller, of this state, as civil service commissioner, if President Cleveland should see fit to appoint him. It is stated that Gen. Goff will use his influence to this end. This is a high compliment to Mr. Miller, who is a sterling Democrat, and one of the most energetic and capable men in the country.—Charleston Star.

It is said that there is only one Democratic member of the Kansas state senate. We regret that such is the case, but there is one advantage in it after all. A caucus held by him cannot fail of being harmonious and there is no danger of his failing to support the caucus nominee.—Charleston Star.

He may fail to support the caucus nominee, if as likely to change his mind as some politicians are.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following is a list of Fiduciaries whose accounts are before me for settlement.

John Ligon, Ex'r of R. D. McCutcheon dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r of acc'ts for Pocahontas county.

HOME NEWS

—Miss Minnie Gammon is spending this week on Beaver creek.

—S. B. Moore, Esq., of Edray was in town Monday.

—Miss Mattie Haynes, of Alderson is visiting Misses Minnie and Mary Beard, on Beaver creek.

—B. P. McGlaughlin, Esq., wife, and little son have returned from visiting relatives and friends in Highland county.

—We understand that M. J. McNeel, Esq., of Mill Point, has made application to the County Court for the appointment as Sheriff of Pocahontas County.

—Last week we stated that Mrs. Bettie Yeager, of Traveler's Repose had fallen and broken both legs. Since we have learned that but one leg was broken, and that she is doing well.

—Let everybody rest easy; we don't think there is any immediate danger of war with Germany. If anything of the kind should occur we promise to let our readers know in time to load their carbines.

—One of our most welcome visitors is Jno. B. Aldens Illustrated "Literature," published at 393 Pearl St. N. Y. for 50 cents a year. Subscribe for it.

—The Housekeeper, published at Minneapolis, Minn., 16,18&20 North Fourth St., Semi Monthly, still visits us regularly. This paper is very deservedly popular with housekeepers.

—The ladies Home Journal, Published Monthly at 435 Arch Street Philadelphia is one of the very largest and best ladies papers we receive. Terms 50 cents a year. You cannot do better than to subscribe for it.

—Babyhood, a monthly periodical published at No. 5 Beekman Street, N. Y., at $1.50 per year for the month of February is exceptionally good. The contribution by Dr. Wm. H. Flint on "Common or Winter Colds" deserves special attention.

—We have received the February number of the Cosmopolitan, published by John B. Walker, 363 Fifth Ave. N. Y. Mr. Walker has recently taken charge of this magazine, and will no doubt keep it up to its usual excellence, if we may judge by his past labors.

$20 REWARD.—I shall pay the above amount to any one giving information that will lead to the discovery of the person who has been stealing my wood.

H. S. RUCKER.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. John H. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats, Feb. 4th and remain 4 days; Edray, Feb. 9th, 8 days; Mill Point, Feb. 20th, 3 days; Huntersville, Feb. 23rd, 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted by the use of Cocaine, Gold fillings inserted in artificial teeth, which add very much to their natural appearance.

jan 24 4-t

A Card of Thanks.

On last Saturday night, a large crowd of our friends from this and adjacent neighborhoods came to the Parsonage and gave us a good "pounding". They "pounded" us with a great variety of weapons in the shape of beef, pork, corn, cabbage, clothing, groceries, &c., &c., and also with the hard cash. We recovered however, from the shock sufficiently to thank them for their liberal donation, but we desire to express our heartfelt thanks to all of our friends through the columns of the TIMES. Special thanks are due to Misses Minnie and Mary Beard for getting up the donation. We also tender our thanks to friends in Huntersville who donated to us, but were not present.

M. M. EVERLY,
Pastor.

—Mr. McGuire, of Addison, the present assessor of Webster county, was at Huntersville this week. His business was to obtain signers to a petition requesting the Hon. C. P. Dorr to abandon his present tactics, fall into line and be one of his party. No Democrat who was approached with the paper hesitated to add his name.

Accidental Shooting.

Mr. George Haliday, a young Englishmen who for some time past has been boarding at the home of H. M. Lockridge, Esq., on Knapp's Creek, was accidentally shot last Thursday. He was at Dr. J. B. Lockridge's at the time the shooting occurred. It seems that he and one Dick Jordan, (Col.) were carelessly handling a pistol when Dick in his effort to "show off" pointed the pistol at Haliday and discharged it. The ball entered Haliday's right side just below his vest and ranged backward, lodging somewhere in the region of the Spine behind the hip bone.

He was attended by Drs. Lockridge, Ligon and McClintic. He is doing as well, perhaps as could be expected; but must, of course be in a right critical condition.

Haliday is about seventeen years of age. Dick, the colored boy, about sixteen, but very much of a man in his own opinion.

A Row in Town.

Our usually quiet town was the scene of some very disorderly conduct on last Saturday night. One Edward Martin who had for some time time been boarding at Hotel Pocahontas left a few days ago and took up quarters at the Huntersville Hotel. Saturday night, while under the excitement of little much snake medicine, he concluded to go back to Hotel Pocahontas and "paint it red." Several times he was asked by the proprietor, Mr. Geo. W. Wagner, to leave the house, but Martin refused to obey, saying he would not leave. At last when he found he would be put out he began a promiscuous assult on the inmates of the Hotel. In the difficulty he seized a large iron-stone pitcher that happened to be in the office and threw it across the room striking one Daniel Murry, a boarder, on the right eye, smashing the pitcher and inflicting a very ugly and dangerous wound on Mr. Murry's face. Martin was finally expelled from the office with two black eyes.

Dr. S. P. Patterson was called in to see both Murry and Martin.

On Tuesday morning a warrant for Martin was issued by Justice R. C. Shrader and put into the hands of Constable J. H. Buzzard, who executed the same by arresting said Martin and bringing him before said justice Shrader for preliminary examination. A number of witnesses were examined at length, when the Court decided that Mr. Martin should give bond in the penalty of $500, to appear before the next grand jury; in default of which said Martin was committed to jail.

Mr. Murry was at the time paying a short visit to his friend Mr. Coughlan, a boarder at Hotel Pocahontas.

He seems to be a very quiet, gentlemanly young man, and everybody regrets exceedingly his misfortune.

It is not known as yet how his wound may terminate; at present his condition is somewhat discouraging and it is thought that even if he gets well, he will lose the sight of his eye.

Illinois courts are vexed over a question of ownership. A lottery ticket stolen from the mails and sold to an innocent third party, drew a $1,000 prize. The party to whom the letter was addressed claims the prize. There is no precedent to establish the nature of such property as prizes in a lottery; therefore the Judges tear their wigs.

Dunmore Doings.

Not much news since the logs have gone out of the ford.

Wm. H. Cackley, of the firm of Cackley & Co., has sold his interest in the Dunmore Store to R. L. Nottingham.

Misses Sallie and Mary Wakeman, arrived here last week from Warren Co., Va. They are first class dressmakers and milliners.

Rev. W. T. Price preached at this place Sunday night.

The ladies about Green Bank and Frost have been making war on the foxes; they have caught seven.

Several schools in this district have closed.

Wm. H. Hall of Green Bank shipped eighteen whole deer to Staunton this winter.

J. P. Wooddell and Geo. C. Cooper have built new houses at Green Bank.

Feb. 4th. 1889,

What a War Would do for Us.

If our government is in the humor to adopt a vigorous foreign policy the Samoan affair offers a very inviting opening.

Without reviewing the causes of the strained relations now existing between this country and Germany, it will be of interest to consider some of the advantages and disadvantages of a foreign war, so far as this country is concerned.

A war of any magnitude, lasting a year or so, with such a power as Germany would keep us busily occupied. The probability is that it would not be altogether a naval warfare. There would be fighting on land and sea, and our weak coast defenses would tempt the enemy to attack our seaboard cities.

Hundreds of thousands of men would be withdeawn from their peaceful occupations, and scarcity of labor and higher wages would necessarily follow. Large army contracts for food, clothing and munitions of war would keep our industries booming. The government would again flood the country with greenbacks, making flush times and stimulating speculation. Everything would be unsettled, and fortunes would be lost and made in a hurry.

Unexpected events would occur. Germany would make a desperate attempt to extend her colonizing policy to this hemisphere. France would be certain to take advantage of the situation by occupying and fortifying the isthmus of Panama. The war, beginning with a squabble over far-off Samoa, would perhaps extend the scope of its operations until it circled the globe. The example of France on the isthmus would be followed by the British in Venezuela, and there would be an odor of gunpowder in every direction.

That the United States would finally come out with flying colors is a safe prediction to make, but it would be a costly triumph in blood and treasure. Then would follow long years of taxation to pay off the increased national debt, years of currency contraction, and last, but not least, a flood of new pension bills.

There are other things to be considered. A foreign war would make the American people bury their sectional differences, but it would also bring with it widespread demoralization. It would build up and it would destroy. It would enrich, and it would impoverish. It would make our flag feared and respected, but it might excite a warlike spirit that would not rest satisfied for a generation to come.

In view of the past policy of our government, it is not likely that the Samoan trouble will lead to a war with Germany, but it can do no harm to take a long look ahead and estimate the results of such a conflict.—Atlanta Constitution.

There is a movement to revive the old half cent and add it to the currency.

NOTICE.

A reward of $10 will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our tools, etc. that have been stolen from the woods or along the railroad.

ST. LAWRENCE BOOM & MF'G CO.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

jan 14 4-t

PUBLIC SALE.

I will sell at public auction on the 1st day of March, 1889, the following property 225 Sheep mostly ewes 27 two-year old Cattle, 4 Cows and 1 two-year old bull, 4 horses, one buggy and harness, one cane mill and household and kitchen furniture.

Terms of sale made known on day of sale. Sale will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JACOB McGLAUGHLIN.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-t Printers fee $4.63.

Commissioner,s Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 19th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

5TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $8.75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 8th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $6.26.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	7 00	15 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 7, 1889.

When to Cut Timber.

Timber for most purposes is cut in the winter, not for the reason that it is better and will keep longer, but there is more leisure from other occupations. And the woods in midsummer are usually too hot for the active work of cutting timber. And yet the superior quality of timber for posts, ties, carriages, wagons, agricultural implements, etc., is sufficient to change the time of cutting. We are aware scientists and skilled workmen differ as to the exact condition of timber when it should be cut, and some even dispute the superiority of summer over winter cut timber. A civil engineer who claims to have verified his statements by thirty years' experience, who knows his skill and whereof he writes, gives the time to cut and the reasons for it in the Farmers' Review.

When the growth commenced in the spring is completed there is a period of rest before the storage of nutrition in the roots begins. Between these two periods if timber of any deciduous trees is cut off the stump the sap will not ferment and worms will never get in the wood. It will season hard and the wood if oak will have a horny toughness and great durability. Wood cut during that period is mature, having completed its growth for the year. This period varies in length, being short in the North and longer in the South, and is varied again by the character of the season, which if wet is shorter and longer if dry. In the North, in Northern Illinois or Wisconsin, it may be four or six weeks; in Southern Illinois from six to ten weeks, and one season of prolonged drouth I have known it twelve weeks. Timber cut from the stump in this period need not be worked up for a year and will take no harm lying in the woods. If railroad ties were cut from the stump and worked out during the balance of the year they would last from three to five times as long as those cut in the winter, and yet I have seen specifications requiring them to be cut in the winter from a mistaken idea of improving their durability. A bent fellow manufacturer in New Jersey called my attention to this fact thirty years ago, and said he had for sixteen years [illegible] followed the practice of requiring in his contracts for timber that it be felled during a period of six weeks from the 1st of August to the middle of September. Any time in a year afterward they might cut up the logs.

Legal Holidays.

It may be interesting to know just what days are legal holidays in the various states, and how they came to be so. While every other day is legal holiday, as is said to be the case in Kentucky, with the exception of the great majority cannot complain of the lack of days of recrea- [illegible]

Independence Day or Fourth of July as it is more generally called; Christmas Day which falls on December 25, together with Thanksgiving Day, which is appointed by the President of the United States and comes usually on the last Thursday in November, as well as Fast Days that are appointed by the Chief Executive of the country are legal holidays in all the States. New Year's Day, or January 1, is a holiday in all States but Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Rhode Island and South Carolina. February 22, or Washington's Birthday, is a holiday in all States except Alabama, Arkansas, Floriday, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Tennessee and Texas.

Election Day generally the Tuesday after the First Monday in November, is a holiday in California, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin. Florida Louisana, Minnesota and Pennsylvania observe Good Friday, while Shrove Tuesday is a holiday in Louisiana, and also the cities of Mobile, Montgomery and Selma, Alabama. Memorial Day, April 26, is observed in Georgia, while Louisana has made the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, which falls on January 8; Lincoln's Birthday on February 12 and Fireman's Anniversary, of March 4, legal holidays. March 8, which is the anniversary of Texan Independence, and April 21, that of the Battle of San Jacinto, are holidays in Texas.

Labor Day, the first Monday in September, is a comparative new holiday that is celebrated in this State and Massachusetts. Every Saturday, after twelve o'clock, is also a holiday, or rather half holiday, in this State.—New York Telegram.

A 40,000 Acre Farm.

The Grandin wheat farm of Dakota consists of more land than any one man can cultivate cleverly and feel at home on. It comprises 40,000 acres, of which 13,000 are now under cultivation. Forty five double gang plows and harrows are used, sixty-five self-binding harvesting machines and steam threshers. The threshers which are very large ones, will each knock out 2,000 bushels of wheat a day. In the use of mule and steam power machinery every effort is made to economize as much as possible in the employment of men. There is no poetry or domestic bliss in such farming. It is some satisfaction to know that as regions grow older in settlement this big scale kind of farming declines.

A lawyer of Temple Court was looking over some papers his German client had brought, and every signature had a menance to it as it stood:

"A. Schwindler."

"Mr. Schwindler, why don't you write your name some other way; write out your first name, or something? I don't want people to think you are a swindler."

"Vell, my Got, sir, how much better you dink that looks?" and he wrote——

"Adam Schwindler."

The combined wealth of the Vanderbilt family to day is $274,000,000. It is divided by millions as follows:— Cornelius Vanderbilt, [illegible]; Wm. K. Vanderbilt, [illegible]; Frederick W. Vanderbilt, 16; Geo. W. Vanderbilt, [illegible]; Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, 12; Mrs. Wm. D. Sloane, 12; Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, 12, and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, 12. Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt, the widow, has an income, but has an annuity of $200,[illegible]

TIMES $1.00.

Tramp—"Please, mum, I just arrived from Dakota. I'm a blizzard sufferer, mum."

Housekeeper—"See here, it ain't three weeks since you told me you just arrived from Florida and were a yellow fever sufferer."

"True, mum. I hurried right on to Dakota to get shut of yelow fever, and I got caught in a blizzard, mum."—N. Y. Weekly.

There are now in Chicago about 100 school buildings, which are filled by about 90,000 of the city's children, under the care of 1600 teachers. Of these teachers about 1530 are women.

Pocahontas Times.

E. F. [illegible], Editor. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 14, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year, in advance. No. 30.

A Little Hand.

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things,
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the Lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

A little hand that softly stole
Into my own that day,
When I needed the touch that I love so much,
To strengthen me on the way.

Softer it seemed than the softest down
On the breast of the gentlest dove;
But its timid press and its faint caress
Were strong in the strength of love!

It seemed to say in a strange sweet way,
"I love you and understand;"
And calmed my fears as my hot, heart tears
Fell over that little hand.

* * * * * * * *

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

—F. L. Stanton.

The Moon and the Weather.

Adam Forepaugh sat on a nail keg on the elevated seats. "Chicago!" said he, "why Chicago is the greatest show town in the world; and then the moon—why, we've got another week of the moon before the change."

"What's that got to do with it?" the reporter asked.

"A good deal," he answered. "It's a dry moon. Whenever you see a moon lie on its back it never rains."

The above conversation took place one afternoon, and within thirty-six hours thereafter the first rain in several weeks was falling.

Of all surviving pseudo-superstitions, that of the influence of the moon on the weather dies the hardest; and the belief that the (so called) "changes" of the moon are accompanied or followed by changes in the condition of the terrestrial atmosphere is still to be found among a very large number indeed of otherwise educated and enlighted people. A recent writer in The English Mechanic has examined the grounds of this belief and attributes it to the weather predictions in the almanacs of the early part of the century.

As to the moon "changing," one would imagine, to hear the majority of people talk, that a "change" of the moon is in some sense cognate with a conjuring trick, in which the performer, after showing that he has nothing in his hand, instantaneously produces an egg, an orange, or a ball from it. Now nothing could well be further from the truth than this, the fact being that the moon is always changing—10 seconds after it she is waxing, and so throughout her monthly path. When her (celestial) longitude is identical with that of the sun she is said in the almanac to be "new;" when both longitudes differ 90 degrees from the sun's toward the east she is in her "first quarter;" when they are separated by 180 degrees the moon is "full," and when she has traveled to that point in her orbit in which she is 90 degrees to the west of the sun she is said to be in her "last quarter;" in each [illegible] being assumed that she is viewed from the earth's center. The [illegible] "change," then, [illegible] position in [illegible] her orbit, is a [illegible] so minute as under ordinary circumstances, to be masked by other fluctuations. The existence of these atmospheric tides was first definitely established by the observations of the late Professor Daniell, but if these minute tides influenced the weather in the slightest degree it must change twice a day—a supposition too ridiculous to merit notice.

[illegible]

The "moon on her back," as a weather sign would appear to be a good deal like the old woman's indigo test—if the dye was pure "twould either sink or swim, she disremembered which." Mr. Forepaugh says it's a "dry moon," but in many parts of the country, and uniformly in England, the belief prevails that when the young moon is "lying on her back"—in other words, when the line joining her cusps is nearly or quite parallel to the horizon she is "holding water," and rain will certainly follow. How either belief arose it would be idle to speculate, but the explanation of the phenomenon itself is sufficiently simple. In the outset the moon is never much more than 5 degs. either to the north or south of the ecliptic, or apparent annual path of the sun through the heavens. Now the line adjoining her cusps (the sharp points of her crescent), is always square to a great circle passing through the sun and the moon. Two minutes' study of a celestial globe will show how variable is the inclination of the ecliptic to the horizon, and consequently that of the line joining the cusps of the moon also.

Finally, the most elaborate comparisons of meteorological records made in France and in England (where the Greenwich observations for forty years were carefully collated with the moon's phases during that period) have sufficed to show that no connection whatever exists between them. The solitary observable effect of the moon upon our atmosphere was believed by Sir John Herchel to be exhibited in the tendency to disappearance of cloud under the full moon, and this he attributed to the heat radiated from her surface.—Chicago News.

Preserve the Forests.

One of the most important questions with which our national and state legislatures have to deal, and yet one that is too generally neglected, is that of the preservation of our forests. Independent of the fact that they add to the wealth of the nation at the rate of $700,000,000 annually, or ten times more than the output of all of our gold and silver mines—which alone ought to secure for them proper care—the significant conclusions reached by scientific men, to the effect that they determine, to a great extent, the climatic and the hygienic conditions of our country, and regulate the distribution of moisture and the character of both our great and small water ways, certainly place the preservation of our timbered lands among the subjects that should receive the early, constant and careful consideration of our legislation.

It is estimated by experts who have devoted much time and thought to the inquiry that at least [illegible] per cent of the entire agricultural region of any country should remain permanently in forests. Twenty years ago it was asserted that the annual clearance of woodland throughout the United States amounted to [illegible] of acres, and that at this rate individual owners would ultimately be entirely stripped of their holdings. But it is not only the ax that is destructive to forests. Browsing animals and fires are quite as detrimental.

To these injurious agencies must be added the enterprising and conscienceless railroad contractor, who annually destroys 30,000,000 vigorous young trees in his quest for ties. Taking these and other enemies of our forests into account, it will be seen that but for the energetic action of our national and state governments the terrible calamity of the entire sweeping away of the natural covering of the soil would be among the possible events of the future—a disaster that would, in half a century, reduce the greater part of the continent to the condition of a desert incapable of supporting man or beast.

Nor is this a mere flight of the imagination. It may seem to the superficial observer to verge on the extravagant to talk of a possible timber famine in a country so new as ours, and one that was so lately reclaimed from the "forest primeval;" but it is an undeniable fact that we are cuting down our trees far more rapidly than we are planting them, and although our inheritance of timber has been great, such a policy steadfastly adhered to in the future can lead to but one result. To bring about a better state of things, an intelligent public sentiment ought to be created, and business men and farmers should be informed how intimately their prosperity is bound up with the preservation of the wooded land.

They should be made to understand that by the effect of the forests on the water courses the entire navigation, and much of the transportation, system of the country is regulated. Manufacturers are also largely dependent for the water supply for their factories and mills on the wisdom that protects the timber lands where these streams take their rise and through which they flow. No profitable milling could be done where the water course was a torrent during one-fourth of the year and a dry bed for the remainder of the season.

It is encouraging to note that the subject is now receiving practical consideration in many localities, and especially in this state and in Pennsylvania. The report of the New York forestry commission, presented to the legislature, contains many interesting facts and valuable suggestions; while the Agricultural society of Pennsylvania is actively engaged in spreading the facts before the people. The establishment of "schools of forestry," in accordance with the plan that has worked so admirably in Germany, is earnestly recommended, together with other measures all tending to further the end in view. On one point all authorities seem agreed—that it is unwise to hand the timber resources of a country over to private parties, leaving them independent of all governmental control. At one time this state owned every acre of the Adirondack region, but this noble domain was given away with a recklessness that is scarcely credible, and what it now possesses it has gained through tax sales, while the [illegible] of the most [illegible] character, the land speculators being engaged in a constant struggle to procure a cancellation of the sales. The wholesale purchase of forest lands from individual owners is urged by the commission, to remedy this state of things, and to prevent the stock of lumber in the state from being too largely depleted.—Frank Leslie's Newspaper.

Another Desert Disappearing.

The Australian desert which was once supposed to cover the larger part of the interior of that continent is going the way of all the other deserts that have failed to stand the test of exploration. Just as the early explorers of the African coasts filled all the regions that had not been visited with uninhabitable wastes, so a great part of inner Australia has been represented as utterly valueless to man. The faith in this illimitable desert was somewhat shaken in 1872, when Giles found Amadeus Lake, 200 miles long, at its geographical centre, and the few explorers who have since visited inner Australia have whittled off great sections of the desert and put forests and streams where only sand was supposed to be.

Sir Samuel Davenport, in an address at Adelaide a short time ago, said that the recent travels of Messrs. Lindsay and Tietkens had proven that inner Australia was by no means a Saharan waste, and, though now uninhabited, it was capable of supporting a large population. They found not only wide regions covered with luxuriant grass, but also mineral deposits that are certain to attract attention. Almost in the geographical centre of the continent Tietkens found several large rivers whose head waters were on the northern slopes of mountain ranges. The rivers flowed north, and as far as he traced them he found a great deal of large and valuable timber along the banks.

Lindsay's investigation between 18° and 24° south latitude resulted in some surprising discoveries. In the MeDonnell range of mountains he found garnets and rubbies and abundant indications that mining in this region for precious stones will be highly profitable. On Tennant's Creek he found gold-bearing quartz in abundance, and he brought home stories of almost boundless pasture lands, of water in abundance, and of deep, blue lakes, one of which, some 300 miles north of Amadeus Lake, is of large and as yet unknown extent. His explorations covered a region, extending several hundred miles north and south, and both east and west of his route stretches a vast and wholly unknown region that gives promise of being equally inviting.

The great railroad which is to extend across the continent from north to south, through the eastern part of the country once supposed to be a desert, will much facilitate the work of exploration, and although inner Australia has been sadly neglected by travellers, it will not be many years before the last of her geographical secrets is revealed. This railroad is now in operation for [illegible] miles north of Adelaide. Track-laying is pushing steadily on and the line is growing southward also from Port Darwin, the northern terminus. An exploring party has just been sent out by the Geographical society of Australasia to more fully explore the region, of which our first accounts have been so unexpectedly gratifying.—N. Y. Sun.

Not so Favorable.—Deacon Williams—Brudder Jones, how did yer [illegible] de trial?

Brudder Jones: De Judge done give [illegible] in de jail.

"[illegible]"

[illegible]

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 14, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 30.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Clk. of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. F. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A Little Hand.

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things,
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the Lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

A little hand that softly stole
Into my own that day,
When I needed the touch that I love so much,
To strengthen me on the way.

Softer it seemed than the softest down
On the breast of the gentlest dove;
But it's timid press and it's faint caress
Were strong in the strength of love!

It seemed to say in a strange sweet way;
"I love you and understand;"
And calmed my fears as my hot, heart tears
Fell over that little hand.

* * * * * * *

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

—F. L. Stanton.

The Moon and the Weather.

Adam Forepaugh sat on a nail keg on the elevated seats. "Chicago?" said he, "why Chicago is the greatest show town in the world; and then the moon—why, we've got another week of the moon before the change."

"What's that got to do with it?" the reporter asked.

"A good deal," he answered. "It's a dry moon. Whenever you see a moon lie on its back it never rains."

The above conversation took place one afternoon, and within thirty-six hours thereafter the first rain in several weeks was falling.

Of all surviving pseudo-superstitions, that of the influence of the moon on the weather dies the hardest; and the belief that the (so called) "changes" of the moon are accompanied or followed by changes in the condition of the terrestrial atmosphere is still to be found among a very large number indeed of otherwise educated and enlighted people. A recent writer in The English Mechanic has examined the grounds of this belief and attributes it to the weather predictions in the almanacs of the early part of the century.

As to the moon "changing," one would imagine, to hear the majority of people talk, that a "change" of the moon is in some sense cognate with a conjuring trick, in which the performer, after showing that he has nothing in his hand, instantaneously produces an egg, an orange, or a ball from it. Now nothing could well be farther from the truth than this, the fact being that the moon is always changing—10 seconds after it she is waxing, and so throughout her monthly path. When her (celestial) longitude is identical with that of the sun she is said in the almanac to be "new;" when such longitude differs 90 degrees from the sun's toward the east she is in her "first quarter;" when they are separated by 180 degrees the moon is "full," and when she has traveled to that point in her orbit in which she is 90 degrees to the west of the sun she is said to be in her "last quarter;" in each case it being assumed that she is viewed from the earth's center. The use of the word "change," then, in connection with her position in these four points of her orbit, is a solecism, pure and simple.

"But," people are heard to say, "as the moon influences the tides, why should it not affect the atmosphere too?" To which the [illegible] obvious reply is that the tides are a semi-diurnal phenomenon, so that, on this principle, the weather ought to change twice a day also—a supposition too absurd to be entertained. Nevertheless the moon does influence the atmosphere by causing the production in it of tides so minute as under ordinary circumstances, to be masked by other fluctuations. The existence of these atmospheric tides was first definitely established by the observations of the late Professor Daniell, but if these minute tides influenced the weather in the slightest degree it must change twice a day—a supposition too ridiculous to merit notice.

The "moon on her back", as a weather sign would appear to be a good deal like the old woman's indigo test—if the dye was pure "twould either sink or swim, she disremembered which." Mr. Forepaugh says it's a "dry moon," but in many parts of the country, and uniformly in England, the belief prevails that when the young moon is "lying on her back"—in other words, when the line joining her cusps is nearly or quite parallel to the horizon she is "holding water," and rain will certainly follow. How either belief arose it would be idle to speculate, but the explanation of the phenomenon itself is sufficiently simple. In the outset the moon is never much more than 4 degs. either to the north or south of the ecliptic, or apparent annual path of the sun through the heavens. Now the line adjoining her cusps (the sharp points of her crescent) is always square to a great circle passing through the sun and the moon. Two minutes' study of a celestial globe will show how variable is the inclination or the ecliptic to the horizon, and consequently that of the line joining the cusps of the moon also.

Finally, the most elaborate comparisons of meteorological records made in France and in England (where the Greenwich observations for forty years were carefully collated with the moon's phases during that period) have sufficed to show that no connection whatever exists between them. The solitary observable effect of the moon upon our atmosphere was believed by Sir John Herchel to be exhibited in the tendency to disappearance of cloud under the full moon, and this he attributed to the heat radiated from her surface.—Chicago News.

Preserve the Forests.

One of the most important questions with which our national and state legislatures have to deal, and yet one that is too generally neglected, is that of the preservation of our forests. Independent of the fact that they add to the wealth of the nation at the rate of $700,000,000 annually, or ten times more than the output of all of our gold and silver mines—which alone ought to secure for them proper care—the significant conclusions reached by scientific men, to the effect that they determine, to a great extent, the climatic and the hygienic conditions of our country, and regulate the distribution of moisture and the character of both our great and small water ways, certainly place the preservation of our timbered lands among the subjects that should receive the early, constant and careful consideration of our legislators.

It is estimated by experts who have devoted much time and thought to the inquiry that at least 10 per cent. of the entire agricultural region of any country should remain permanently in forests. Twenty years ago it was asserted that the annual clearance of woodland throughout the United States amounted to [illegible] of acres, and that at this rate individual owners would ultimately be entirely stripped of their holdings. But it is not only the ax that is destructive to forests. Browsing animals and fires are quite as detrimental.

To these injurious agencies must be added the enterprising and conscienceless railroad contractor, who annually destroys 30,000,000 vigorous young trees in his quest for ties. Taking these and other enemies of our forests into account, it will be seen that but for the energetic action of our national and state governments the terrible calamity of the entire sweeping away of the natural covering of the soil would be among the possible events of the future—a disaster that would, in half a century, reduce the greater part of the continent to the condition of a desert incapable of supporting man or beast.

Nor is this a mere flight of the imagination. It may seem to the superficial observer to verge on the extravagant to talk of a possible timber famine in a country so new as ours, and one that was so lately reclaimed from the "forest primeval;" but it is an undeniable fact that we are cuting down our trees far more rapidly than we are planting them, and although our inheritance of timber has been great, such a policy steadfastly adhered to in the future can lead to but one result. To bring about a better state of things, an intelligent public sentiment ought to be created, and business men and farmers should be informed how intimately their prosperity is bound up with the preservation of the wooded land.

They should be made to understand that by the effect of the forests on the water courses the entire navigation, and much of the transportation, system of the country is regulated. Manufacturers are also largely dependent for the water supply for their factories and mills on the wisdom that protects the timber lands where these streams take their rise and through which they flow. No profitable milling could be done where the water course was a torrent during one-fourth of the year and a dry bed for the remainder of the season.

It is encouraging to note that the subject is now receiving practical consideration in many localities, and especially in this state and in Pennsylvania. The report of the New York forestry commission, presented to the legislature, contains many interesting facts and valuable suggestions; while the Agricultural society of Pennsylvania is actively engaged in spreading the facts before the people. The establishment of "schools of forestry," in accordance with the plan that has worked so admirably in Germany, is earnestly recommended, together with other measures all tending to further the end in view. On one point all authorities seem agreed—that it is unwise to hand the timber resources of a country over to private parties, leaving them independent of all government control. At one time this state owned every acre of the Adirondack region, but this noble domain was given away with a recklessness that is scarcely credible, and what it now possesses it has gained through tax sales, while its tit[illegible] than of the most precarious character, the land speculators being engaged in a constant struggle to procure a cancellation of the sale. The wholesale purchase of forest lands from individual owners is urged by the commission, to remedy this state of things, and to prevent the stock of timber in the state from being too largely depleted.—Frank Leslie's Newspaper.

Another Desert Disappearing.

The Australian desert which was once supposed to cover the larger part of the interior of that continent is going the way of all the other deserts that have failed to stand the test of exploration. Just as the early explorers of the African coasts filled all the regions that had not been visited with uninhabitable wastes, so a great part of inner Australia has been represented as utterly valueless to man. The faith in this illimitable desert was somewhat shaken in 1872, when Giles found Amadeus Lake, 200 miles long, at its geographical centre, and the few explorers who have since visited inner Australia have whittled off great sections of the desert and put forests and streams where only sand was supposed to be.

Sir Samuel Davenport, in an address at Adelaide a short time ago, said that the recent travels of Messrs. Lindsay and Tietkens had proven that inner Australia was by no means a Saharan waste, and, though now uninhabited, it was capable of supporting a large population. They found not only wide regions covered with luxuriant grass, but also mineral deposits that are certain to attract attention. Almost in the geographical centre of the continent Tietkens found several large rivers whose head waters were on the northern slopes of mountain ranges. The rivers flowed north, and as far as he traced them he found a great deal of large and valuable timber along their banks.

Lindsay's investigation between 18° and 24° south latitude resulted in some surprising discoveries. In the MacDonnell range of mountains he found garnets and rubbies and abundant indications that mining in this region for precious stones will be highly profitable. On Tennant's Creek he found gold-bearing quartz in abundance, and he brought home stories of almost boundless pasture lands, of water in abundance, and of deep, blue lakes, one of which, some 300 miles north of Amadeus Lake, is of large and as yet unknown extent. His explorations covered a region, extending several hundred miles north and south, and both east and west of his route stretches a vast and wholly unknown region that gives promise of being equally inviting.

The great railroad which is to extend across the continent from north to south, through the eastern part of the country once supposed to be a desert, will much facilitate the work of exploration; and although inner Australia has been sadly neglected by travellers, it will not be many years before the last of her geographical secrets is revealed. This railroad is now in operation for 600 miles north of Adelaide. Track laying is pushing steadily on and the line is growing southward also from Port Darwin, its northern terminus. An exploring party has just been sent out by the Geographical society of Australasia to more fully explore the region, of which our first accounts have been so unexpectedly gratifying.—N. Y. Sun.

Not so Favorable.—Deacon Williams—Brudder Jones, how did yer see come outen de trial?

Brudder Jones—De Judge done give 'im two munfs in de jayul.

"'Pears ter me like as if you oughter be pow'ful thankful. He [illegible] mighty light, he did."

"'Twarn't a light 's yer seem ter think. Dey's a gwinter hang 'im when de two munfs is up."

Pocahontas Times.

B. S. LOWRY. C. P. MOORE.

LOWRY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. P. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00	$ 8 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	[illegible]	12 00	[illegible]	[illegible]
One col'n	10 00	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.50; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 14, 1889.

DORR.

Mr. C. P. Dorr, we presume is now one of the best advertised men in the country. For the last few weeks he has been discussed in private and in public, by friend and by foe. For sometime we have been waiting for Mr. Dorr to explain his position on the Senatorial question; at last he has attempted to do this, but to us his explanation is as inconsistent and unsatisfactory as his conduct.

He endeavors to excuse the stand he has taken against Senator Kenna on the alleged ground that Kenna is responsible for the apparent democratic loss in this State and should therefore be retired. But he goes on to say that he would vote for Kenna, if he knew he could be elected which he says is impossible, as he knows that several persons are voting for him who would not if they thought it would elect him.

Now look at the fallacy of his reasoning.

In the first place Mr. Dorr has given us no proof to support his allegation that Mr. Kenna has proven a failure as a leader, nor that he is at all responsible for the decline of democracy in this State. It is a mere assertion of Mr. Dorr's opinion, while on the other hand numbers of our public men with as much political experience and insight as Mr. Dorr strenuously repudiate the charge. But, if we, for argument, grant that the charge is true, still is his explanation grossly inconsistent. He claims to oppose Kenna because Kenna would destroy the democratic party, and yet says he would support him if he knew he could be elected. In other words, he is patriotic enough to defend his party against the destructive rule of John E. Kenna so long as it is not in his power to put him in a position to rule; but, if it were possible for him by his vote to elect this man, Kenna, who he declares to have been so destructive to the interests of the democratic party, then he would vote for him. Mr. Dorr should first of all respect the wish of his constituency, which is almost unanimous for John E. Kenna; but failing to do that, if he opposes Kenna on the ground of unfitness, then he should oppose him consistently and not only at such times as he knows it is impossible to elect him.

Again, if it be true as Dorr asserts, that some are voting for Kenna who would not if they believed he could be elected, the only proper way for Mr. Dorr to clear his skirts is to vote with his party and put the responsibility where it belongs. Let him show the people who these deceivers are by casting his vote for Kenna and thus make it necessary that an election be effected or that these pretended friends of Kenna show themselves.

It would seem too that Mr. Dorr has but recently made the discovery that Kenna is a failure and a fraud, or else has but recently been convinced that a failure is not a good thing; for it can be shown that during the campaign when he was asking for votes he more than once declared himself in favor of Kenna, and upon that very ground many did vote for him; while the impression was made on all who supported him that he would certainly vote with his party.

The truth is Mr. Dorr has for some unknown reason heeded neither the desires of those who elected him nor the usages of the party that has elevated him, and no amount of explanation can ever suffice to gain for his course the approval of the democratic party, particularly that portion of the democratic party that lives and ever shall live in Pocahontas county.

A Degradation of the Cabinet.

According to the latest news on the subject from Washington, it seems probable that both branches of Congress will agree to add a new member to the Cabinet, to be known as the Secretary of Agriculture.

Such an addition will have a tendency to lower the whole Cabinet as a body in the estimation of the people. Other things being equal an increase in the number of the President's advisers lessens the honor and distinction belonging to a place in the Cabinet. Furthermore, the new post will be of so little importance as compared with that of each of the other heads of departments that it is certain to be regarded as inferior.

The country does not need a Secretary of Agriculture any more than the President needs an eighth adviser. The Constitution of the U. S. does not invest Congress with any power over agricultural affairs or impose upon it any duties with reference to agriculture. It was doubtless the intent of the great men who founded our Government to leave these matters to the management of the several States; and we believe that so far as the great mass of the farmers in the Union are concerned, they would prefer to have the general Government let the farming interests alone. At all events, there has been no general demand on their part for any such representation in the Cabinet as is now proposed.

For many years, however, there has been at Washington an officer known as the Commissioner of Agriculture, whose principal function has been the distribution of seeds to people who do not want them. Why the Federal Government should distribute seeds to farmers any more than chocolate to children, we have never been able to understand. As a rule, the Commissioners Agricultural knowledge was not their most prominent characteristic, but they have furnished more or less amusement to the country as objects of satire on the part of the press. We doubt whether the new Secretary will serve any more useful purpose.

Some of our readers may possibly be aware that we have not always regarded the system of civil service examinations with enthusiastic favor. It strikes us, however, that if there is any place for such examinations under our form of government, it would be in reference to such an office as that of the new Secretary of Agriculture. If we must have this new office, let us have a farmer from Farmersville to fill it, and let his fitness be ascertained by an Examining Board consisting exclusively of practical farmers who have held the plough and know the difference between a silo and a scythe.

If we must have a Secretary of Agriculture we want a man who knows more about the wheat crop of the country than he does about the Presidential vote of the several States at the last election.—N. Y. Sun.

The following extract from the Charleston Star gives a fair specimen of the disgraceful scenes being enacted at the State Capital. No good citizen, whatever his politics may be, can fail to be heartily ashamed of the present legislature. We are glad to see President Carr is a man and trying to do his duty.

"After the dissolution of the Joint Assembly last night, the Senate repaired to their Chamber and the President resumed the Chair. It being found that a quorum of the Senate was not present, Mr. Oxley introduced the following resolution, which, the rules being suspended, was immediately considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the doors of the Senate be closed, and that the following members appearing to be absent, to-wit: Messrs. Campbell, Davis, Furbee, Lowther, Maxwell, Morris, Scott, Minear, Worley, Morrison and Woodward, be brought forthwith before the Senate.

Whereupon, the President appointed the following assistant Sergeant-at-Arms: Messrs. ——— Boas, Jno. B. White, Percy Laidley, F. H. Scott, Charles Bryden, A. A. Franzheim, J. E. Watson and Clarence Moore, who were immediately started out, each armed with a copy of the resolution, in search of the recreant Senators. After various experiences and many vain searches through the hotels and boarding houses, Mr. Minear was at last brought before the Senate. Seizing the first opportunity, Mr. Minear managed to escape through the transom of the water closet and ran like a deer for his liberty. Whereupon, on motion of Mr. Pritchard, action on the case of Mr. Minear was temporarily postponed. The hands of the town clock had in the meantime kept pace with the Sergeants-at-Arms until they now registered nearly five o'clock, when the Sergeants having battered down a door at the Hotel Ruffner and met with many other adventures, finally bagged part of their game and appeared before the bar of the Senate with several of the Senators. Then the trial began and "they all with one accord began to make excuse." Many and varied were the excuses offered, but the general verdict on motion of some Senator was "six dollars and cost—next." Mr. Worley (it being known by many present that he was actually sick) was on motion excused. Mr. Davis who also proved that he was sick was excused, but the following viz: Messrs. Maxwell, Campbell, Lowther, Furbee, Minear and Morrison were fined, $6 and costs each.

President Carr is determined as far as lies in his power to compel the Senators to be present on certain occasions even if they will not work.

The Monroe county Watchman is still the official organ of the Kickers, freely volunteering to defend any one who defies the will of his party.

Some of the animals of the Charleston menagerie are becoming unmanageable and dangerous. Morris, and four or five others broke their chains a few days ago and were recaptured with great difficulty. Dorr has also shown signs of madness, and it may become necessary to adopt Forepaugh's plan and strangle him, for the safety of the other animals.

We presume that no man can say with certainty who shall constitute the next Cabinet; unless it be President Harrison himself, and we have every reason to believe he has not fully made up his mind. Indications seem, however, to point to Jas. G. Blaine for Secretary of State, Jno. C. New for Secretary of the Treasury and John Wanamaker for Postmaster General. It is thought Mahone will be left out. Thanks to Mr. Harrison for that.

A Washington correspondent says that General Mahone will be offered a Foreign Mission. This will be acceptable news to General Mahone's fellow-citizens of both parties, for while it will relieve the Southern Democrats of the odious presence of the King of Scalawags, it will also save the Republican party from the political leprosy of these Southern policy, that solidified the decent people of Virginia even under the mismanagement of the Democratic party.

In accrediting Billy Caprichonse to a foreign nation the new President will have the satisfaction of illustrating the dignity of the American people officially in the same high manner that Bill Chandler did it for the navy of jobs. But the question is, to which country shall Billy be sent, and though it is not our business to advise a Republican administration beforehand, still as General Mahone is a Virginia man, we take leave to suggest that this State would feel under obligations if President Harrison would so far recognize the genius of her pet abomination as to send him as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Congo, his Majesty Bibassy, whose color would match the General's politics, and who could be relied on not to cook and eat such a lean specimen as long as there are other monkeys in the native trees. —Richmond Times.

There is a dog employed in the Postal Service in the office at Allentown, Pa.—N. Y. Sun.

We are glad to know that but one dog was employed in the postal service during the term of President Cleveland. Perhaps, they will be more plentiful after the 4th of March.

After March 4th, we will have four Governors, Fleming will claim it, and Goff will claim it, Wilson will claim that until the Contest is settled he is entitled to hold over, and President Robt. Carr will claim that as there is a vacancy the office is really his. Governors will be as plentiful as Constables.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following is a list of Fiduciaries whose accounts are before me for settlement.

John Ligon, Ex'r of R. D. McCutcheon dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r of acc'ts for Pocahontas county.

HOME NEWS

—Winter was [illegible], but come in earnest at last.

—Geo. P. Moore, Esq., of Edray was in town Tuesday.

—Another trial before Justice Shrader to-day.

—Wm. H. Overholt, Esq., of Hillsboro paid Huntersville a flying visit last Saturday.

—Jno. W. Warwick, Esq., of Edray was in town Monday and Tuesday.

—Drummers are beginning to make frequent visits to this section.

—If you want Envelopes, Letter or Note heads, cheap, call at the TIMES office and you can get them.

—Mitchell D. McGlaughlin, accompanied by Miss Fannie Withrow, went to Bath Co., Va., last Tuesday.

—Drs. John Ligon and Wm. G. Townsend were called in last Friday to see Mr. Murry, at Hotel Pocahontas.

—The ice crop was not so bad after all. Every ice-house in town was filled last week, and some left over.

—H. H. McClintic, Esq., of Buckeye was in Huntersville last week. Mr. McClintic is supplying our town pretty much with flour from his new mill.

—A recent letter from Capt. W. L. Trench, who, with Capt Craig, is now at Kissimmee, city, Fla., states that he is well pleased with that country.

—Note the new advertisement in this weeks issue, signed by Messrs. Isaac McNeel and Uriah Bird. They are proposing to sell flour, etc. at very low rates.

—A correspondent suggests that the next move in the way of public improvement should be the building of a bridge across Greenbrier river near Clover Lick. What say you all?

—Mr. Daniel Murry, who was severely hurt in the disturbance at Hotel Pocahontas, an account of which we gave last week, started to Philadelphia last Monday to be treated in the hospital. The doctors attending him decided that his eye would have to be removed. This is extremely unfortunate for Mr. Murry, and he has the sympathies of all who know him.

—We have received another communication from F. A. Renick, Esq., on matters of interest to the farmers. Mr. Renick's last communication was very much appreciated by the readers of the TIMES, and they will, no doubt, read with eagerness whatever he may contribute hereafter. Why don't some of the rest of our people speak out?

—President Cleveland has at last decided to go to New York to practice law, instead of coming to Huntersville as he had thought of doing. He gives as his reason for the change, that so many of our people expect a lawyer to practice before the County Court and Justices without making any charge. Cleveland acted wisely and if this imposition on good nature isn't stopped the entire legal fraternity will be obliged to move to New York.

—The people of Huntersville enjoyed last Saturday what to any other set of people would be a rare treat, but to them has become a common occurrence. It was a trial before Justice [illegible] Shrader. In this case A. W. Rider was plaintiff and Howard Underwood defendant. About all the lawyers in town were employed and all the citizens of the district examined as witnesses. The effort was to [illegible] Underwood to give bond to keep the peace. This, however was not accomplished, and Mr. Rider had the costs to pay all for nothing.

—L. M. McClintic, Esq., made a visit to Bath Co., Va., this week.

—We have just received a new line of paper and envelopes, which are being sold printed or unprinted, remarkably cheap. If you need anything in that line, send in your orders at once.

TIMES.

PREACHING.—I will preach the 5th Sunday in this month, at the Beaver creek school house, at 11 a. m. by request on a special subject.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. John H. Waymouth will be at Mingo Flats, Feb. 4th and remain 4 days; Edray, Feb. 9th, 8 days; Mill Point, Feb. 20th, 3 days; Huntersville, Feb. 23rd, 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted by the use of Cocaine, Gold fillings inserted in artificial teeth, which add very much to their natural appearance.

jan 24 4-t

Back Allegheny Jottings.

We have had a remarkably fine winter thus far, there has been but little snow here.

Mrs. Jacob Shinnaberry has about recovered from her recent illness.

Mr. Henry Wilfong is seriously ill. He is being attended by Dr. Austin.

Married, Jan. 31st, at the residence of the brides brother, by Rev. W. H. Ballangee, Mr. J. L. Slaven and Miss Cenia Tallman, all of this county. It is reported that one of the spectators got a "leedle narvos" while the ceremony was being performed.

We can produce a man who, to hear his exploits, rivals even Munchausen, but, unlike that great adventurer, he gets lost occasionally.

Many of our people are indignant because the majority's choice for sheriff was not allowed to qualify.

The people are much pleased with the "Times" in this section.

SCRIBLER.

Dunmore Doings.

Capt. E. A. Smith and his men moved into the ark last Saturday, ready to begin the drive with the first water.

Jas. Strytch has moved into the camp to take care of things during vacation.

A daughter of Geo. W. Arbogast, aged 15 years, who has been afflicted for a long while, died last Friday.

John Ralston, of Green Bank received an ugly and dangerous cut on his face last week. He was attempting to split a frozen oak block with a double bit axe, when the axe rebounded cutting his brow, entering his cheek bone and splitting his lip.

The Sunday school at this place, under the superintendence of Mr. Jno. A. Taylor is in a prosperous condition. An excellent library of 100 volumes has been ordered for the use of the school, and is expected to arrive this week. Donations of good books are requested and will be highly appreciated.

We are all very much outdone by the conduct of the man from Webster county (we don't claim him) in the Legislature.

Yours etc.

Beaver Dam.

Northwest of the mountain at the head of Swago creek, is to be found a section of fine country, susceptible of vast and largely paying improvement, if it had the advantage of a passable public highway. The present road across the mountain to this section is only a pretense, it has neither grade nor location, such as any County Court ought to recognize. A location and review was made some years ago, at a grade of five degrees and under, on good road land, but was never established. Public interests demands that a good road be opened on this line, or, some other, and a motion will soon be made, for this purpose. No investment pays a greater dividend than does putting opening good roads into and through rich and fertile country. Be pleased fellow citizens, of the County Court, to hear us when we call, and hand us down an order for this much needed improvement.

Xx.

Temperance Reform.

In a recent issue of your paper is found a report of a mass meeting in Hillsboro, W. Va., on Temperance work etc. which leads the reader to thinking.

It is logical to admit that any community has the right to speak out "in meetin," and defend their homes and their friends from the demon, strong drink. But is it good sound logic to thus "strain at the camel" in the bad, whiskey by the jug full, and "swallow the gnat," in selling and furnishing essense of cinnamon, and jamaica ginger, by wholesale? It pays a good profit, and will intoxicate, and topers will have it and drink it, if they cannot get whiskey. And who ever saw Jamaica ginger put up in half-pint bottles, until within the last few years.

Would it not be much better to be consistant, and sell no intoxicant if we advocate, total abstinence. A few merchants in this county do not sell these drugs at all, but a few do sell them, and that to public injury.

Xx.

Settled at Last.

It has always been hard for us to understand how matter is influenced by mind; but now the whole thing is as plain as the nose on the back of a man's head. Prof. D. F. Brown discussing the matter in the N. Y. Independent, tells us so plainly how the thing is done that no man, woman nor child could fail to understand; showing the whole affair to be controlled by the nerves. He illustrates as follows:

"A couple of organisms which for the sake of distinction, we call Newton and La Place. These were in marvellously complex relations of interaction with the environment, and there was also a very wonderful play of nervous discharges along lines of least resistance, together with divers differentiations of the homogeneous and manifold integrations of correspondences. The plexuses and ganglia, too, wrought bravely, and nascent motor excitations were produced in abundance."

Don't you see? It's as easy as falling off a log. If that's not plain we'll give you a rule that will work it: Find the greatest uncommon agitator, draw a parallel to the intrinsic divisor and punctuate the thermometer, and be sure to keep in a cool place.

There seems to be some difficulty to determine whether it is the duty of Mrs. Cleveland or Mrs. Harrison to do the White House Spring cleaning. The present mistress says she certainly will not make the soap and set the hens.

The West Virginia Legislature is still busy doing nothing. The Fleming-Goff contest is still unsettled, the Senatorial question unsettled; in fact everything unsettled, even the board bills of the senators and representatives. There is one thing however we may depend on the present legislature doing, that is drawing its salary.

NOTICE.

We are prepared to furnish wheat, flour and offals at our mills at the following prices:

Wheat, per bu.	$1.00
Flour, per 100	2.25
[illegible] per [illegible]	1[illegible]
Bran.	[illegible]
Corn per bu.	[illegible]

Terms, cash.

Respectfully,
URIAH BIRD.
ISAAC McNEEL.

Feb. 14. 3-m

NOTICE.

A reward of $[illegible] will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our tools, etc. that have been stolen from the woods along the railroad.

St. Lawrence Boom & M'f'g Co.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

Jan 14 4-t.

SALESMEN.

Wanted for our complete line of Nursery Stock. All new, choice and fast selling specialties. I can furnish PAYING POSITIONS to workers. My large experience in the business enables me to offer special advantages to beginners. I CAN MAKE A SUCCESSFUL SALESMAN of any one who will follow my instructions. Permanent employment. Wages paid each week. Outfit free. Apply at once and secure choice of territory.

EDWARD P. SNELL,
Nurseryman, Rochester, N. Y.
MENTION THIS PAPER.

Jan. 24 [illegible]

Simmons Liver Regulator produces no unpleasant effect upon the stomach no matter how long it is taken. A little taken at night insures refreshing sleep and a natural evacuation of the bowels. A little taken in the morning sharpens the appetite, cleanses the stomach and sweetens the breath.

"I never recommend a medicine unless I know it to be good. In a ministry of twenty-five years I have often felt the need of such a medicine, and when I found it I exclaimed: 'Eureka!'" Rev. J. P. PARKER, Proprietor "Christian Visitor," Smithfield, N. C. 17-4t

PUBLIC SALE.

I will sell at public auction on the 1st day of March, 1889, the following property 225 Sheep mostly ewes 27 two-year old Cattle, 4 Cows and 1 two-year old bull, 4 horses, one buggy and harness, one cane mill and household and kitchen furniture.

Terms of sale made known on day of sale.

Sale will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JACOB McGLAUGHLIN.

SHOEMAKER'S SHOP,
at
Huntersville, W. Va.

I am prepared to make in the best style and order, Boots and Shoes of all kinds, also repairing done in neat style.

J. C. THOMPSON.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-t Printers fee $4.00

[illegible]

Commissioner's Sale of Land

[illegible]

Notice to Lein Holders

[illegible]

...which are liens on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office in the town of Huntersville, on or before the [illegible] DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the [illegible] day of Jan. 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $[illegible]

IF YOU WANT

Letter Heads,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Official Blanks,

Posters,

or

Anything

In That Line.

REMEMBER

At

The TIMES Office

They may be procured

at

Lowest Rates

and of

Best Style

and

QUALITY.

TRY US

Pocahontas Times.

B. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ [illegible]	$ [illegible]	$ [illegible]
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	[illegible]

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 14, 1889.

Worth Telling Again.

Waverly Magazine: Twenty years have passed since a certain Bath sea captain, entering the port of New York, telegraphed his wife at Bath to join him at the metropolis prepared for a sea voyage. Accordingly a day or two after the arrival of the message saw the wife embarked upon the through train from Bath to Boston, accompanied by an infant child scarcely two years old.

This car was coupled on to the end of the Portland train at Brunswick, and, leaving the child asleep, the Captain's wife seized the opportunity to fill the baby's bottle with milk in the depot restaurant. While the mother was intent upon her errand the train slipped quietly out of the station, and when the mother emerged from the restaurant door it was fast disappearing under the Spring-street bridge. Eagerly she explained the situation to the sympathizing group of railroad men who gathered around. Baby and purse, containing all her money and ticket, were in the fast disappearing train. A hurried council followed, and a plan was instantly formed.

Old No. 23, "The Brunswick," was sidetracked, waiting the passage of the train just gone. Uncle Thompson, the station baggage master at that time, ran hastily to this engine and asked her aid to overtake the flying train. The genial Charles, ever ready to aid the case of any female in distress, volunteered to catch the robber. Hastily filling the firebox with wood from the tender, while Thompson was assisting the woman to mount the engine, with a command to the switchman to "give us the main line," with hand upon the throttle, No. 23 flew quickly over the switches and commenced her run.

An empty engine chasing a heavy train up "Oak Hill grade," which extends four miles straight away from Brunswick has an easy task, and before they had covered more than half of that distance they could see the object of their pursuit.

To sound his whistle, calling the attention of the train men to the chase, and thereby stop the train, was not part of the programme, fearing that he might run over them should they suddenly stop. So quietly running along the rear of the train deadening the pursuit, he is soon immediately behind them. Then his tender—for they are running backward—rubs against the rear platform of the train, and while the engineer holds her there Thompson assists the woman over the tender, down upon the platform of the car containing the baby, still fast asleep, the mother clasping tightly the bottle of milk.

The Prohibition question is to have another test in Pennsylvania at a special election to be held next June.

Fixing the Responsibility.

Blundering men, instead of admitting their responsibility, try to excuse themselves by throwing the blame on others. A Single story illustrates this tendency of human nature, and also the French proverb: "He accuses who excuses himself." On night thieves broke into a rich man's house and carried off all his valuables. On being arrested, they excused their crime by saying that "they were blameless, as the walls of the house were so badly built as to tempt them to break through. The mason was therefore to blame for the robbery. The mason was brought before the magistrate. "The fault is not mine," said he, "but that of the coolie who made the mortar badly." The coolie laid the blame upon the potter who had sold him a cracked vessel in which he could not carry sufficient water to mix the mortar properly. The potter explained that the blame could not be laid upon him but upon a pretty woman, who, passing while he was making the vessel, so riveted his attention that he forgot about his work. The woman protested that the goldsmith was at fault. He had failed to send home her earrings and she passed the potter's shop on her way to get them. The goldsmith, not being able to offer an excuse for his neglect, was sentenced to be hanged. His friends begged the judge to spare him, as he was sick and ill favored and would not make a pretty spectacle. "But somebody must be hanged," said the judge. His attention was thereupon called to a fat Moor in a shop opposite, and the judge ordered him to be hanged in the goldsmith's stead.—Argonaut.

In Hindoostan, where three varieties of sacred monkeys enjoy the freedom of every town, those four handed pensioners often assist the police in enforcing the riot laws by charging enmasse for the scene of every dog fight and schoolboy scuffle. They will rescue worried cats and, for greater security, deposit them on the next roof, or suppress rowdyism in general; the stout Rhesus baboon for instance, being physically as well as morally qualified to quell the aggressive disposition of the fiercest cur. On the platform of a public warehouse the British residents of Agra, a few years ago, witnessed a scene which put the character trait in even a stronger light.

A little street Arab had spread his pallet in the shade of a stack of country produce, and had just dropped asleep, when the proprietor of the Planters' hotel strolled up with a pet leopard that had learned to accompany him in all his rambles. A troop of tramp monkeys had taken post on the opposite end of the shed, and, like the beggar boy, seemed to enjoy a comfortable siesta, but at sight of the speckled intruder the whole gang charged along the platform like a squadron of spahis and, instantly forming a semicircle about the little sleeper, faced the leopard with bristling manes, evidently resolved to defeat the purpose of his visit.—Popular Science Monthly.

Collector: I have called six times, sir, for the amount of this bill already.

Citizen: Wha-at, six times? Is it possible you have been put to all that annoyance? Now, I'll tell you what I'll do: when I feel like paying the amount I will call on you myself. It's outrageous to give a man the trouble I have unconsciously given you.—Life.

Her grandmother was so sick that the report got out that she was dead. A sympathetic old gentleman met the child on the street.

"And when is your grandmother to be buried, my dear?" he asked her.

"Not till she's dead, sir."

—The House Wife for February published at Greenfield, Mass., is a most excellent number of this popular household periodical. It is well worth all it costs, 50 cents per year.

During Jan. there was a net increase of $6,750,000 in money and bullion in the Treasury, and yet you can't borrow a dollar from Sam, no matter how hard up you are.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 21, 1889. | Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year in advance. | No. 31.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. B. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Itching Piles.

[...] Beard, in the 79th year of his age.

In the death of Joseph Beard Pocahontas county loses one of her oldest and most respected citizens, whose long and eventful life is honorably and inseprably identified with the history of the county. He was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va. on the 20th day of Sept., 1810, and removed to Pocahontas county in the year 1857. Early in life he was united in marriage to Mattie Jordan, daughter of John Jordan, Esq., with whom he happily lived till the day of his death, and who now survives him, an aged and lonely widow. As the issue of this marriage were born three children; one son, John J. Beard, the present Clerk of the Courts of Pocahontas county, and two daughters, Mrs. Isaac McNeel, and Mrs. Wm. L. McNeel, now deceased.

In the year 1883 Mr. Beard made a profession of religion and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1844 when the division came, Joseph Beard without hesitation cast his lot with the M. E. Church, South.

His life was marked with unusual energy and activity, but in no enterprise was this more manifest than in his labors for his Church. He was not a religious enthusiast, nor specially demonstrative, but unceasingly gave those better and more substantial evidences of a firm and abiding faith in Christ and his church. In the prosecution of church work of every kind, he was always ready to do his part, and never slow to suggest to others their duty when the occasion demanded. He was a man of firm convictions and decided opinions, yet ever maintained a liberal respect for the belief of others. There never lived a more sincere man; deceit had no place in the make up of his character. Indeed his habit of telling the truth plainly, and his outspoken candor in commending the good and reproving evil sometimes falsely led those who were not well acquainted with him to think him in some matters a harsh man, but he was not so; underneath the surface of solid belief and rigid candor was hidden a heart as tender as the heart of a child, the sympathies of which responded to the gentlest touch. His generosity and hospitality were proverbial, the friend and the stranger were ever his welcome guests, nor did he ever weary in sharing the comforts of his home with as many as chose to partake of them. He was possessed of a peculiarly happy nature; disappointment nor calamity could never subdue for any time his cheerful spirit. It was his rule to always do his best and to be satisfied with the result.

He will long and widely be missed. He was affectionate and indulgent toward his kindred, and true in his friendship. He was a good and useful citizen, ever ready to contribute in any manner to the good of society and of his country. But most of all will be missed by his church, whose interests were first in his heart. His life is ended, but [...]

Dehorning Cattle.

My former article on the above subject seems to have excited one writer to, not only notice it, but to suggest two more very important improvements in the comfort, safety and good appearance of other domestic animals. Such as the dehorning of hogs and dehorning mules. Nothing can be plainer than the duty, if not the obligation of the proposer of these two improvements to enlighten the world by making a practical proof on his own case of these highly desired improvements. The genius that prompted the suggestion ought to be equal to the execution or invention of plan of operation. I am still in favor of dehorning cattle and have practical proofs to show its merits every day. I have just learned from a reliable source that my friend Dick Edmonson, of Kansas has removed the horns from 3,000 cattle last fall. I am running in some boundary, horses, cows and bulls, with perfect safety, and now, after two months test, my animals look well in order, better in appearance and decidedly more comfortable to themselves and me. So as far as I am interested, horns will have to go. The present hard times and dullness of the cattle market, demands a thoughtful consideration of every economical device or plan by which our farmers and stockmen may reduce their expenses and handle their stock to better advantage. I think this one step in that direction. I will now suggest one or two more, and would be very happy to have other and wiser heads to make an expression of their views and opinions thereby benefitting their fellow men and making the TIMES, a necessity to every family in the county.

But few farmers in this locality that do not use fertilizers and believe that they pay; notwithstanding the heavy tax they are subject to. What tax! Profits of the middle men, perhaps the largest. Then excessive freight. To illustrate—none of our middlemen will handle and sell for less than a five dollar profit per ton, (often more,) then they secure another profit by charging their customers rates of freight per 100 lbs when they get reduced rates per car-load of 10 tons. If you pay $30.00 per ton at the railroad to an agent, you can very readily see that you are paying $5.00 to $7.00 for agents profits and high freight then if you buy on time, 10 per cent. to add on cost. The remedy is this, let our farmers pool their orders, select one of their number to get manufactors to make bids for the order, and by paying spot cash, get their fertilizers $10.00 to $12.00 per ton less. We all have ourselves to blame for a great deal unnecessary tax. A co-operative style of buying salt and groceries, if nothing else would run down the expense of the farmer very materially, every year. Salt now by car-load will only cost $1.30 per sack instead of $1.75 or $1.80.

F. A. RENICK.

Alderson vs. County Commissioners.

Now that the fourth of March is rapidly drawing near, by which time the law requires that the governor shall issue his certificates to the congressmen-elect from this state, and in view of the fact that our Republican friends are claiming that McGinnis will undoubtedly represent this district in congress for the next four years, it may perhaps be well to review this somewhat celebrated case. In the beginning, when the recount was demanded by Mr. Alderson, the county commissioners refused to allow him to appear by counsel, to introduce witnesses or to cross-examine witnesses introduced by the Republicans, and refused to sign bills of exceptions until the supreme court, by a mandamus, required them to make a record. When Mr. Alderson procured an injunction restraining the county court from certifying the result of the recount, as they ascertained it, until he could have their action reviewed by certiorari proceedings, the commissioners violated the injunction and certified the returns to the governor. That injunction is still in force. Judge Guthrie dissolved it, but Mr. Alderson took an appeal to the supreme court, where the case is still pending. As soon as possible after the bills of exceptions were signed, Alderson appealed to Judge Guthrie for a writ of certiorari, which he awarded, and the clerk of his court, who by the way, is a Republican, was directed to issue a writ to the county commissioners, directing them to send up their record for review. The writ was not issued until about ten days after it was awarded. The record of the county court was copied and compared with the original, and the copy furnished to the commissioners to certify. The Star has it from a reliable source that the commissioners kept the copy in their hands for ten days before delivering it to the clerk of the circuit court. Alderson's counsel demanded an immediate hearing of the case, but the court at the instance of counsel for McGinnis, postponed the case until February 1st. When that time arrived, McGinnis' counsel asked further delay, they well knowing that Judge Guthrie had to go to Mason county to hold court there, on the following Monday. The case was argued for Alderson, and Judge Guthrie took the papers stating that the other side would be allowed to argue, and that the case would probably be decided when the term of court in Mason was over. No reflection is intended by the Star, upon Judge Guthrie, but everything goes to show that there has been a desire on the part of McGinnis' counsel to delay the proceedings as much as possible, in order to prevent Mr. Alderson from having Judge Guthrie's decision, should it be averse to him, reviewed by the supreme court, before the 4th of March. Mr. McGinnis' counsel and friends think their case in the best shape possible, and they are afraid of the superior court, well knowing that the partisan action of the county court, must be reversed. The certificate now in the hands of the governor, from this county, is certainly void, and we feel sure that Governor Wilson will do what he conscienciously believes to be right in the premises. We would not presume to even suggest what he should do, but we can see but one course open, and that is, to issue a certificate before the fourth of March disregarding the certificate of the Kanawha county commissioners, o regarding the result of the recount made by them. Mr. Alderson is elected by a majority of sixteen, to give him the benefit of the recount. The bill of exceptions shows this to be true, and it seems to us that the recount is better evidence of the true result than a certificate made void by an injunction and certiorari proceedings.—Charleston Star.

Now they say we'll have to fight Portugal. Well if nothing else will do, Uncle Sam can slap her out of existence some morning before breakfast.

The chance for war with Germany seems to be decreasing. We are not afraid of Germany, but peace is more to be desired than war.

Several persons are said to have frozen to death in Dakota during the big storm last week. The [illegible] is over for this winter.—Washington Post.

National Library at Washington.

The National library contains many rare and curious works. It has some of the most valuable books ever published in America, and among these is the first American Bible printed in the European tongue in this country. It is a German Bible, which was printed at Germantown in 1743 and which Mr. Spofford bought at a book auction about two years ago. It is kept in a box like case in one of the alcoves of the ground floor, and is truly a curiosity. Though not as thick as Webster's Dictionary, it weighs about as much, and though printed over 120 years ago, it is still in good condition. It is about six inches thick and eight inches wide, by ten or twelve inches long. It is bound in oak boards, covered with a rich brown leather, and on its corners there are heavy brass bosses, with little heads jutting out of them to keep the leather from resting on the table. Its clasps are of leather, with brass fasteners, and its paper now yellow with age, is printed in queer old German type. The first page is in colors and on the fly leaves there are several genealogical records. It was originally owned by a German, but in 1798 it was bought by Enoch Rittenhouse, a member, I doubt not, of the old Rittenhouse family of Philadelphia.

Another Bible that the library has is that printed for the Indians by John Eliot in 1663. This is the first Bible printed in America. It was printed in Cambridge, and in the Indian tongue. The library has a chapter devoted to Bibles, and the chapter of theological works is the largest one in the library. I looked at this big bookcase of Bibles the other day; they are of all sizes and shapes, from the little vest pocket edition to one big enough almost for a mounting block for horses. They are in all dialects and languages, and the Chinese Bibles look like so many bunches of manilla wrapping paper. The print of these Bibles is as queer as the languages in which they are printed, and they have every style of types, from the illuminated script of the monks of the middle ages to the common print of to day.

The manuscripts of the National library include many valuable autographs. Among them are two autograph journals of George Washington, one of which was made during Braddock's expedition and one in 1787, at Mt. Vernon. Here is a private journal of Arthur Lee while he was minister to France, at the breaking out of the revolution, and there are two volumes of an original military journal of Maj Gen. Greene, written now over 100 years ago.

The National library was founded about 1801, and the first installment of books was carted to Washington in trunks. They were ordered from London, and they cost altogether [illegible].—Frank G. Carpenter in the Cosmopolitan.

The grand jury in Birmingham, Ala., has declined to indict Sheriff Smith, or any of his posse, for the killing of the persons who, with others, attacked the jail in that place on the night of the 8th of December last. The grand jury was three weeks investigating the matter and examined over two hundred witnesses. This is doubtless the end of the prosecutions against the Sheriff and his assistants.

The New York street car strike is at last ended, with no advantage gained by the strikers.

Pocahontas Times.

S. S. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 21, 1889.

THE SITUATION.

The latest from Charleston shows that C. P. Dorr, of Webster county is solely responsible for all further delay in settling the Senaterial question.

On the last two ballots taken the three labor delegates, who had previously been voting for men of their own party divided their votes between Kenna and Goff; Carr and Merrell voting for Goff and Harr for Kenna.

Of the 85 votes cast Goff received 42 and Kenna 42, leaving the matter to be decided by Dorr, who threw away the opportunity by voting for W. T. Ice.

When the democratic majority is so meager and the danger in delay so obvious, there could be no explanation made of Mr. Dorr's conduct that would satisfy his constituency or the party at large. His action is a gross and shameful betrayal of political faith. Whatever his motive may be, persistency in his present course must subject him to suspicions not to be envied.

When we remember that the strongest appeal made to the people who elected him was that he was the nominee of his party, and that his large following was due to the very same reason; it is exceedingly difficult to understand how Mr. Dorr, in the face of these things, can presume to set himself up in opposition the party's nominee for the Senate, and in opposition to the voice of the democratic party of the state. No amount of explanation or excuse can suffice to justify him in the opinion of the public.

It is greatly to be deplored that the power to decide between Goff and Kenna has fallen into the hands of a man who so lightly regards his pledges virtually and absolutely made to the people who were the means of his elevation.

Mr. Dorr may talk of Kenna's destroying the party, but in our opinion the recent conduct of Mr. Dorr has done the democracy of Pocahontas county more harm in a day than Kenna has done in his entire life time.

Ex-United States Senator Camden of this State, has just completed the formation of two companies to further develop the coal fields of the State. One is the Monongahela Railroad Company and the other the Upper Monongahela Coal and Coke Company. The capital stock of $2,000,000 has been all subscribed. Traffic arrangements have been made with the Baltimore & Ohio which it is expected will prove of mutual benefit.

General Stephen D. Lee is nominated for Governor of Mississippi. The old soldiers remember this brilliant soldier, who was a corps commander in Johnson's army after having made a splendid record in the Army of Northern Virginia.

History of the Samoan Troubles.

Troubles have existed among the Samoans since 1830. In that year the German Commercial and Plantation Society at Apia, or, rather, its predecessor, the firm of Godefroy, of Hamburg, stood on the side of Malietoa, a chief belonging to one of the most distinguished families of Samoa. Throughout the succeeding twenty years the foreigners who settled in Samoa—Americans, Englishmen and Germans—sought, by taking sides with or against Malietoa, to strengthen respect for their respective nations, and thereby increase their commerce. In 1878 the United States, which had previously obtained a concession of a magnificient harbor in the Samoa Islands and established a coaling station there, made a treaty with Samoa. The local government in in 1879 being a state of great confusion, Sir Arthur Gordon, as Queen Victoria's commissioner in the Western Pacific, established King Malietoa firmly on the throne and issued a proclamation. This proclamation was followed by a treaty with Malietoa, dated August 18. 1878. In the same year Germany also made a treaty with Malietoa. The treaties entered into between the United States, Great Britian, Germany and Samoa were teraties of friendship and reciprocity, agreed to for the purpose of promoting the trade which American, English and German merchants had gone to the remote Samoan Islands to establish. It was understood and agreed upon among the treaty powers that the independence and neutrality of these islands should be forever preserved. While America and England have remained consistent to the treaty obligations and have recognized Malietoa as the legitimate ruler, the policy of the Germans has been a wavering one. At one time they would reognize Malietoa as King, at another they would take sides with the opposing King. In 1884 King Malietoa was coerced into an agreement with the German Government and sent a protest about it to the German Emperor. Following the protest there was sent a petition to the English Queen, signed by nearly all the Samoan chiefs, praying for annexation to Great Britain on the ground, among others, that they were afraid of being forcibly annexed by the Germans. In 1885 and again in 1886 further attempts were made by Germany to seize the sovereignty of the Samoan Islands, but each time the attempt was successfully resisted by the British and American representatives.

In the autumn of 1886 a German named Brandeis appeared in Apia. The public was given to understand that he was in the service of the German Commercial and Plantation Society Among the employes of this firm, however, it was known that he had been selected to be the Minister of Malietoa's rival. Tamasese, Brandeis at once be an to study local conditions, and worked at times at the German Counsulate, made himself familiar with the business and social relations of Apia, and then went to the home of Tamasese, in the immediate vicinity of the great cotton and cocoa plantation of the German Commercial and Plantation Society. There a house was built and furnished by this society for Brandeis, and there he stayed, without it being publicly known, as the adviser of Tamasese and perfecting himself in the Samoan language. Tamasese and his adherents were then amply supplied with arms and munitions. At the beginning of 1887, within a brief period, hundreds of muskets were sent through the German Commercial and Plantation Society and through Brandeis to Tamasese's party. A little later a German fleet of four or five ships was at anchor in the harbor of Apia. Four days later the German Consul wrote to Malietoa complaining that German settlers had been attacked by the natives on March 22 of that year, and that from time to time during the previous four years the German plantations had been damaged to the amount of thousands of dollars a year. A heavy demand for compensation was made for the damage to the plantations, without a single item of particulars being given to the Samoan King. The monstrous demand was made that the sum claimed for compensation should be paid the next day—a demand which, in such a country, it was practically impossible to meet. The King wrote, promising an answer in three days, and the reply given by the German commander was the landing on the next day of seven hundred troops from his squadron, and the issuing of a proclamation in the name of the Government of Germany, declaring Tamasese King of Samoa. At the same time Malietoa was deported, first to Hamburg, then to Bremerhaven, was lodged and boarded under police supervision at Lehr, a suburb of Bremerhaven, and then was taken to Australia on board the steamship Neckar, by a German naval officer.

The native opposition to Tamasese, or to the Braudeis-Tamasese Government, as it is called, reachep its climax on September 9, 1888, on which date they crowned Mataafa, a legitimate successor to Malietoa, King of Samoa, with the title of Malietoa, Tooa Mataafa. Notices of the event were at once sent to the American English and German Consuls, the French priest, and to Tamasese. Mataafa is still at the head of the Government and is doing all in his power to keep it out of the hands of Tamasese and his German allies. The position of the United States to-day is contained in the following instructions which Secretary Whitney telegraphed to Admiral Kimberly at Panama on January 11:

"You will proceed at once to Samoa and extend full protection to American interests, citizens and property. You will consult with the American Vice-Consul, examine his archives and otherwise inform yourself as to the situation and all recent occurrences. You will protest against the subjugation of the native Samoan Government by Germany as in violation of positive agreement and understanding between the treaty powers, but inform the representatives of the British and German Governments of your readiness to co-opperate in causing all treaty rights to be respected, and in restoring peace and order on the basis of recognition of Samoan rights to independence; endeavor to prevent extreme measures against the Samoans."

The coprah trade of Samoa seems to be the cause of all the present trouble. Coprah, the dried kernel of the cocoanut, is the staple commodity of the Samoan Islands, as it is of all the islands of the Western Pacific. In 1885 the exports of this article for German account were estimated at the value of $222,742. The competition of four American houses has greatly irritated the German traders, their profits being thereby much decreased.

President Cleveland has appointed Col. John C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, as Inspector General of the United States army, with rank of brigadier general, and the appointment has been confirmed by the senate.

A. E. Stevenson, at present holding the position of First Assistant Postmaster General, has been appointed to the place upon the Bench of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia made vacant by the death of Judge Merrick.

Dorr Says he doesn't call himself a "Kicker." Neither does a mule.

There is one thing left to console us; they can't call him Dorr of Pocahontas, but he must be spoken of as Dorr of Webster.

On the last ballot for U. S. Senator Mr. Dorr [cut off] Webster County, [cut off]

HOME NEWS

—Dr. G. L. Austin, of Green Bank, was in town Monday night.

—On Monday there was a considerable rise in the waters in this section. The lumbermen were busily engaged driving logs.

—Messrs. John J. Beard and C. F. Moore, with their families, were down at Hillsboro last week attending the funeral of Mr. Joseph Beard.

—James Grimes and Mrs. Jacob [illegible], living near Mill Point, are both on the sick list. Dr. Mathew [illegible] in attendance.

—Geo. R. Curry, Esq., of Hillsboro, steps higher than ever and won't speak to common people. Another big boy at his house.

—Mr. Peck, President of the Beaver Lick Lumber Company, was in Huntersville Monday looking after the interests of his company.

—Mr. John R. Slaven, who has been sick at the Huntersville Hotel for some time died just a few minutes before the paper for this week went to press—Wednesday, Feb. 20, at 2:30 p. m.

—We are informed that H. M. Lockridge, Esq., has for some days been suffering from a renewal of his old trouble, rheumatism.

—N. J. Brown, Esq., Mill Point's enterprising merchant, is keeping up well with the times. He has a full line of spring goods already displayed in his store.

—George Haliday, the young man who was accidentally shot some two weeks ago is said to be doing as well as could be expected.

—Daniel O,Connell, Esq., who is associated with the Cumberland Lumber Company, spent several days in Huntersville last week. Before a great while he contemplates locating in this vicinity and says he intends to run one of the best Buckwheat Mills in the Country.

—Our efficient Constable, Jas. R. Buzzard, while crossing Thorny creek last Monday, narrowly escaped being drowned. His mule stumbled and fell, throwing Mr. Buzzard into the water. Fortunately he was thrown near a fence, by means of which he succeeded in getting ashore.

—The Delineator for March is fully up to its usual excellence. The publishers of this magazine spare no pains nor expense to make their publication what the ladies demand. It's one of the very best illustrated periodicals in the country. Price $1.00 per year. Published by The Butteric Publishing Co., 7, 9 & 11 West Thirteenth St., N. Y.

A CARD OF THANKS.—I desire to express my thanks to the people of Huntersville, and others, for the kindness shown me during my recent affliction at Hotel Pocahontas. I shall ever remember it with sincere gratitude.

DANIEL MURRY.

[illegible] Happenings.

Heavy rains and plenty of mud.

Mr. E. I. Holt is off on a trip to [illegible] Flats.

Miss Dosbie Sharp, of Douthard's creek, entered last week as a pupil of the H. M. and F. Academy.

Messrs. John Hill, of Kansas and Winters Beard, of Missouri, are visiting friends and relatives at this place.

Miss Lena Hill, of Jacox, entered this morning as a pupil of the H. M. and F. Academy.

We had four trials in town last Saturday. I tell you a man has to walk straight while he stays in town now.

The Hillsboro division of the Sons of Temperance are gaining ground every day, and doing an excellent work at this place.

Died, on last Thursday morning Mr. Joseph Beard, of Rheumatism of the chest. Mr. Beard was an aged and respected citizen and a devout member of the M. E. Church, South. All deeply sympathize with his sorrowing relatives, but we feel that his home is now with the Blest.

PRUNELLA.

Died

At his home in Hillsboro, Pocahontas county, West Virginia, on the 14th day of Feb. 1889, Joseph Beard, in the 79th year of his age.

In the death of Joseph Beard Pocahontas county loses one of her oldest and most respected citizens, whose long and eventful life is honorably and inseprably identified with the history of the county. He was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va. on the 29th day of Sept., 1810, and removed to Pocahontas county in the year 1857. Early in life he was united in marriage to Mattie Jordan, daughter of John Jordan, Esq., with whom he happily lived till the day of his death, and who now survives him, an aged and lonely widow. As the issue of this marriage were born three children; one son, John J. Beard, the present Clerk of the Courts of Pocahontas county, and two daughters, Mrs. Isaac McNeel, and Mrs. Wm. L. McNeel, now deceased.

In the year 1883 Mr. Beard made a profession of religion and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1844 when the division came, Joseph Beard without hesitation cast his lot with the M. E. Church, South.

His life was marked with unusual energy and activity, but in no enterprise was this more manifest than in his labors for his Church. He was not a religious enthusiast, nor specially demonstrative, but unceasingly gave those better and more substantial evidences of a firm and abiding faith in Christ and his church. In the prosecution of church work of every kind, he was always ready to do his part, and never slow to suggest to others their duty when the occasion demanded. He was a man of firm convictions and decided opinions, yet ever maintained a liberal respect for the belief of others. There never lived a more sincere man; deceit had no place in the make up of his character. Indeed his habit of telling the truth plainly, and his outspoken candor in commending the good and reproving evil sometimes falsely led those who were not well acquainted with him to think him in some matters a harsh man, but he was not so; underneath the surface of solid belief and rigid candor was hidden a heart as tender as the heart of a child, the sympathies of which responded to the gentlest touch. His generosity and hospitality were proverbial, the friend and the stranger were ever his welcome guests, nor did he ever weary in sharing the comforts of his home with as many as chose to partake of them. He was possessed of a peculiarly happy nature; disappointment nor calamity could never subdue for any time his cheerful spirit. It was his rule to always do his best and to be satisfied with the result.

He will long and widely be missed. He was affectionate and indulgent toward his kindred, and true in his friendship. He was a good and useful citizen, ever ready to contribute in any manner to the good of society and of his country. But most of all will be missed by his church, whose interests were first in his heart. His life is ended, but its influence will still be felt, and truly may it be said of him that "being dead he yet speaketh."

DIED.—At the home of his parents on Knapp's Creek in Pocahontas County, on the 15th day of Feb., 1889, Pryne Herold, youngest son of Andrew Herold, Esq.

The immediate cause of his death we are informed was diabetes. He had been sick a very short while, and when it was announced that he was dead his many friends were greatly surprised and shocked. Pryne was a bright, promising boy, highly esteemed by all who knew him. His premature death is a grievous stroke to his family and friends, to whom we extend our deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA.

Volume XI. carries this work from Debt to Dominie. The 640 pages are packed with information of just the kind which the vast majority of reading people desire to obtain. Like its predecessors it is truly manifold in its character. In a single volume it gives an unabridged dictionary, and a cyclopedia of information which is ample for practical use, is fully reliable, and is brought down to the present year. Among the articles treated at some length we notice that Debt, with its various sub-heads, has over 7 pages; while kindred topics, as Debtor and Creditor, occupy over 6 pages more. Delaware has about 5 pages; Delirum Tremens, 4 pages; Democracy, nearly 7 pages; Denmark, about 10 pages; Dentistry, about 6 pages; Descent of Man, 6 pages; Development, 11 pages; Diet, 8 pages; Digestion, 23 pages; Diphtheria, 5 pages. There are, also, a large number of really helpful illustrations. The form of the book is most convenient; the paper, printing, and binding are all very good. This is emphatically the Cyclopedia for the people, and the extremely low price—onlp 50 cents a volume in cloth, or 65 cents in holf Morocco—brings it within the reach of all. A specimen volume may be ordered and returned if not satisfactory. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Atlanta, and San Francisco.

The New Cabinet Officer.

NORMAN J. COLMAN,

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Presidents Clevelands appointment of Norman J. Colman as Secretary of Agriculture, the new Cabinet office, is universally approved. During the administration about to close this distinguished man has been Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture. As head of a department comprising Seed, Entomological, Horticultural, Pomological and Propagating, Statistical, Chemical, Forestry and Veterinary divisions, he has been eminently successful in carrying out the intention of the law of May 15, 1862, which established the Department of Agriculture.

The new Cabinet officer is a New Yorker by birth and a Missourian by adoption. He was born at Richfield Springs, in 1827. From the age of sixteen up to twenty-eight he was a teacher in New York State, and Louisville Kentucky. While at Louisville he studied law and took the degree of LL. B. He subsequently formed a partnership with M. C. Kerr, afterward Speaker at Washington, and began practice at New Albany, Indiana. Mr. Colman became District Atterney. In 1865 he removed to St. Louis and bought out an agricultural paper. Mr. Colman is the suggestor and originator of the Missouri Horticultural Society, the State Board of Agriculture. He was a member of the Legislature during the exciting political contest of 1865-66 which passed the Drake Constitution, and was a leader of his party. In 1868 he was nominated for Lieutenant Governor but was defeated. He was unanimously nominated for Lieutenant-Governor and elected in 1874. During the war he was a Union man and Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment of enrolled Missouri militia. Secretary Colman is a power in his command of information pertaining to agriculture and kindred subjects.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 20th day of January, 1888, and on the 18th day of October, 1888, in the Chancery cause of N. J. Brown vs. E. N. Grant Jr. and others, the undersigned Special Commissioner will proceed to sell on in front of N. J. Brown's store at Mill Point, Pocahontas County, W. Va., at public auction to the highest bidder 16½ acres of land, the property of the defendant, E. N. Grant, Jr. Said land is situate near Greenbrier river, about one mile from Mill Point in this County, is fertile and in a fine state of cultivation and has a comfortable dwelling house and out buildings upon it.

SATURDAY, MARCH THE 23rd, 1889

TERMS OF SALE—Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and expenses of sale and the residue upon a credit of 6, 12 and 18 months, the purchaser giving bonds with approved security for the deferred payments; bearing interest from date and a lein to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Secial Commissioner.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the Commissioner above has executed bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

feb 21 4t Printers fee $8.23.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following Fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

George W. Callison Adm'r of Martha E. Dorsey, dec'd.

Charles Lightner, Ex'r of William Lightner, dec'd.

I. B. Moore, Adm'r of Margaret Moore, dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Com'r Accts.

FIDUCIARY 2.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

L. M. McClintic and C. F. Moore, Adm'rs of Jacob, Bible, dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK,
Com'r Acc'ts.

Commissioner,s Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of

John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill s Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $6,75.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.
LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, [illegible]; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 21, 1889.

Weather and Common Sense.

It does not always require that a man should be a prophet to make a shrewd guess as to what the weather will be some months in advance. There are probabilities, we will not say certainties, regarding times and seasons that are obvious to every one who knows the difference between storm and calm, heat and cold. We know, for instance, that one extreme is likely to follow another. If one winter is extremely cold it is highly probable it will be followed by another correspondingly moderate. An unusually cold wave so called, will generally be succeeded by a spell of weather of great mildness for the season. To a very dry season, or a succession of dry seasons; there is sure to succeed a period of weather to make up the deficiency of rainfall. If any particular spring is cold and wet and late, we may generally expect that the succeeding autumn will be warm and pleasant, and that winter will be slow in coming. If the entire year should be bad on account of the excessive cold or unseasonable storms, the compensation may not come till the next year, but that it will come in time is as sure as that the sun will continue to rise and set. It is one of the first laws of nature that rain shall alternate with sunshine, storm with calm and heat with cold, and it is by studying these movements of the elements more closely than the rest of mankind that some pretended weather prophets have occasionally succeeded in coming somewhere near the truth in their predictions.—San Francisco Chronicle.

That Meeting.

Pursuant to a call, the Democrats of this country, met at the Court-house, to take action, and pass resolutions in regard to the conduct of Hon C. P. Dorr, delegate of this county, in not giving his support to Hon John E. Kenna, for re-nomination and re-election to the U. S. Senate.

T. B Horan called the House to order, stating the object of the meeting, and on his motion W. H. Hoover was made chairman, and B. D. Hutchison secretary. The chair appointed T. B. Horan, P. W. Bruffy and E. H. Morton, who reported Resolutions which were unanimously adopted. The Resolutions set forth the fact that the democracy of the Delegate District, and who are Mr. Dorr's constituents desire Mr. Kennas' re election and to instruct our Hon. delegate to vote to that end, etc., etc.

On motion of T. B. Horan a copy of the Resolutions were sent to Hon. John E. Kenna, and on motion of the secretary, a copy also be sent to Hon. C. P. Dorr.

After speeches by Hon. C. Mc Dodrill, Horan and Hutchison, the meeting adjourned.—Addison Clipper.

The Horses Were Spared.

When Mr. Cole, a well know circus proprietor in the south, sold his stock in New Orleans, three dun ring horses that he had owned for years went with the others by mistake. Mr. Cole at once bought them back, saying he would never consent to have the horses become the property of any one who would make them work, and he had decided to put them to a painless death. He proposed to bleed them to death, but W. B. Leonard, a liveryman, suggested that the use of chloroform would be a little better and less painful mode. This was finally decided upon, and a reliable man procured, who was to have performed the operation.

They were all collected in the circus tent. There was Cole, Leonard, the riders and the clowns, the ringmaster, the tumblers and the leapers and the three pet duns. Calling the little mare by name, he told her to kiss them all good-by. The intelligent animal, stretching forward her head, kissed each one. This was more than they could stand, and the sacrifice was put off. Cole had no place to take them to, so Mr. Leonard promised to find some one who would assume charge of them, under a guarantee never to work them, but to keep them in good order until death should claim them for the grave.—St. Louis Republic.

Good Humor and Good Discipline.

Several years ago the convicts in a large penitentiary conspired together and made an unsuccessful attempt to escape. In the struggle the leader of the prisoners and one of the keepers were killed. The men were secured, but they remained in a gloomy and vindictive temper for months afterward.

Stricter discipline was enforced, and then after sometime, kindness was tried to conciliate them. Their rations improved in quality and several new privileges were granted them, but it was all in vain.

"We are sleeping on a volcano," the warden reported, "They are in a murderous humor."

He then recommended the appointment of a certain Dan Pickerell as assistant warden, the man who held that office being a grim, sarcastic fellow, especially disliked by the prisoners. Dan was inexorably firm as an officer, but he was a fat jolly embodiment of good humor. He exacted every jot and tittle of service from the convicts; but, that rendered, he took an interest in them, in their rheumatism their toothaches, their children, their plans for life after discharge.

They were human beings to him, not numbered beasts in cages; he was not afraid to joke and laugh with them. In two weeks' time the men were quiet and contented. Good humor had done its work The revolt was over.

"Good humor," says a German writer, "is one of the rank and file of human virtues, which we are apt to overlook; but it wins more battles in life than do a mighty intellect or lofty imagination."—Youth's Companion.

Leather Shoes for Horses.

The day will come when the present mode of protecting the foot of the horse will be discovered to be a mistake. Its horny substance was never intended to be pierced by nails. No wonder that so many horses fall lame and are perpetually ruined. We were recently shown a horse shod in leather. It struck us as an excellent idea and worthy of adoption. We should not be surprised that leather shoes had superseded shoes of iron. If, however, iron be a necessity, let it be nailed on the leather shoe. Now, shoemakers, please get up a neat set, and show them to all your horsey friends. Don't take "no" for an answer; stick to them till you have overcome their prejudices. When you have succeeded apply to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for a medal and if they decline to give you one be content to know that you have done more good than the society in question with all its wealth.—Scotch Paper.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May., 16, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 43.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

C. F. MOORE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties, and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

D. A. STOFER,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and Webster counties.

H. S. RUCKER,
Atty.-at-Law & Notary Public,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas county and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

J. W. ARBUCKLE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Lewisburg, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Greenbrier and Pocahontas counties.
Prompt attention given to claims for collection in Pocahontas county.

W. L. KEE,
Atty.-at-Law,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will Practice in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county.

F. J. SNYDER,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.

DR. I. H. WEYMOUTH,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will visit Pocahontas County every Spring and Fall. The exact date of each visit will appear in THE TIMES.

DR. S. P. PATTERSON,
Physician & Surgeon,
Huntersville, W. Va.

THE FAR PASTURE.

There are water-cress, and Brindle and Bess,
 And Brownie and Bonnie Kate—
Though I am to mind her,
Nowhere can I find her—
 And now it is growing late.

Over the meadows and through the shadows,
 I have sought her long and well—
At last I have found her,
Tall grasses around her,
 Led by the sound of the bell.

She had gone astray, and had lost her way
 In the clover blossoms white,
The cool, sweet clover,
Tempted her over
 To the pasture far, tonight.

I tenderly led her, through valley and meadow,
 To lead and not drive, seemed but right.
'Twas the sweet rank clover,
That tempted her over—
 And who of us always does right?

And the strangest feeling is o'er me stealing,
 And seems through the shawdows to come:
As beneath the wide bars,
And the silver stars,
"Bonnie Katie" and I go home.

The damp dew is falling,
 And voices are calling,
I too have strayed off from the right—
And the sweet red clover, has tempted me over,

 But oh! will he blame me; or seek to reclaim me?
 If I call to Him now, will He come?
And over the meadows, and
Through all the shadows,
 Lead his poor wanderer home?

—M. E. NOBLE.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

The small but thriving and enterprising town of Seedville, in the State of Ohio, was plentifully posted with bills bearing the above title, lavishly printed in all the hues of the rainbow. How the manager of the Seedville Academy of Music ever succeeded in securing so great a star of the dramatic firmament as Charles Cheriton was a matter of much speculation and wonder to all but Seedville citizens; but then Seedville always was smart for a small place and managed to keep abreast of the great cities of the country in everything, from natural gas to natural actors. And if the lively manager was enable to furnish high-class entertainment for the play-goers of Seedville, the said play-goers were not mean enough to pass by the opportunity with unappreciative indifference. They read the show-bills, bought their tickets and on every evening thronged the seats of the really pretty theatre.

The piece was what is technically known as a high-class comedy, but it was a comedy in which was displayed a good deal of the tragedy of mental suffering, of misunderstandings, of cross purposes and bitterness of heart; though, from the fact that all the pain and sorrow was finally turned into gladness and joy through the instrumentality of a little child, men termed it a comedy.

The drama gave the principal actor, Charles Cheriton, a fine opportunity for displaying his power of acting, and many a time had this man moved great audiences almost to tears in his representations of the deep passions of human nature.

On the particular evening which concerns our story, Cheriton was at his best. With the rare modulations of his deep, far-reaching voice, with his expressive features and gesticulations he swayed the feelings of the throng before him as the autumn winds bend the topmost boughs of the forest trees.

Toward the end of the second act the large audience noticed that the actor did not do his part justice, and not during the rest of the evening did he rise to his usual standard of excellency. No one knew the cause, for, in the intense interest felt in the paly, no one had perceived a little wee baby figure steal quietly down the extreme left aisle of the balcony. No one but Cheriton. He was in the midst of his delivery of some most pathetic lines and his eyes were raised upward, so that they rested precisely on the balcony aisle to the left of the stage. He saw the tiny but graceful form of a child—a little girl—not five years old, clad in a quaint, but rich and dainty, dress of black velvet with ruffled sleeves and white lace edging at the wrists and neck; he noticed the broad-brimmed hat trimmed with a narrow but exquisite wreath of simple meadow daisies, and above all he beheld, beneath the hat, the cluster of sunny, golden hair and the clear blue eyes of the childish, angel face.

The baby, with baby grace and abandon, stole softly down to the balcony rail, upon which she rested her little arms, and with her chin nestling in her dimpled hands (like one of Ralphael's cherrubs) silently watched the play. Cheriton felt absolutely certain that the baby was the child of—well, a woman he once knew. He was positive of it, and would have backed his opinion with every thing he possessed.

He was no longer in the Seedville Academy of Music. Mechanically he proceeded with his part in the performance, but he saw none of the people before him, save the baby—and even the baby only served to remind him of another face, long since lost to him—while his thoughts and memory were afar off in a city of the sunny South.

He remembered how in the City of Mexico, exactly six years before, he had loved with a mad and irrestible passion just such a fair sweet face as was the baby's in the balcony; he recollected the faultless form, the natural grace of movement and the bewitching smile; he called to mind the sunny hair and the quaint dresses of velvet and old lace—yes, it all came back to him with the baby leaning there over the balcony rail. How he tried to forget it all, on the stage and off! How he had sought to bury it far out of his sight and memory! He had traveled East, West and North (never South) only at last to find the past as fresh as ever, in the little theatre of quiet Seedville.

Naught saw he of the footlights or the orchestra, of the stage or the house—he was away on a vine-covered veranda in the outskirts of the City of Mexico. He was telling a fair young girl of his love and adoration, and ringing in his ears was her cold, hard reply: "It is impossible, to-morrow I am to be married."

The second act of the play came to an end. When the curtain rose for the third and last act, the baby had disappeared.

The performance was almost concluded when through that terror stricken assemblage rang the alarm of "Fire!"

Aroused from his reveries and dreams of the past Cheriton became aware that smoke was issuing from the left wings. He was quickly alive to the situation, and stepping to the edge of the stage, in a loud and commanding voice he directed the movements of the affrighted men, women and children.

The fire quickly gained on the building, and before the one fire engine of Seedville could get to work the theatre was doomed.

Cheriton was one of the last to leave the stage, and when he did so the danger to the audience was over, for all had reached the street. When the alarm of fire was given Cheriton was attired for the play as a laboring man, without coat and vest; so dressed he appeared on the street.

Standing with the crowd watching the flames was a beautiful woman, perhaps twenty-five or twenty six years old. As Cheriton emerged from the building he was cheered by the crowd, and casting his eyes (from force of habit acquired on the stage) along the throng of faces, it rested on this woman.

He was seized with an inspiration, and rushing hastily to her, he grasped her arm tightly and almost rudely.

'Were you in the theatre to-night?'

'Yes.'

'Alone?'

'No; with my mother.'

'No one else—positively, no one else?'

'No one.'

'Ah,' thought Cheriton, as he hastened away, 'the child was left at home and, doubtless, knowing where her mother had gone, followed her to the theatre.'

By this time the fire was all over the house and the auditorium was filled with a dense mass of smoke. But heedless of the scorching heat, the blinding and suffocating smoke, and deaf to the warning cries of the firemen, Charley Cheriton rushed into the ill-fated building. He made his way to the left aisle of the balcony which was standing yet, and there, near the railing fast asleep or dead, he found the fair-haired baby girl. He grabbed a shawl which some one had left in the hurry to escape, and dashing again through the smoke and flames emerged once more on to the street.

A loud hurrah and deafening hand clapping greeted him, but he walked straight to the lady whom he had before addressed.

'Here is your little girl, madam. I noticed her in the balcony this evening. Do not be afraid; I just felt her move and heard her try to speak. If you will show me your house I will carry her home for you.'

The lady was too much affected to speak. Silently they walked a short distance until they reached a pleasant home not far from the theatre.

When they entered the parlor the mother took her child and mentioned Cheriton a seat.

In a few minutes the lady returned.

'My baby is not hurt at all, and is now sleeping as if nothing had happened. Mr. Cheriton, how can I thank you?'

'I am thanked sufficiently already,' he replied.

Then there was silence. It was a strange meeting; the actor in his stage costume, his sleeves rolled up, his hair and moustache singed and his face blackened by the smoke, while near him sat a beautiful woman scarce able to restrain her tears.

He waited until she regained some composure, and then he rose as if to go.

'Good-bye,' he said. 'I am glad to have been able to give you your little girl. I suppose you have nothing more to say to me, so good-bye.' He held out his hand as he spoke and she took it in both of hers.

'Yes, I have something more to say, and I will say it whatever you think of me for doing so.

'Listen. Six years ago you thought me heartless and cruel because I told you that it was impossible to marry you, though you thought I had given you to understand that I loved you. Well, I did love you. Perhaps it is unwomanly to say it but I did love you. The man I married—the father of my little girl—died before the baby was born. He was a good man, a good husband, but I did not love him. I loved you all the time and sacrificed love and happiness for what I thought to be duty. Charley, I love you still; you have saved my little girl—will you save me? Save me from a lonely, unhappy future and from all the misery of bitter memories? Will you, Charley?'

Well, every thing had seemed very strange to Charley Cheriton that New Year's Eve—the place, the baby, the fire, this meeting—but somehow it did not seem at all strange when he passed his large bare and blackened arm around the slender waist, while the well-rounded head with its fair hair rested upon the smoke-begrimmed shirt which covered his broad shoulder, And he thought of the title of his play—"A little child shall lead them."

Two gentleman were walking on F street yesterday when one said:

"Let's cross the street. There comes a man to whom I owe some money, and I don't want to meet him."

"Does he dun you?"

"No; that's the worst of it. He never speaks of it."

After they had crossed over the debtor walked on some distance in thoughtful silence. Then he said, seriously:

"I wish that man would get mad about it and go at me with a club. I can't pay him the money, and I wish he would thrash me like fury and settle the matter so that I wouldn't ever be afraid again to meet him."

There is a bit of good, clean human nature in that reflection.

The minister was dining with the family, and Bobby thus spoke out:

"Ma, what's an adjective?"

His mother explained the meaning of the word, and then foolishly asked him why he wanted to know.

"Because I heard pa say that the sermon this morning was a dayvilish poor one; and when I asked to tell me what 'dayvilish' was he said it was an adjective."

Stranger—Where is the county seat?"

Kansas (as "dark, funnel-shaped cloud" approaches)—Wal, it's yere if that thar cyclone goes slaunchwise towards Hennecker's. If it don't the location uv the county seat is liable to be sorto indefinite an' promiscuous like, to speak.

A well-known scientist announces that he is about to write a book which shall go a long way "towards bridging the psychological distance which separates the gorilla from the gentleman." He has set himself a hard task. Had he substituted the word "monkey" for "gorilla," and "dude" for "gentleman" he would be sure of success.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	5 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	38 00	58 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 16 1889.

The town of Staford, Kan., was wiped out by a cyclone last week.

There is going on in Richmond, Va. a tremendous religious upheavel among the negroes.

Two young men in Summerset, Pa., hanged their father to get their inheritance.

Was it the Harrison family or the republican party that was elected last November.

All the records smashed. The City of Paris crosses the ocean in 5 days 23 hours and 7 minutes.

The State claims 90,000 population for Richmond, with a suburban populatio of 25,000 more.

THE Parkersburg Journal seems to think that the prospects for the "Black Diamond" railroad are more encourageing.

Had it been Cleveland, it would have been tariff reduction—as it is, Harrison and wage reduction, remarks an observant exchange.

Carter B. Harrison, who was last week appointed marshal of the middle district of Tennessee, is a brother of the President.

Mrs. Louisa Sheffy, of Staunton, is dead. It was just about four weeks after the death of her lamented husband, Judge Sheffy.

The only woman ever convicted of horse stealing in Missouri was a beautiful girl of 18 years, on May 7. The jury gave her two years.

IT is said that they have had to put folding beds into the White House to accommadate the numerous branches of the presidential family.—Ex.

Henry W. Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is to address the literary societies of the University of Virginia at their final celebration on the 25th of June.

It is intimated the President will spend a portion of the heated term in the mountains of West Virginia, near Davis, on the new West Virginia Central Railroad.

It is conceded by republicans as well as democrats that the best all round speech at the New York centennial was delivered by ex-President Cleveland in response to the toast, "Our country."

Frank W. Palmer, of Illinois, has been appointed Public Printer. The newspapers offices along the railways leading out of Washington will now prepare for a deluge of tramp printers.—Ex.

Where is the increase in the price of wool that the republican orators told you about so positively last fall if a republican President was elected? In fact where is anything true that they told you?

ELEVEN fourth class postmasters were removed in Pocahontas county last week. Clarkson is getting in his work pretty fast.—Braxton Democrat.

Mr. Democrat we haven't heard of them as yet.

There are five banks and six newspapers and an average daily sale of fifty dollars worth of postage stamps in Guthrie, Oklahoma, a town which did not exist prior to April 22nd. In a few days more we may expect to hear it boasting, with the rest of its occidental contemporaries of "the finest opera house west of the Mississippi."

Where is the protection to American labor that you republicans talk about? We don't know where it is! but there is one thing we do know, that there are thousands of working men, working for whatever compensation they can get, and thousands upon thousands who are out of employment altogether, and have large families in a starving condition.

West Virginia is talking a phenomenal boom. More miles of railroad will be constructed during the present year than in any other one year in her history, and she is a Democratic state, too. Our Republican friends who are continually howling about old fogies and moss-backs and claiming that nothing but a Republican administration can attract capital into a state, should make a note of this.—Charleston Daily Star.

Rather a funny little episode happened near Philippi last week. A young man went to the clerk of the court and obtained a permit to wed a young lady. On his way home he called at the residence of another young lady, to whom he had been paying some attention, and exhibited to her his license to wed her rival. She, with rather more spirit than her sex usually possesses, getting the paper into her possession, very deliberately preceeded to tear it to pieces, and consign it to the flames, and the young man was compelled to postpone the wedding to another day.—Nicholas Chronicle.

The New York World sees in Mr. Cleveland's conduct, since his retirement from the Presidency, many evidences that he again aspires to become his party's leader in the next National struggle. It sees in Mr. Harrison's disregard of the civil service, and the consequent disgust of the mugwamp element with the President, an opportunity for Mr. Cleveland. It says: "If Mr. Cleveland can and will make himself the exponent and champion of the real ideas and true principals of Reform—reform in politics, reform in administration, reform in legislation, reform in justice—his nomination would be quite possible, and he would have a vigorous supporter in the World."

Is it possible that the World is beginning to arrive at the light at last? It lists a number of reforms which it would have Mr. Cleveland to make himself the champion and exponent of, on condition of its vigorous support. Well could Mr. Cleveland say to this proposition: "All these things have I kept from my youth up." The World knows that it is setting no pattern for Mr. Cleveland. He walked the reformer's path all through his administration, and hence his defeat. No man could have done more than he in the way of the reforms indicated—because no man was ever more honest, or firmer than he. The open opposition of the World to Mr. Cleveland began the very hour of his inauguration, and was fierce, relentless and unjust from that day till now. We are glad to see it ready to acknowledge at last that the man to lead the Democracy to victory in 1892 is Grover Cleveland.—Kanawha Gazette.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 10th.—Harrison made the best appointment that he has yet made when he selected Ex-Gov. Thompson, of South Carolina, as the democratic member of the Civil Service Commission. Gov. Thompson was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland's administration, and was during the last days of Congress appointed by Mr. Cleveland to the same position he has just received from a Republican President, but the Senate did not act on his nomination.

There is a weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth among the little crowd of late applicants for the position of Public Printer, five of whom are understood to have made a combination, each promising to give the other four appointments in the office if made Public Printer, over the fact that the coveted prize has gone to Ex-Congressman Frank W. Palmer, formerly postmaster at Chicago. Whether Harrison suspected the "combine" which these applicants had entered into I can not say, but it is known that some days ago he told a gentleman that he should not appoint any of the applicants up to that time and asked him to name a good man for the office. Palmer was named, and after further investigation the office was tendered to him, and he accepted it. When the appointment was made public it was really amusing to see the members of the "combine" chasing around trying to find somebody to introduce them to the new Public Printer so they could get in their applications for the "fat" positions under him. It is thought that one of these men-Donath, nominally of Pennsylvania, really of the District of Columbia, may lose his mind so great a shock has the disappointment been at not being made Public Printer. He was so certain that he was to get the appointment that he had already given away several of the most important places in the Government Printing office.

It is evidently the purpose of the the republican politicians to make the census bureau an asylum for their political proteges. The Interior Department has decided that the appointments in this bureau will have next year when it gets regularly to work, over 1500 clerks, besides an army of special agents, and the most of these will be kept for two years or longer. It will be a great convenience to prominent republicans to use these positions to pay off their political debts, and if the appointments were made under civil service rules that would be impossible.

The first of the fifteen contested election cases which are to come before the Fifty-first Congress was opened by the Clerk of the House this week. It was Calmers vs. Morgan, of the second Mississippi District.

Harrison having provided a snug place for his brother is now, so it is said, about to appoint Blaine's brother to one of the most lucrative local offices in Washington Register of Wills.

The new Secretary of Agriculture in order to prove his familiarity with farming implements, and maybe to get solid with the farmers of the country, put in a half an hour cutting grass with a scythe in the grounds surrounding his department, one day this week. Of course he was entirely ignorant of the fact that several newspaper men had their eyes on him during the entire performance.

Republicans are already beginning to compare Harrison with Hays and Arthur, they say that he is timid almost to the extent of cowardice.

It is said that the Post office Department is appointing clerks in the Railway Mail Service and dating their appointments in April in order to avoid compliance with civil service rules under which all such appointments should have been made since May.

Senator Gorman thinks that Calvin S. Brice will be elected chairman of the National democratic committee to succeed the late ex-Senator Barnum. This is taken here to mean that Senator Gorman will not accept the position.

Theodore Roosevelt of N. Y., who has just been appointed as one of the republican Civil Service Commissioners, is a pronounced free trader. Funny isn't it, that a man elected President solely because he was a rigid protectionist should give such a prominent appointment to a free trader.

The newspaper man's luck has not yet deserted him. The new Public Printer is a member of the fraternity.

ANNO[illegible]ENT.

TO THE VOT[illegible] POCAHONTAS COUNTY.

By the re[illegible] many persons from d[illegible] parts of the County, I here[illegible] nce myself a candidate fo[illegible] to the office of Coun[illegible] erintendant. Thanking you [illegible] favors, I again solicit y[illegible] at the coming electio[illegible] 1889.

[illegible] MATHEWS.

MASON[illegible]

HUNTER[illegible] LODGE NO. 65, A. [illegible] A. M.—The time of regular [illegible] of this Lodge is on the [illegible] evening preceding each Full [illegible] unless the Moon falls on Fr[illegible] then on that evening.

J. H. Do[illegible] W. M.,
S. P. Pat[illegible], Sec'ty.

6 31

HOME [illegible] NEWS

—Sheep Sheari[illegible]

—Corn plantin[illegible] is over.

—More new subscribers this week.

—A special term of the County Court met last Tuesday.

—What's the matter with the correspondents this week.

—Geo. W. Siple, of Green Bank was in the city Tuesday.

—Rain and sunshine make grass grow.

—Charley Arbogast was, in town Tuesday.

—Sheriff McNeel was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—L. W. Herold, of Frost was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Lots of new Subscribers this week. Let more come.

—E. A. Gibbs, of Raph[illegible] Co., is in town.

—Capt. Stofer, who has been on Elk for some time has returned.

—[illegible]ave Jelinko, of Charleston was in town last week.

—A. F. Wickline, of Monroe Co., was in our city last Thursday.

—S. M. Walls of Baltimore, was in town Sunday.

—L. B. Trent, of Huntington was in town last week.

Go to John Warts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9 12t

—Andrew Price, and Henry McGlaughlin were in town the first of the week.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3, $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Ronceverte, W. Va. 30 2m

—The County Court, Messrs. Moore and Beard, were here Tuesday.

—A Barbour county man is going to put thirty-seven acres of ground in peanuts.

A nice line of ladies hats just received at Herold & Moore's, Frost, W. Va.

—Eli Baker, has been appointed postmaster at Beverly, Randolph Co.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30 2m.

—They are going to vote for a six months school in the Little Levels.

If you want a good suit of clothes go to Herold & Moore's, Frost, W. Va.

—Lots of fishing going on now. The fellow who catches the biggest fish is usually the biggest liar.

—Don't forget that we are trying to run a good local paper, and want the news and if you know of any thing please report.

NOTICE.

The Final Celebration of Hillsboro Male and Female Academy will take place Thursday and Friday evenings May 23rd and 24th [illegible]. Exercises will begin prompt[illegible] at 7:30 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to the Public to attend.

W. B. L[illegible],
Principal.

—B. Dever, of Knapp's [illegible] was at this place Tuesday.

Go to Herold & Moore's, F[illegible] W. Va., for your dry goods and [illegible]tions. Best styles and lowest pri[illegible]ces.

—The State Press Association of this State meets at Wellsburg, on the 18th of June.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Warts & Co., Frankford, W. Va. may 9 12t

—C. E. Hoge, of Christiansburg, Va., was at this place the first of the week.

Call an examine our stock of queensware, we can suit you in both quality and Price. Herold & Moore, Frost, W. Va.

John Warts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9 12t

—Messrs. E. H. Moore, Joe. McNeel and R. M. Beard, of Academy, were in to see us Tuesday. Mr. Beard was driving a fine pair of match bay mares.

—Sheriff McNeel and C. E. Beard, brought one Percy Townsend to jail last Tuesday, on a capious for non-payment of fines &c., made at the last term of the Court.

—The Greenbrier Independent says that Mr. John Furgissong, of Lewisburg, died at his home, on Thursday last, the 2nd inst., in his 74th year.

—Don't forget that next Tuesday 21st is school election day. Come to the polls and vote for Mr. M. G. Mathews, for County Superintendent; he is the only candidate in the field.

Herold & Moore, Frost, W. Va., have just returned from the east, and are now receiving the nicest, best and most complete stock of goods they have ever offered the public, which will be sold low down for cash or good produce.

—Messrs. R. C. McCollough, Geo. Grant and C. A. Church, were in this vicinity a part of last week looking after inducements for a branch railroad from the C. & O., from the White Sulphur to this place.

—Don't forget the poor editor when you have a news item, says an eastern exchange. If your wife licks you, let us know it, and we will set it all right before the public. If you have company, tell us, if you are not ashamed of your visitors. If a youngster arrives at your house begging for raiment, buy a lot of cigars and come around, and, if you are a cash subscriber, we will find a name for him or her as the circumstances will permit. And if you have a social gathering of a few of your friends, bring around a big cake, seven or eight pies and a ham not necessarily to eat, but as a guarantee of good faith. You needn't bother about inviting us, for our wardrobe isn't suitable for the occasion. We mention these things because we want the news, and we are bound to have it.

Lou is Dead.

The faithful old nag belonging to Capt. Stofer, passed beyond this world of toil, a few days ago, on Elk. She was 22 years old, and has long since through the Capt's. generosity, been the errand nag of our town, and her death will be regretted by those who depended on her, when they wanted to ride a short distance.

Mill Point Pickings.

Fine weather for planting corn and making garden.

Withrow McClintic and M. F. Gum left last Thursday for Raleigh Co.

The farmers are nearly all done planting corn.

Mr. [illegible] has moved to Hillsboro.

Mr. J. T. [illegible] is quite ill at this writing.

Miss Mary [illegible] is visiting in our neighborhood.

We had a big rain and hail storm last Saturday night.

E. P. G.

[illegible] of Sheriff [illegible] J. McN[illegible] W. Herold was appointed deputy sheriff.

Samuel M. Gay was appointed Superintendant of the roads over which Jas. Gibson, Jr., is toll collector, in the room and stead of Samuel B. Moore, refusing to act as such Superintendent.

The following commissioners of election were appointed for the school election the 21st of May.

Traveler's Repose;

Peter D. Yeager, A. M. V. Arbogast and Lafayette Burner.

Green Bank;

John R. Warwick, J. H. Patterson, and Adam Arbogast.

Dunmore;

Wm. H. Cackley, Ernest M. Moore and George Arbogast.

Frost;

Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and W. A. T. Sharp.

Huntersville;

D. A. Fisher, S. L. Brown and Sheldon Moore.

Edray;

Geo. K. Gay, Wm. M. Sharp and W. T. Via.

Split Rock;

E. D. King, S. S. Varner and Harman Sharp.

Little Levels;

R. V. Hill, Jno P. Kinnison and C. W. Eskridge.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.—A dispatch from Wheeling, W. Va., says a terrible accident is reported from Braxton county. P. H. Harr and family lived in a thinly settled district, and on Sunday last, May 5th, he and his wife and two children started to visit a neighbor. The mountain stream in their path was swollen out of its banks, but Harr attempted to cross in a canoe. Half way over the boat capsized and the whole family were thrown out. The wife and one child immediately sank. Harr, who was an expert swimmer, seized the other child and made desperate efforts to escape. He caught on to the canoe, but was swept down the stream and perished before help could reach him. The bodies have all been recovered.—Ex.

The Suicidal Mania.

The readers of the newspapers recently must have observed that the suicidal mania in this country threatens to become an epidemic. In Chicago there are five sucides a day. Since the first of April there hav[illegible] over a hundred in the coun[illegible] and since the first of January, over six hundred.

What is the matter with the people? Why are they so anxious to shuffle of off this mortal coil? Statistics show that the men who go off and deliberately kill themselves are the very ones who can be of some service to the state and to the country. The Chicago Tribune says that "within the last three months three clergyman, three post-masters, six physicians, twelve well-to-do merchants, seven office-holders, three lawyers, three bankers, four railroad officials, two artists, three mayors, one journalist, one army officer and two capitalists have, for various reasons, voluntarily shuffled off this mortal coil."

Where is the physician who can minister to this form of disease? Where is the sanitarian who is able to prescribe a remedy for this kind of epidemic? It is a very important matter.—Atlanta Constitution.

Gov. Lee, of Virginia, is said to have attracted the most attention at the New York centennial, and Gov. Wilson, of West Virginia, was the only Governor present who did not wear a silk hat. Our own E. Willis generally gets there in some kind of shape. To those doubting this assertion we refer them to Carr and Guff.—Ex.

Orders of Publication.

No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als.
vs. } In chy. No 1.
Wm. F. Arbogast & als.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing 6,489 acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Alleghany mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David V. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee; James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sholtz, Amos Gum, Thos. O. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart Slaven Sr. and of Annie Shets are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one months after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.[illegible]

No 2.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May 1889.

[illegible] &c.,
vs. In chy. No. 2.
Wm. F. Arbogast &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,785 acres, lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto, according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O. Wade, Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Asgol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife, and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, decd, are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiff without effect, to ascertain in what county, Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regor, (formally Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON,
C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c.,
vs. In chy. No. 3.
Wm. F. Arbogast, &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,876 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Asgol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobala his wife and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of west Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar (formerly Arnold) and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON,
C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may 9 1 m printers fee $0.97

Order of Publicatio[illegible]

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Admr's,
vs. chy.
Rebecca J. Hill & als.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To [illegible] the creditors of said decedent [illegible] the real estate of which [illegible] Hill, dec'd died seized to the pa[illegible] of his debts and to construe the w[illegible] the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appear[illegible] from affidavit filed that Thos [illegible] James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. [illegible] are non-residents of the State [illegible] West Virginia, it is ordered that the[illegible] here within one month after [illegible] of the first publication of th[illegible] and do what is necessary to pro[illegible] their interests in this suit.

Te[illegible] J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE [illegible] printers fee [illegible]

PRIVATE SALE OF LAND.

I wish to sell at private sale, 193 acres of land lying within one half mile of Greenbier River opposite to the mouth of Stamping Creek, formally known as the [illegible] place. I will sell at a sacrafice. I will remain in the County two weeks, in the vicinity of Little Levels and Huntersville, after that

Address, Jas. E. A. Gum,
Raphine, Va.

CARPET SWEEPERS.

If you want something that will keep every thing as clean as a new pin, and dust from getting over every thing in the house, buy a Carpet Sweeper of Brison Hill, Jacox, Pocahontas Co., W. Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

3½ cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for 4 cts. mar. 27.

PATENTS.

Caveats, and Trade-Marks obtained, and all Patent business conducted for Moderate Fees.

Our office is Opposite U. S. Patent Office and we can secure patent in less time than those remote from Washington.

Send model, drawing or photo., with description. We advise if patentable or not, free of charge. Our fee not due till patent is secured.

A Pamphlet, "How to Obtain Patents," with names of actual clients in your State, county, or town, sent free. Address,

C. A. SNOW & CO.
Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

Commissioner's Sal[illegible] of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered on the 3rd day of April, 1889, in the chancery cause of Frederick Burr's Heirs
vs
Frederick Burr's Exr &c.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed to sell in front of the Court House of said County, at public auction to the highest bidder,

ON THE 17TH DAY OF JUNE 1889

the following real estate, to wit: Two hundred and Twenty-Two acres adjoining lands of [illegible] Friel and others, being lot No. 4 in the partition of the lands of which Frederick Burr Sr. died seized said land is considered valuable for farming purposes, but especially on account of the fine pine timber growing thereon. The title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash in hand sufficient to pay expenses of sale and one third of the costs of suit; and for the residue the purchaser to execute three several bonds, falling due respectively in Nine, Eighteen and Twenty-seven months from day of sale, with interest from date and with good personal security. A lien will also be retained until the balance is paid [illegible].

[illegible],
Spec'l Com'r.

Bond as required by law has been given by the above Commissioner.

Apr. [illegible] JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	13 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 3 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 16 1889.

Blackbird and House-Snake.

Forest and Stream.

One bright morning last summer I was walking out in the country near town, looking for anything I could find, and seeing what I could in the bird line, when I was surprised to hear a great noise of birds

... family of the republican party that was elected last November.

All the records smashed. The City of Paris crosses the ocean in 5 days 23 hours and 7 minutes.

The State claims 90,000 population for Richmond, with a suburban populatio of 25,000 more.

THE Parkersburg Journal seems to think that the prospects for the "Black Diamond" railroad are more encourageing.

Had it been Cleveland, it would have been tariff reduction—as it is, Harrison and wage reduction, remarks an observant exchange.

Carter B. Harrison, who was last week appointed marshal of the middle district of Tennessee, is a brother of the President.

Mrs. Louisa Sheffy, of Staunton, is dead. It was just about four weeks after the death of her lamented husband, Judge Sheffy.

The only woman ever convicted of horse stealing in Missouri was a beautiful girl of 18 years, on May 7. The jury gave her two years.

IT is said that they have had to put folding beds into the White House to accommodate the numerous branches of the presidential family.—Ex.

Henry W. Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is to address the literary societies of the University of Virginia at their final celebration on the 25th of June.

... parents, not feeling able to cope with the enemy, had undoubtedly gone for help. The blackbird was the champion and did all of the fighting, while the other birds did the "talking". This seemed very strange to me. He would attack his foe fiercely until tired, then retire a few feet, and then begin again, thus fighting alone for the young of a bird of an entirely different species. I sat and wondered whether these birds had selected him as their protector, or had he taken the battle upon himself? He certainly fought well.

"Lulu," he said (he was a young man and had great confidence in himself), and he bent toward her tenderly. "I have loved you long and tenderly. Will you name the day?"

"Oh, the day is already named, Mr. Harris," answered the girl, blushing. "George was so pertinacious I finally told him the 3rd of next month. The cards will be out next month."

A boy sixteen years of age, named Albert Parsons, attempted to elope with his step grandmother, Mrs. Mary Mall, aged twenty-two, last Saturday. They were intercepted at Clarksburg and the scheme failed. They were both from Taylor county.—Randolph Enterprise.

Mrs. Henry Yeager, of Greenbank, and Mr. Burner, of Traveler's Repose, with their families, all of Pocahontas county, passed through Monterey on April 24, enroute for Cheyene, Wyoming.—Highland Recorder.

Wonder what the striking and locked out miners of Pennsylvania and Ohio, and those of Indiana and Illinois who have just been forced to suffer and unprecedented cut in their wages think of the success of "protection to American labor.—Register.

A Pointer For Enterprising Citizens.

The Grafton Eagle Sentinel says: The young men are the bone and sinew of the land. If we want to build up our State and bring about greater prosperity, we must keep our young men at home, and in order to do this we must offer them such inducements to remain as will overcome the attractions of other sections. This is a big, wide country of ours, but there is no section ... greater ... the State of West Virginia ... if our young men can ... to remain here and ... energy they can do just better than they could ... ere.

can attr... should m... leston D...

Rather... pened ne... young m... court and... a young ... called at ... young la... paying ... ed to her... al. She... than her... ting the ... very deli... it to piec... flames, ... compelled... to another... cle.

...go Times reporter feign... and was committed to ... County Insane Asylum. ... was to satisfy himself of ... ment of inmates. He re... rible story of cruelty and ... on the part of several of ... dants, the result of which ... death of a patient. The ... expose was verified by ... tem examination of the ... ate, and the attendants ... sted.

...line King, the colored wo... has fasted forty days at ...d Ill., sank down by the ... eight-gallon stone jug ... water, before many spec... prayed the Lord to turn ... into wine. Tears trick... her cheeks as she earnest... he request, but the water ... still.

The Ne... Mr. Clevel... retirement... many evid... pires to be... in the next... sees in Mr... the civil ... quent dis... element wi... portunity ... says: "If... will make... and champi... true princip... in politics... tion, reform... in justice... be quite ... have a vig...

"... ever occur to you," said a man to a New York ...er, the other day, "What ...om John Wanamaker's business must be having? There are some 60,000 postoffices in the country, ...ose that 50,000 of them ...ll country stores. Don't ... that when John Wanamaker's drummer comes round to ... stores he has a pretty good chance of getting an order? I'll bet that there are not a hundred such postmaster storekeepers within a thousand miles of Philadelphia who do not buy all they can at Wanamaker's nowadays, and even in more distant parts of the country the postmasters will stretch a point whenever hey can to send to Philadelphia for their goods. Suppose a man wants to be reappointed, don't you think he will imagine that it will be a good thing for him to be able to refer Postmaster General Wanamaker to Wholesale Merchant Wanamaker for information as to his credit and business standing. Of course, the postmasters in 99 cases out of 100 will be wrong in it, but they have the idea all the same that Wanamaker will know the name of all about every man who buys goods of him, and they will act accordingly. It will be Wanamaker's own fault if he hasn't the largest wholesale business in the country within the next four years."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 10th.—Harrison made the best appointment ... yet made when he se...

A lady who was very talkative but at the same time very silly, complained that she was bothered by people who stayed too long.

"If they don't go why then don't you talk to them?" replied a female friend.

Mistress—"Why, Bridget, what in the world are you doing with my new dress on?" Bridget—"Sure, mum, it's yerself what gave it to me." Mistress—"I gave it to you!" Bridget—"Yis; yez said Oi cud have it as soon as yez had worn it out, an' begorra yez wore it out yestherday afthernoon.—Harper's Bazar.

A maiden from the city tripped lightly 'mid the trees and snuffed the repugnant odor that floated on the breeze. "Oh tell me ancient farmer, with arms so brown and here, what is that wondrous flower that scents the morning air?" Loud laughed the ancient farmer till the tears rolled down his cheek: "Why bless you that's a polecat and I've smelt him for a week."

Philadelphian—You are very fond of society, I see. Do you belong to the exclusive 400?

New Yorker—No, unfortunately there is a dark stain on my social record.

"Indeed!"

"Yes, it's too true. I once walked two squares on Fifth avenue with a very dear friend of mine, an eminent scientist who had on a suit of ready-made clothing."

"Well, Ned, I proposed to Miss Jenkins last night, and she has accepted me."

"Did you, though? Why I never for a moment thought you had the slightest idea of marrying."

"I did't but Miss Jenkins won me so completely by her beautiful tact and delicate forethought."

"In what respect."

"Why, when I called, she walked up to the mantel-piece and stopped the clock."

"Why do you speak in such a low voice?" said a member of a certain church to the pastor.

"Well," he replied, "when I first began to preach they called me a shouter, because I spoke so loud. One Sunday morning, just after I finished the prayer, and while the solemn hush was still upon the congregation, a little fellow broke the silence with the question: 'Ma, is God deaf?' I have never shouted since."

... the Railway ... World ... recom... ing their executions by means of ... order to ... called "thanatelectric... service" that's the use of adding ... unnecessary terrors to the ... made."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May., 23, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.10 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 44.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
C'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

BUCKLEY MT.

For The Times.

Those mountains cross the river,
So lonely look and dark;
No human sound, no human step,
I ever see or mark.

The seasons come, the seasons go,
White snow flakes gently fall;
The trees take on their fresh green leaves,
But still 'tis silence all!

If I could see a child at play,
Or sturdy manhood's walk,—
Something to break the lonliness,
Something with which to talk.

I gaze until the topmost pines
Gaze darkley down at me,
And summon to my wanted task,
What'er the skies may be.

If sadness reign, or gaiety,
If friends are stern or kind,—
Duty, the bright and guiding star,
United God's rest we find.

MRS. ANNA L. PRICE,
Marlinton, W. Va., May 1889.

In the Throat of A Boa.

BY COL. EDWARD B. TAYLOR

"I can never look upon one of those writhing, slimy things without a shudder," said my friend, Colonel Paul Ballantyne, as we three (his pretty South American wife was of the party) stood in front of the boa constrictor's cage in the serpent-house at the Philadelphia Zoological Garden.

"And yet, dear," interposed Mrs. Ballantyne—and she laid her hand lovingly upon her husband's arm, and looked up into his handsome face with a wealth of love glowing in her lustrious brown eyes—"if it had not been for the serpent you would probably never have met me. But perhaps you regret that!" she added, with a pretty pout.

"Ah, that was the recompense!" said the Colonel, and he eyed her fondly. "But for that, I think I could never have summoned up fortitude enough to again look upon one of the monsters. As it is I cannot repress the shudder, and in fancy I feel myself again being sucked down to death."

"You had an adventure, Colonel?" I ventured.

"Adventure!" he echoed. "Well, I should say so. The most horrible a man ever experienced. But you dine with us to-day, and then I'll tell you the story."

He did, and gave me permission to print it, which I have done without material alteration, and with the substitution of fictitious names for the real actors, who will doubtless read and recognize this history.

Three years ago my friend was sent to Venezuela, as the agent of a firm of mahogany importers, who had purchased some valuable forestry concessions in that country.

The lumber tract lay along the banks of one of the bayous of the Orinoco River, about one hundred and fifty miles above the Isle of Barima.

The Colonel examined the tract, selected a site for a logging camp, and proceeded to La Guayra, purchased supplies, and engaged a native Venezuelan, named Guzman Mendoza, to superintend the logging.

Indian laborers to fell the trees could be engaged in any quantity in the vicinity of the mahogany forest.

Mendoza was a slightly built, surly-faced fellow, with an ungovernable temper, to which he gave way at the slightest provocation. He was accompanied by an Indian servant, named Jose, who was much attached to his master.

Colonel Ballantyne had several wordy quarrels with his forman, on the way up the river, and he began to regret having engaged so uncompanionable an assistant, but Mendoza thoroughly understood his work, and soon convinced his employer that he was worth more than the liberal salary that was paid him.

The camp was established, a corps of native axe-men engaged and preparations were made to get together the material for a big mahogany raft, which would be floated down to the mouth of the bayou, where the precious wood would be loaded in vessels sent out by the firm which employed the Colonel.

Accompanied by Jose, who was familiar with woodcraft, the Colonel made daily excursions into the forest in all directions, to locate and mark the trees.

The tract proved to be a rich one. Mahogany trees were there by the thousand, and the forest was intersected by creeks in all directions, along which timber might readily be floated to the bayou, and thence to the river.

They had been in camp about a week, and the work was progressing satisfactorily, when Mendoza, who had heretofore been kept too busy to quarrel, got into a dispute with his employer, and had it not been for the interference of some of the Indian workmen, one would have shot the other, for both men drew their pistols.

After they had both had time to cool down, the Colonel, who is naturally of the most forgiving disposition, apologized to his antagonist, and requested that the matter be forgotten.

He held out his hand in token of amity, but Mendoza, with a shrug of his shoulders, and a contortion of his dark face, turned on his heel and walked away.

That night he and Jose held a long conversation, which was carried on in a low tone of voice, but although they looked frequently toward the Colonel and exchanged significant glances, he did not dream that they were plotting treachery.

The next morning the Colonel and Jose started, as usual, for a short expedition in the forest.

It was a feast day with the Indians, and they were making merry in the camp.

Jose carried a small hatchet for marking the trees, and over his shoulder was slung a haversack, containing lunch.

The Colonel walked in advance, armed only with a small rifle.

By noon they were ten miles from the camp, and further down the bayou than they had ever been before.

When they stopped for luncheon near a small spring, Jose informed his patron that they were only a few miles distant from the extensive coffee and indigo plantation of General Antonio De Silva, who controlled leagues of forest land in the vicinity, and from whom the American mahogany merchants had purchased the logging right.

After lunch the Colonel lighted his pipe, and leaned his back against a great tree trunk to enjoy an after-dinner smoke.

Near by was a clump of low bushes, bearing a yellowish berry and he asked Jose if they were good to eat.

Jose examined them, and immediately declared that they were excellent.

"I have often eaten them down toward the coast, senor," he said, "but I have never seen any before so far in the interior.

He tasted the berries, pronounced them delicious, but somewhat different in flavor from them growing near the coast, and picked some for the Colonel, of which the latter ate liberally, without any suspicion of evil effects, finding them, as Jose had declared, of a most delicious flavor, and in taste something like the raspberry.

He did notice that Jose ate only a couple, nor did he see the look of cunning exultation on the Indian's face.

Ten minutes after eating the first berry, the Colonel felt strangely exhilerated, and burst out into a rollickly college song with the boisterous hilarity of one intoxicated with absinthe.

His whole nervous system, even to his finger tips, tingled with pleasing excitement. He had a vague recollection of making a resolve to check his indricous outburst; of seeing Jose glide away into the forest with his rifle over his shoulder, and a look of malignant hatred on his swarthy face; of struggling to his feet and calling to the Indian to come back, and then he rolled upon the ground and all became blank.

Not until the following day did consciousness begin to slowly assert itself. He then awoke, with a horrible sensation of helplessness.

The lower half of his body was numbed and paralyzed by a terrible gradually constricting power from all directions.

His limbs appeared dead, and all the blood forced out of them into the upper part of his body. His eyes seemed starting from their sockets; there was a singing in his ears, and he breathed with great difficulty.

His throat was hot and dry, and he was consumed with a raging thirst.

He was lying face downward, and having determined to throw off the stupor, he raised his hands to his head.

Instantly he was dragged backward several feet along the ground.

Horrified and bewildered, he made a frantic effort, raised himself on his elbows and looked about him.

He was half engulfed in the throat of a monster boa-constrictor!

The reptile had begun to swallow him without first crushing him within its coils, as is usually the case.

When the serpent moved, an indescribably sickening odor arose and almost stupefied the imprisoned man.

Maddened at the loathsome prospect, the Colonel gave a horrified scream of agony, and clutching frantically at the ground, struggled to relerse himself from the deadly embrace of the serpent's throat.

But the teeth of his devourer were fastened in his buckskin coat, and held him like a pair of hungry nippers, while the horrible suction pump below was worked with renewed energy.

The Colonel ceased his struggles, and looked about anxiously for Jose.

"What has become of him! Was he, too, being devoured, or was he already destroyed?"

While he was puzzling over these speculations, he suddenly remembered that just before consciousness left him, the Indian had disappeared in the forest, and then, like a flash, he recollected the fellow's conference with Mendoza, and he realized that he had been left to perish.

At the terrible thought, he made another effort to escape.

The movement disturbed the boa, and again it dragged him backward two or three feet, and again the constricting suction from below began.

So long as he kept perfectly quiet the serpent seemed content to let matters take their course, and to remain in a semi comatose condition.

He put down his left hand to feel the taut rim of the boa constrictor's jaws.

They were three inches higher up his body than when he first regained consciousness.

The excitement through which he had passed had exhausted his emotions, but this dire discovery awakened them.

He tried to form some plan of putting an end to his existence, but his brain was no longer equal to the concentration of a definite idea. He was beyond all power of action.

Once he fancied that he heard the cry of some animal or human being near by, but he was too far gone to pay much attention.

At last all seemed to be over with him. It was as though the darkness of night had gradually closed over him, the roaring noise in his ears continued for awhile and then all was silent.

He had sunk into the unconsciousness of complete exhaustion.

"I remembered no more," said the Colonel, "until I came to my senses again, and found myself lying on a luxurious bed, in a cool pleasant room."

"The first face that I saw as I opened my eyes, was that of the lady who afterward became my wife. At the time I thought her an angel from heaven, and—well, she is as near one as a mortal can be.

"I was very weak, and it was several days before I fully recovered. Then she told me the story of my rescue.

She is extremely fond of scientific pursuits, and was botanizing in the forest, accompanied by her maid and two trusty servants, when she suddenly beheld the head and shoulders of a man protruding from the mouth of a monster boa, whose scaly body lay in serpentine length along the ground.

"Taking it for granted that I was dead, and chilled with terror, she uttered the horrified cry that I had dimly heard.

"It brought to her side the servants, who were armed with sharp axes, to cut a path when necessary through the tanggled undergrowth of the forest.

"They boldly attacked the serpent and succeeded in chopping him completely in two just below the bulge in his body caused by my feet and legs. It was necessary, however, to slit open the severed head and neck before I could be released.

"At first they thought me dead, but were soon rejoiced at discovering a lingering spark of life."

Under Miss De Silva's directions the Colonel was taken to her father's house, and there she nursed him back to life and health.

A tender passion, each for the other, was developed during his convalescence, and when he was able to return to the logging camp, she had promised to be his wife.

He then learned from one of the Indian wood-choppers of the cowardly plot against his life.

Jose had seen the gigantic serpent crawling slowly toward the Colonel while the latter lay smoking under the tree, and had determined to assist his master, Mendoza, to a terrible revenge.

Knowing the stupefying effect of the yellow berries, the Indian had induced his companion to partake of them, and then had left him to his horrible fate.

When he returned to camp, he reported that the Colonel had been killed and devoured by an enormous serpent; but when news reached the camp that the supposed dead man was safe at General De Silva's plantation, he and his unscrupulous master, Mendoza, deserted, and were never seen nor heard of afterward.—Saturday Night.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 23 1889.

"An Era of Prosperity."

On the fourth of March the Republican legislature of Kansas, after singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," passed a resolution "that we congratulate the nation upon the incoming at this moment of a republican administration, and a consequent era of prosperity and good government." A few days later came the failure of the Reading iron works with liabilities of nearly $2,000,000, and throwing 2,000 men out of employment. Then the failure of the Excelsior pottery of Trenton, N. J., employing 300 hands, followed by the shutting down of the rolling mills at Reading, Naomi and Gibralter, Pa., and the Findlay, O., Iron and Steel company, with liabilities of over $100,000. A few more days passed and then came a lookout at the Fall River, Mass., calico works, in which 6,000, men, women and children were thrown out of employment. Scarcely a day passes without a forcible reminder from somewhere that the "era of prosperity" of which the Kansas solons spoke has dawned upon the country. This is shown by the reduction of wages of mechanics and laborers and a decrease in the price of farm products all over the land. It is probably an "era of prosperity" for somebody and "protection" is doubtless a big thing for somebody, but for whom? Is it for the laborer, the mechanic, the farmer or the producer in any of the branches of manufacture or trade? Not much. Such prosperity is not recognized by the money kings and the gentlemen who now have our government under their control. It may be an "era of prosperity" for them and it doubtless is. If it did not pay them to pursue their present tactics and if it did not pay the millionaire manufacturers to shut down their works they would not do it, would they? Well, it is hardly probable. But what are you going to do about it? "Protection" is the watchword of the administration that will be in power for nearly four years to come and if the people, who are supposed to be the real rulers of the country do not develop more good sense during that time than they showed at the last election, it is likely to remain so for four years longer. The workingman who voted for Harrison and the kind of "protection to American labor by the broad shield of American law," that Gen. Goff talks about, has no right to "kick." He ought to take his medicine like a man. He asked for it, and he has got it, but we imagine that it does not taste as good as he thought it would. Experience is said to be a dear school, and it has doubtless been a dear one to many a Republican who has followed his party wherever it led, without stopping to ask himself what his own interests were. But after all, they may learn something by it, and we hope they will. If not, we had better turn the country into a vast idiot asylum and let "protection" rule the roost until its followers starve to death hugging their idol, which is in reality the most gigantic fraud of the nineteenth century.—Charleston Star.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, May 17th.—Hon. Samuel J. Randall who has been confined to his residence in this city for several weeks past, is now much better, although not yet well enough to get out of doors. He contemplates spending the summer at the seashore.

Solicitor General Jenks, of the Department of Justice, who tendered his resignation at the beginning of the present administration, has been notified of its acceptance by the President to take effect on the 15th inst. Mr. Jenks will continue in the service of the Government as counsel in the telephone cases until they are disposed of. This position was the bone of contention which brought on the recent bitter wrangle between Senators Sherman and Quay. It was privately promised to Sherman's candidate Alphonzo Hart, of Ohio, some weeks ago, but for some unknown cause the appointment has not yet been publicly announced.

Ex-Senator Riddleberger, would be-Congressman Laughton and other anti-Mahone Republicans come to Washington and chin the President all they want to, but so far everything given out in Virginia has gone to a Mahone man.

A big scramble is now taking place daily at the Government Printing office, Palmer the new Public Printer having taken charge of the office Monday, since which time he has hardly been allowed an opportunity to eat or sleep so great is the rush. He has made but few appointments yet, but one of those few-Chief time keeper, was secured by ex-Senator "Billy" Chandler, of New Hampshire, who is one of Palmer's bondsmen, for his private secretary. "Billy's" friends are also likely to be heard from when the contracts for the year's supplies for the office are made next month.

Chief Justice Fuller has gone to Norfolk, and from there he will proceed to South Carolina on his district tour.

Harrison's first negro appointment Rev. James Townsend of Indiana, to be recorder of the General Land Office has created quite a commotion in the Land Office. In the division of which Townsend is to be Chief there are 25 white lady clerks and every one of them is trying to get transferred to some other division in order to escape the negro chief. As one of the ladies puts it; "We naturally have to pay a certain amount of court and deference to our Chief, and it will be very disagreeable for me to treat a negro as my superior, I shall get into some other division if I can; if not I suppose I shall have to stand it, as my bread and butter depends upon it."

Oklahoma does not propose getting left in the great scramble for office. Corporal Tanner has appointed a board of pension examiners for Guthrie, and the Civil Service Commissioners have received a letter asking how soon examinations are to be held in Oklahoma.

It is said that the Sherman and Foraker factions of Ohio republicans have got up a compromise on the Federal officers in Cincinnati, and that ex-Mayor Amor Smith will be surveyor and Col. D. W. McClung collector. The first is a Sherman man and the latter pins his faith to Foraker.

One man has appeared here as a candidate for office that every respectable man in the country should rejoice to see disappointed. I refer to W. E. Haskell, editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, who wants to be minister to Denmark. Haskell is the man who publicly insulted Mrs. Cleveland by a scandalous editorial in the columns of his paper while she and her husband were the quests of his city. It is surprising that he could get anybody to endorse his application.

The Court of Claims has decided that the celebrated Triggs' swords, which have been in the custody of the Treasury department ever since the war should be turned over to Mr. Myers, the executor of the General Triggs' estate.

Ex-Congressman Ochiltree, who spends his time in New York, but for political purposes, claims a residence in Texas, says that Harrison has given him control of all the Federal patronage of Texas. It may be just as Mr. Ochiltree says, but you know Mr. Ochiltree is the champion romancer of the country.

Ex Public Printer Benedict and brother, ex chief clerk of the Government Printing office have been presented with handsome gold-headed canes by the clerical force of that office.

A Mysterious Death.

On Wednesday of last week some fishermen discovered the body of a man lying on the bank of Greenbrier river, about three miles above Alderson, in Fort Spring district, this county. The body had evidently floated down during the recent rise in the river and deposited where found. The authorities of that district were notified, and a jury of inquest went down from Ronceverte to investigate the matter. The body was very much decomposed, and was that of a man 35 years of age and was well dressed, having on a tailor made suit of clothes, worth about $35 or $40. Nothing on his body was found to identify him. The only articles found were a couple of pocket handkerchiefs a money purse, (no money in it,) and a small knife. There were some indications that he might have been foully dealt with, but, no doctor being present at the inquest, this was not positively ascertained. He was evidently above ordinary men in position and circumstances, but who he was and how he met his death are mysteries.—Greenbrier Independent.

In New York.

THE WEST VIRGINIA TROOPS CHEERED FROM ONE OF THE LINE TO THE OTHER

A gentleman who returned from New York, and who saw the great parade there, says the West Virginia delegation showed up in great shape. There were about 150 members of the National Guard in line from this State, being headed by Gov. E. W. Wilson, Gen. E. L. Wood and the Governor's Staff, including Col. A. A. Franzheim of Wheeling. Then came the Governor's Guard and the two companies of 150 men. The boys marched like old-timers and where cheered all along the line.

There were few Governors in the line who received more cheers than Governor Wilson and he was one of the very few who received bouquets. While passing up Fifth avenue an immense bouquet of carnations was thrown to the Governor from one of the mansions on that thoroughfare.

The Governor's Guard band was along and made splendid music, and altogether the turnout was a creditable one for which the men should receive praise, as they all paid their own expenses.—Ronceverte News.

There are fifteen contested Congressional election cases to be settled by the next Congress. Three of them are from West Virginia.

The Illinois house passed the bill appropriating $50,000 for a monument to the late John A. Logan.

The West Virginia soldier boys gets $6,635 as their share of the $400,000 appropriated by the last Congress for distribution among the National Guards of the several States.

THE supreme court has decided that the Scott Chinese exclusion act is constitutional. This must me quite unpleasant to Gen. Harrison and other lovers of the almond-eyed Mongolian.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Fine rain last Sunday.

—Read Loury & Doyles new ad. this week.

—Read A. M. McClintic & Co's new ad. this week.

—E. J. Holt, of Academy was in our city last week.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3, $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Ronceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—Charley Arbogast was in town yesterday.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—W. H. Wallis, of Baltimore, was in our burg the first of the week.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30 2m.

—Go to Loury & Doyles for all kinds of fine goods.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t —Talk about hard times; you would think they are hard sure enough if you would see how cheap Loury & Doyle are selling goods.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9 12

—Geo. W. Wagner, has been appointed postmaster at this place and Amos Barlow removed, and W. [illegible] Hannah at Frost.

—I. H. Waugh and son, passed through town Monday, on their way to [illegible] Baths, Va.

Married, on Wednesday May 15 at the residence of the brides parents Mr. [illegible] Sheets, of Green Bank to Miss Mary O. Simmons, of Buckeye.

DIED.—Slaven of pneumonia, at the home of Mr. Hoover, on cheat Mt., May 11th 1889, Prior V. Slaven in the 82nd year of his age. Prior had been a great sufferer for many years, but his end was peace.

W.

Died, Mrs. T. H. McGlaughlin, of Gillespie, this Co., formerally of near this place.

[illegible] Commencement

The second [illegible] commencement of the H. T. School Academy [illegible], will be held Tuesday, June 4th, beginning at 8 p. m. The public are cordially invited to attend.

Miss G. M. SHEAFER,
Principal.

Election returns at this place are as follows: For Co. Supt. M. G. Mathews, 26; C. F. Moore, 1 and Miss Emma Warwick, 1

For Commissioner—P. M. Harper 29; H. W. Hooker 3 and Sheldon Moore 6.

A Letter

Mr. Dilley, P. M. at Dilley's Mill is very much mistaken about the registered package coming up missing at [illegible]. I got the package and it was for me; registered to me from S. L. Myers & Co., N. Y. Sept 13th 1888.

I get registered packages sometimes, without taking other peoples. This report was started to injure me, but I don't think it did.

Respectfully,
C. [illegible]

Gladstone has refused to write twenty five newspaper articles for $25,000 for a New York newspaper syndicate; says he is too old.

Mill Point Pickings.

Fine growing weather.

Lee Cackley, wife and baby and Mrs. Corry and daughter, passed through our town a few days ago on their way to Green Bank.

Trench Sutton who has been visiting relatives at this place has gone home.

Mrs. Luther Auldridge and Miss Mintie Smith are visiting friends and relatives at Edray.

Lien Gibson, of Kansas city, made a short visit here a few days ago.

J. L. Cook, has finished working the turnpike on Droop mountain.

Mathews Ruckman, wears quite a smile. Its a girl.

E. P. G.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Miss Jessie Kinnison, is suffering from an attack of diphtheria.

Mrs. Felix Crummett, is on the sick list.

The Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro Male & Female Academy taught by Prof. Landes will be Thursday and Friday nights a select choir has been picked from the best singers in the Levels and the parts well rehearsed, so a pleasant time is expected.

The Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro Training School will take place the night of the 4th of June. Those who attended the excellent Commencement gotten up by Miss G. M. Shearer, know what to expect and we feel they will not be disappointed.

PRUNELLA

Dunmore Doings.

S. C. Pritchard, is off for Staunton.

M. G. Mathews, got a majority for Co., Supt. at Dunmore and Split Rock to hear from.

Work has commenced on the new church.

Several Drummers stopped at the Wakeman Hotel last week.

I understand from the Co. Court that each district in the county was provided with two road scrapers and the owners should get them and make use of them.

Died, Mrs. Jacob H. Arbogast, at the home of her son-in-law near Traveler's Repose on the 20th inst., at an advanced age.

D. B. McElwee will be appointed P. M. at Dunmore and C. B. Swecker removed.

Quite a number of our people will attend the musical association at Frost.

Subscribe for THE TIMES.

TOM SAWYER.

Notes by the Way.

This is a most pleasant time for jaunts over the country, and your correspondent has never had more exquisite enjoyment, than the past few weeks. One recent morning while reflecting on the beauties of natural scenery, the writer felt that he ought to be very careful to keep the commandments of the Lord his God, to walk in his ways and to fear Him, for God in his providence in permitting him to have a home in Pocahontas, brought him into a good land of water of brooks and of fountains that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley and vines and honey; a land wherein one may eat bread without scarceness; a land whose stones are iron, see Deuteronomy 8, 8 and 11, 11.

It would be hard to find a region that has more points of resemblance to the promised land, than our section of West Virginia.

The flowery spring at thy command
Embalms the air and paints the land.
The summer rays with vigor shine,
To raise the corn and cheer the vine.

A useful lesson.

Last Sabbath morning, May 12, while on the pleasant way to Huntersville, where a most enjoyable forenoon was to be spent with some of the best people in the world, in Sabbath school and preaching services, my mind for a time was preoccupied with reflections suggested by a little spruce pine tree, near Spice Island.

It is growing upon the decaying branch of a sycamore tree, that overhangs the water.

It is only a question of time when the branch to which it clings will fall away, and then all will be swept down the flood, and it will never be the tree it would have been, had it chosen a more lowly place to live in.

For the present it seems to have the preeminence over its contemporaries, but it will not be so, very long, for its very growth and develepement, but shortens the time of its ruin.

This world like the decaying branches is passing away, and if my immortal nature should have nothing but it to cling to and be nourished by, then its ruin is only a question of fleeting time, when to be swept away by the "dark rolling flood."

GOOD READING.

Some of the best reading accessible to your correspondent, he gets from Lovell's Library. In a recent issue, Farrar's "Seekers after God" much is said of Seneca, the wisest of pagon moralists and the teacher fo Nero, the vilest of pagon rulers. The author points out the mistake Seneca, made in teaching his illustrious pupil. Seneca neglected to take to heart, what Homer tought; "it is better to die than to live in sin." He allowed Nero to indulge in some bad habits, so as to keep him from worse ones, and hence it was an education of compromises. So alike in the studies of Nero's boyhood, and managing him respecting the graver temptations of his manhood, Seneca acted on the [illegible]

"Had the [illegible]
The soil [illegible]
The grain [illegible]

The [illegible] approval [illegible] worst chara[illegible]

All observ[illegible] well as pagan [illegible] "Just as the [illegible] inclines," So it [illegible] proverb.

"The child is fa[illegible]

Seneca seems to [illegible] what Horace wrote [illegible] long retain the odour of [illegible] has once been poured into it, when new." He might have received a hint from Quintilian also, for in describing the depraved influences which surrounded even the infancy of a Roman child he said "From these arise first familiarity, then nature."

So christian teaching, and pagon philosophy jointly agree, that first impressions are for weal or woe, for time and eternity, in a persons history.

First impressions are always made at home, how all important that our homes should be pure and good, and how can they be pure and good unless the parents be pure and good, to begin with.

Let the source be pure, then will the stream be pure and cleansing wherever it flows. Let the homes be pure, then society will be pure, and government will be pure, and the people happy and prosperous.

Impure homes results in the down fall of Rome, and should the United States come to ruin the historians recording the deplorable disaster will trace the primary cause back to American homes.

In a most impressive sense,
"There is no place like home."

W. T. P.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889. I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

15th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 30 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the Waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a fertile State of Cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC.
Special Com'r.

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Clk Cir. Ct.

printers fee $8.70 may 23 4w

Orders of Publication.
No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als.
vs. } In chy. No 1.
Wm. F. Arbogast & als.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing 6,[illegible] acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Alleghany mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David V. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee, James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sholts, Amos Gum, Thos. G. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart [illegible] and of Annie Sheets are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Potts, dec.,
due diligence has been [illegible]
of the plaintiff without effect to ascertain in what county, Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regar, (formerly Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3.

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c.,
vs. : In chy. No. 3.
Wm. F. Arbogast, &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,576 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Ascol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Ware and Mobala his wife and Jeretta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan [illegible], dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar (formerly Arnold) and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9 1 m printers fee 10.97

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, west Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Admin'r.
vs. : In chy.
Rebecca J. Hill & als.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To convene the creditors of said decedent. To subject the real estate of which said Geo. Hill, dec'd died seized to the payment of his debts and to construe the will of the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Thos C. Hill, James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. Bruffey are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may 9 4t printers fee $9.62

PRIVATE SALE OF LAND.

I wish to sell at private sale, 195 acres of land lying within one half mile of Greenbrier River opposite to the mouth of Stamping Creek, formerly known as the [illegible] place. I will sell at a sacrafice. I will remain in the county two weeks, in the vicinity of Little Levels and Huntersville, after that

Address, Jas. E. A. Gibson,
Baptiste, Pa.

GOOD FLOUR.

[illegible] cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for [illegible] cts. mar. 28.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered in the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
[illegible]	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
[illegible]	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
[illegible]	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 23 1889.

The True Home Life.

From Good Housekeeping.

What is the central point of the home life? Is not this the question which we should each, as home-builders, ask ourselves? What are the things of all that we do, daily, weekly, or returning in their appointed time, which are only not necessary, but are harmful to the true home life? It may be that the only reason for doing certain things is because the proceeding generation has done the same things, and that, too, in very mechanical ways. A mother holds her first child while it sleeps upon her lap; it becomes accustomed to it. When she grows stronger she must lay it down to do necessary work; it frets and cries and refuses to take its naps. The mother is worn out in her efforts to do the work and quiet the cries; so she carries the child about in her arms. It is slow to walk. She becomes nervous and irritable, toward her baby, even. Her second child is cross and restless. She bears and rears several children. All through these years the mistake pursues and wears her out. The children are not taught to depend upon themselves and to be helpful.

This mother does non-essential things and leaves the essential undone. Her mental growth stopped long ago; alas for the time when the little children find that mother cannot help them in their little studies, and alas for the mother who has let the knowledge of her girlhood slip from her, and has not added to it both for herself and family! What is more beautiful to see than great sons and daughters asking mother's opinion of some point which they are in doubt about, which they bring to her to have settled before they return to school? To have them hasten eagerly to tell her upon their return that their work was right!

Sometimes it is through suffering only that a woman learns that there are many things which need not be done. It is often in these times of forced quiet that she sees most clearly that real living is not a part of her home life. After her experience is gained and she has but little strength, she can then think what she should do with the strength which is still left to her.

Temporal wants and pleasures must be considered, and indeed planned for, but there are many things done in the way of cooking food unwholesome through its richness, which should be made rarely, if at all. Sacrifices which take away rest and sleep to keep up pride in dress or some adornment, should never be made.

Let children be taught that they may have fancy clothes when they can make, iron, and keep them in order. In a home where the work is done by the mother and daughters, the plan is pursued. She found that when her daughters were old enough to iron much ruffled white dresses they preferred plain ones.

Nothing can take the place of neatness and order. These depend much upon good management, for one can always be cleaning, yet never clean, always arranging, yet never in order. Sometimes one's own spirit is restless which is the secret cause of the lack in the divine part of a true home life.

She Thought it Time to Get to Business.

"Oh darling Ethel," said the young man, as he moved nearer to the blushing maiden, "you really do not love me as I do you, or you would not be so cold."

"I am not cold, Herbrt," murmured she.

"Yes you are. Here I have loved you madly for months, and to-night I have told you so, and yet you refuse to let me kiss your sweet lips only once to seal our compact."

"It would not be right, Herbert," she sighed.

"Yes, it would, my darling one. It would not harm you; it would never be told to the cold ear of the world; it would be a token I should never forget. Do you give me one, just one, my affianced bride."

"Well, Hubert," said she, as her liquid eyes beamed love to his, "If I give you this token, will you give me one to keep near my heart?"

"Anything, darling, any token you may wish!"

"Only your name, dearest; your name on a piece of paper, It is only an odd, a romantic, aye perhaps a foolish, girlish idea of mine, but I want your dear name that I may carry it in my bosom, and gaze on it and kiss it when you are away. Just put your name here."

And Herbert did so only too gladly, and she placed the paper in her bosom, and when she reached her room she took it out and gazed on it. And above his name where he didn't happen to see, appeared this legend, which had been written just before he called:—"Evansville March 28, 1889. This night I promised to marry Ethel, and I hereby bind myself to do so at the time we mutually agreed on.—HUBERT MONTRAVERS."

"Yes," she muttered to herself as she sank to rest on her pillow, "I think I've got him foul. There have been too many ducks kissing and slobbering over me for the last five years, and I think it's time to take a tumble and get a sure grip on one."

His Honeymoon.

The following rather singular method of of enjoying a honeymoon may commend itself to impecunious bridegrooms if it does not to their brides. The colored female cook of a family living in Boston came upstairs one afternoon, and, twisting the corners of her apron with embrassment, said to her mistress:

"You see, missus, I thought it mought be bes' to be tellin' you dat I—dat I done got married las' week."

"Ah! and what is your name now, Hannah?"

"Mis' Williams, ma'am. You see, my husban', he am a cook, too. He am a sheft in a hotel."

"A chef, eh? That's very nice. And do you expect to leave us directly?"

"Not d'reckly, mum. I'll stay for de present. You see, my husban', he's done gone to New York an' Washin'ton on his honeymoon, an' it'll be nigh onto six weeks befo' he comes back."

Form in your children the habit of daily reading in the bible. Say to each of them in your own way that which Sir Matthew Hale wrote to his child: "Every morning read seriously and reverently a portion of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book full of light and wisdom, and will make you wise to eternal life."—Rev. E. Heber Newton.

A ship ruled by woman—courtship.

Mrs. Blossom: "What's that? O horrors, the hotel afire." Mr Blossom: "Yes come on; we've no time to lose." Mrs. Blossom: "But here I am in my night dress." Mr. Blossom: "Good enough; I'm glad you got out of your balldress, and into something decent."

As it is the manly man who wins and satisfies a good woman, so it is the womanly woman who pleases and retains the desirable man. She need not be soft or silly, or weak or nervous—she may be streng, vigerous, resolute and brave; but, whatever she is, she must be womanly in order to please.

"Tis said absence conquers love," quoted a husband, in writing home to his wife from whom he had been some time away, "I hope, dear it won't be so in your case." "Oh no," she replied in her next letter, "the longer you stay away the better I shall like you." He had to take it thus ambiguously, as he was afraid to risk asking an explanation.

Sickness in Farmer's Families.

A paper in a Massachusetts health report gives this suggestive summary of the principal cause of sickness in families of farmers:

1. Overwork and exposure; the women being more frequently overworked.
2. Improper and improperly cooked food.
3. Damp location of dwellings.
4. Want of cleanliness about their houses, especially in reference to drains, privies, cellars and proximity to barnyard and hog-pens.
5. Impure drinking-water, largely due to preceding causes.
6. Bedrooms imperfectly ventilated and on the ground floor, with the too general use of feather beds.
7. Insufficient recreation.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May., 30, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 45.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. R. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

READY TO BE MARRIED.

I am ready to be married;
I can make a loaf of bread;
I can cook as nice a dinner
As my mother, so she said;
I can keep a room in order,
Sweep the house and make a bed;
Mother says a girl may marry
Who can make a loaf of bread.

I am ready to be married,
I can cut and make a dress;
Mark the linen with the cross stitch;
Mend the lace, that's hardly less
Fine and dainty than a cobweb;
So I dare to tell him, "Yes;"
Mother says a girls may marry
Who can cut and make a dress.

I am ready to be married;
I can knit a stocking well,
I can make and I can darn it,
And a "bargain" I can tell;
I can shop and go to market,
And I'm not a ball-room belle;
Mother says a girl may marry
Who can knit a stocking well.

I am ready to be married;
And I have a lover true,
Just the handsomest and dearest
Lad that ever came to woo;
Never maiden loved her lover
Half so dearly as I do;
Mother says a girl may marry
When she has a lover true.

—Ex.

Did Sun and Moon Dance.

BY F. R. BURTON.

"An, did yer mamma never tell ye of that, Elsie, me darlin? How the sun an' the moon dance togeth er, the bot' of tuim, on Easter morn in? Oh! oh! what a shame it is, it is! Might be she never heard of it, for there be a heap of innicint ignorance in America waitin' to be putt in the shtove an' burnt up like a pack o' peat, so it is. Fait', an' I think the most beautiful t'ings is Irish, so an' I do!"

"But really, Maggie," and little Elsie's blue eyes were wide with wonderment, "really and truly, does the sun dance with the moon on Easter morning?"

"What would I be tellin' ye for if it wasn't so at all? They do in Ireland; just as sure as the blissid sun comes up drippin' out av the say, lavin ould England in the dark, bad luck to her! The moon runs hoppity skip across the sky an' joins hand with the sun, an' they dance a rale Irish jig together."

"That must be dreadfully funny," said Elsie gravely; then, a last doubt lingering in her puzzled thoughts. "Did you ever see them Maggie?"

"See thim, is it? Oh, oh, run away, now, to yer mamma an' shtop axing me bothersome questions. Don't I tell ye it's so? What more do ye want, I dunno?"

Elsie put her little finger in her mouth and walked slowly and with abstracted gaze into the sitting room, where her mother sat sewing and her father was reading the evening paper. She sat down upon a low stool under the mantel and studied the brown and yellow figures of the carpet. In the soft light of the big lamp on the center table the brown seemed darker than it did by daylight, and the yellow was almost white. Elsie wondered vaguely whether the yellow moon would be white during the dance with the sun, for she remembered that whenever it appeared by day it was wofully pale; and would the sun turn his dazzling face aside for just one minute so that she could have a good look at him? and would the moon have feet? and would the sun's legs go right down from the great, hot circle of flame, or would there be a body like papa's? or would both, and this seemed more likely, would both just tilt from side to side and laugh in each other's face before they resumed their regular duties?

It was strangely interesting to the eight-year-old, and in happy reflection she forgot all about the odd figures in the new carpet. The bronze clock above her head began to buzz with immense importance and then uttered a single tiny ring and went on ticking hurriedly, as if in haste to reach the next hour mark, when its buzzing should prelude a more significant announcement. All well regulated clocks are subject to this vanity; they puff out the cheeks of their faces, rattle away as if all their precious insides were falling to pieces; the pendulum is silent, and then the commotion ends with a few silvery strokes; more or less, after which the time piece recovers its modest self-possession and goes on about its useful busines.

"Half-past 8," said Mrs. Durant, glancing up at the clock. "Time little girls were in bed"

"Mamma," exclaimed Elsie, taking a tuck in her dress with her fingers and looking hard at her feet, "mayn't I sit up all night just this once?"

"Mercy on us!" cried Mrs. Durant, laying her sewing down in her lap, "what does the child mean?"

Papa Durant looked inquiringly over the top of his paper.

"I want to see the sun and the moon dance together," replied Elsie "and I can't wake up early enough if I go to bed."

Mamma Durant was too astonished to speak, but papa, with an amused smile, said:

"You would have your trouble for nothing, Elsie; the sun and the moon don't indulge in such antics."

Elsie did not understand her father's words exactly, but she felt the denial and she responded:

"Maggie says they do every Easter morning, when the sun comes out of the sea, and the moon hop, skips and jumps, and they take hands and dance in the sky, at least in Ireland, the both of them, and perhaps, if I just sat up all night, they'd do it for me. Please papa."

Papa laughed.

"If you sat up little one," he said, "you would not be awake in the afternoon to sing with the other children in the Easter festival. You wouldn't like to miss that?"

"I think I'd rather see the dance," responded Elsie.

"Maggie shouldn't put such notions in little girls heads," said mamma, and forthwith Elsie was bundled off to bed. Her lips pouted with something more than affection when she kissed her father good night, and two or three lonesome tears rolled slowly down her face; but she went to her room without a murmur, and when her head was on the pillow she looked out at the stars and wished something would keep her awake. Her father had rearoused her doubts as to the entire truth of Maggie's story; but it would have taken much more than that to convince her, for the event was too interesting not to be believed, and she was more than willing to see herself whether it was so.

As she lay wondering about it all a thought suddenly sprung into her head. Why should she not stay awake and see the dance? Papa and mamma had not said that she must not, and they would not care very much when she told them at breakfast what she had yone. This thought became a fixed determination, and for several minutes she looked at the stars steadily with open eyes. Then she caught herself dozing and she sat up in bed. Even in this attitude her head speedily drooped, and she got out and stood in front of her half open ed window. Across the road a street lamp made fantastic shadows of the trees and houses, and far away a dog barked. From the room below come the clear, high tones of her mother's voice and the deep, somber murmur of her father's replies. Mellow sounds from the top of the little hill back of the house told that the church clock was striking 9. How slowly the time passed for Elsie! She looked up again at the stars and thought how tired the angels must get watching through the dark silence of every night. Then somebody walked rapidly by, and when she could no longer hear his footsteps she wondered if it were nearly 10 o'clock. At last it grew chilly, and she climbed into bed again, just for one minute, to get warm.

The evening had grown old for country folk before Mrs. Durant put aside the work that had lain idle in her lap for many minutes, and followed her husband to their chamber. Her thoughts had gone back to a happier time when her son Willie was with her. Only five years ago, and how long it seemed! He had yielded to a restless disposition and wandered away, where she knew not, except that it was credibly reported that he had shipped aboard an East Indiaman. If he were alive he would be nearly 20 now, but no word from or about him had ever been received. He had been absent a year when his parents sought to overcome the depression that grew upon them by leaving their former home and establishing themselves in a pretty country village where this story finds them.

Mrs. Durant said nothing to her husband of their common grief, and before she slept she had relieved her aching heart by thoughts of Elsie, upon whom she poured forth all of a mother's yearning affection.

Elsie started. There was a flow of soft light in her room, and the stars that had shown so clearly into her window were almost invisible. She sprang from her bed with a great fear at her heart. Was it day? No, there was the moon smiling at her and making the whole night glorious. How had the moon come around the house corner so quickly! Had she been asleep? The street lamp had been put out. It could not be more than a minute since she snuggled her toes under the blankets, and yet—— It must be near morning, and intent on being out in time for the dance she hastened to put on her clothes. She would go up to the church at the top of the hill. There she could see al of the known world except that vague confusion of some far off town where papa used to live.

With care not to awake anybody, Elsie crept down the back stairs, drew back the bolt of the kitchen door, cautiously opened it and stepped out. Everything was wonderfully still, as if the earth was holding its breath in expectancy over the heavenly capers to occur at daybreak. Neither the stillness nor the night itself had terrors for Elsie. She walked quickly across the yard and through the sloping orchard beyond to the low wall that bounded the churchyard. Over this, and presently she stepped upon the the shadow of the steeple. The moon was on the other side of the clock face, or Elsie might have seen that it was but a few minutes past midnight. Entirely satisfied with her adventure thus far, she sat down upon the church steps to wait.

Then for the first time she saw that she had been followed. Noiseless stepping across the grass come Dot, the family cat, who was fast outgrowing the significance of her name. Elsie welcomed Dot and rose to pick her up, whereat Dot scampered away, tail in air.

"Naughty pussy! come here," cried Elsie, and ran after her. In the orchard Dot disappeared, but, hearing a slight noise below, Elsie went softly forward, intent on taking her pet by surprise. Arrived at the gate to the yard she paused ed and looked about. What was her surprise to see a man cutting with a large pocket knife at the sash of the kitchen window! For a moment she looked on in wonderment, but when the man had cut away the fastening and was carefully raising the window, she exclaimed:

"That's my papa's house!"

Like a flash the man turned around and peered across the yard, his hand still on the half raised window.

"Huh! It's a kid," he muttered, and he let the window down and walked over to Elsie.

"What are you doing here, young one?" he asked in a whisper.

"I'm going to see the sun and the moon dance in the morning," replied Elsie, "and you mustn't speak out loud or you'll wake papa and mamma, and they'll make me come in."

The stranger smiled.

"I won't disturb 'em," he said. "I wasn't going to anyway. The fact is, little one, I'm hungry, and all I was going to do in your house was to find something to eat."

"How do you know where the pantry is?" asked Elsie.

"I don't, but p'r'aps I could find it. You know, I suppose? Can't you get me a bit of bread or something?

Elsie thought a moment. She remembered how no beggar ever went hungry from her father's door, and without reflecting further she crept into the house, and as she went in the stranger muttered, "And to think that the door was unlocked all the time!"

When Elsie returned she brought a half loaf of bread and a doughnut, a luxury of which she was especially fond. The stranger fell upon the bread ravenously and Elsie watched him in silence for a moment. Then she asked:

"Where do you live?"

"Nowhere."

This seemed so strange to Elsie that she said nothing more. The hungry man ate every morsel of the food and then put his face in his hands.

"I am much obliged to you," he whispered. "I'm no thief, little one, and I never tried before to break into a house, though I've seen hard times enough."

"Wouldn't you like to see the sun and the moon dance?" asked Elsie. "I think they'll do it this morning, and that'll be pretty soon, won't it? They do in Ireland every Easter morning."

"Who told you so?"

"Maggie."

"Who's she?"

"Papa's hired girl."

"What is your papa's name?"

"Mr. William Durant."

The stranger started, and leaning forward peered earnestly into Elsie's face.

"Say that again! Where did you used to live?" he exclaimed.

"Way off somewhere. I live here now."

"What is your name?"

"Elsie."

The stranger was silent a moment. Then he rose, and, taking

Continued on fourth Page.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 50	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 30 1889.

Fourteen lawyers have been president of the United States.

A Cincinnati man, in order to keep peace in the family, has married his mother-in-law.

Governesses are going to the front. Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts was a governess and so was Mrs. Levi P. Morton.

Mr. Gladstone's visit to Italy has improved his health immensely. When he returns to London he will look ten years younger.

Francis D. Daffin, of Brooklyn, a printer, bet $500 on the losing horse at the race, and then settled his grief by committing suicide.

Hon. Thorndike Rice, recently appointed by President Harrison United States Minister to Russia is dead.

Prince Louis de Ligue and Vicomte de Jonghe fought a duel at midnight by torch light in a French forest. Nothing was wounded except trees.

THE Democrats have secured a majority of five in the constitutional convention of Montana. The prospects for the future do not look so dark, after all, do they brethren

Mrs. Oscar Folsom, mother of Mrs. Cleveland, was married on the 20th in Jackson, Mich., to Henry E. Perrine, of Buffalo. He is secretary of Buffalo City Cemetary Association.

Hon. John Wanamaker, distributed $100,000 among his employes last week. It was the result of his profit system adopted in his Philadelphia business house.

Hon. Jno. T. McGraw has resigned as Collector of Internal Revenue. He will be succeeded by A. B. White, editor of the State Journal, a bitter partisan paper at Parkersburg.

The Boston Journal reports that Samuel Cummings of that city while leaning against a rail in his grain-mill, "began sneezing and sneezed so hard that he disolated his shoulder."

Miss Jane Woods, a young lady who lives in Wetzel county, has completed a nice quilt containing 22,140 pieces. She commenced it when seven years old, having worked at it for fourteen years.

A Republican exchange says: "A man who is addicted to drink, is not likely to get anything from Harrison." We can understand now why it was that so many of the brethren who seemed to have every prospect of success failed to get there.

A Clay county preacher has been indicted on four accounts for gambling at cards. The failure of his flock to ante promptly in the Sunday "pot" is, no doubt the cause of the minister's efforts to replenish his purse by a little game of draw.

Old Kanawha did nobly on Tuesday. Cutting down a majority of 1,500 to about 150 is not so bad, even if a full vote was not polled. At the same rate of increase we will be able to carry the county by about 800 majority at the next election.—Charleston Star.

The iron makers of the South are driving the Pennsylvania furnaces out of blast. The Southern mills have been selling pig-iron in New York at $16.50 a ton for a year, while the Pennsylvanians have been compelled to get $18 per ton for theirs, or close their mills. The Tariff will not help Pennsylvania hereafter. Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama are the countries from which Pennsylvania must protect herself, and she can't do that by a tariff.—Charleston Gazette.

The editor of the New York Times, Mr. C. R. Miller, in a closing lecture before the Dartmouth Alumni Tuesday on the "Art of Making a Newspaper," said among other things:

"The art of making a newspaper, like any other art, demands of him who would practice it a special skill and some information. The vulgar error that the newspaper art demand no special training, but may be taken up at a moment's notice and a generous salary by any man or woman temporarily out of work or unacquainted with any kind of work, is traceable to an obvious source. Young men are admitted to the practic of the law, they are graduated in medicine, and they are ordained or appointed ministers of the Gospel, in each case after a fixed term of study has elapsed and an ascertained degree of professional knowledge has been acquired. Of him who asks for work in a newspaper office no degree, license, or certificate is exacted. Yet no contention is that the training which fits one successfully to practice the art of making a newspaper is no less arduous, is usually rather more prolonged, and yields no smaller volume of attainment than the special studies preparatory to the practice of law, of medicine, of engineering, or architecture, or the instruction of ingenous youth."

WASHINGTGN LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, May 24th.—"Harrison has a weak back bone," said a republican Senator, and it is constantly growing weaker. There is every indication that we are to have a repetitiod of the worse features in the Hayes and Arthur administrations." This language was used by a man who is generally regarded as being very friendly to the administration, and there is no doubt that he is, but he was asked by a republican friend his opinion of the President and he gave it without reserve. And the known facts in a number of cases bear the Senators statement as to a weak back bone out. For instance he wants to put his old law partner Attorney General Miller in the Supreme Court bench, but owing to a vigorous protest from the Indiana republicans, who want Judge Woods of that State appointed, he does nothing. Again: In the early days of the administration John Wanamaker selected a business man of Philadelphia to be Postmaster at that city, and Mr. Harrison lacked the nerve to make the appointment. And again: Some time ago John Sherman was promised that Ex-Congressman Hart, of Ohio, should be appointed Solicitor. General, Hart was telegraphed to and told to come on and get the appointment. Quay made a big row accusing Sherman of lying etc., and intimating that the administration might go to jericho, for all he cared. Once more Harrison's back bone went back on him and Hart's appointment has not yet been made out. The cases mentioned are all well known, doubtless there are many similar ones that the public never hears of, but these are sufficient to prove that the Senators indictment is a true one.

Oklahoma can't have a national bank. So says the Attorney General to whom the application was referred by the Treasury department.

Some absurd rumors about the sending of an English man of war to Alaskan waters to prevent the provisions of Harrison's recent proclamation, as to the seizure of all vessels found illegally taking seals, from being carried out, forcibly if necessary, have been floating around here this week but nobody seemed to take any stock in them.

Justice Miller of the Supreme Court, having failed in his purpose of getting ex-Secretary of War McCrary, appointed as his successor, or rather in getting a promise to that effect from Harrison, now says that he has no intention of retiring.

Washington has been the scene of some very heavy fighting among some of the big fellows in the republican party during the present week. Blows have been passed that will be remembered for years and revenged too, if the opportunity comes, and it most always causes strife among the leaders distribution of the patronage. The first skirmish was between Representative Cannon, of Illinois and Senators Cullom and Farwell of the same state. Cannon got one of his constituents appointed collector of Internal revenue without consulting either of the Senators. Cannon has the best of it so far out the Senators swear vengeance. The next engagement was a battle royal that has raged all the week. It is over the Philadelphia Federal appointments. On one side is "Cheap John" Wanamaker, Representative Harry Bingham and Boss McManes, and on the other Senator Quay alone, with all his war paint on. The fight has been carried to the White House nearly every day and poor Harrison has been compelled to act as referee much against his will. This fight is still on, with the result in doubt. Another engagement was caused by a U. S. Marshalship in New York, Senator Evarts dared to oppose the candidate of Senator Hiscock and Boss Tom Platt, and not only to oppose the other candidate but to have one of his own. The three met here this week and indulged in a few rounds. Evarts is believed to have been completely knocked out. It seems to be generally believed by the republicans that Harrison will call an extra session of Congress in October. Of course everybody knows that there is no earthly occasion for an extra session except to give the republicans two months to fight over the organization of the House and to perfect their arrangements to get at least three-fourths of the contested seats.

Blaine, Windom and Proctor deny that they propose resigning, as was rumored.

Many people from Washington, have gone to Alexandria to-day to witness the unveiling of a handsome monument to the Confederate dead.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The [illegible] of regular meeting of this [illegible]dge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the [m]oon falls on Friday, then on that [ev]ening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

61

HOME NEWS

—Geo. W. Siple, of Green Bank, [wa]s in town Friday last.

—Geo. Ginger, of Dunmore was [in] Huntersville last Saturday.

—R. A. Coalter, of Aylmer was [in] to see us last Saturday.

—County Supt. Mathews, was in [th]e city Monday.

—R. K. Burns, of Academy was [in] Huntersville Monday.

—Harry Moore, of Dunmore was [in] town last week.

—J. W. McNeil, of Edray, was [in] to see us Monday.

—Rev. W. T. Price of Marlinton [wa]s in to see us Monday.

—Dr. Mathew Wallace, of Mill [Po]int was in to see us Tuesday.

—Quite a little snow in several [par]ts of the county last Saturday. [Ho]w's that for the 25th of May?

[B]uggy harness and Saddles at $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's [Ron]ceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—The County Court, Messrs. C. [B]eard, S. B. Hannah and Geo. [M]oore were in town Monday.

[Go] to John Wurts & Co, Frank[for]d, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and [Se]lf Binders. may 9-12t

—The County Court met last [Mo]nday to count the election re[tu]rns.

[S]ewing machines from $25 to $50; [wa]rranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, [Ron]ceverte, W. Va. 30 2m.

—The school election is over and [M]r. Mathews, elected Co. Super[int]endant.

—Guy Slaven who has been at[ten]ding the Hillsboro Academy has re[tu]rned.

—Miss Mary Curry, has returned fro[m] the Hillsboro Academy where sh[e] has been an attendant.

[Jo]hn Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W.Va., will be here during June C[our]t with a lot of Mowers. Don't bu[y] until you see them. may 9-12t

[Is]n't it about time somebody w[as] doing something toward get[tin]g up a big Fourth of July cele[brati]on?

[Bu]y the Deering Mowers and Se[lf] Binders, the best machines th[at] made of John Wurts & Co. Fr[an]kford, W. Va. may 9 12

—One Jess Smith, a logman, is w[ant]ed, for rape, committed on one M[rs.] Perkins, on the river near Hillsboro.

—Mrs. C. A. Damron and family [are] visiting her parents Mr. J. C. Lo[u]ry, at this place. Mr. Damron [ca]me with them but returned Mon[d]ay.

—Quite an enjoyable afternoon w[a]s spent Sunday in singing at this pl[a]ce, led by Profs. S. B. Moore [an]d A. J. Smith, of Edray, and M. A. Friel.

—M. G. Mathews, the only can[d]idate for County Superintendent was elected by a handsome vote. The vote taken at Academy for a six months school was defeated by two.

—Rev. W. E. Miller, of Hillsboro preached at the Methodist Church at this place on Monday night and Tuesday. His sermons were interesting and instructive and very much appreciated by the audience.

—The residence of Bruce and Chumley at Mingo, was destroyed by fire last Sunday. The fire originated from a defective flue. The property destroyed is known as the [illegible] homestead. The loss is estimated at $2,000. No insurance. —Enterprise.

—Dr. C. L. Austin and Maj. J. C. Arbogast, of Green Bank, were in town Tuesday. The Doctor says if a person were to depend upon the United States under the present administration there would be no certainty about getting married. On Friday last he mailed a dollar to the Clerk with the request to send by return mail a marriage license, but no letter nor dollar has yet reached the clerk; so the Doctor had to come to town himself.

—The Pocahontas Musical Association held very pleasant sessions at Frost, May 23-26, under the direction of Prof. S. B. Moore, aided by a corps of Musical teachers, and organists. The attendance was large, and enthusiastic, and the interest in sacred music enhanced. Profs. Swecker, Smith and Ruckman, Capt. Gilmer, from Highland, Rev. G. P. Moore, Profs. A. C. Moore and M. A. Friel, were among the more prominent of the lectures. Rev. O. B. Sharp, was secretary, Misses Ida Herold Nina Herold Ida Smith and Mrs. Laura Herold rendered very efficient service upon the organ, that added much to the success of the convention. Outlines of an address, to be published by request of the convention, may be looked for in our next issue.

—Geo. Marteny, a young man about 17 years old, was instantly killed yesterday, Thursday, near his home, two miles east of Beverly, by the accidental discharge of a gun in his own hands. He had his gun ready to shoot a squirrel on a tree near by, and it is supposed, that forgetting that he had it cocked sat it down on the ground with sufficient force to discharge it, the ball entering his breast and passing through his body lodged just under the skin. He clasped his hands upon the wound and ran about twenty-five yards, when he fell and instantly expired. A younger brother, who saw the accident, immediately informed his parents and the lifeless body was carried to the house near by. He was a quiet, industrious, well-behaved boy, and the tragedy has cast a gloom over the community.—Enterprise.

Church Notes for June

Sacramental meeting at Liberty church, 1st Sabbath of June, 11 o'clock, a. m. Preliminary services Saturday night.

Sacramental services at Marlin's Bottom, 3rd Sabbath of June. Preaching services Saturday morning before, 11. a. m. The aid of Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker is expected.

All day meeting at Mary Gibson's Chapel, on Elk, on the 5th Sabbath of June. Parties will please bring their baskets and spend the day in social singing and religious exercises.

W. T. P.

Split Rock Splinters.

Sunday school was organized at this place Sunday the 19 inst with an enrollment of forty.

Mr. Gibbs who has been visiting friends in this county and Miss Cicie Taliaferro who has been the guest of Col. Gatewood the past two weeks, left for their homes Wednesday morning.

Twenty-three scholars enrolled at the Big Spring school.

Capt. Stofer was over on Elk a few days ago but as he was afraid of snakes he did not stay long. One morning he met two ladies who had started to gather wild flowers. They saw a very large snake and called to Capt Stofer, after he had passed to come back and help to kill it, but he pulled off his hat and ran until he reached Col. Gatewood's. There the ladies found him an hour afterwards sitting in a comfortable arm chair, he thought they killed the snake and when they went in Capt. Stofer jumped up and said: "Wasn't that a monster snake we killed ladies."

S. L.

Hillsboro Happenings

Wm. Cackley and Will McGlaughlin and Misses Mollie Smith and Mary Cackley attended the Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro M. & F. Academy.

Rev. Wm. E. Miller is absent helping Rev. W. E. Balleagee with the Quarterly meeting at Dunmore.

The Quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church will be held here next Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Miller will be assisted by Bro. Kinzer, P. E.

Mrs. Minnie Wissinger, of Ronceverte, passed through town last week on her way to visit her parents on Beaver creek.

Married—the 5th of May at the residence of the bride's parent in Burr's Valley, Miss Caroline Rider to Mr. Geo. Dunbrack, of Novascotia and at the same time by the same minister, Mr. David Dean to Miss Susan Rider. The young ladies were sisters and the one that Mr. Dunbrack married had never been over a mile from home in her life.

PRUNELLA

The Buckhannon papers say they have on exhibition in that town now, a portion of the skeleton of a giant, which, when living measured twenty-eight feet in height. One half of the jaw bone, extending from the point of the chin to the back, measures twenty-eight inches and weighs sixty five pounds. Three front teeth are missing, the balance, four molars, are intact and about the size of a pint cup. The tibia or shin bone, from the knee to the ankle, measures about five feet; a portion of the lower extremity, however, is gone. The rib bone is about thirty-three inches in length. There is also on exhibition the jaw bone and shin bone of an ordinary sized man. The depressions in the one correspond exactly with the other also does the nerves, etc. This skeleton was unearthed by a Mr. Morgan, in the northern part of Louisana, in 1878, and it is estimated to have weighed when living, eight thousand pounds.

Minnesota has a law on the subject of intoxication, the operation of which will be watched with a vast deal of interest. It makes it a crime to be drunk, either in public or in private, and it punishes by fine and imprisonment.

There is, to our mind, something wholesome in this law, and we believe it will accomplish more in the way of reforming the intemperate than any legislation yet devised. It will prevent the frequency of the example, and increase accordingly, the disgrace of the crime.

Make it odious to be intoxicated—as it ought to be—and there will be fewer cases of drunkenness, and less use of intoxicating drinks.—Charleston Gazette.

While Bismark was at college he fought twenty-eight duels.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 35 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a partial state of Cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Special Com'r

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.78 mar23 4w

Orders of Publication.

No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als.
vs. } In chy. No 1.
Wm. F. Arbogast & als.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing 6,480 acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Alleghany mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David V. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee, James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sholts, Amos Gum, Thos. G. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart Slaven Sr. and of Annie Shots are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.25

Mrs. Harrison has sent to the Art Loan exhibition at Washington two porcelain plates of her own painting.

No 2.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas. L. Austin &c.,
vs. } In chy, No. 2.
Wm. F. Arbogast &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,785 acres, lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto, according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O. Wade, Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Asgol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife, and Janetta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, decd, are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiff without effect, to ascertain in what county, Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regor, (formerly Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3.

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c.,
vs. } In chy. No. 3.
Wm. F. Arbogast, &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,376 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Asgol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar (formerly Arnold) and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may9 1 m printers fee 10.97

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Adm'r.
vs. } In chy.
Rebecca J. Hill & als.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To convene the creditors of said decedent. To subject the real estate of which said Geo. Hill, dec'd died seized to the payment of his debts and to construe the will of the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Thos C. Hill, James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. Bruffey are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may9 4t printers fee $9.82

[Po]cahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

[ED]ITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

[Enter]ed at the Post-office at Hunters-ville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
1 inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
One in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
½ col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
1 col'n	16 00	26 00	36 00	56 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 30 1889.

Continued from first Page.

the child by the hand, walked with her up to the slope through the orchard.

"'Twas up here you was going to see the sun dance, wasn't it?" he asked, and when they were seated together on the church steps he made many inquiries about her, learned that there was in her mind a vague memory of a brother, and that mamma had said he would surely return some time. Presently the bell in the steeple above them struck one, and the stranger tried to persuade the child to her house and bed. She persisted in her desire to see the morning dance of sun and moon, but her eyes were heavy, and before she knew it, she was fast asleep in the stranger's arms. He had taken off his coat to shelter her, and in a corner of the church portico they passed hour after hour of the slow Easter morning.

It was yet some minutes before sunrise when Mrs Durant was startled from her sleep by a violent knocking at her chamber door.

"Mis' Durant! Mis' Durant! Haste ye up! Elsie's gone!"

Maggie, on the way to the earliest of early masses, had glanced into Elsie's room. During the few minutes that followed, confusion and anxiety contended for possession of the household. Then Mr. Durant set out to warn the constable, and Mrs. Durant, painfully agitated at the thought of losing another child, began to search the neighborhood. She went by the road that wound about the hill to the church. As she neared the building she saw a man crouching in the portico, and she determined to ask him if he had seen Elsie. He did not see or hear her. She had come quite near when the sound of his voice made her stop stock still with a fearsome faintness about her heart.

"Wake up, Elsie," he said; "the sun is just getting up."

"Is he dancing?" inquired a small sleepy voice from a bundle in his arms. "Where is the moon?"

"Elsie! Willie! My children!" cried Mrs. Durant, running forward.

The man, a young and not bad looking fellow, albeit haggard and roughened by exposure, rose quickly and said:

"We're here, mother."

And did the sun and the moon really dance that morning? The first rays of the sun fell on a deeply happy group in front of the church, and the fading moon looked on from the other side of the sky. If they did not dance then it is doubtful if they ever have done so since the first Easter.

The government appropriated $[illegible] expenditures for 1889-90.

The Horns Must Go.

It may safely be set down as a fact that Western farmers, at least those who raise cattle mainly for beef, have concluded that the horns must go. A great many dairymen are undecided because of the vehement assertion that dehorning destroys the "butter potency" of bulls and the milking qualities of cows—an unproved theory as yet—but the beef grower has made up his mind. It is now simply a question as to the manner of their going—whether they are to be bred off by the use of polled bulls, or sawed off, or gouged out, or whether they will simply kill the horns as they do weeds when they begin to sprout.

The cattle raising world has been startled in the last three months by the announcement that by the simple and single application of a chemical costing 2 cents per head, the discovery of Mr. John March, of Shullsburg, Wis., the growth of horns can be entirely prevented. We are skeptical at first, but a representative of the Journal visited the farm of Mr. March and made a personal and critcal examination of a number of grade short-horn calves from seven to ten months old dehorned by this method, and came away with firm conviction that the method was a complete success. Probably the most convinicng proof is furnished by the skull of a seven-months-old calf, which our representative examined carefully, and which was semi-dehorned by this method the chemical having been applied to one side and not to the others.

It is not necessary for us to enter into any argument as to the advantages of dehorning beef cattle. We have advocated that from the beginning for all grade cattle. We have commenced taking them off even the thoroughbreds on the Journal farms, and will dehorn this year's calves with the chemical. It is folly to grow horns on cattle when for two cents per head they can be prevented, with scarcely any pain, without danger and without any possible deformity.—Western Farm Journal.

Household Notes.

Fresh milk boiled with cut sugar will soothe a cough when other things fail.

Boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm, salt or gum arabic dissolved.

A strip of flannel or a napkin wrung out of hot water and applied round the neck of a child that has croup will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

To cure toothache, pulverize about equal parts of common salt and alum. Get as much cotton as will fill the tooth, damp it, put in the mixture, and place it in the tooth.

Bath a sprain with arnica diluted with water, and bandage with soft flannel moistened with the same. A sprained wrist thus treated will grow well in a few days.

A tablespoonful of common baking soda to every five gallons of lard, when cooking, will improve the lard. It should be added when the lard is nearly done, and if not carefully watched will boil over.

Old furniture that has a dull, greasy look should be rubbed with turpentine and then polished with some good polish. The improvement in its appearance will repay you for the trouble. White spots on furniture can be removed by wetting a piece of flannel with turpentine and then rubbing the spot hard. It may require several applications of the turpentine and considerable patience.

The biggest circulation ever reached by a newspaper was by the New York World the 7th of November the issue for that date being [illegible] copies. The same day the Boston Globe printed 438,230 papers.

"Three years ago I went into the Board with $25,000, and in less than two years retired."

"With an independent fortune?"

"No; until I could raise a little money to go into something else."

Youth—Can you give me anything to do, sir?

Merchant—What is your line.

Y.—Clerk, sir.

M.—Clerk? Why, clerks are a drug in the labor market just now.

Y.—They are? Well, if that's the case I had better look for a job as a drug clerk.

Mrs. Cahokia—Alfred. I have been reading about the hot air treatment for weak lungs, and I think I should like to try it.

Mr. Cahokia (struck by a happy thought)—All right, Esmeralda. This is April. Next month is May. We'll spend the whole month right here in St. Louis.

Jinks—I called at your boarding-house to-day and saw the table nearly set for dinner, and I must say things looked very neat. I never saw a whiter table cloth in my life.

Blinks—No, she doesn't make her tea, coffee or soups strong enough stain.

A lady in this town recently set a pot of cream in a spring near the house, so that it might keep cool. During the night a frog fell into the cream pot, and his struggle to get out actually churned the cream, so that when the lady visited the pot the next morning she found the frog sitting on a ball of butter, washing his feet in the butter-milk.—Middletown Enterprise.

"John, Mr. Jackson has bought a phonograph."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. You ought to see it. It repeats everything that's told it."

"I don't see how Edison got a patent on it."

"Why not?"

"Because it's no improvement on you women."

Mrs. Elite (in $5,000-a-year flat)—Oh, it's perfectly terrible the way things have gone to-day. That janitor has been just as contrary and disagreeable as it is possible for a human being to be.

Miss Elite—Did you bow to him deferently this morning?

"Indeed I did. I always do. Did you?"

"Yes, ma, I bowed to him most humbly."

"Well, something is the matter. Tomorrow morning try kissing him."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 13, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 Per Year in Advance. No. 47.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Silver Lining.

There's never a day so sunny
But a little cloud appears;
There's never a life so happy
But has had its time of tears;
Yet the sun shines out the brighter
When the stormy tempest clears.

There's never a garden growing
With roses in every plot;
There's never a heart so hardened
But it has one tender spot;
We have only to prune the border
To find the forget-me-not.

There's never a cup so pleasant
But has bitter with the sweet;
There's never a path so rugged
That bears not the prints of feet;
And we have a helper promised
For the trials we may meet.

There's never a sun that rises
But we know 'twill set at night;
The tints that gleam in the morning
At evening are just as bright;
And the hour that is the sweetest
Is between the dark and light.

There's never a dream that's happy
But the waking makes us sad;
There's never a dream of sorrow
But the waking makes us glad;
We shall look some day with wonder
At the troubles we have had.

Love and a Blizzard.

The Post lay bathed in sunshine. The sweet air untainted by the foul breath of the town, blew as it never does east of the Rockies, in regular, rhythmical swells.

Although it was early April, the prairies were green, and covered with the hardy blue and crimson flowers which bloom beneath the snow. It was just the day of all others when confinement within four walls is intolerable, and the joy of mere animal existence demands expression.

On the piazza of her father's quarters Katy Dare was standing, looking at the sky, which was hidden by architectural deformities, undimmed by the smoke of trade.

"Oh, gift of God! Oh, perfect day Where in shall no man work, but —play," she sang softly. "That's just it; we must do something. Think of letting this glorious weather go by without recognition. To-morrow we may be perishing with cold."

Quickly the dainty maiden ran beneath the row of prim cotton-wood trees which looked more than ever like hop-poles in their leafless state, and rapped impatiently at the door of a quaint, old adobe house which stood with its many blinking windows facing the parade ground. Mrs. Rensome, wife of the Captain, who mothered every girl in the garrison, and was a perfect mine of new and delightful special projects, would know just what to do with this June day which some way had slipped into April's calendar.

Seated in the pretty parlor waiting for the busy housewife, Katy Dare made a lovely picture. From the crown of her pretty head to the tip of her tiny shoe, she was simply irresistible. You could no more classify her beauty than analyze the perfume of a violet. There were no standards in her case. She was herself and therefore to be loved. The strongest-minded person well fortified by theories, became her most unreasoning slave. Absolute, unconditional surrender was the fate of all.

The wife of the Chaplain, Mrs. McGroft, who had long since constituted herself the moral policeman of the garrison, had been known to defend the most bare-faced flirtations on Katy's part, and lay all the blame upon the victims of her charms—"those designing young men."

From the gray haired commanding officer to the colored striker of the youngest Lieutenant, she was "queen of hearts." Sweet and gracious was her sway. Even the most [illegible] that there were few [illegible] at the [illegible] since Katy's return from boarding school; and brave indeed was that man who ventured into her presence with his lips tainted with wine. Yet she was far from perfect; a more wilful, arrant little flirt never lived. Her love affairs kept the garrison in a state of breezy excitement. The number of pale, woe-begone young men who periodically asked to be exchanged into far distant regiments was legion. It was darkly hinted that every unmarried man within a radious of one hundred miles had proposed and been rejected.

Major Dare protested that the discipline of the Seventh was being ruined; the men did not half attend to their duties, and then begged Katy to forgive him for his cruelty; and at last the suffering victims of her irresistible ways found themselves to be regarded as presumptuous offenders. Still the army of martyrs grew.

At the time when our story opens a consumptive Episcopal clergyman was softly sighing at her feet. Rev. Jame Little had come to Wyoming Territory in search of health. His cousin, Captain Little, had found him quarters in the town near the Post, and introduced him to the social life of the garrison.

A wonderful change now took place in Katy Dare. Waltzes and operatic songs were banished from her music-stand, and Gregorian chants reined in their stead. Regularly she went to Caldwell, where the enthusiastic churchman had commenced to hold daily services. The surplices for the choir boys were fashioned by her dimpled hands. Demurely seated in the rough, bare room, which did duty as a chapel, she listened attentively to eloquent discourses on love and the domestic virtues, which at this time formed the theme of the rector's sermons.

The round eyed choir boys forgot their notes and nudged each other knowingly. "The parson is sweet on Miss Dare," they whispered.

The contagion spread. Red haired Bob Jackson, who was of a jealous disposition, tried to trip the Rev James during the professional; mysterious packages of strong pepper-mint lozenges were placed in the seat occupied by Katy; Jimmy Brown and Tommy Timmons came to blows in the vestry room; in fact, choir and rector alike were demoralized by the blue-eyed worshipper.

The commanding officer became alarmed. Could it be that his darling had passed so many splendid fellows of "Ours" to take up with the crooked stick, "that one lunged Eastern dude?" he queried, anxiously.

Katy gave no sign. The chants were wailed forth nightly by a thin, quavering tenor. Ecclesiastical embroidery lay on the table. The Major swore fiercely as he stumbled over huge volumes of church history, and led his striker such a life that the poor darky, with the morale of his race, seriously thought of murdering the rector.

The interests of the lookers on grew intense. What was she thinking of? Was it another example of the law of contrasts? Would the Major consent?

Through all the commotion the principal personages of the drama moved serenely. The rector in his immaculate broadcloth escorted Katy to and from the services, carrying a gorgeous prayer-book in his hand. Stepping meekly at his side the lady, her golden bangs pushed demurely back from her pretty brow. Her face was tilted upward with an expression in which respect for the office was deftly blended with admiration for the man.

Whenever Jack Reynolds, the Quartermaster of the regiment, saw this by-play he bit the ends of his moustache savagely. "Of course it is none of my business, but how dare the little cad have such assurance! He walks around talking about his bronchial tubes, and he seems to like it," he groaned. Tall, athletic, with a pleasant, manly face, Jack was the most awkward, bashful member of the Seventh.

Katy had always turned up her saucy little nose at him, and refused to believe the stories which were told of his bravery in scenes of danger. "He is a perfect boor!" she had said more than once, and Jack had friends enough to tell him the little autocrat's verdict. Too proud to show how deeply he was wounded, he went his way, and found excuse after excuse for not attending the hops and parties where he would be likely to meet the Major's daughter.

But while we have been gossiping, Katy has waited impatiently for Mrs. Rensome's appearance in the parlor. That good lady had intended for some time giving Katy Dare a piece of her mind, but when she came within the witching influence of that witching face she kissed her instead, and obediently entered into plans for the day's enjoyment.

"We must have a picnic to Lake de Senet, dear," she said.

"The very thing!" cried Katy, rapturously, and entered into a brisk discussion of ways and means.

At one o'clock a gay cavalcade left the Post. The commanding officer led the way in his drag; then came the ambulance filled with ladies who did not ride; and following that, a long procession of carts, buggies and horse-back riders. An escort wagon, far in the rear, carried the band.

Races frequently occurred. The Major, the finest whip in the service, yielded the lead to no one. His four magnificent horses were as wax in his hands. Poor man! He was desperate. The unscrupulous Katy had seated Rev. James at his side, and the little man chatted complacently about the relative merits of flaxseed and porous plasters, till the Major was blue in the face with suppressed profanity.

Jack Reynolds was not one of the party. His duties as Quartermaster would detain him, he told Mrs. Rensome. Katy had openly given thanks for his absence, remarking pertly that blunderbusses were not pleasant companions. Never had she looked more beautiful. Mounted on her bonny brown nag she rode like the wind, winning every race.

After eight miles traveling over the springy plains they reached Lake de Senet. A more beautiful scene the eye could not rest upon, than this sheet of water lying clasped in solid bowlders. Hidden away in the foot-hills of the Big Horn mountains, sea-gulls flew over its surface, and regular sea breezes blew from its alkali waters. In the little sailboat, party after party went around the lake, exploring its shores. Afterward the band, grouped upon the rocks began to play a waltz, and soon every one except the rector was dancing merrily.

Just at sunset the trumpeter blew the supper call, and a hungry army hastened into the quaint old kitchen of a deserted ranch at the side of the lake. In the huge fire place a mass of burning logs was [illegible] ing merrily. Captain Little, who prided himself on his [illegible] qualities, presided [illegible] over an immense caldron of coffee; the Major dressed the salad, and, of course, the youngest officer [illegible]—How good everything tasted! The ride and exercise in the [illegible] air had sharpened every appetite. For over an hour they sat at the table frolicking as no people in civil life do or can; for after all, it is pleasant to have a fairy god-mother to look after your well being, even if she comes in government form.

Rising from her place at the rector's side, Katy ran to the door and looked out for the moon that was to guide them home. The sky was gray and misty, and keen air cut like a knife.

"No moon to-night," she announced, in a disgusted tone.

"And no dancing, either," cried the Major, as he looked over her sunny head. "Come, good people, we must get back to the Post."

Hastily bundling bag and basket into the ambulance, they started on their homeward journey. The horses ran, as from the approach of an enemy. The Major glanced anxiously at the sky, and hardly told Katy to keep at his side. It grew colder and colder. Soon the air was alive with snow—the blizzard was upon them. The sky, the horses, the ambulance, were swallowed up in the whirling mass. There were no landmarks. The trackless plains surrounded them. The wind was due north and in their faces. The frozen particles cut their skin like razors. Numb hands dropped the reins, and the horses began to plunge madly. Nothing could contend with the awful "Norther and live.

Standing in the drag the Major shouted to the officers to take their sword-belts and fasten the ladies to their saddles, and then "mount—forward—gallop!" They must trust to the instinct of their horses.

What a ride that was! After what seemed like years of misery of when even Katy's heart had failed for fear, they heard above the roaring of the gale the beating of a drum. The escort wagon had been overturned at the door of a cabin in the wilderness. The horses had saved their masters.

The white owner of the cabin and his squaw wife received their half-frozen guests most hospitably. The horses were turned into the corral, and the entire party crowded into the one room of the house. What a relief it was to be sheltered from the icy touch of the blizzard! How beautiful the fire looked blazing upon the hearth! Katy felt that she could kiss the not over clean face of the Indian hostess, she was so happy. Life is sweet at eighteen.

No one slept that night. Grouped about the fire, the officers told story after story of adventure upon the plains. The most romantic chapters of unwritten history are told by soldiers' lips, and few are fortunate enough to hear them.

When morning came the storm showed no signs of abating. The eatibles at the cabin, though coarse, were abundant, and the remnants of the picnic collation were served for breakfast. At noon, the members of the band went to the corral to feed the horses, leaving the bugler stationed in the little cabin, to blow the buggle as a guide to their movements. When at last they came staggering through the storm, they carried the stiff, half frozen body of a man in army blue.

"What's this?" cried the Major in a tone of horror.

"The Quartermaster, sir," replied

(Continued on fourth page.)

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 13 1889.

AFTER THE FLOOD.

In the midst of a calamity, or immediately after its occurance, we are very apt to overrate the injury sustained. Ten days ago the Knapp Creek Valley seemed to be an almost total wreck, and those who sustained the greatest loss were disheartened. But no sooner had the waters subsided everybody went to work with renewed energy, till now but few traces of that awful destruction are left. True some damage was done that can never be fully repaired, and some few will feel the effects of the recent flood for years to come; still when we consider our losses along with the losses elsewhere, how insignificant they seem. We might indeed murmur and become disheartened if like the sufferers of Johnstown, Pa. our injuries could not be estimated by dollars and cents, but at the cost of human life. Within the bounds of Pocahontas County we have heard of no one who even lost a home, much less a life. Then let us not go about with long faces because the waters carried away a few hundred rails, or destroyed a few acres of corn or wheat; these may all be replaced; but let us rather be thankful and rejoice that our lives are spared and the lives of our families and friends. Indeed our injuries are not worthy to be mentioned when we compose them with others.

Damage by the recent Floods.

EDITOR TIMES: All over the State, (except in Pocahontas County,) the County Courts have been called together to consider and adopt measures necessary to repair the damage done to public property by the recent floods. No precaution on the part of anyone could have prevented the damage we have suffered and since it has been visited on us in common with others, who have suffered much more, it ill becomes us to stand idle until another rise in the waters shall complete what the recent flood began.

It is said that the middle pier in the bridge at Marlin's Bottom is so injured, that another flood will be likely to destroy for us a bridge which cost something over $11,000 whereas if repared at once, at a comparatively small expense, it can be saved to us.

The public roads, along all the streams running through this County are in a terrible condition, and in some places new roads will have to be made. Why should not our County Court meet at once and see to this matter? It is the duty of this Court, and the safety of the traveling public demands that this [illegible] attention at once.

The damage to the bridge across [illegible] Creek [illegible] not so great as [illegible] from [illegible] [illegible] repaired [illegible] will certainly [illegible] lose what money the people have in it, and, I think I know our citizens well enough to say, they will always approve of any necessary expenditure of public money for the public good.

There will necessarily be employed masons, carpenters and those who understand building roads, in this work of repair; and the County Court, as far as possible should favor the workmen of Pocahontas in contracting, that this money may stay among us, and not go to increase the circulating medium of some other County or State.

I know that an increase of the levy to make these repairs will bear heavily upon our citizens at this time, but I belive they have the pluck, and pride to do their duty in repairing any public loss to Pocahontas County, and to cry down the sycophant who undertakes to ride into public favor by denouncing the County Court for doing its duty in laying a proper levy to meet the public need.

Let us hear through your paper from all sections of the County, and if the County Court can assign any good reason for not giving prompt attention to this matter, of so much importance to our citizens, we would be glad to hear also from the gentlemen who compose the Court

Yours &c.

CITIZEN.

Academy W. Va. June 8.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 7.—"Cheap John" Wanamaker is treading on dangerous ground. He wants to abolish Sunday work in the post offices, and in order to get some foundation to work on he has sent a circular letter to the postmasters of one hundred of the largest cities asking for suggestions as to how Sunday work may be stopped etc. Of course all good men believe that the Sabbath should be observed in as general a manner as possible, but at the same time all sensible men know that a certain amount of work must be performed by somebody even on that day, and the carrying and rapid handling of the mails is a work too important to be stopped at any time, for any cause. In fact the efficiency of the Post Office department is more in need of being increased than decreased in this very matter of Sunday handling of mails and if Wanamaker isn't very creful he will raise a tempest in the business world that will be strong enough to sweep him out of the office that cost him so much money. And there is another view of the subject that should not be lost sight of. In the more than one hundred years of its existance no attempt has ever been made to have this Government officially recognize any religious denomination or sect, and the precedent would be a dangerous one to estalish. Suppose for instance that Wanamaker, who is a Presbyterian, should succeed in having all work stopped in our post offices on Sundays during his administration of the post office department. So far all right, but now suppose that in the unexpected upheval of politics he should be succeeded by a Hebrew, or a Seven day Adventist, both of which sects regard Saturday as the sabbath day, and that he should insist on having all post office work stopped on his sabbath. Then what a row we should have. Church and State both have important functions to perform in this as well as every other country, but let us keep them separate and distinct, for if history teaches anything it is the utter futility of successfully uniting the two.

Politics have this week been pushed to the wall that "one touch of nature that makes the whole world kin." Democrats and republicans have vied with each other to provide succor for the thousands of people made homeless by the great floods in Pennsylvania. Washington has shown the world that however heartless she seems to be in her dealings with political and social doings, she in reality has a great big human heart, throbbing just now in sympathetic accord with her suffering brothers and sisters of the Conemaugh Valley, upon whom such a terrible calamity has fallen. A public meeting was held to provide organized methods of collecting money and clothing; it was attended by an immense crowd and was presided over by the President who made a strong appeal for subscriptions. About $50,000 in cash has been raised besides an enormous quantity of blanbets clothing disenfectants etc. Everybody seemed disposed to give something; poor people who were unable to give money gave a blanket or a cast off garment; bootblacks and news boys handed in their nickles alongside the millionaires thousand dollar checks, and the children emptied the pennies out of their little banks in order to turn them over to the Committee. For the first half of the week nothing was talked about or seemingly thought about but the awful news from Johnstown. Washington's flood had done a damage to property public and private of several millions of dollars but that was entirely forgotten in the face of the great loss of life by the Pennsylvania horror.

Already the republican acting Commissioner of the General Land office has begun to undo the good work of the democratic administration. He has given notice that he intends abolishing the Board of Review and the Division of Contests, both established under Mr. Clevelands administration and both recognizes as being in the interests of the homesteader and against the land-grabber. But as the last named class have for many years, with the exception of from '85 to '89, controlled that offie the change can hardly be surprising.

The Civil Service Commission is busily engaged in discovering "mare's nests." It has just reported a large one in the New York custom house, and is now in Troy, N. Y. hoping to find one in the post office. Next week it is to start west on a grand tour of discovery which will embrace a dozen cities.

It is rather early to begin the naming of choices for 1892, but the following from the Atlanta Constitution is worth reproducing:

If the Democratic party fails to make Grover Cleveland its leader in the campaign of 1892, it will repeat the stupendous folly in which it set aside Mr. Tilden in 1880 for General Hancock. * * * * Grover Cleveland is the leader under whom the Democracy can march to triumph in 1892 and he is proving himself more and more worthy of the great work to which he is consecrated—the redeeming of the government from the hands of the Democratic party, which is the party of the people.

Heavy storms of rain and hail at Huejutla, Mexico, have caused the river to inundate that town, drowning many persons and cattle, washing away many houses and destroying crops.

Married persons who have no children are seeking to adopt the children orphaned by the flood. None of these little ones will be allowed to suffer.

A heavy storm has been raging in Hong Kong, China. Immense damage has been done.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. B. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6 31

HOME NEWS

—Circuit Court convenes next Monday.

—Atty H. S. Rucker was down at Hillsboro last Saturday.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—C. J. Stalting of Academy, and Mrs. Eli Doyle, of Valley Center, Va., were at Huntersville Hotel last Friday.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3, $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Renceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—Atty C. F. Moore and Mrs. John J. Beard, were down at Hillsboro last Saturday.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be he e during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—The bridal tour of Dr. C. L. Austin was not so extensive as was contemplated. Being brought to a halt at McDowell by the high waters, the party had to be content with visiting that place, Monterey and Top of Alleghany.

—We were pleased to learn that our young friend Clawson McNeil, of Swago, who was a law student at Morgantown, graduates at the head of his class with distinction.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—Any one wishing to procure a good calf-shed or sheep-house would do well to attend the next County Court; no doubt the bridge at Huntersville can be bought low. And we do not doubt that the road around the mountain will be given to any one who will haul it away; some pieces of it are left that would answer to patch up mud holes.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Renceverte, W. Va. 30-2m.

Marmot [illegible].

A problem for some of the school boys to solve: "If it takes a letter 20 days to go from Green Bank to Huntersville a distance of 20 miles, how long will it take Andy Hughs to travel around the world at the rate he travels.

Capt E. A. Smith, is up from the ark.

The lumber company did not loose so much as reported at first.

M. J. Moore, brother-in-law of Capt. E. A. Smith is here from near Johnstown, Pa.

Mrs E. A. Smith has two sisters living in Johnstown.

The road overseers have had their hands out up this way, and have fixed up the roads in pretty [illegible]. Let others do likewise.

C. F. [illegible] was up Sunday and gave a very interesting lecture to the Dunmore Sunday school.

Not much sign of war, so says Jake Cury and Phil Edmiston. They are both girls and all doing well.

A. K. Jackson, has returned to Ronceverte.

Registered at Hotel Wakeman last week and this—J. Lowy, of Baltimore, O. Gay, the celebrated French cook, J. H. Jackson, A. H. Jackson, W. J. Pritchard, H. M. Moore, C. P. Tiler, Jas. Siple.

Set out your cabbage plants while the weather is wet.

C. P. Tucker, the comical [illegible] has [illegible] in [illegible] Pocahontas and adjoining counties. Give him a call.

[illegible]

TOM SAWYER.

Marlinton Items.

It is reported some fishermen near Gallilee, toiled all night and caught nothing. A party of Marlins Bottom fishermen toiled part of the night recently and caught one cat fish and sixteen dog fish. The dog fish in make up is pretty much mouth and intestines;like some greedy people in the world. One of the young fishers fell into water, he thinks ten feet deep, upon examining his boot legs however, and finding the boots not full of water, the estimate of deepness may be modified. One thing is true he has been cool as a water melon ever since on the matter of fishing.

Mrs. Florida Price the estimable wife of Calvin Price Esq. of Clover Creek, who has been quite ill is reported better. This is gratifying to a large circle of attached friends.

The casualties of the flood,at this place, while unconvenient, did not occasion very much irreparable damage.

D. H. Garber lost one raft of cherry and walnut lumber. He thinks that most of it can be identified as the sawing was done by a vertical saw.

It looks as if the question of riparion rights, will need attention in the near future. As our lawyers are wise, this word is enough.

H. K. S.

Mail Sub-Contracting.

The mail route between this place and Traveler's Repose, has been sub-contracted for by John F. Wanless and C. O. W. Sharp, at about $800. How's that? a mail 60 miles a day, every day in the year except Sunday, over mountains, streams and everything else for $500.

We can't understand why men that claim to have good judgment will let a man from another State come in here and tell us what we shall work for; and take his mail routes off his hands at about half the actual cost that it will take to run them.

It looks as though some men will have a mail route if they have to pay some one to get it. Why is it? Is it an honor to carry a mail on an old poor horse over mountains, streams and through all sorts of weather and in mud and snow three feet deep and arrive at all hours in the night? If there is any honor in it we fail to see it.

The government don't want the mails carried for nothing; it is able to for it, if you will ask it; and why will you let these infernal star route contractors come in here and shove their contracts at a starving price off on you.

It's none of our business what you work for; but it worries us to have our mails come in, at all hours in the night. It would worry the devil himself.

What we want is good service, and we don't believe any one can give good service on a route as the above for $800

School Commencement.

The second Commencement of Hillsboro Training School took place last Tuesday night June, 4th., in the Pavilion erected for the purpose in the presence of a large audience. Every foot of space was occupied and many forced to stand throughout the exercises which they did good naturally.

The appearance of the stage with the light hearted students arranged in a semicircle presented a pleasing scene. The stage settings were beautiful flowers, and the central piece a horse-shoe formed of roses and mock orange enhanced the beauty of the scene presented to the vast audience. The paintings and drawings of the art pupils were handsomely arranged on the back ground and right of the stage. On the left were well executed specimens of penmanship by the writing class. Among the names of those deserving special mention for their painting and drawing are Misses Helen Clark and Mellie Peters, both of whom did excellent work as could be seen by some lovely paintings and drawings exhibited that night, and proved that they have a talented teacher at the head of this department. Miss Rose Shearer's writing class as well as her art class, show decided improvement in that line. Promptly at 8 o'clock to the strains of a beautiful march the students took their seats upon the stage. Miss G. M. Shearer, Principal, occupied a seat on the right, at the head of the class. On the left was the Motto "Peace Be still" on the right "Vincit qui Patitur" and just back of the Piano, in a half circle the lovely old german word "Wilkommen." As the last strains of the overture died away Miss G. M. Shearer invoked the blessings of the Almighty God upon the students, and the audience. As it would take too much space to make special mention of each piece. We will give the order of the program which was as follows:

Note the Bright Hours only opening chorus by the whole school.

Salutatory—by Edna Clarice Shearer

Bootblack—Illustrated Recitation by Earnest Marshall, John Peters and Forrest Harper.

Trouble your Head with your own Affairs—Recitation by Miss Delia Edgar, which was nicely prepared and well delivered.

Perseverance Polka Trio—by Misses Oneida Shearer, Maggie McNeel and Nettie Callison.

Will no Maiden Marry Me I'll Vocal Solo—by Gus Eskridge which was one of the best things of the evening, Mr. Gus acted the song to perfection as was shown by the hearty applause which followed it.

Ingenuity Essay, by Miss Annie McNeel, which was certainly an excently gotten up essay on this difficult subject, and could only have been written by one possessing this qualification. Her essay abounded in fine thoughts which were expressed in a way that securpd for her, close attention.

Some Day I'll Wander Back again—Vocal Solo and Cho. by Misses Needa and Rose Shearer and Jeanie Clark.

Earnest Marshall 1st orater of the evening.

Parade March—by Misses Needa Shearer and D. Marshall.

The Battle of Bunker Hill—abeautiful recitation by Miss Verdie Clark.

Golden Ringlets.

Selection of Trades—by six boys and one little girl.

Children's Glee Song—by seventeen children.

A short recess was now given while attention was called to the art collection by Miss G. M. Shearer.

Part II

"A Voice From the Waves" Vocal Solo—by Misses Fannie and Rose Shearer.

Gus Eskridge 2nd Orator of the evening subject,Our Honored Dead.

"Drifting With the Tide" Vocal Solo and Cho.—by Misses Rose, Fannie and Needa Shearer.

Miss Duffie Marshall, Historian of the Evening, Class of H. T. School

Cymbeline Galop—by Miss Needa Shearer on the Organ and Misses Annie McNeel Delia and Bessie Edgar on Pianos.

Commonplace Critics Select Reading—by Miss Vertie Marshall.

Huntresses Vocal D[illegible]—by Misses Georgia and Rose Shearer.

Curiosity, Rec.—by Miss D. Marshall. Fan Drill and Wand Exercise.

Valedictory—by Jeanie Clark, Remarks, Distinction cards &c.

"Good Night" Closing Cho.— by school; so ended one of the very best of Commencements. The Fan Drill and Wand Exercise was excellent the young ladies and little girls were attired in blouse costume and the little boys with waists and sashes to match. The whole drill showed good and careful training.

There was in all about 96 movements in the two which were made in perfect time. Destinction cards were awarded to those who had not been tardy at morning worship and were received by Miss Neelie and Master John Peters, Marshall and Virgie Isabel and Cilla and Villa Marshall. Distinction cards were also awarded to those who averaged over 95 per cent. in daily recitations and examinations and were received by Misses Duffie Marshall and Jeanie Clark. The music was especially good and the pieces "A Voice From the Wave" "Drifting With the Tide" "Huntresses" and "Cymbeline Galop" deserve special mention as they were beautiful pieces, in fact pieces that can hardly be surparsed. All acquitted themselves most creditably and show they have teachers at the front who know what they are about. Miss Shearer is one of the best teachers we have ever had in our midst and deserves the patronage of the public. Her training both mental and moral is certainly deserving of the highest praise. Truly conscientious teachers are hard to find,but are certainly to be appreciated when we have them. Decided improvements have been made in the Art and music departments, the past session and we certainly wish her success.

Y.

WOULDN'T ACT AS CHAMBERMAID.—Widow Brown owned a lodging-house in Denver, Colorado. A year ago she became infatuated with J. J. Medley, proposed to him and married him. Medley expected to have a comfortable home and an easy life, but his wife's ardor soon cooled and she compelled him to perform all the offices as chambermaid in the hotel. Last week Medley soaked his humiliation in wisky, bought a revolver and deliberately killed his wife.

The Driver of a hearse at Wilkesbarre Pennsylvania, was startled the other day by a noise in a coffin. He opened the coffin and the supposed dead man scrambled out and asked for a drink of whisky.

When Mr. Randall says that the democratic outlook is bright, the republican organs are idclined to make fun of him. They will laugh in a different way in 1892.

Last week, severe storms prevailed throughout France. The greatest damage has been done in the departments of Seineet-Marine. Aube, Yonne, Haute Soane and Ardennes, where insome places the country is almost devastated.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Order of Publication.

R. S. Turk vs. Geo. W. McDonald } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to have partition made of three tracts of land containing respectively 1034 304 and 167 acres of land lying on the waters of the Big Spring Branch of Elk River in Pocahontas County West Virginia, between the plaintiff and defendant, and to Enjoin and inhibit the defendant George W. McDonald, and all others from cutting and removing the Merchantable timber from said lands until partition thereof is made.

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Geo. W. McDonald is a non resident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit. The plaintiff has executed his bond as required by the order granting said injunction.

Teste JOHN J. BEARD C'l'k.

June 6 4t Printers fee $6.82

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 25 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a partial state of Cultivation.

L. M. MCCLINTIC.
Special Com'r

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.70 may23 4w

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 13 1889.

(Continued from first page.)

the drummer, sadly; "we found him lying near the corral, almost buried in the snow."

With a cry of utter anguish, which those who heard it never forgot, Katy Dare flung herself upon the floor.

"It's Jack!" she cried, "my Jack! I loved him all the time."

The voice he loved so well pierced the death-like stupor which was fast stealing over him. The warm, clinging lips brought back the breath of life. Slowly his eyes opened and rested upon the bonny tearful face so near his own.

"My darling," he said, "have I won you at last?" Katy clung sobbing to his neck.

"All the world loves a lover."

Even the little squaw smiled sympathetically upon the soldier who had wrung his happiness from the grasp of a "Norther."

The major was delighted, but mystified. He could not understand it.

"Why, she never liked Jack, and was devoted to the rector," he said feebly.

"Just so!" replied the sagacious Mrs. Ransome. "In dealing with a girl, Major, remember it's never Jim but Jack, and if she flirts with a parson, she is pretty sure to marry a soldier." And Katy did.

Letter from Kansas.

EDITOR TIMES: Having recently received from a friend in Pocahontas, a few appreciated copies of THE TIMES and not seeing anything in its interesting columns from the great state of Kansas, I have concluded, with your permission, to pen you a short article for publication, feeling assured that a few thoughts from so fine a country; one abounding in rolling plains and grassy meads can not fail to be appreciated by your many readers.

Kansas is favorably situated in the great Miss. valley, about midway from ocean to ocean and occupies a vast territory, stretching from the border line of Mo., westward four hundred miles to Colorado and two hundred and eight miles from Neb. on the north to the Indian Ty., on the south, thus embracing one of the finest agricultural regions in the world. In addition to this there are important mineral deposits of coal and salt.

The latter is found in various portions of Southern Kan., at a depth of about 800 feet beneath the surface of the earth.

There is a salt factory at Anthony city twelve miles south of Harper where the strata of salt is three hundred feet thick and extensive quantities are manufactured daily.

It may be interesting to some of your readers to know something about the process by which the salt at so great a depth can be readily utilized. This is done by drilling down with a heavy drill then tubing the aperture, and with the same engine pumping fresh water down, dissolving the mineral and the process is completed by evaporation.

The country is finely watered in the central and northern portions of the state by the Kans. river and its numerous tributaries.

The southern by the Arkansas river winding its way like a great silver thread, for hundreds of miles, from the summits of the snowcapped Rockey Mountains of Colorado to the Miss. The country lying along and between these great rivers is interspersed by smiling valleys and rippling streams, whose banks are fringed with grass or clusters of timber thus presenting a grand and beautiful scene.

The soil is alluvial consisting of a dark sandy loam, which produces a luxurant growth of vegetation, such plants as are indigenous to a tropical region.

Corn, wheat and other sereals are extensively cultivated and the prospect for fine crops, the coming harvest flattering in the extreme.

The fruit crop is extensive and abundant, especially apples, peaches, plums, and cherries. In fact the fine rains have brightened the prospect of all crops beyond expectation of the sanguine tiller of the soil.

Society and refinery are steadily and surely gaining the ascendency.

Education is trumphantly waving her golden banner on the broad plains of progress.

There are no momentous questions at present agitating the political mind, such as the negro problem of the South. The presidential cyclone of '88, is long since a thing of the past. The loud "Hurrah for Harrison," in the banner republican state of the Union, have died away and are gently reposing on the calms of Oblivion, and all is peace.

I see I am digressing, so I will bring my letter to a close. Thanking you for space and wishing my many friends in Pocahontas and THE TIMES success, I am very truly yours,

W. B. H. M.

Harper, Harper Co. Kans.

Well handled.—The pump.

Sharp shooters—Aching teeth.

Dining room—An empty stomach.

A droll dog—A wag with a funny tale.

Adversity may be a good teacher, but she brings you down instead of bringing you up.

"Shure, which is the entrance out?" asked an Irishman at a railway station the other day.

Speaking of butter, we may respect its colour, but we do not hesitate to turn up our noses at its rank.

"I thought you took an interest in my welfare," said an unsuccessful lover. "No, sir," only in your farewell."

An eminent artist lately painted a snowstorm so naturally that he caught a bad cold by sitting near it with his coat off.

There is not much future for a young man who has learned how to spend a fortune before he knows how to make one.

What is that which everyone wishes to have, and wich everyone wishes get rid of directly he obtains it? A good appetite.

"This is a sad and bitter world," remarked Sir Boyle Roche. "We never strew flowers on a man's grave until after he is dead."

Customer: "I say, waiter, this venison hasn't been hung." Waiter (new to the business): "Beg, sir? In consequence, sir, I believe it was shot, sir."

"Pitch your voice in a low key," says a writer on etiquette. We presume etiquette can be temporarily dispensed with when trying to wake the children in the morning.

Ladies' high-heeled boots produce hysteria. We have seen a man's squaretoed boot, number 14½, give a strong healthy pedlar about the worst fit of hysterics that ever afflicted mortal man.

Miss Keand to handsome young physician: "Oh, doctor, how do you do? You look killing this evening." Young Physician, quietly: "Thank you, but I'm not; I'm off duty, don't you know."

It is not good to take tea in the middle of the day. The man who tried it in a cafe in town, when he thought the waitress was not looking is our authority.

Stern Parent (to a young aspirant for his daughter's hand)—Young man can you support a family?"—Young man (meekly): "I only wanted Sarah."

Philadelphian (in St Louis): "Will you kindly tell me where I can get a drink of water?" Policeman: "Mein frent, I haff been only three months on dis beat"

Every man thinks he is about right himself. An old Quaker said to his wife—"All the world is queer except thee and me, and thee is a little queer."

Tailors are the most playful paradoxes in the world; why, whenever you may want something new, they will recommend you something that is much worn.

The Duke of Wellington was told that his bed was not large enough to turn in. He replied that when a man began to turn in his bed it was time to turn out.

It is said that no one can arrest the flight of time, but who is there who is not able to stop a minute? Bill Sikes adds—Especially if a drink is going to be stood.

"Although unseen, my influence is felt," remarked the lively flea.

"Waiter, take away this beer; it's muddy." The waiter, without stirring—"You are deceived, sir. It is the glass which is dirty; the beer is excellent. Taste it."

An Irishman was recently heard to declare that the present state of affairs in his country was "enough to make a man commit suicide, or perish in the attempt."

Family doctor: "Your wife needs out-door exercise more than anything else." Husband: "But she won't go out. What am I to do?" "Give her plenty of money to shop with."

The Central Criminal Court—Conscience.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 20, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 45.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. B. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

The practical plain, young girl,
Not afraid of the rain young girl,
A poetical posy
A ruddy and rosy,
A helper of self young girl.

A home in her place young girl,
A never will lace young girl,
A toiler serene,
A life pure and clean
A princess of peace young girl.

A wear her own hair young girl,
A free from stare young girl,
Improve every hour,
No sickly sunflower,
A wealth of rare sense young girl.

An early retiring young girl,
An active, aspiring young girl,
A morning ariser,
A dandy despiser
A progressive American girl.

An honestly courting young girl,
A never seen flirting young girl,
A quiet and pure,
A modest, demure,
A fit for a wife young girl.

A sought everywhere young girl,
A future most fair young girl,
An ever discreet.
We too seldom meet,
This queen among queens young girl.

—Mrs R. E. Woods, in N. Y. World.

Old Siegel and His Son.

BY THE MARQUIS OF LORNE

Many years ago, while making a tour through that beautiful tract of mountain scenery in the south of Bavaria known as the Saltzgammergut, I stayed for a fortnight at Berchtesgaden. I spent much of my time there in fishing for grayling and in taking to the chamois-hunters, with many of whom I had made acquaintance during a previous visit. I used often to sit for hours listening to their hunting stories, and on one occasion I hunted with them.

The mountains immediately around Berchtesgaden are kept as a royal chamois preserve, and as the King was expected to arrive shortly, none but his Majesty's own jagers were allowed, during the time I was there, to disturb the chamois.

I was, however, very anxious to have at least one day's sport, and arranged with old Siegel and his son Franz, chamois hunters whom I had known for some time, and on whom I could depend, to have a "jagd" on the morrow. Siegel persuaded Gotting, a friend of his, to come with us.

We started early in the morning, and after toiling for several hours up through the dark pine woods which became more scant and scrubby the higher we went, emerged at last on the open snowfields.

We now separated; Franz and Gotting made a long detour to the left, while Siegel and I hastened on to reach some commanding position above, in case any chamois were driven up. After an hour's more climbing, we halted on the top of a precipice, which shaped in the form of a crescent, made a complete cul de sac for any chamois driven up by our friends below.

We had hardly been watching ten minutes when two chamois appeared in sight, bounding up the mountain-side and coming directly toward us. When the foremost had come within range, I fired and missed, as most men would have done, firing as I did at so small an object from a height almost perpendicularly above it.

The beasts turned, and springing with wonderful speed over the sharp rocks, were soon out of sight. I fired a second shot just as they were disappearing, and think I struck one of them, but it contrived to get away, and we never saw it again.

Siegel and I, somewhat crestfallen, trudged on up the mountain, keeping a sharp lookout on all sides, and halting now and then to give the others time to overtake us.

Suddenly we heard, far down below us, a shot, and then all was again silent. We were much surprised, as it is one of the first rules in this kind of hunting never, except when absolutely necessary, even to raise the voice, much less, of course, to fire a rifle, which scares the chamois completely.

We knew that Gotting and Franz, directly below us as they were, could not possibly have seen a chamois, as our shots must have driven them quite out of reach. After a minutes anxious listening, we fancied we heard shouts, and fearing we knew not what, called loudly Franz's name.

We then heard—and this time quiet distinctly—the voice of Gotting saying:

"Come down! come down! It's all over! Franz has shot himself!"

Siegel and I were standing together ankle deep in the snow. I glanced into his face, and I think I shall never forget the look of misingI saw there. Before I knew what he was about, he had seized his rifle, and presented the muzzle to his head, and was feeling with his foot in a frenzied manner for the trigger.

I snatchbd the piece away just in time; he did not try to recover it, but throwing himself on the snow, burst into a most passionate, most eloquent torrent of praise of his son's many virtues. He told me what a good son he had always been to him, anxious to fulfil his slightest wish.

I at length succeeded in partially soothing him, and in rousing him to action. We scrambled down as fast as we could guided by Gotting's shouts.

It was a long time before we reached them; to me it seemed an age. I accused myself of being the author of all this misery, and my anxiety was heightened by the reflection that we were in reality poaching, and we should very likely, in consequence of this misfortune get into trouble on our return.

We found poor Franz lying shot through the back and in great pain among stunted "knie-holz"—a plant something like our whinbush. It appeared that he had, contrary to all jager rules, carried his rifle capped, and that in walking through the knie-holz, he had stumbled and fallen, and his rifle had somehow or other exploded, causing a severe wound,

We stanched the blood as well as we could with our handkerchiefs, and then held a consultation. Gotting said he knew of a chalet some way off to which he thought we might manage to carry Franz.

I lifted him up as carefully as possible, and walked for some way over the abominable knie holz, which threatening to trip one up every moment. I managed, I think, to go about two hundred yards with my burden, and then, exhausted, had to lay him down. His father tried to carry him next, but unnerved and half blinded by his tears, had also soon to give it up.

Gotting was the only one of the party who could carry Franz for any great length of time over the rough ground we were now compelled to traverse; he was a small man but seemed to be wire and muscle.

It was, however, evident that the slow pace we were obliged to go we should never, even if we knew the exact direction—which, by the way, none of us did—get to the chalet before nightfall. [illegible]

Gotting proposed that he should stay with the wounded man, while Siegel and I should go forward and attempt to reach the chalet. Gotting was the only one of the party who had ever been there, and that was years before. He gave us directions how to find it.

We were to pass to the right or left of certain peaks he pointed out to us, and then he said we should see a large field of snow. We were to cross this, and the chalet was in a hollow about half a mile above and to the left.

Well, we started—Siegel and I—leaving all the provisions except a few sandwiches with Franz and Gotting. A weary walk brought us to the peak where, according to Gotting, we were to see the snow field. But there was nothing of the sort there; peak rose upon peak, but there was no great, level snowfield stretching away at our feet, such as he had described.

We looked at each other in dismay. To add to our distress, the weather, which had hitherto been beautiful, began to get overcast. Light wreaths of mist were setting on the highest summits of the mountain, sure signs of a coming storm.

However, there was no use in going back. We should perhaps not be able to find Franz and Gotting again if, bewildered as we now were, we attempted to get back to them. Our only chance was forward.

Tired and dispirited we walked on turning around only to look at the gathering clouds which were now piling themselves dark and threatening behind us. The wind, too began to rise. We determined to go downward; indeed, we were too much exhausted to go any higher, or waste any more time in looking for the chalet.

The ground seemed to get more rough the lower we went, and the tremendous gusts of wind which whistled round us made the decent most dangerous. Great, spattering raindrops now began to fall and we halted on a ledge of rock, utterly worn out.

The storm increased and in a short time was at its height. The rain came down in torrents, completely drenching us. The lightning with blinding flashes played all round, hissing and illumining for an instant the awful grandeur of the scene, while the thunder pealed and crashed overhead, each crag and wall of rock echoing the sound and increasing it and hundredfold.

We had thrown our rifles away, afraid that the lightning would strike them, and stood waiting for the storm to abate. When we resumed our decent we were trembling with cold in every limb. The air, which was warm enough before, was now piercingly cold and the wind drove snow and bits of ice against our faces with blinding force.

I went first, and for a long time neither of us spoke. Only when a particularly dangerous place was crossed I gave the warning "Look to the right!" or "To the left!" as the case might be.

Siegel led the way when I was tired, and thus we proceeded with greatest caution, as a false step would have been almost certain death, till we got to more level ground.

Here we again encountered thickets of knie-holz. We were already congratulating ourselves on having got the worst over, when we were suddenly stopped by a precipice or "Wand," down which it would have been impossible for a goat to go. It was a sheer decent of at least eighty feet.

This was a dreadful disappointment. We walked along the edge for some way, but as far as we could see the Wand extended for miles. I had already thrown myself on the ground and had given up all hopes of life, when a shout from Siegel who had gone on a little way, made me once more spring to my feet.

I hastened to him. He was standing over a narrow hole in the rock almost hidden by bushes of the knie-holz.

"We are saved! we are saved!" he cried. He explained to me how, when I had given up in despair, he suddenly thought that he remembered the place we were in, and had remembered, too, that if it were indeed the part of the mountain he supposed it to be, there was a circular hole in the rock forming the Wand by which the chamois hunters scaled this otherwise inaccessible place. He had gone on, had found the opening, and fearful of losing the spot had stood over it and called till I came.

We slid safely down this chimney like hole, which is not much more than twenty feet in depth, and easily descending the lower part of the Wand, which is here much broken, arrived, famished and half frozen, at 10 o'clock at night, at a woodman's hut Siegel knew of in the valley below. Here we obtained warmth and shelter.

Three of the woodmen immediately started up the mountain and returned in a few hours with poor Franz, who was very much exhausted, not so much from cold—as Gotting had contrived to light a fire, and they had provisions—as from loss of blood.

I once asked Siegel what he would have done if he had not found that opening. "We should," he said, "have struck our alpenstocks into the ground, and have walked round them all the night to keep off sleep, which if it conquered us would, of course, have been fatal. If we lived till day broke we should have tried to find our way back to the others."

Whether we were likely to succeed in so doing, cold, hungry and exhausted as we were, the reader may judge.

As for Franz, he completely recovered from his wound, and I have hunted many a time with him since that memorable day.—Youth's Companion.

"I know that you love me," he said, sentimentally, as he held her to his vest. "I know that you love me," she repeated; "because when I lay my head against your breast your heart beats so loud that I can hear it." "That," gasped the poor fellow as the awful truth dawned upon him. "That is not my heart. That's my Waterbury watch."

Mrs. May R. Bryan gets $3,000 a year for editing Munro's Fashion Bazar.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 20 1889.

Jefferson Davis celebrated his eighty first birthday at Beauvoir last Monday. He was in fine health and spirits.

Old Jubal Early's speech at Winchester will be a godsend to the republican papers. The general stuck to it that the confederate cause was right, and was particularly rough on the confederates who have deserted since the war.

Humanity.

To the man gifted with sufficient spiritual strength to enable him to look over the heads of the crowd, humanity is a curious study.

From his perch on the edge of a cloud such a man can look down in wonder and pity on the restless throng—doing and undoing, striving and suffering, sorrowing and sin-stricken. God has given to humanity the earth and the fullness thereof, and, not satisfied with the glorious heritage as it comes from His hand, mortals are forever struggling to make such changes as will adapt its conditions nearer in accordance with their erratic imaginings.

As an illustration, there are the millions of treasure expended and the thousands of lives wasted in the attempt to break the continuity of the western hemisphere and send the blue billows of the Pacific and the wild breakers of the Atlantic dashing away to meet and embrace each other among the hills of Panama. The people of the east and the people of the west have, by much labor and pains, flung a rope of steel across the ocean, and, having caught the secret of the summer lightning, they talk in strange whispers from one side to the other of the world.

To mankind collectively, humanity is tender and charitable. To the individual sinner how unpitying it is. On the field of battle he who destroys most of his fellow creatures is the greatest hero. But he that kills his neighbor in a moment of passion is pursued most unrelentingly, and above his devoted head the hand of the avenger is forever uplifted.

Ah, humanity, humanity! In its strange and unreasoning perversity the gentle voice of the living God is drowned by its uncouth clamorings. The moment that the soul awakes and finds itself an inhabitant of time, begins to plan some mischief to do. Wild and willful, prone to wander, insatiate in its [illegible] desires and strange appetites, cursed by a thousand unexplainable longings.

"Eloi, Eloi Lama Sabachthani!" came the thrilling appeal from the weird and [illegible] gloom of Calvary. Centuries have come and gone and the dust of the earth has passed through myriad transformations. Spring has painted the sky with hues and tints pilfered from the studio of the angels, and rugged winter has coated the [illegible] with the snows of nearly two thousand [illegible] embers since that touching and pitiful cry was wrung from the anguished heart of a suffering God. But its fervor deepens and its passion intensifies as it goes wailing and echoing down the path of the ages, and every day and every hour and every moment—every heart-throb of time—is burdened by that woful refrain: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"—Atlanta Constitution.

Some of the Great Floods of History Described.

From the St. Louis Globe Democrat.

It becomes interesting to note some of the great floods of history. One of the most notable was that which, according to the old Historian Camden, washed away Earl Godwin's land on the coast of Kent, and left only the Godwin Sands. Holland has furnished many a coast flood. At Dort, in 1446, the sea broke in through the dykes and drowned the people of seventy-two villages, in all 100,000 persons. The dykes failed in 1530 and nearly 400,000 people died. The celebrated Ripon flood in Yorkshire was in 1771, and in 1787 over 2000 persons lost their lives by the sudden torrents from the mountains of Navarra. In 1813 the overflow of the Danube drowned 3000 Turkish soldiers on a small island near Widden, and in Silesia the floods practically ruined the French army under McDonald. The Vistula overflowed and broke its dykes in 1812 and swept away 10,000 cattle and 4000 houses.

Two famous floods in France were those of 1840 and 1846. The former was in the southeast, and upward of 1,000 houses were swept away by the Rhone. The other was in the central and south-western part of France, and destroyed $20,000,000 worth of property, including numerous costly railroad viaducts.

By the bursting of the reservois at Lorca, in Spain, twenty square leagues were devastated, and over 1,000 persons were drowned, April 14, 1802. The property damage was estimated at $7,000,000.

The giving way of the dam of the Bradfield reservoir near Sheffield, England, on March 11, 1864, let loose a flood which swept fourteen miles of valley in two hours and caused a loss of $1,800,000, besides drowning 250 persons. This is the disaster which is made to figure in Charles Read's "Put Yourself in His Place." The area of the Bradford reservoir was seventy-eight acres, and its dam at the highest place was 95 feet high.

The Williamsburg, Mass., disaster was on May 17th, 1864. The dam of a 100-acre reservoir gave way, and $1,000,000 worth of property was ruined. One hundred and fifty persons lost their lives.

The South Fork reservoir accident of Friday night surpasses all simplar casualties in every respect. This reservoir had an area of over 2,800 acres, and its waters, when freed from confinement, devastated an area of hundreds of square miles.

TO THE MEDICAL PROFESSIONAL

The Census Bureau Issues an Important Circular—Mortality Statistics.

The following is received from the Census Bureau:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
CENSUS OFFICE,
WASHINGTON D. C., May 1, 1889

To The Medical Profession:

The various medical associations and the medical profession will be glad to learn that Dr. John S. Billings, Surgeon U. S. Army, has consented to take charge of the Report on the Mortality and Vital Statistics of the United States as returned by the Eleventh Census.

As the United States has no system of registration of vital statistics, such as is relied upon by other civilized nations for the purpose of ascertaining the actual movement of population, our census affords the only opportunity of obtaining near an approximate estimate of the birth and death rates of much the larger part of the country, which is entirely unprovided with any satisfactory system of State and municipal registration.

In view of this, the Census Office, during the month of May this year, will issue to the medical profession throughout the country "Physician's Registers" for the purpose of obtaining more accurate returns of deaths than it is possible for the enumerators to make. It is earnestly hoped that physicians in every part of the country will co-operate with the Census Office in this important work. The record should be kept from June 1, 1889, to May 31, 1890. Nearly 26,000 of these registration books were filled up and returned to the office 1880, and nearly all of them used for statistical purposes. It is hoped that double this number will be obtained for the Eleventh Census.

Physicians not receiving Registers can obtain them by sending their names and addresses to the Census Office, and, with the Register, an official envelope which requires no stamp will be provided for their return to Washington.

If all medical and surgical practitioners throughout the country will lend their aid, the mortality and vital statistics of the Eleventh Census will be more comprehensive and complete than they have ever been. Every physician should take a personal pride in having this report as full and accurate as it is possible to make it.

It is hereby promised that all information obtained through this source shall be held strictly confidential.

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
URIAH HEVENER,
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
June20 4-w Green Bank W. Va.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—We understand their will be a big picnic at Dunmore this year.

—There were a good deal of business done at this term of the Court.

—We will give the full proceedings of the Circuit Court next week.

—Lots of new subscribers this week.

—Thanks to those who paid us cash this week.

—Hon. C. P. Dorr has retired from the Webster Springs Call, and it will be conducted hereafter by Messrs R. S. Wooddell and E. H. Morton. Success to the new managers.

—We return thanks to the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, for invitation to the annual commencement and semi contial celebration to be held there the 4th of July.

—The Greenbrier Independent, one of our very best weekly exchanges has passed its 24th birthday. It is welcomed by its many readers in Pocahontas, and may it long live and prosper.

—The Chancery suit of Frank Farrell vs. Wm. M. McAlister and others was at this term of the Court submitted to special Judge J. W. Arbuckle. The case was argued at length by C. P. Moore, of this place and R. B. Knight, of Charleston for the plaintiff, and C. P. Jones and John W. Stephenson for the defendants. A decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $2500 and costs. There has never been a chancery case in this Court that excited more interest on the part of the people, nor one in which the oral argument was more entertaining. It is probable the case will be carried to the Court of Appeals.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION of Huntersville District will meet in Huntersville on Friday, June 21st, 1889, for the purpose of settling with the Sheriff and attending to all other business that may be necessary.

By order of the President.

JAMES W. WARWICK JR.,
Secretary of Board.

Dunmore Doings

R. P. Bloom, was in town last week.

The carding machine is in full blast at Dunmore.

There will be singing at the Cross Roads school house, on Sunday, 23rd, at 2 p. m. Let all attend and bring your books.

L. S. Moore and family were on a visit to Edray last week.

J. W. Moore, will start for Johnstown, Pa., this week for his family.

Mrs. E. A. Smith's sister living at Johnstown, during the flood was saved.

Circuit Court Notes.

Circuit Court convened on Monday 10th; Judge A. N. Campbell presiding.

The lawyers attending Court from a distance were, C. P. Jones and J. W. Stephenson, of Monterey; Wm. M. McAlister and Jno. W. Stephenson of Warm Springs; Jno. W. Arbuckle and Jno. W. Holt, of Lewisburg; Wm. Skeen, of Covington and R. B. Knight, of Charleston.

Quite a large crowd were in attendance Monday.

B. F. Harlow, late proprietor of the Greenbrier Independent was among us.

We will give the proceedings next week.

Notes By the Way.

It is a matter far beyond thanksgiving and praise to witness the cheerful alacrity with which our people hasten to repair the effects of the recent flood.

During the whole spring season, there seemed to be unusual industry all over the county, clearing land repairing fence, and improving roadways.

Taken for everything there is no region on the face of the earth, that surpasses West Virginia, and Pocahontas may be made equal to any county in the state, for all material comforts. Patient industry is sure of its reward in a region like this.

AN INTERESTING SUNDAY SCHOOL.

There is a flourishing Sunday school, at New Hope school house on Brown's Creek, near Huntersville, under the joint management of Mr. James W. Warwick and W. T. Moore.

On a recent Sabbath afternoon the writer witnessed a scene there, not to be met with in any other Sabbath school in the world.

The first Sabbath School even taught in West Virginia, and for that matter, anywhere west of the Alleghanies was conducted by Mrs. Mary Warwick in her old age.

Though she was so infirm, that when seated, she could not arise from her chair without assistance yet she would have her servants to place her on a horse, and she would ride four miles to a log school house located near what is now called the "Jerry Friel cabin" on Jacob Sharp's property, where she met her Sunday School. She was the only teacher, and would open her school at 8 or 9 o'clock and continue teaching until one or two in the afternoon then, she would go to William Sharp's, rest awhile, take dinner and thereupon return to her home at Clover Lick.

One of her favorite scholars was little Lizzie Sharp, now known and much esteemed by many of your readers, as good old Aunt Bettie McGlaughlin verging close to ninety years of age. She was at the Sunday School the afternoon referred to, and seemed interested in all that was going on. Mr. Warwick is a great, grand son, of her old Teacher, and Aunt Betsy says she can see her old Teacher's eye in Jimmy Warwick's head. It was a touching coincidence, that two such persons, should meet in sabbath school, after seventy-five years should have passed away, and is of historic significance in the literature of Sunday school.

AN IMPRESSIVE BURIAL SCENE.

Last week the pleasing information was furnished by one of your correspondents and published, that Mrs. Florida Price, was thought to be better of her serious illness.

It now appears this was but evanescent, for she died Tuesday morning, June 18th, aged 33 years. She was one of five daughters, in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Adam See, near Elkwater, Randolph Co., West Va.

About four years since, she was married to J. Calvin Price, Esq., and soon after they took up their residence on Clover Creek.

Two little boys are left motherless and a wide circle of relatives and attached friends, mourn the decease of a most excellent person.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, June the 12, she was buried from the Clover Lick Chapel followed by one of the largest funeral processions ever seen in our county, anywhere. She was enterred in the historic Clover Lick grave-yard, close to the grave of her great-grand mother Mary Warwick, mentioned in a former note.

Outside of the cities, the writer, has rarely seen a grave more beautifully finished up. It was sodded with freshly cut turf, and adorned with a cross, and tastefully arranged garlands and wreathes of roses and evergreens.

The beautiful testimonies she bore of her confidence in the love and power of Jesus to save, are of the most consoling character.

Thinking of her, one is most touchingly reminded of these lines as beautifully appropriate

"She sleeps in the Valley so sweet,
About her the green willows wave,
We planted the rose at her feet,
To bloom and decay o'er her grave.
She sleeps in the valley so sweet.
No sound e'er disturbs her repose;
So quiet in this calm retreat
She rests safe, secure from life's woes.

How calmly she rested in God;
"To thy arms my Savior I come,"
Come quickly, come quickly, O Lord
And welcome thy wanderer home.
She sleeps in the Valley so sweet,
Her spirit has taken its flight,
Her form is but dust neath our feet,
While she is an angel of light.

W. T. P.

The Heroine of the Flood.

If the valley of Conemaugh has its heroes it also has its heroines.

The story of one woman's sublime courage and unselfishness at a supreme moment of peril makes a bright page in the gloomy record of the Johnstown calamity.

Mrs. Ogle, the manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Johnstown, stood by her key to the last. She was notified time and again that certain death awaited her if she did not seek safety in flight. But the brave little woman thought of the thousands of people in the valley below and stuck to her post, sending out message after message of warning.

Suddenly a deafening roar filled the air, and a black wave, mountain high, could be seen rolling down upon the doomed city.

The pale-faced woman gave one look and dashed the tears from her eyes.

"This is my last message!" the key ticked out to to the operator at South Fork.

There was no time to ad another word. The mad torrent struck the building and an instant later the lifeless heroine of the flood was washed through the raging waters, onward through the rocky mountain passes, and downward to the smiling plains below.

The bravest are the tenderest, and the tenderest are the bravest.

The Floods of the Future.

The Conemaugh valley disaster must not be viewed simply as a calamity. It is a warning.

When the boats navigate Pennsylvania avenue in Washington, and carp invade the houses of that city, we see the shadows of coming events—something even worse than the Johnstown horror.

We have more than once pointed out in these columns the probable consequences of the floods that will visit this country in future. The destruction of our forests will make the cloud-burst as familiar to us as the tornado is to the dwellers on our western plains. Ven Bebber, in his work on "The Influence of Forest Growth on Climate," says: "The old experience that the destruction of woods accentuates climate extremes, and more especially enhance the danger of floods, has not thus far been contradicted. Nay, it receives calamitous confirmation in the disasters which, in the South Tyrol, for example, recur so frequently, and which it is vainly sought to prevent by artificial works."

We are energetically setting in motion the very machinery that must necessarily increase the area and the destructive power of these tremendous floods.

Warnings we have had in abundance, but we take no thought of the morrow. We read of half a million lives lost by the overflow of Yellow river in China, and smile when the comforting thought occurs to us that it is on the other side of the world. We hear of the cloud-burst in the south of France after that region was stripped of its timber—cloud-bursts which turn cow-paths into ragging torrents and sweep away houses, cattle and human beings. But all this, we say is in France. The awful warning comes nearer and in a deadlier shape, from time to time, until we have its breathless culmination and climax at Johnstown.

The thoughtful observerver who has watched these events, studied their lessons, and looked ahead into the future, can come to but one conclusion. A century hence Macaulay's New Zealander may not be here to shake his wooly head over our ruins, but the scientific and progressive American of that day will have many strange chapters of history to relate. He will tell his children the story of our scores of dead cities that went down in the black night of a mighty deluge. He will describe the destruction of Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis and New Orleans. In Georgia and Tennessee he will name the cities of—but this comes too near home to be calmly discussed, and predictions would not be relished by any of us.

It is enough to say that a century hence, when the intelligent American of that day takes a glance backward, he will bitterly denounce our criminal waste and neglect in the matter of forestry, and it will be a mystery in his eyes that we allowed so many warnings to pass unheeded, and rushed on to our doom.
—Atlanta Constitution.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mailhack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL PLACK, Carrier.

Order of Publication.

R. S. Turk vs. Geo. W. McDonald } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to have a partition made of three tracts of land containing respectively 1624 264 and 137 acres of land lying on the waters of the Big Spring Branch of Elk River in Pocahontas County West Virginia, between the plaintiff and defendant, and to Enjoin and inhibit the defendant George W. McDonald, and all others from cutting and removing the Merchantable timber from said lands until partition thereof is made.

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Geo. W. McDonald is a non resident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit. The plaintiff has executed his bond as required by the order granting said injunction.

Teste JOHN J. BEARD Clk.

June 6 4t Printers fee $8.82

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. [illegible] McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 35 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Gum and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a partial state of cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC
Special Com'r.

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Clk Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.70 may 23 4w

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Three in.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
¼ column	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Half col'n	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
One col'n	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months $1.25, after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 20 1889.

Faithful.

Two boys were at work rigging a small sailboat. It lay in an inlet on the New Jersey coast, and had been hired from them for the season by a stranger from New York.

"Come along, Bob," said of the boys. "It's all right now. We'll be too late to see the ball match, if we don't start at once."

Bob had taken down some of the old ropes, and had rigged the boat with new ones. The halyards he had not yet examined.

"They're all right," urged his companion, trying them,—"strong enough to last for years."

"No; I'll put in new halyards. I promised to make a thorough job of it."

"Then you'll miss the game. I'm off!"

Tom ran across the field; Bob hesitated as he looked after him. It was a sharp disappointment to miss the game. The old halyards were worn but they were still stout.

"They'll stand this summer well enough!" muttered Bob.

Then with a quick, decisive movement he cut them, and proceeded to put in new ropes. "I'll make the job thorough," he said.

That very evening the New York gentleman took a party of his friends out for a sail, among them several persons whose lives were especially valuable to the community, and whose death would have been a calamity. When they were a mile from the land, a fierce squall struck the boat. They steered toward the shore. The boat was carrying too much sail for such a wind.

"If your stuff gives way we are gone!" said a physician in the party, in a low voice.

"It all depends on the halyards. They are new. But there's a terrific strain on them."

Every eye in the boat was upon the short knotted ropes. They creaked ominously; but they bore the strain, and in a short time the boat was driven up on the beach. Bob's new bits of new rope had saved the lives of all on board.—Youth's Companion.

[illegible]

[illegible]

Shad Fishing.

The life of a shad fisherman is not a happy one, nethor is it very remunerative. They have to make their money in a short season and they are liable to lose their fine nets, which sometimes get caught in passing vessels. The nets cost several hundred dollars each. The net consists of two rope lines, each about 1000 feet long, with small pieces of lead fastened to one line six feet apart and pieces of egg shaped wood fastened to the other line. A fine linen net with meshes three and a quarter to three and five eight inches in size is strung on the lines, which are placed about twelve feat apart. The fishes are caught by the gills. Their head passes through the meshes, and when they try to retreat they are held prisoners by the silken twine. But if the nets are not lifted at the change of the tide they are liable to make their escape, and then there is mourning among the fishermen.

Two men operate a boat. The boats now used are thirty feet long and flat bottomed. They are cheaper than the keel boats and more stable. They are stout, and yet light and easy to handle. One man rows, and the other tends or throws the net, generally in the shape of a letter "L." When the net is cast, a line is fastened from the boat to the nearest end of the net, and away the party goes, drifting with the tide.

Sometimes the net is liable to catch on an obstruction or on the keel of a steamer or a tugboat, and then the net is damaged $50 or more. After drifting with the tide for a time the man tending the net commences to haul in. Soon there is a splash, and a nice shad is found "gilled." Perhaps this is the only one, and maybe there are ten thirty or a hundred more.

Then the boat is rowed back over the course and the same routine is gone through until the tide changes or the fishermen are thoroughly exhausted. The fishing is done in the night, and when the air is clear and the moon shines out the sight presented by the hundreds of fisherman, with their white lamp lit boats, is a fine one. The fishermen have to suffer many hardships, though, on a foggy or cold night.

In the morning the fishermen carry their nets ashore and clean and mend them. They are then wound on a reel. The speculators that are to be found in every fishing town buy the shad and ship it to this city.

There is great rivalry among the fishermen to see who will catch the first shad. The lucky one receives $10 from the speculators. A fisherman generally averades $3000 for his season's labor.—N. Y. Star.

Farm and Garden Notes.

One of the essentials of soiling is a fertile soil.

Boys and girls are the best crop raised on the farm.

Every farm ought to have its experimental patch.

It is better to dehorn every bull than to have one man killed.

Muriate of potash has proved to be a remedy for the white grub.

The early killed is the easily killed weed, and the weed that robs the crop least.

If you are careful to keep the furrows straight you will do faster and better plowing.

The smaller the field the more fence required and the more land taken from cultivation.

A diversity of crops distributes work, receipts and expenses more evenly through the year and through the years.

The plum curculio is injuring our apples. To prevent this set plums among the apples. Spray the apples once, and the plums three times to destroy the insect.

[illegible]

An attractive paper.—Fly paper.

At the Theatre.—Blobson (rising excitedly): "Down with that red umbrella in the front!" Mrs. Blobson (drawing him back) "For mercy sake hush up! That ain't an umbrella; it's a new spring hat."

Mrs. Jason: "Jekiel was there ever any such person as the fool killer?" Mr. Jason: "What idiotic questions you do ask. How the dickens do I know? I never met him." Mrs. Jason: "Oh I know that."

Diner-out: "Waiter, how's this? I have just discovered a collar button in my soup." Waiter: "Yes, sah, you's de lucky man. We has prize soup on Monday an' Wednesdays. A harnsome gift in every twenttieth plate."

Mendicant: Please help a poor blind man. Kind old lady: Blind? Why bless me, there's a shilling for you. Mendicant: Thank ye, heartily, ma'am. I knowed the minnit I see ye' comin' ye was a kind hearted ole 'oman.

An Irishman being asked on a late trial for a certificate of his marriage, exhibited a huge scar on his head, which looked as though it might have been made with a fire-shovel. The evidence was considered satisfactory.

Judge (to prisoner): "Your wife says you dragged her out of bed by the hair." Prisoner: "I didn't touch her hair, your honour. It was hanging on the back of a chair where she put it the night before." Case dismissed.

We are never weary of reading a good epitaph—one which indicates the work of a lifetime in a few short, crisp words. Here is one, for instance, which needs no explanation. It was inscribed on the tomb of a cannibal: "He loved his fellow-men."

Ragley (sternly): Aurelia, let this thing stop Mr. De Twirliger. Aurelia: Oh; paw, do not forbid Albert the house. Ragley: He may come every night in the week if he pleases, but he shall not bring his dog into my parlor. Last night its howlings kept me awake for an hour. Aurelia: Why paw, that was Albert singing a selection from "Ermine."

Between the Acts.—"How truly rural that scene was." said a husband to his wife as the curtain decended after the first act, and then he went out to see a man. At the close of the play—it was a five act play—he again expressed his admiration for the truly rural scenery, but as he pronounced the "tooly looral" his wife got him home as quickly as possible.

A gentleman who [illegible] another praised the meat very much and inquired who was his butcher. "His name is Addison." "Addison!" echoed the guest; "pray is he any relation to the poet?" "I can't say; but this I know, he is seldom without his steel by his side."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 27, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 49.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.}
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Little Beer.

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
In your meek and lowly sphere,
Many a thirsty neck you wet,
Drowning many a vain regret,
In your song there's lots of cheer,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
Place my name on record here,
That all the liquids known,
From temperate to intemperate zone.
Standest thou without a peer,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
I do love thee. Yes, I fear
My affections too intense,
Cling around thee deep and dense,
Loved not wisely, but too dear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
Stream of amber bright and clear
Do you mind the days that I
Tried to drink the brewery dry?
Oft you got me on my ear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle little beer,
Ah! How many a bitter tear
Sparkles in thy shining foam—
Many a desolated home—
Many a sorrow, dark and drear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
You may think it rather queer,
But I feel that I must shun
You or give the job up, one.
No more schooner will I steer.
Little beer!

—M. M. Folsom, in Atlanta Constitution.

Three Marine Mysteries.

I suppose that a hundred ships come and go where one is lost, but when one reflects on the dangers to which they are exposed he must marvel that so many escape. I saw a list of thirty-six missing ships the other day, missing from American English and French ports, and the fate of each was unknown or guessed at. Say that half of them foundered in mid-ocean, five were run down in collision, five more were wrecked on capes or shoals where all hands perished, and what became of the rest? Say that three of the remainder were destroyed by fire and what fate shall we attach to the other five? From the moment a vessel leaves port to begin her voyage she is exposed to danger, and though a sailer may be ever so brave and hardy, he cannot shake off the knowledge that he lives on the verge of the grave. There are gales, and fogs, and collisions, and fire, and hidden rocks, and powerful currents; and so I repeat that it is a marvel more sailing craft are not added to the lonesome list of missing which is recorded year by year.

In the year 1885, as the British bark Lord Oldham, of which I was second mate, was approaching the Canary Islands, and when about 180 miles distant, we were caught in the tail end of a cyclone and badly knocked about. We got out with some slight loss and a great deal of discomfort, and were bearing up again to our course when a great calamity happened. Half an hour before midnight, while the bark was doing her best under a fresh breeze, a sudden and great shock was felt. Her masts went by the board, and, as I reached the deck, a minute after the shock, the hull seemed to split open from stem to stern. I had gone below to get a glass of bitters, leaving the deck only thirty seconds before the shock came. I was knocked down and confused, but it could not have been over sixty seconds before I regained the deck. It was just in time to be carried overboard. I went with a lot of raffle, from the decks, and amid the frightened cries of the men, and a quarter of an hour later, when I had lashed myself in the crosstrees of the mainmast, I could not get an answer to any of my calls to the rest of the crew. How it was that all were lost I never could make out. There was raffle enough to have floated 300 men, and my watch certainly all wide awake at the moment of the collision. The only explanation I can give is that they were somehow caught and crushed. I drifted during the rest of the night, and was picked up in the morning by a vessel bound in. By that time the wreckage had drifted apart until nothing could be found. Nothing whatever was picked up or cast upon any shore, and had I not been saved, the fate of the bark could only have been guessed at.

What did she collide with? The lookouts were on the bow, and alert and the night so clear that a ship could have been seen a mile away. The chart showed clear water for a hundred miles about, and we must have run full tilt upon some vessel which had been dismasted and bilged in the hurricane. If loaded with timber, her decks would have been awash, and she would have been as bad as a rock to collide with. There was only one shock, and the whole bows of the bark were crushed in by it.

Three years later, while off the Banks of Brazil in a small English ship called the White Cloud, another strange thing happened. I was first mate of this ship, and about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the weather being very fine and the wind light, I had all the men on deck setting up the rigging, some of which had slackened away. A man aloft suddenly hailed the deck with the information that a large whale was bearing down on the ship head on. We were a merchant vessel, and the sight of a whale had no interest for us. We went on with our work for three or four minutes, when the man again hailed me with:

"If that fellow holds his course he will be dead on to us. He's a big fellow, and coming like an iron steamer."

I ran forward to get a look, and the sea was so smooth that I had no difficulty in making out the whale. He was still a mile away, coming down at about steamer speed, and holding a course as straight as if somebody aboard of him was steering by compass. I was not a bit alarmed, expecting to see him show flukes every moment but the Captain came on deck and ordered the man at the wheel to break off two or three points. This brought the whale on our port bow. As I told you, I expected to see him sound every moment. It was astonishing that he had not discovered us long before. I could scarcely believe my eyes as he held on, and by and by we had him alongside. I am telling you the truth when I say he actually rubbed us as we passed each other, and the odor of him was so rank that some of the men cried out in disgust. That whale was ninety feet long if he was an inch, and he had a head on him like a brick wall. So far as we could see he was carrying no harpoons and had no fresh wound, but he was moss-grown and barnacled as if he had knocked about for a couple of hundred years. The fact of his holding his own in such a bull-headed way was alarming, and when we were clear of him we fell to congratulating ourselves over the close shave.

We were perhaps a mile apart when the whale slewed around. The moment we discovered what he was doing we knew that he meant to attack. The breeze had now died away until we could not hope to dodge him, and he had not yet fairly turned when we dropped the yawl from the davits and ran her alongside to the bow. Two men were ordered to get water and provisions into her, and as the whale headed up for us we went off before the light breeze to give him all the room we could. Three or four minutes settled the question of whether he was after the ship or sailing his own course. He headed up for her, coming faster and faster, and when he was two cables' length away there was a great white wall of water rolling before him, and his speed was from eighteen to twenty miles an hour. He struck us full on the starboard quarter, and the shock was as if two ships had collided. Planks and ribs gave way before him, and as he recoiled from the blow our ship settled down stern first and was under water within two minutes. Everybody was knocked down by the shock, and everybody got up to rush for the yawl. I was sucked down almost as soon as I reached my feet, and after a struggle, in which I came out first best by a close shave, I was shot to the surface amid a lot of deck raffle. There were two or three men around me at first, and as I was heaved up I caught sight of the yawl with at least two men in her. The whale was still at hand, lying very quiet, but I feared he would soon be aroused and attack us in turn, and I seized the galley door and paddled away to get out of his reach. While doing this a squall came down and hung on for twenty minutes, and when it had passed I could see nothing of boat nor whale.

That afternoon, an hour before sundown, I was picked up by the American whaler Richard Knox. She already had our yawl, which she had found bottom up, but had not seen any of the men nor met with any wreckage. I was again the only one saved, and but for my testimony the fate of the ship would have forever remained a mystery. As to why the whale attacked us was made more clear after my rescue. The Knox had raised and chased him the evening before, and he had been "gallied" or annoyed so often during the month past that he had become ugly. He came for us with the intention of sending the ship to the bottom, and he succeeded only too well in carrying out his purpose.

A third mystery was the case of the Janet Wilcox, an American brig bound for Rio Janeiro. I was second mate of her when the occurrence took place. We had bad weather for a good share of the voyage, but the brig was new and stanch, and was at no time in imminent peril. About 300 miles off Rio, while enjoying a bit of good weather, we one morning raised a longboat full of men dead ahead of us. Indeed, the boat had taken down her sail and was waiting for us to come up. There were nine men aboard of her, and they had plenty of water and provisions. The story they told was that they were a part of the crew of a large British ship which had been burned two days before. They claimed that all had got off in the boats, but that the boats had become separated in the heavy weather. They were a hard-looking lot, composed of all nationalities, and when we had taken them aboard our captain was by no means satisfied with their story. One of them claimed to be second mate, and, as the crew had all got off in two boats, it was a puzzle that the first mate was not in command of one. Other strange things came up, and the story of the crew did not hang together, and so all hands were ordered to keep an eye on the fellows.

We got a good slant of wind and had run down to within fifty or sixty miles of the coast when the fellows showed their hands. They had been allowed to mingle freely with our crew, but had carefully abstained from a remark to indicate that they had an evil purpose in view. Their boat was large and unwieldly, and we had towed it after us rather than to cast it loose or to attempt to hoist it inboard. I was on watch from eight to twelve and nothing suspicious occurred during the first three hours. About 11 o'clock, as I stood near the man at the the wheel, I was hailed from the foremast with:

"Mr. Merlin, will you please step forward and take a look at something we can't make out?"

I afterward recalled that it was not the voice of one of my watch, but I did not heed the matter at the time. I started forward, and had reached the waist of the vessel when two men seized me, lifted me clear of the deck, and before I could recover from my astonishment was flung overboard head first. It was more by instinct than any plan of my own that I swam for the boat towing astern. Had the brig not been sailing close hauled, and therefore sailing at a moderate pace, I should not have reached it. It was a close shave, and as I hung to the gunwale for a moment I heard a great confusion on the brig. It was mutiny, of course, and I was the first victim. My idea was to get aboard again as soon as possible, and the only way was to get in into the yawl, pull her close up, and then shin up the painter. After an effort or two I pulled myself in, and just then there were oaths and cries and pistol shots from the brig, followed by a couple couple of splashes alongside, which meant that two bodies, living or dead, had gone overboard. I had hold of the painter when it was loosened from above, and I drifted rapidly astern. The fight continued as long as was within hearing. I was out of it entirely and could only hope that our crew, who were all good men, would overcome the mutineers in the struggle.

After the brig was out of sight I got sail on the boat, and followed her to the best of my judgment. It was just in the gray of morning that I was picked up by a British ship bound into Rio. It wasn't so very mysterious that we picked up the boat and that her crew attempted our capture, but it certainly was queer that from the hour she left me to this day that brig has never been heard of. But for my escape she would have been rated as lost, and the insurance paid. As it was the insurance company contested payment, and won their case in court. The insurance of that day, at least, did not provide for any such emergency. The naval and merchant service of every power was notified of the circumstance, and for two or three years every sea was under observation, but the brig was never overhauled, nor any of her old crew heard of. My idea is that she foundered within a few days with all hands, but others differ. She certainly did not turn pirate, and she was never heard of as a wreck. There is no such British ship as the men said, nor was any craft burned as they stated. They must have been lying in wait; but it is queer that they would be so far out to sea in such a boat. Taken all in all, it was a strange case, and no one has ever got the right end of the thread to solve the tangle.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 27 1889.

Young Men to the Fore.

One thing that is needful on the part of the Democrats in coming political campaigns in this State, is to get new material in the vanguard of the party. The old leaders have been leaders too long. They have grown stilted and dogmatical in their leadership, and are firm set in the belief that they alone must have the front places, and receive most of the spoils of victory. The old leaders of the party have led it most to its doom. They have quarreled among themselves while the enemy has been silently undermining their camp, and yet the danger, though certainly known, does not impel them towards that harmony of action that alone can save the party. It is the case everywhere. Rivalries, jealousies and enmities becomes rife between men who have been leaders too long. The Democratic party of West Virginia needs new men at its head—young men. Men who have toiled in the ranks like Trojans, caring for nothing but the triumph of the principles of the party. To put them there would inject new methods, new fire, new life into the contests, and tend very much to the purification of the party. The hacks who have croaked down their party and themselves should be given the post of observers only, while the forces so long in reserve should be brought to the front.

There should be organization of young men's Democratic Clubs effected all over the State, to which no man over the age of thirty-five years should be admitted. Men under that age are much more in love with principle, much more zealous in the discharge of their duty, and much more ambitious to achieve success for their efforts than the men whose blood time has rendered sluggish, and contact with the sharp points of life made callous to those things which are remote from self-interests. Give us the young men's Clubs. Let the boys take hold with their enthusiasm and dash, and they will pull the wheels out of the mire. There is material enough in this [illegible] district alone for several of the Clubs. They should be organized speedily and thoroughly, and should devote much time to the study and dissemination of the true maxims of Government which are Democratic property, and are indispensible to the success and permanency of a Republic. It is time to be reforming the lines for [illegible]. The tendency of the people's mind now, more than ever is to tariff reform. The evils of the present tariff system are [illegible] upon the energies of the [illegible] more closely every day. The [illegible] are full of complainings, and of the distress which comes from an iniquitous and unjust taxing system that robs the [illegible] of [illegible] toil, and [illegible] for [illegible] laws, would furnish constant work for millions more.

There never was a grander time for the exhibition of the power of young America than the present. The nation is in the grasp of a power more dangerous to its institutions than any enemy which ever confronted it. The power of monopoly cannot be lightly overborne. To defeat it and save the country from dispotism—to save the people their freedom—to save the birthright of the American citizen—the young men of the Republic must buckle on their armor and go forth into the fight against the foes of he Republic.

We want in this State new brains to think, new hearts to dare, and new arms to work. We want honesty of purpose in politics as in other affairs of life. We want men to fight battles for the party, and not for self. We want the Democratic party reformed, rejuvenated, and reclaimed. The young men can do it, if they will. Will they?—Charleston Gazette.

The recent address of Gen. Jubal A. Early, at Winchester, Va., has attracted considerable attention. He spoke his honest sentiments, and for this feature, if for no other he has been greatly praised. The following sentiment has been applauded universally: "As I have said on a former occasion, if ever I repudiate, disown, or apoligize for the cause for which Lee fought and Jackson died, may the lightning of heaven blast me and the scorn of all good women and true men be my portion." General Early added:

"And again I say that the Confederate who has deserted since the war, for the former has gone over to the enemy at no personal risk to himself and simply from motives of gain, while the latter took his life in his hands, knowing that he would be shot if captured, and in a number of cases he was tempted to leave the service to go the assistance of his family, which he was induced to believe was starving at home."

The General closed by paying a high tribute to the ladies of Virginia and the South.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 21st.—Harrison as a junketer bids fair to be on a par with his republican predecessors. He returned Monday evening from a three day trip down the river and to-day he has gone to Cape May to remain until next Tuesday. If he is overworked now, as he says he is, God help the country if an occasion should arise demanding some real work of its executive. If he is overworked many members of his party would like to know what the nature of the work was; he has done absolutely nothing, so far as the public knows, towards establishing a national policy of any kind and the two hours a day which he gives up to the hungry place seekers is hardly enough to break him down. If he is overworked it is from nursing "Baby McKee" probably the hardest work he has performed since his inaugeration.

Corporal Tanner has just allowed an increase of pension to Senator Manderson of Nebr. that comes along with it $4000 arrearages. It may seem a little strange that the Senator never applied for this increase of pension before but then, perhaps Gen. Black was not as anxious to oblige the Senator as the Corporal is.

Attorney General Miller must be mad because he has not received that appointment to the United States Supreme Court which he so confidently expected a short time ago. He has refused to give an opinion on the question referred to him by the Treasury department as to whether it would be a violation of law for the Catholic University to be located here, to bring over from Europe a corps of instructors. The solicitor of the Treasury has already given his opinion. He says it would be a violation of law. One of the most prominent lawyers of this city the same gentleman is one of the board of trustees of the University says the University will bring over instructors, and he does not believe that any court in the country will sustain the administration in construing the alien contract law so as to exclude them.

A bit of scandal has leaked out about the sudden resignation of the private secretary of Corporal Tanner. It was thought a little strange that he should prefer being a timber agent of the Interior department in the far west to being private secretary to the Commissioner of Pensions. Now that the facts are out it is thought that he was very lucky not to be kicked out of the government service entirely. The trouble with him was the same as with a good many others, he was not satisfied to confine his "mashing" propensities to his wife who would probably appreciated them, but must thrust them upon some other woman, who does not appreciate them. The story is a very short one; the private secretary came in with Tanner and at once became smitten with one of the lady clerks in the Pension office. He persecuted her with attention and wrote her many notes, the last one indecent and threatening her discharge. The lady then went to Secretary Noble, told her story and placed the notes in the Secretary's possession. That gentleman sent for Tanner and told him that Squeers—that's the "mashers" name must go. Tanner agreed easily because he wanted to give the position to his daughter just out of school, but owing to many obligations he had to stick to Squeers, therefore he persuaded Secretary Noble to appoint him a special timber agent.

"Mr. Face-both-ways-at once" is Harrisons new name. His attitude on civil service reform earned the hyphenated cognomen. It seemed a little tough for him that the morning paper, containing the associated press interview with Commissioner Roosevelt which was telegraphed from Indianapolis, stating that the President had instructed the Commissioners to enforce the civil service law in letter and spirit should have printed on the same page a most glaring violation of that same law by Harrison. The violation referred to was the changing of the rule, which says that no person who has been out of the classified service for more than a year can be reinstated without a regular examination, so that an exception is made in favor of veterans of the Union army, who can now be legally reinstated at any time no matter how long since they were discharged, if they have sufficient influence. The fact should be remembered that about seven out of every ten of these men that will be reinstated will cause the discharge of men who obtain the position they now fill through a Civil service examination. The Civil service law does not prevent a clerk being discharged.

MASONIC NOTICE

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE No. [illegible] A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meetings of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Levi Gay, Esq., was in town Tuesday.

—Some of our townsmen have been catching some nice bass, lately.

—Atty. L. M. McClintic and wife are visiting his parents at Buckeye.

—A little fire has been quite comfortable in the mornings and evenings for the past few days.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—Good envelopes at THE TIMES office for 15c per 100.

—Dr. Hezekiah McClintic, of Mo., and Geo. McClintic of Covington, were in town last Saturday.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Mrs. Joe Smith, and daughter, of Mill Point, passed through town Monday on their way to Green Bank.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—Mr. J. B. Curry, of Mill Point, and Miss Birdie Nottingham, of Greenbank, made us a pleasant call Monday.

—The stable of Attorney L. M. McClintic was broken open, and his horse taken out and ridden Tuesday night.

—If you want a history of the Johnstown flood, send to C. B. Swecker, Dunmore, who will furnish you a copy as soon as they are out.

—Atty L. M. McClintic, D. A. Fisher and B. F. White, have gone to William's river, to spend a few days fishing.

—We wish some body would bring us a mess of fish. Here we have to stay all the time, in old newspapers and dirt, up to our ears and work like a dog-on niggar, and can't get a chance to go fishin'.

—We understand that Mr. Sam. Gay, better known as "devil Sam," of near Edray, and Miss Oenna, daughter of Mr. A. N. Taylor, of William's river will be married next Wednesday.

—Wood Stealing is getting to be a common occurrence about town now, and we are afraid wood won't be the only thing stolen during the coming winter. They say we are having hard times since "Mr. Facetious" [illegible] administration.

[illegible]

Work [illegible] while the sun shines, go fishing when it rains and work the [illegible] when you can.

The [illegible] July is coming and we'll [illegible] grounds and [illegible]

Capt. [illegible] is off to Ronceverte.

[illegible] is off to Braxton C. H.

Dr. [illegible] is off to Washington city, with his pet, fence and cattle stall.

[illegible] Taylor and wife are off [illegible]

[illegible] out for Staunton.

Mrs. [illegible] is visiting here.

Mrs. [illegible] and Miss Kittie [illegible] digging at Edray [illegible]

Quite a number of guests at [illegible] Wakeman.

The singing [illegible] school house was [illegible] attended. There will be singing again at the same place on Sunday, the 30th, at 2, p. m.

Part of the lumbermen are getting out raft timber on Greenbrier river.

Dr. Lacy, will preach at Clover Lick on Sunday 30th inst.

Mrs. Boyd Bartlett, of Mill Point, is visiting friends in this section.

Rev. Jasper Sharp and family of Beverly, W. Va., are visiting relatives in this county.

Couldn't some one give us a snake story about a foot long.

Morgan Wakeman has been on the sick list for a few days.

Success to THE TIMES.

TOM SAWYER.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

Court convened on Monday 17th, with Judge A. N. Campbell on the bench:

CHANCERY CASES.

C. L. Austin &c. vs. Wm. F. Arbast &c suit No. 1, decree of partition; No. 2 and 3 decree of sale.

Hugh M. Carpenter's adm'x vs. Margaret M. Carpenter &c., order of reference.

Susan C. Pyles vs Jas. Pyle's Heirs, decree confirming assignment of widows dower.

Allen D Grimes' adm'r vs. Allen D. Grimes' Heirs &c., decree confirming sale.

Geo. C. Hill's Adm'r vs. Rebecca J. Hill &c., order of reference.

Jno. W. McNeel's Adm'r vs. Jno. W. McNeel's Heirs &c., decree confirming sale.

Jno. Sharp's Adm'r vs. Jno. Sharp's Legatees, cause dismissed.

Jas. Pyles' Adm'r Jas. Pyles' Heirs &c., cause dismissed.

Frank Barret vs. Wm. M. McAlister &c., decree entered in favor of Plaintiff.

STATE CASES.

Perry Townsend A. & B. No. 1, judgment on confession, and fined $25; No 2 carrying deadly weapons, found guilty.

Jane Allen, A. & B., nol pros.

Wm. Hill, A. & B., found not guilty.

Sallie Hill, A. & B. found guilty and fined $1.00.

Adam Pulin, No. 4, unlawfully selling liquor, found not guilty.

A. J. Kertner, unlawfully selling liquor, judgment confessed.

J. D. Hamilton A. & B., judgment confessed.

W. L. Taylor, A. & B. found not guilty.

Z. T. Webb, selling deadly weapons to miner, found not guilty.

J. B. Apperson, unlawfully distilling, judgment confessed.

Jno. A. Alderman, misdeamenor, nol pros.

Suicide in Irish Corner.

On last Friday, the 14th, Dr. M. A. Gates was summoned to the scene of a tragical occurence, by which a human soul was hurried into eternity. On that morning Mrs. Mary Mann, wife of Davis J. Mann, farmer, living in Irish Corner, district, about two miles south of Ronceverte, hung herself in a granary, between the hours of 8 and 10 a.m.

On receipt of the intelligence Justice T. H. Adwell summoned a coroner's jury and proceeded to hold an inquest, by which the following facts were developed:

Davis J. Mann, husband of the deceased testified that he had been away that morning to a neighbor's on business. His wife had spent the night at her uncle's, about one mile from home, and returned home about 8 o'clock a. m. He returned about ten a. m., and not finding his wife about the house, began to look for her. Not seeing her, he returned to the house for some tobacco, which he always kept in a particular place in a drawyer. On opening the drawyer he found a note, of which the following is the substance:

"DAVIS: I hope the Lord will bless you, for you have done all you could to get me well, but my head had got in such a fix that I was no satisfaction to you or anybody else. I hope you may see much pleasure, but I wanted to get away where people would not see me. I got in such a fix that I wasn't allowed to live any longer. God bless you in all your troubles. I never thought that I would ever have to take my own dear life. You done all you could."

On reading the note he hurried out to a small out-house (used for a granary) where he found her lying on the floor. She had made a slip noose with a piece of cord about the size of wool twine, put it around her neck, tied the end to a rafter, and lay down. He did not touch her being satisfied she was dead, but ran to a neighbor's and gave the alarm.

Dr. Gates, the family physician, testified that she was of sound mind, but that ill-health had probably destroyed her desire to live. Her death was the result of strangulation, and the character of the surroundings indicated deliberation, as she could easily have saved herself.

A neighbor woman testified that only an hour before the occurence she overheard deceased remark that she was tired of living.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to death by her own hand.

Mrs. Mann was the daughter of Mr. George W. Morgan, and was about 24 years of age. She was buried on Friday in the Morgan graveyard.—Greenbrier Messenger.

What Do they do With It

We know what the young men graduates will do with the book learning, be the same much or little, which lies back of the diploma. They will try to get a living with it; and as their learning has been more or less practical their chances will be better or worse. The young man just from college is expected to find or make a way to apply what he has learned.

What about the young women graduates? What are they going to do with it? What can they do with it? Fewer avenues being open to them, their course of instruction should have been on lines the most practical, the most likely to fit them for usefulness to themselves and society. Little dashes of polite learning not too well learned are but a thin veneer on a very slight foundation.

The day is coming when the girls of America as well as the boys will be educated to do something that will bring them a living. An idle young woman in a family will be no better thought of than an idle young man.—Ex.

The Republic—"Her Mark."

Some of the newspapers are printing a fac simile of the autograph of Abraham Lincoln's mother.

Plain Sarah Lincoln signed a document in a very simple and old-fashioned way. A friendly hand traced her name, with the explanatory words, "Her mark," and Sarah then made the familiar "X."

That one mark is an epitome of the history of the republic. From such crude and simple beginnings have sprung our culture and civilization. Humble Sarah Lincoln gave to the world a son who wrote his name in imperishable letters of light on one of the proudest pages of our annals.

It is the story of the republic—out of the depths to the highest place in the temple of Fame—out of the darkness and into the light!—Atlanta Constitution.

Gov. Lee has issued a requisition upon the Governor of Missouri for Robert Warwick, who was indicted in the County Court of Highland county, Va., in January, 1884, for the murder of E.D. Atchison. Warwick made his escape from jail after the killing of Atchison, and eluded arrest until a few days ago when he was captured in Shelby county, Ind., and lodged in jail.

Ex-Senator Cameron, of Pa., is very ill.

The Prohibition Amendment was defeated in Pennsylvania by 200,000 majority.

A policeman was shot badly but not fatally, in Wheeling, on the 19th, by a man whom he attempted to arrest.

It is said that a cousin of the rich Astor family in New York recently committed suicide to avoid starvation. 'Tis a sad world, after all.

Mrs. Hayes, the wife of ex-President Hayes, was stricken with apoplexy on the 21st inst., at her home in Fremont, O.

In England and France many women dress in men's clothes all the time. They claim that when they pass themselves off for men they get better wages and suffer less annoyance.

Sitting Bull gives indications of remaining a "bad Indian" for a while longer. It was thought that he was about to check his baggage for the happy hunting grounds a few days ago, but he is now reported as recovering. The doughty chieftain may be old, but he seems to still be very tough.

A young man named Joseph Smith, on the 2d, threw a stone at the cars as they were passing Weyer's Cave Station, on the Shenandoah Valley Road, at high speed. It struck the cars, and rebounding struck Smith on the head, killing him instantly.

William Nye has sailed for Europe to interview the queen. But Mr. Nye cannot get an audience with her maj. Court etiquette requires that all persons visiting the queen should comb their hair. Mr. Nye has no hair to comb, and consequently he will be compelled to play in the backyard with the queen's grandchildren and have his dinner sent to him.

GRAND PICNIC.

On July the 4th, there will be a basket picnic near Dunmore. A large platform is erected for dancing. Good music will be in attendance. Refreshments on the ground and flying duchman and other amusements.

Everybody is invited.
By order of Committee.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 60	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 27 1889.

VERY SLIGHT CLEWS.

How Tom Marshall Once Upon a Time Detected a Burglar.

"Tom" Marshall was at one time the favorite hero of the bar in Kentucky. His acumen, his wit, his magnetic power over a jury, whether he happened to be drunk or sober, gave rise to numberless anecdotes about him. One of the least known is the following:

Marshall, after a prolonged holiday, found himself in a little inland town, the center of an admiring circle of newly-made friends who were ignorant of his real position or occupation. Chief among these was a young dentist, a hard-working, frugal fellow, when by dint of strict economy, had saved a few hundred dollars. He was about to be married, and bought a snug little house, and withdrew his money one day from the bank to pay for it.

The bargain was to be completed on the following day. He carried the money to his chamber, a small room back of his shop, and, locking up the roll of bills in his secretary, went to bed.

About midnight he was wakened by the flash of a dark lantern in his face. He sprang up. A man was climbing out of the open window. His desk was open and rifled. He rushed upon the thief, who fired at him twice and escaped. The poor dentist, on the eve of his wedding-day, was left dangerously wounded and penniless.

The country was searched for traces of the thief, but in vain. Marshall took a keen interest in the matter, questioned the policemen closely, and when they gave up in despair, asked permission to visit the dentist's rooms. After a close search, he found upon the floor a small pellet of burned paper, which he carried home. It was the wadding out the thief's pistols. When examined, it proved to be half of a receipt for water tax, signed by John Jones, town clerk.

The date was entire, but the name of the man paying his tax was torn off, excepting two letters, Pe——. Marshall at once searched the records of the town clerk, and found on the given date Peter Scott had paid his water tax. Peter was arrested, and the money was found in his possession.

Marshall soon after left the village, followed by the blessings of the grateful dentist and his bride. Long afterward they discovered that their friend was the famous eccentric lawyer of Kentucky.

Another story which lingers in the gossip about the courts in the same State is of an old lawyer named Hunt, who, in the early part of this century, was known as "the sleuth-hound," so unerring was his pursuit of a criminal. On one occasion he was employed to defend a poor colored porter in a bank, accused of robbing the vaults after the cashier was gaged and tied.

The circumstantial evidence was complete against the negro, but Hunt was convinced of his innocence. The thief, too, had dropped a bit of cloth on the floor, apparently the torn lining of a hat, about which Hunt's keen scent detected a faint, peculiar perfume.

"The man who wore this is a tanner," he said to a detective.

There was but one tannery within forty miles. One of the owners was a dissipated young man. He was watched and soon detected in passing some of the stolen money. Being arrested, he confessed his guilt, and Hunt's client was saved.

The old saying, "Murder will out," is true only when some intellect is acute enough to gather the proof of guilt from trifles which other men neglect.—Youth's Companion.

The World Full of Death Traps.

According to the American Analyst, the worst enemies of the human race are the doctors, who try to prolong our miserable existence in a world full of death traps. One medico tells you not to eat or drink too much. Another says that you must only eat what you fancy, because otherwise you will bolt your food without giving to each morsel the thirty-six mastications which are necessary for digestion. You must wear a respirator over your mouth, a pad on your chest, and a swarth of flannel round your loins. If you live in town, you will die of fog; if you go to the country, you will be poisened by bad drainage; if you drink water, you are tempting the typhoid fiend; milk spells scarlatina, and tea cake is sudden death. Do you shun these tempestuous pleasures of the senses and take refuge in the recreations of the mind? Do you borrow a novel from the circulating library? That is to import the germs of disease into a healthy household. The volume in your hands may have been pursued by a person recovering from an infectious illness!

Farm and Garden Notes.

Don't forget the dust bath.

Don't plant corn that will not grow.

Be sure and test your corn before planting.

Don't plow the land when wet or sticky.

One of the essentials of soiling is a fertile soil.

Mix the dry horse manure with the wet cow manure.

Cooked rice, fed cold, is good for diarrhoea in chicks.

Don't breed a draft mare to a trotter or a thoroughbred.

Don't feed sulphur to young chicks—it produces leg weakness.

Hard-boiled eggs and cornmeal makes a good first feed for ducklings.

Don't breed to a mishapen ungainly horse, even if he has a long pedigree.

It is a mistaken idea that a hen's nest ought to do duty a year without renewing.

A gentleman who was driving up Fourth street avenue the other day came to several empty barrels in the street, and he halted and asked of a boy who sat on the curb:

"Say boy, who rolled those barrels out here?"

"Pa did. We are cleaning house," was the answer.

"Whose children are those out there in the street?"

"They are ours. Ma sent 'em out to get rid of them."

"Is that your dog making such a fuss in the back yard?"

"Yes, sir. We are seeing how long he can keep it up."

"And I suppose you lugged that ladder out here?"

"Yes sir—I'm playing with it."

"Well, you seem to be doing about as you want up here?"

"Yes sir except that I can't dig that letter box off the lamp post. Haven't got a crowbar in the buggy, have you? I just want that to be bogue."

Miss De Sweet—"I'll never touch another chew of gum as long as I live."

Proud Mother—"I am glad to hear you say so, my dear; but what has reformed you so suddenly?"

"Last evening Mr. Richfellow proposed to me just at the moment when my jaws got stuck, so couldn't say anything, and he went off."

Flap—"I'm in love, and the only disagreeable thing about it is that the girl is older than I."

Jack—"How old are you now?"

"I'm eighteen."

"And the lady is what?"

"Twenty two."

"Well, make your mind easy. By the time you are twenty-one she'll be only twenty."

Husband (after some words with his wife)—"Well let us drop it. I don't care to say any more about. And, besides I like to talk to a sensible person when I am talking."

Wife (with a sarcastic laugh)—"You don't always do it, then."

H.—"I don't."

W.—"No I sometimes hear you talking to yourself."

Household Hints

Wash out common oil stains in cold water.

The nicest fire to broil with is made of charcoal.

Burnt alum is the best cure for proud flesh in "man or beast."

Pickles may be greened with cabbage leaves. Never use coloring.

When dress silks become wet pat it between the hands to dry quickly.

"William," said Mrs. Trembly, "hear that horrid dog? Isn't it awful?"

"Is that the same dog that kept us awake last night?"

"I think so. It sounds unlucky doesn't it?"

"Didn't you ever hear that the howling of a dog was a sure sign of death in the family."

"No. Whose family?"

"The dog's," said Trembly in a firm voice as stepped out of bed and reached for his revolver.

"Well, sir," said an old gentleman indignantly, "what are doing around here again. I thought the delicate hint I gave you just as you left the front door last night would give you to understand that I don't like you very well." And the speaker looked at his boot in a reminiscent way.

"It did said the young man," as a look of mingled pain and admiration came over his face. "But I though I would come and ask you—"

"Ask me what?"

"If you would like to join our football association."

Chawles—"Who is she?"

Jawdge—"My fiancee."

"Chawles—"Pshaw! I thought you had more taste. I wouldn't marry a girl who wore a red dress with a green back to it."

Jawdge—"It's the greenbacks in her pocketbook I am after, dear boy."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 4, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 50.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Slander.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet the fair good name was wilted,
And friends once fond grew stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
Its craven whispers, hushed and low—
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one,
That muttered low for very shame,
The thing the slanderer dare not name
And yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul in one short hour
Lies crushed beneath its blight.

Prize Winners.

We played progressive euchre
The livelong winter through,
She was a skillful player,
And I was lucky, too.

Our luck gave rise to envy,
And us together drew,
Whereat—since she was charming—
I murmured not. Would you?

So, when the playing ended,
Each night she took my arm,
And acting as her escort,
I yielded to loves charm.

A year now we've been married,
And, much to our surprise,
Somehow we both keep thinking
We won the booby prize.

Mine or Thine.

"You refuse me, then?"

The tone in which the few words were spoken was low and even, as if they were of no moment, but the face of Philip Lowry contradicted the forced composure. His eyes—large dark eyes full of intellect and character—were fixed upon the face of his companion with an expression of pain, and his lips quivered under his heavy moustache.

Maude Ingersoll looked at him with scorn in her blazing blue eyes, her lips curled contemptuously, and her cheeks flushed with anger.

Always a beautiful woman, her usually cold impassive face was doubly facinating when lighted with passion.

"Refuse you?" she said quickly; "Yes. You do not love me, you do not wish to marry me. You came here in obedience to the wish of my uncle, and you ask me to be your wife because he wishes you to share the wealth he left to me. I will not submit to such arbitrary wishes—to such forced wooing!"

"You mistake," was the reply; and now the voice was eager and full of passion; "I did come here because my friend—my adopted father—desired it; but my resolve was taken before I came. If I could love you, I would obey him if not, I determined never to ask for your hand. Maude, I love you. Were your uncle's wealth to be lost to you to-day, I should still plead for your hand. My whole life shall prove my love, if you will accept it. Darling!" for he saw her blue eyes soften, "you do love me?"

Her face grew hard again, and she said haughtily.

"We have talked too long. I must decline the honor you propose.

And before he could speak again, she swept past him and went to her own room, locking the door that no one might surprise her in the violent fit of weeping she could no longer control.

Love him! How could she help but love him! With a noble face, a tall manly figure, to captivate her fancy, he combined rare powers of intellect to command admiration and a tenderness almost womanly, to win her love. She had resisted each and all, and yet they conquered her.

With her whole heart Maude Ingersoll loved Philip Lowry. But she was proud, a woman accustomed to adulation, and one who fully appreciated the golden bait that was added to her personal charms.

When her uncle, Stephen Ingersoll, had sent for her from the boarding school where she was educated, he had told her that the dearest wish of his heart had been to see her the wife of his adopted son. There had been a life-long friendship between Stepen Ingersoll and Philip Lowry's father, and the boy had been a precious legacy of love. He had been educated at home sent abroad, and studied law as a profession, but his adopted father had left him but four thousand pounds out of his large forturne. There was, however, a sealed letter, and it contained two requests. One was that on his twenty-fifth birthday he should ask Maude to be his wife, and the other that he should go to Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer on the same day, and hear what he had to communicate.

Smarting still under Maude's repulse, yet sure that she loved him, Philip left the house that had been his boyhood's home to fulfil the desire of his benefactor before returning to the city where he had opened a law office.

Conscious that he had not been influenced by Maude's wealth in his wooing, it galled him to think of the avowed cause of her rejection, and it required a long walk to work off his anger before he was sufficiently composed to present himself to Mr. Freyhold, the late Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer.

He was a fussy little man, brimming over with importance, and he shook Philip's hand, and almost pushed him into a chair in his feverish impatience to impart his tidings.

"My late client," he said, after the first interchange of greeting was over, "was, as you are aware, Mr. Lowry, a very peculiar man—a man of force, to be sure, but—well, you may not be aware of the fact, but he was vacillating in some respects—very much so about the final disposal of his property.

"I did not know that certainly," Philip said.

"No! Well, he made fourteen wills in this office; some left every thing to you, some left all to Miss Maude, some divided the property. But the last one—the very last one—which was not to be opened until to-day, leaves Miss Maude four thousand pounds, and leaves you sole heir to all the rest. But Mr. Ingersoll, although he made no such condition in his will, was satisfied that this will would make no material difference to his niece, but simply place the money in her husband's hands. He told me that."

"Can I see the will?"

"Certainly—certainly. It is, you see, quite brief, but plainly expresses his wish."

"And if this one did not exist?"

"Why the money would still be Miss Maude's."

"I see. Mr. Ingersoll, you understand, Mr. Freyhold, wrote this will under a mistaken impression. Miss Maude is not engaged to me."

"Not engaged to you! But I thought you were to see her to-day, before you came here."

"She had a woman's privilege, and she took advantage of it. I did see her, and she rejected me."

"Then she will lose her money. Bless my soul! but that is hard now, isn't it? Perhaps if she understood—"

But here Mr. Freyhold choked himself, seeing the wrath upon the young man's countenance.

"I understand you, sir," Philip said coldly; "but you are quite mistaken. Miss Ingersoll would not marry me to keep her uncle's fortune, even if I gave her the opportunity. But the question need not be discussed. I love her! I tell you this that you may know why I refuse to accept riches that are taken from her. This will being made under a mistaken impression is better—There!"

And as he spoke he tore the document with his strong nervous hands across and across, and tossed the fragments into the waste paper basket.

"Bless my soul!" gasped the little lawyer. "Are you aware that there is half a million of money in the estate?"

"I am quite aware of that fact," was the quiet reply: "and I wish Miss Maude every happiness its possession can give her."

But the wish, sincere as it was, did not bring to Maude Ingersoll either happiness or rest. She had not known the strength of her love till her lover had left her. The hours when she had expected his daily visits dragged heavily, and Mrs. Marsh, the companion who represented propriety in the house of the heiress, wondered uneasily if Miss Ingersoll had, after all, a bad temper. She had been cold and proud, but never snappish before; but her sore heart made her irritable, and Mrs. Marsh certainly was trying in her praises of Mr. Lowry, and openly expressed wonder at his sudden departure.

Society was dull since Philip was no longer Maude's escort; the opera lost its charm when he was not beside her; her admirers all seemed silly and wearisome, comparing their vapid small talk with Philip's vigorous intellect and well chosen conversation.

But two years dragged along, and the wound, self-inflicted had ceased to be an ever present agony. Maude had taken up study, charity, constant occupation of varied kinds, and tried to believe she had quite lived down her heartache. The self-deception asserted itself one morning when business called her to Mr. Freyhold's office. The fussy little man, after the errand had been executed, said regretfully:

"That is sad news from Mr. Lowry. A fine young man."

"I have heard no news of him," Maude said, her heart suddenly hammering at her side with sickening rapidity.

"No? He has been seriously injured in a railway collision. He was on his way here, and was brought on in the next train, and is at the National Hotel. There is but little hope of his recovery, and if his life is spared, his left arm is gone—amputated to-day. Dear, dear! He could not do again what he did two years ago in this office."

"What was that?" Maude asked in a low choking voice.

"He would not have told you, and he may not thank me for doing so; but he, Philip Lowry, in this office, two years ago, tore into a hundred pieces the last will of Stephen Ingersoll, which left him heir to the property that is now yours."

White to her lips, Maude Ingersoll heard this story that contradicted so completely the mercenary motive with which she had charged her lover. It struck her like a blow—this proof of his devotion and generosity, but she rallied presently.

"Thank you for telling me," she said, and was gone, while Mr. Freyhold, listening as her carriage rolled away from his door, rubbed his hands together and said aloud:

"Bless my soul! I do believe I've made that affair all right."

Suffering still from the shock of his injuries, faint from loss of blood, crushed by the loss of his arm, Philip Lowry lay in his room at the National Hotel, almost hoping to die.

He had not gone home to mope over a broken heart, but had manfully borne his lost love. Still, the pain, numbed somewhat, was not dead, and when the physical torture was added, the love of life seemed gone from him.

"As well to die as to live crippled and alone!" he thought drearily, as he lay back weary and faint. "How long, I wonder, must I lie here?"

The nurse was fussing about, the doctor had just gone, and there seemed only an endless blank before him when there came a soft wish of silk across the floor.

Very slowly it approached the bed, until, bending over him, Philip saw Maude's face.

Very low her voice sounded, scarcely above a whisper, but he heard every word as she said:

"Philip, will you forgive me? I love you! I cannot live without your love. Will you let me be your wife now, Philip?"

"But you do not know," he said feebly; "my arm—"

"I know all!" she said, her lips pressing his.

"Oh, my love, do not send me away."

"I cannot!" he whispered.

Mrs. Marsh will never cease to tell of her amazement at the hasty summons to attend a wedding at the National Hotel, for Maude left Philip no more. It was his wife who nursed him back to health, and there is no question of "mine or thine" in their possession of Stephen Ingersoll's wealth.

Good for a Museum.

From the Youth's Companion.

The old lady who never spoke ill of anyone and even intimated that satan himself set some good people an example of perseverance, must have been a relative to the woman who lived in Sussex, England, in the days when the kettle was hung from the cane in an open fireplace. An English clergyman tells the story:

A man whose wife was blessed with a remarkably even temper went over the way to a neighbor one evening and said:

"Neighbor, I should like to see my wife cross for once. I've tried all I know and I can't make her cross no way."

"You can't make your wife cross?" said his neighbor. "I wish I could make mine anything else. But you do just what I tell you, and if that won't act nothing will. You bring her in some night a lot of the crookedest sticks you can get, them as won't lie in no form, and see how she makes out then."

The pieces of wood were accordingly brought in awkward and crooked and contrary as could be found. The man went away early to work and at noon returned to see the results of his experiment. He was greeted with a smile and the general request. "Tom, do bring me in some more of those crooked sticks, if you can find them; they do just fit around the kettle so nicely!"

Frog (to elephant)—How far can you jump, you big lummix?

Elephant—I can't jump at all, froggy woggy.

Frog (hoisting his shoulders)—You're unlucky. When I see an enemy approaching, with a few jumps I am out of danger.

Elephant—When I see an enemy approaching I don't have to jump.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 4 1889.

THE FOURTH.

The time is again at hand to celebrate the birth of American liberty. The people of the United States, all ages and sexes, are engaged in commemorating an event in their history that marks the beginning of free institutions.

But the Fourth is not what it was a century ago. Perhaps we make more noise, and enter into the jollification with more eagerness than our forefathers did; but it is not with the same feeling. We celebrate a liberty that is ours by gift and good fortune, but those who assembled one hundred years ago to commemorate the event, celebrated a liberty bought dearly, bought with blood and privation. Never having tasted the bitterness of foreign oppression, it is impossible for us in the evening of the nineteenth century to appreciate fully, the blessing of freedom. It is not to be wondered at that they who fought to release our land from foreign bonds should have entered with all their hearts into the celebration of that day where tyranny was forever banished from American soil. Proud of their victory, they commemorated the event with hearts full of gratitude to the God of battle, who rules the destinies of nations.

But what is the spirit of to-days excitement? It is to be feared that many who are to-day most jubilant never once reflect on the origin of the day. A dance, or a drunk, or a fight, is to some, the most desireable manner in which to commemorate the occasion, with little thought or care for the sacrifices or triumphs of others. Let us not forget what the day means, and take time for at least one grateful thought of our worthy ancestors who secured us the right to rejoice without fear.

Gubernatorial Contest.

GRAFTON, W. Va., June 26th.—Including the alleged returns from Kanawha county, General Nathan Goff had a majority over Judge A. B. Fleming of 110 votes in the November election. In the contest before the legislative committee, votes stricken out increasing this alleged majority by five votes. To-day Messrs. Kee, Sprigg, Lively, Maxwell and Morris were present at the session of the committee. The returns from Brooke county were considered. Fleming challenged 139 votes and Goff challenged 44 votes. Of those challenged by Fleming 84 votes were stricken out. Of those challenged by Goff five votes were stricken out, showing a clear gain of 79 votes in Brooke county and a net gain, so far in the contest, of 74 votes for Judge Fleming. General Goff's apparent majority at the present time, therefore, is reduced from one hundred and ten to thirty-six votes.

How the Republicans howl fraud and declare the votes were disallowed on a "technicality." If only technical objections were necessary to throw out votes, about twice the number would have been thrown out. The contest committee has been entirely impartial in its work thus far. If there has been any partiality shown it has been shown to Goff, almost all of his objections being purely technical as the records show.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Blaine's young man with bangs, William Walter Phelph, of New Jersey, has been appointed Minister to Germany. There is nothing strange about this appointment which was known and discussed in Berlin, where Phelph was with the Samoan Commission, six weeks ago, except the absurd attempt on the part of Blaine, Harrison and Phelphs to make it appear to the public that the latter was very much surprised when tendered the commission as minister, when as a matter of fact the thing has been fully settled ever since shortly after the Senate rejected the nomination of Murat Halstead to the same position. By accident I discovered the cause for this little display. Phelps wants to spend the most of the summer in this country, and it was concluded that if it was given out that the position had been given him unexpectedly, he could plead "private business" as an excuse for not going to Berlin for several months. Verily the tricks of the politicians are many.

Commissioner of Pensions Tanner is supposed to be rather thick-skinned but the charges of favoritism towards a certain firm of pension agents here which were recently made against the Pension office "broke him all up," as the boys say. Before leaving for the west, where he goes to attend several soldiers meetings, he called on the President to assure him that he was innocent of the charges. He also told the President that when he returned from this trip he proposed making a personal investigation in order to ascertain whether there was any basis for the charges.

There is to be a big discharge at the Government printing office tomorrow. I am informed that Public Printer Palmer has instructed the foremen in the several departments that be wanted none but democrats selected for dismissal.

The Indiana republicans that stay at home must be very different from those that come to Washington, or else Representative Owens, of that State, who is just from home, be fibbing when he says, speaking of his constituents: "The people of the State feel that superior to patronage, personal ambition for place, and all that, is the sense that Indiana has a President whose administration they may be proud of." For several reasons I am constrained to believe that Mr. Owens is only giving the man in the White House "taffy" with the hope of "catching on" to something for some of his aforesaid constituents. First, because in the eyes of all the republicans from Indiana that I have ever seen nothing was superior to official patronage. Secondly the administration of the Indiana man has hardly been long enough or its acts important enough to either be proud of or ashamed of.

The traveler who is at present occupying the White House is working the railroads in great shape. He returned from Cape May Monday night and to-day he has gone back there. He will return here the first of the week, bringing his family. Tuesday or Wednesday he is to carry the old lady and the babies to Deer Park where a dead-head cottage has been placed at his disposal for the summer. He is then to go to the Fourth of July celebration at Woodstock. How many drummers do more traveling than this, in the same time.

The Civil Service Commission has returned from its investigating tour. The Commissioners are disappointed and almost discouraged. In only one place did they find the law being strictly carried out—Chicago. The visits of inspection will be kept up and unless the courage of the Commission shall all ooze out the law will be strictly enforced without fear or favor. This treatment, if persisted in, will make the law a permanent thing or it will cause it to be repealed.

Mr. Porter, Superintendent of the Census, proposes to set up a little opposition to the Civil Service Commission. He refuses to take his clerks through the Commission, and has arranged a list of questions which he says all applicants must answer satisfactorily before appointment. The only difference is, if furnished by the Civil Service Commission some of the clerks would be democrats, while Porters plan makes sure of all being republicans.

Special orders have been given collectors of Internal revenue as to watching fruit distillers, during the coming season.

Eight years ago there were only forty cotton seed oil mills in the south with a capital of $3,500,000 Now there are 175 mills, with a capital of $16,000,000.

The Democratic State Convention of Virginia, will be held in Richmond on the 14th, of August when the next governor will be nominated.

The death of Hon. Simon Cameron, has removed a good man and one of the most conspicious figures in American politics. He started in life at the printer's case.

C. P. Huntington is building a ship yard at Newport News which he claims will be the largest establishment of the kind in the United States.

"A little common sense," says the New York World, "is sometimes equal to a whole volume of grammar." It is a pity that this idea cannot be hammered into the heads of pedagogues, grammarians and verbal critics.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—County Court meets next Tuesday.

—Dr. M. Wallace was in town Tuesday.

—The new mail carriers come in Monday.

—We believe it has rained every day for six weeks.

—Atty. C. F. Moore, went up to Dunmore to-day (Wednesday.)

—Levi Gay, Esq., was in our city Monday.

—Good envelopes at THE TIMES office for 15c per 100.

—Deputy Sheriff L. W. Herold, of Frost was in town Monday.

—Mr. P. M. Harper, of Sunset was in town the 1st of the month.

—Wm. H. Gross, Esq., went to Covington Monday on business.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—Teacher's Institute will be held at this place, commencing August 26th.

—Mails three times a week from here to Frost and White Sulphur now.

—Some communications were crowded out this week for lack of space that will appear next.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be be a daring June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Mr. Dan'l. O'Connell, of Anthony's creek was in the city a few days this week.

—French Hull, Esq., went down to Frankford, on a business trip the first of the week.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—We failed to call attention last week to the ad of the University of West Virginia in that issue.

—Oats and corn are looking fine, grass is good, and wheat is almost ready to cut.

—The board of education met Monday, for the purpose of settling up and allowing accounts.

—H. P. McGlaughlin, Esq., went to Highland Co., on a pleasure trip last week.

—Jno. A. McNeel, Esq., of Knapp's creek was in Huntersville Monday.

—Remember THE TIMES is $1.00 in advance and $1.25 after six months and $1.50 at the end of the year.

—Mrs. Isaac McNeel, her son Summers and little daughter, of Mill Point were the guests of Mrs. Jno. J. beard, the first of the week.

—Mr. Wm. H. Cackley, wife and little son of Dunmore, were the guests of Atty. C. F. Moore Tuesday.

—Look out there! you'll step on some poor unfortunate democratic fourth class postmaster's head, they are lying promiscuously all over the country.

—If you want a Lock Lever hay and grain rake or any repairs
Call on
H. P. MCGLAUGHLIN agent
Huntersville W. Va.

—We have received the July number of the Cosmopolitan. It is chock full of illustrated reading matter, and those who want a good magazine can do no better than to subscribe for it. Only $2.40 per year, office No. 363, 5th avenue N. Y.

—Rev. W. T. Price, of Pocahontas county, was in Lewisburg Tuesday on his way to Ronceverte to meet his daughter, Miss Susie, who has been attending school in Richmond, Va.—Independent.

—Messrs. A. J. Mires and J. A. Harold, of Pendleton county are in town. These gentlemen are here for the purpose of bidding on the bridge abutments to be replaced under the bridge across Knapp's creek at this place.

—Mr. Jas. W. Warwick Jr., of this place left last week to attend the semi-Centennial and Commencement exercises of the Virginia Military Institute. Mr. Warwick is an old student of the Institute, and we predict for him a good time at the reunion of his old class mates.

Preaching Arrangements.

Sacramental meeting at Huntersville, the second Sabbath of July. Preparatory service, Friday night before, Saturday morning, and Saturday night.

Sacramental meeting at Dunmore the fourth Sabbath of July. Preparatory services Friday night, and Saturday night before.

The assistance of a visiting minister is expected, Bro. Frierson or Wilson. There will be no dinner on the ground, services morning and night on Sabbath.

W. T. P.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Miss Grace Clark is visiting friends and relatives at Marlinton.

Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker has been in poor health for some time. He has labored faithfully for his congregation at this place for years, without any vacation, and we all all think that he richly deserves one now and should spend it in complete rest from his duties.

Mr. H. Nathan and Misses Georgia and Rose Shearer left Saturday morning to visit relatives at William's river.

The following are the officers elected by the Hillsboro Division of the Sons of Temperance, for the coming quarter:

G. R. Curry. Worthy Patriarch; G. W. Clark, Worthy Associate; Recording Scribe Miss G. M. Shearer; Assistant Recording Scribe, Miss Verdie Clark; Financial Scribe, Miss Kate Marshall; Treasurer, Mr. A. R. Smith; Conductor, Mr. Thos. Via; Asst. Con., Mr. Gus Eskridge; Chaplain, Rev. Wm. E. Miller; Inside sentinel Miss M. Curry; Outside sentinel, Mr. Wm. Wiley.

The wedding of Mr. Edward Hill, of Farmington, Washington Ty., to Miss Jennie C. Beard, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Beard was solumnized last Wednesday at the residence of the brides parents. The attendants were Messrs. Joe McNeel, Dick Beard, Sam McNeel and John Hill, and Misses Lou Ligon, Blanche Clark, Kate Beard and Pauline McNeel. The bride was attired in a handsome blue henrietta cloth, trimmed with old gold plush. Her waiters wore lovely walking costumes. The bride received many handsome bridal presents, among which were a silver butter dish by Mr. Dick Beard, silver teaspoons by Mr. Jake Beard, table cloth and napkins by Mrs. Wallace Beard, whisk broom and holder by Miss Annetta Ligon, toilet set by Miss Lou Ligon, and many other handsome and useful presents, too numerous to mention. They were tendered a handsome reception at Mr. Geo. Hill's, father of the groom, on Wednesday evening. The happy couple will leave soon for Washington Ty., where they will make their future home. Miss Jennie was one of our prettiest young ladies, and very popular, and we are sorry to see her leave, but wish both of them all happiness.

PRUNELLA.

Sons of Temperance.

Pocahontas District Division, Sons of Temperance, will meet at Hillsboro, Wednesday, July 17th, 1889, 10 o'clock, a. m. All Sub-divisions will see that they are fully represented.

The Committee on programme, has assigned to the several delegates the following subjects upon which to prepare essays, to be read at meeting of Divisions:

What can be done:—

1st. To add Interest to our Division—Geo. R. Curry.

2nd. For organizing new Divisions—E. H. Moore.

3rd. To Resussitate Dormant and Suspended Divisions—W. S. Anderson.

4th. For organizing Bands of Hope—Miss G. M. Shearer.

5th. For Distributing Temperance Literature—Miss L. M. Overholt.

6th. For Interchanging Fraternal Visits among the Divisions—D. A. Peck.

7th. For Visiting Public and Sunday schools and Addressing the Children—T. A. Bruffey.

8th. For Collecting Funds for our Work—J. H. Weiford and J. O. Hill.

9th. Relation of the Church to the Temperance cause—Rev. W. E. Miller.

10th. Responsibility of the Christian Church foi the Liquor Traffic—J. C. Loury Sr.

11. Woman's Position on the Temperance Qnestion—Mrs. J. J. Beard.

12th. Necessary for Thorough Organization—W. H. Overholt.

All members of the order are cordially invited to attend our sessions.

C. W. ESKRIDGE, D. W. P.
J. C. LOURY Jr., D. S.

A False Christ.

The little town of Rockford, Ill., is the seat of a man who pretends to be Christ returned to the earth.

He has auburn hair and beard and taking advantage of a resemblance to the conventional pictures of Jesus he declares that though his body is new and does not show the wounds into which doubting Thomas thrust his fingers, his countenance is the same. His life, outside of his blasphemous claim to divinity, is said to be blameless and his calm suavity of manner coupled with more than ordinary intelligence gives him a marvelous influence over his followers. His claim was expressed to a correspondent of the New York, Examiner as follows:

"I am the Christ. I am the perfect man. I am God. I possess all of the divine attributes, and am sinless. This is my second advent on earth, and the time is not far off when I shall make such manifestations of my divinity and power as will startle the world, and bring beleivers to me by the thousand and tens of thousands. I have unlimited power. I do not this time often work miracles, for I wish now to convert the world to truth without intervention of the super natural, but I can work them, and have done so for those who believe. (His followers testify that he works miracles.) I shall be here many years, but I am only incarnate; this body is material and must perish. When it becomes corrupt in death I shall enter another body and still live on earth." (Here is the hook for a successor to hang his claim upon.) "Many things in the gospel about my crucifixion and my former life on earth are inaccurate, and I am now writing a new version of the New Testament that will be correct."

This all came about through the holiness craze. Fifteen years ago Mrs. Dora Helen Fletcher Beekman, the wife of a Congregational minister in northern Illinois professed perfection and soon announced that she had the spirit of Christ as no other mortal ever had it. She had a considerable following in Illinois, Michigan Minnesota and Missouri. Among the converts was George Jacob Schweinfurth a young married Methodist minister who now claims divinity.

"When Mrs. Beekman died in 1883 she promised her followers that she would rise from the dead in three days. They waited seven days with unwavering faith and then Mr. Beekman, who had never been humbugged, took the responsibility of burying the corpse which had already become offensive.

Then Schweinfurth came forward. He claimed to have had a vision "through the windows of Dora Beekman's soul," and she had revealed to him that he was Christ, the Holy one. "My spirit passes into thee," she said to him as she left the world, "and thus transforms the whole being. Go forth pure and sinless, the only son of God spiritually begotten of me. Thou shalt bring all nations to worship thee."

The Beekmanities accepted his story, and their numbers increased. He told them that through a gradual transformation of his body he was to become Christ, physicaly as well as spiritually. Not long ago he assembled his followers in Chicago and told them that the transformation was complete and that he was now the Christ.

Schweinfurth's following is remarkable. Already the sect has branches in Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Leavenworth; Louisville, Cincinnati and a number of small towns. His followers are so overcome with this infatuation that they hold their property subject to their idol, and it is stated that not less than $50,000 worth of property around Rockford and $100,000 in Chicago has been deeded to him. An old man named Spencer Weldon has given Schweinfurth a magnificent farm of 800 acres, four miles south of Rockford, and there the pretender lives in princely style. He has put $20,000 worth of improvements on the place and lives in a large, elegantly furnished mansion, surrounded with beautiful lawns, drives, flowers and all the appointments of luxury. His dress is modern, and his clothing is stylish and elegant, and his deportment is that of a gentleman. His language is a careful imitation of Christ's, and he is said to be calm, quiet and polite, with no evidence of insanity in his actions.

His mansion they call heaven, and here all new converts are expected to go and receive instructions with the personal influence of the man they worship. Some of these pilgrims Schweinfurth sends into a field of labor, others to their homes, and on others especially favored he confers the degree of "angel," and takes them into his household. About sixty-five of these angels—fifty women and fifteen men—now live in the mansion with their leader. This state of affairs aroused suspicion, and some Chicago gentlemen, whose families had been broken up by the conversion of their wives and daughters, sent a female member of a Chicago Methodist church to investigate the matter. She was to enter the mansion, ingratiate herself in the pretender's favor, and, if possible, discover grounds for a criminal prosecution. The woman went and was converted, returning to Chicago a zealous believer.

The pretender has taken a remarkable hold upon people of apparent intelligence among them several ministers. A former Congregational minister, who is an alumnus of Yale and Andover, is pastor of the Chicago branch, and the leading spirit in Kansas city is the daughter of a Presbyterian minister. The members are very zealous and bold in proselyting, going into homes, prayer meetings and ministers' meetings where they watch their opportunity to rise up and announce the second coming of Christ. In one case they had to be ejected from a meeting by force.

This recalls the beginning of Mormonism which had its birth in the same region. In some respects Schweinfurth appears to be the superior of Joseph Smith, and his influence over his followers, according to accounts, is not less remarkable.

Such a spectacle in this age of schools shows that education does not relieve the world of fanaticism. This sect grew up in a region of schools, and counts among its adherents many persons of education and apparent intelligence. So far no charge of immoral conduct has been lodged against them, and the "angels" in Schweinfurth's "heaven," so far as the world knows, have done nothing to prove that they are imps. About the only thing that seems to do justice to the case is the remark of Puck in the Midsummer Night's Dream, "What fools these mortals be."

Fiduciary Notice.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

C. L. Austin Adm'r of Florence M. Austin dec'd.

S. B. Hannah Ex'or of Barbora A. Gum.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r of Accts.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
[illegible]
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
[illegible]

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, EDITOR. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 10, 1889. | Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. | No. 25.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, B. V. Hill.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Devil.

Men don't believe in a devil now, as their fathers used to do;
They've forced the door of the broadest creed to let his majesty through;
There isn't a print of his cloven foot, or a fiery dart from his bow,
To be found in earth or air to-day, for the world has voted so.

But who is mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain?
Who blights the bloom of the land today with the fiery breath of hell,
If the Devil isn't and never was? Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saints,
and digs the pits for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the field of
Time wherever God sows His wheat?
The Devil is voted not to be, and of course the thing is true;
But who is doing the kind of work the Devil alone should do?

We are told he does not go about as a roaring lion now;
But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row
To be heard in home, in Church and State, to the earth's remotest bound,
If the devil by a unanimous vote, is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith and make his bow and show
How the frauds and crimes of a single day spring up? We want to know.
The Devil was fairly voted out, and of course the Devil is gone;
But simple people would like to know who carries his business on.

Striking a Light.

In the days before the invention of friction matches the difficulty of procuring fire was so great that all pains were taken to prevent the fire on the hearth from going out. All winter long it was kept by covering the coal and brands with ashes at night. This was one of the domestic cares of our forefathers, and Homer alludes to the practice as common in his day, 3,000 years ago.

But fire could not be kept with comfort in the summer, and there would be times in the winter when the hearth would become cold. Then some coals must be brought from a neighbor's, or a new fire must be kindled in the house.

This latter process was usually accomplished by means of flint and steel. Most readers have no doubt seen a spark of fire struck out from a horse's shoe hitting a stone in the road, or from the shoes of sleigh runner grinding over rocks.

To obtain fire by this method a piece of steel, such as a file or rasp, was struck with a flint or a bit of white quartz from a granite ledge, and the spark was caught in tinder—charred cotton rags. The flint lock musket, with a few grains of powder and some tinder in the pan, was looked upon by our grandmothers as a domestic utensil. Sometimes, on a clear day, a burning glass—a lens for collecting at one point the rays of the sun—was used.

The method of producing fire by rubbing together two dry sticks is known to most boys, but it has not been often adopted by civilized people. It belongs to the ruder conditions of life.

In Thibet Capt. William Gill found practiced a more scientific method than any of these. The natives strike a light by compressed air. The apparatus used consists of a wooden cylinder, two and a half inches long by three-quarters of an inch in diameter. This is closed at one end, the base being about the size of a quill pen; an air tight piston fits into this with a large, flat knob at the top. The other end of the piston is slightly hollowed out and a very small piece of tinder is placed in the cup thus formed.

To use this the cylinder is held in one hand, the piston inserted and pushed about half way down. A very sharp blow is then given with the palm of the hand on the top of the knob. The hand must at the same time close on the kob and instantly withdraw the piston, when the tinder will be found alight. It requires skill to use the apparatus as well as science to invent it.—Youth's Companion.

The Value of Salt.

Now that there is a prospect of salt being admitted duty free, I wish to make a few remarks to the farmer readers of the New York World, says a correspondent, on what I believe to be its incomparable value. I have used it many years in the garden and on the farm in various ways, and believe it to be profitable to all who cultivate the soil. It is needless to speak of its many uses in the household or domestic economy, nor shall I urge the great advantage of supplying it to stock—cattle, sheep, hogs and horses. It is well known to be beneficial to these in keeping up good condition, and in the three last named helps to keep down internal parasites.

Salt, in moderate quantities, is good for the land—improves grass and grain and is good for nearly all vegetable crops. I have found it particularly good for onions, carrots and cabbages. Some seem to think it is only a stimulant; the same is said of lime. Be that as it will both improve the crops. Salt, in some respects, seems to have opposite properties—to be in some measure paradoxical—for, while it preserves animal fibre, it hastens the decay of many vegetable substances, insomuch that sprinkled through leaves or weeds, it helps to decompose them; and, while heavy doses kill weeds and grass, duly distributed and mixed with the soil, it is an excellent fertilizer. This is why many people have an aversion to salting their land.

But what I chiefly wish to shows is its property in destroying insects of almost every kind. Either alone or mixed with other substances it is an insecticide. Before the crop is committed to the ground it should be sown in its purity over the land wherein your insects generate in myriads. This done, one or two weeks before sowing the seed and thoroughly harrowed in through the soil, it will be absorbed thereby and will not evaporate, but remain in the ground to perform a twofold operation. When applied to the growing grain it should be incorporated with lime and distributed evenly over the crop. Worms, maggots, grubs or other insects cannot breed or live in salted earth, and if the gardner or florist, when making up his pile of compost in the spring, would add a good sprinkling of salt all through it he would have little to complain of in the way of grubs or other insects eating the roots of his roses or carnations. There are other things exceptionally good for this purpose but salt will effect the end desired.

As an instance of its immediate power on some insects, take any number of either earthworms or snails, make a pile of them and put a ring of salt around them. They will never cross the fence till they die; or sprinkle a little salt over the pile and see how many minutes they will live. Many people in mowing their lawns are greatly annoyed by the earthworm casts sticking fast to the roller, whereas a very slight sprinkling of salt would prevent this, keep down the worms and be good for the grass.

Bill Nye is now spoken of as William Adjourel, Esq.

Dogs that Learn Trades.

The dog corps, long since established in the French army, has been recently much increased, so efficient have these little soldiers become. At an early stage of the trials they gave satisfaction at advanced posts, scenting or hearing a stranger approaching even in the darkness, and quickly learning the difference between a friendly and a foreign uniform. The latest trick the military dog has learned is that of carrying dispatches between distant sections of an army or reliefs or reenforcements presumably advancing through hostile country. The system is an offshoot of the dog smugler system, which is described in the current number of Blackwood's and the steps by which the animals are taught to understand what is wanted of them are best shown by reference to that article.

The smuggler in broad day walks across the frontier, his dog by his side, leaving the latter at the house of his accomplice and returning without him. When night falls, the dog is given a beating and turned loose to find his way home. Next he has a small packet fastened to his collar, and gradually the burden is increased. Then half a dozen or more are employed at the some time; the most intelligent being given no burden, that he may the more readily act as a scout for the others. He goes ahead, they keeping well back, till he gives them the signal that the coast is clear. The customs dog from its earliest years is made to play hide and seek with bags of coffee, rolls of lace, packages of tobacco, and the like. They do not bark, being taught to sit silently in ambush and give a low growl or simply cock up their ears and point the true direction of the advancing pack.

The French army dogs, mastiffs, like the smugglers' dogs, though first they must be taken from point to point to find them again, when they get to understand the idea, and what is wanted of them, will find a distant column or command with little difficulty if given the general direction, unless it be at too great a distance, and carry messages to and fro with commendable zeal.—Scientific American.

Expensive Needles.

From an article entitled "Hard Times in the Confederacy" in the Century we quote the following: "In August, 1864, a private citizen's coat and vest, made of five yards of coarse homespun cloth, cost two hundred and thirty dollars exclusive of the price paid for the making. The trimmings consisted of old cravats; and for the cutting and putting together, a country tailor charged fifty dollars. It is safe to say that the private citizen looked a veritable guy in his new suit, in spite of its heavy drain upon his pocket book.

"In January, 1865, the material for a lady's dress which before the war would have cost ten dollars could not be bought for less than five hundred. The masculine mind is unequal to the task of guessing how great a sum might have been had for bonnets 'brought through the lines;' for in spite of patient self-sacrifice and unfaltering devotion at the bedside of the wounded in the hospital, or in ministering to the needs of relatives and dependents at home, the Southern women of those days are credited with as keen an interest in the fashions as women everywhere in civilized lands are apt to be in times of peace. It was natural that they should be so interested, even though that interest could in the main not reach beyond theory. Without it they often would have had a charm the less and a pang the more. Any feminine garment in the shape of cloak or bonnet or dress which chanced to come from the North was readily awarded its meed of praise, and reproduced by sharp-eyed observers, so far as the scarcity of materials would admit.

"But fashion's rules were necessarily much relaxed in the Southern Confederacy so far as practice went when even such articles as pins brought through the blockade sold for twelve dollars a paper, and needles for ten, with not enough of either."

Pedal Adaptability.

The Eskimo dog has the snow-shoe foot, the water dog the paddle foot, while the greyhound, for example, has a foot formed on the model best adapted too speed, that is to say, it is small, light and hard. But this modification of a foot to suit land, water or snow is to common an occurrence to cause the surprise it otherwise would, although there happens now and then a failure to adapt, which serves to emphasize the fact—as in the case of the deer, which, instead of being so modified that it can bear itself up as if on snowshoes, is obliged to let skill step in where modification fails to come. When the snow is soft it sinks helplessly in and flounders about as clumsily as any other animal less used to the feathery material; but when there is crust on the snow, as there generally is in the northern regions, even though that crust would sink under the same weight of horse flesh, the deer knows how to glide over it in safety. How much of an art this is can be best appreciated by watching how the light-footed cat will come to grief on the glistening surface of crusted snow. In spite of its sharp claws it will slip this way and that, and finally break through, where five times the weight of reindeer or moose flesh would have skimmed along with ease, speed and safety.—Scientific American.

Slightly coiled woolen articles, knitted or crocheted, may be made to look as well as new if they are carefully rubbed in flour. Cover them with flour and rub gently, as if washing, until the flour becomes dark. Take out the article and rub in clean flour until all soil is removed. Shake well and hang in the wind until no atom of flour remains in the wool. Of course one would not care to clean in this way articles that are worn next to the body but for shawls, capes and head-coverings flour answers admirably.—Boston budget.

Gladstone Has Written 365 Books.

"I had the curiosity the other day," says a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette, "in turning over a volume of the British Museum Catalogue, to examine the literary entries under the name of 'Gladstone (Right Hon. William Ewart).' The total number of them, exclusive of 'other editions' and 'other copies,' is 365. Of these, eight are in Italian, seven in French, five in German, two in Greek, two in Russian, two in Dutch, two in Welsh, one in Danish and one in Spanish. The diversity in subject is not less remarkable, but it is characteristic of Mr. Gladstone's pursuits that at least half the entries are on theological subjects."

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 10, 1889.

THE NAME OF OUR STATE.

The Wheeling Intelligencer, anxious to take the lead in some new movement, has for several weeks been earnestly advocating a change of the name of our State from West Virginia to Kanawha. So far as we are concerned, and we believe it to be the sentiment of the people of Pocahontas county, our answer is, let it alone; and if anybody don't like the name let him go to Texas. We are opposed to the change, first because there is no reason for it, and, second, because there are many reasons against it. In the history of the individual but two occasions can arise when a change of name is needful, one is marriage and the other commission of crime. The same rule applies to States. Now, our State is too young to get married; and if she were old enough, it would not be lawful to wed one so closely related as Kanawha. As to the other ground, if, as the Intelligencer contends, the State has gone republican, we can understand how a democrat might feel that the second occasion mentioned has arisen; but we can't see how the Intelligencer can consistently admit that West Virginia did something mean at the last election. Thus it is clear there is no good reason why the change should be made. Now let us note a few of the many reasons why it should not be made. When our State was born she was given the name of her mother; to change it now would be a virtual admission that the child is illegitimate; but we are not willing to admit anything of the kind. West Virginia's conception and birth were the most honorable. But there are better reasons than this why the name should not be changed. We are recorded in history, painted on canvass, written in verse, and chanted in song as West Virginia. To change our name would be to lose our identity: A thousand traditions legends and associations would forever be meaningless.

Then think of the great inconvenience and confusion that would necessarily follow the change suggested by brother Hart. We are laid down on the maps as West Virginia, our public records and documents recognize us as West Virginia, and our tongues are trained to speak it so. Change the name and we would be continually making blunders, just as we do when we write 1888 meaning 1889.

Beside all this change is not practicable. The law may call us what it pleases, but we'll call ourselves West Virginia as long as we live. The present generation will have to pass away before the people would recognize the change. But if a change were necessary, it would not be proper to call the State for any county in it. We have a Kanawha county and a Kanawha river. Now think how it would sound to say "Charleston is the Copital of Kanawha situated on the Kanawha in Kanawha!" or how would a news item of this kind read! "The steamer Kanawha, running on the Kanawha, was sunk at Kanawha Falls, Kanawha Co., Kanawha." Or this! "In passing through the Kanawha Valley, down the Kanawha, don't stop for dinner at Kanawha Falls, Kanawha Co., Kanawha, unless you Kanawha roasting ear and be satisfied."

Think too of the confusion in our mails; persons who have been accustomed to addressing their letters to W. Va. have no time nor inclination to write Kanawha instead; so as to make it short they would simply put it down Kan., and our letters would all go to Kansas.

Perhaps the terms East and West are not classical enough for the Intelligencer. If not, we will permit brother Hart to say Oriental Virginia and Occidental Virginia.

In conclusion the change would ruin the meter of one of our most popular songs:—

"Oh! the West Virginia hills,
How majestic and how grand:
With their summits bathed in glory,
Like our Prince Immanuel's land,"

Now try to sing it,

"Oh! the Kanawha hills,"

and you'll break down on the first line.

No, let the name alone. West Virginia doesn't need a change of name so much as the Intelligencer needs a change of Hart.

Marriage and Divorce Laws.

Among the many sensible and practical suggestions in Gov. Hill's message is one in reference to securing uniformity throughout the country in its marriage and divorce laws. He proposes that the New York Legislature take steps during the present session to arrange a conference between representatives from the different States, such representatives to be "able jurists, each especially qualified by education and experience" for the work mentioned.

We doubt not that if Gov. Hill and the New York Legislature take the initiative in this commendable undertaking they will meet with the hearty approval and co-opperation of the Legislatures and Executives of every State in the Union. Gov. Hill very truthfully says that under existing laws and decisions very different rules prevail as to what constitutes a marriage, and, while a certain divorced person may legally marry in some States, to do so in others, perhaps adjoining, would be a crime, even though no criminal intent existed.

It is a humiliating confession to make that such a condition exists in a country of the moral and educational advancement of this, and it is astonishing that there has not been some concerted attempt to remedy the evil long ago.

There is no institution of organized society in the United States about which there is so vague an idea as to its legal status as the institution of marriage, for what constitutes marriage in one State does not necessarily constitute it in another, and what would be cause for severing the marriage tie in one State might not be a cause in another.

The churches have their own and separate rules and customs as to both marriage and divorce, all of them, however, except the Catholic Church, leaving the actual annullment of marriage to the civil law. The churches could never agree to its adoption. The State assumes that marriage is a civil contract, must not only be made, but unmade under statutory regulations.

The first thought that naturally arises is that if the State is consistent with itself as well as mindful of the happiness and social decorum of its citizens, it should be uniform in its requirements so that what is made a fact under the law for one would be a fact for all.

It is to be hoped that Gov. Hill will not stop with simply making a proposition for a conference on this subject, but that he will follow it up with real and practical effort and have the moral support of every well-wisher for the good of society in the country.—Washington Post.

Gen. Harrison has added $10,000 to his life insurance. He sees trouble ahead.

The West Virginia Legislature will convene on Wednesday, January 9th.

One-half, or nearly one-half, of the Congressmen in the House will rise to their feet if some one suddenly calls out "Mr. Speaker."

The newspapers are giving themselves a great deal of trouble on account of Chief Justice Fuller's wearing a moustache. But it is all for nothing. He goes ahead in his usual way, and doesn't seem in the least disturbed by the cry.

The railroads of the United States represent a capital of five billion dollars, they have 150,000 miles of railway, their gross annual earnings are over $900,000,000, and they employ over three quarters of a million men.

Harrison is in a "straight betwixt the two." If he puts Blaine in the Cabinet, there will be trouble, and if he don't put him in, there will be trouble. The question for him to decide is which would be the greater trouble. Mr. Harrison has our sympathies, and if there is anything we can do to help him out of the difficulty our services are at his disposal.

Inasmuch as recently Uncle Sam's fancy lightly turned to thoughts of war, there may be interest in information as to the number of his boys he could muster were they needed to help in the battle. Besides the regular army there are over 8,000,000 men available for duty, and more than 100,000 of these already enrolled in he militia service. New York could furnish 650,000 men, Pennsylvania 580,000 Ohio and Illinois a round million together. But there is no danger of all these brave boys being called out.

We clip the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel.

Probably no Republican pilgrims ever left the city more disgusted with themselves than the West Virginia delegation was after calling on Gen. Harrison yesterday afternoon.

This delegation, composed of Chas. Burdett Hart, editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer; W. J. W. Cowden, Chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee; Charles E. Dana, a large coal operator and leading Republican of the Kanawha valley, and N. B. Scott, of Wheeling, member of the National Republican Committee for West Virginia, arrived late Wednesday night and waited impatiently till late yesterday afternoon before securing an audience with Gen. Harrison. The General, having discontinued his afternoon receptions, visitors can only see him by appointment. They were very reluctant to talk politics until they found out that they would have to wait nearly eighteen hours after their arrival before being allowed to meet Gen. Harrison.

When Gen. Harrison finally opened his door to the West Virginians they told him that the Republicans of West Virginia preferred to have their wishes made known to him by Republicans than by a Democrat like ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, and if he cared to hear them they would address him in behalf of Nathan Goff for the Cabinet. Gen. Harrison assented and dismissed them after listening impatiently for fifteen minutes.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Laster Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,		Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Sunset,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Well, there it is again!
I thought I had it fine;
But down I wrote it 88,
Instead of 89.

—The County Court meets again to morrow to attend to unfinished business.

—Miss Mary Curry, of this place has gone to the Levels to attend the Academy.

—The child of Jas. Harris, (Col.) aged about five months, died last Friday night.

—The snow storm set for the first week in Jan. by the prophets has been postponed on account of the weather.

—In this issue will be seen a card announcing a change to take place in the firm of J. C. Loury & Son, on the 15th day of Jany.

—Peter L. Cleek, Esq. of Knapp's Creek, has been right sick for some time. He is now said to be improving slowly.

—Mrs. Margaret Jackson, wife of Jas. H. Jackson, Esq., died at her home on Elk last Saturday night, of dropsy of the heart.

—Capt. Stofer, who has just returned from Elk, reports that two Mr. Gibsons, from Indiana, are visiting at Mr. Wm. Gibsons.

—The wife of W. W. Arbogast made him a New Year's present of a fine boy baby. Very appropriate indeed.

—During the last two weeks we have received so many monthly school reports for publication that it is impossible to give place to them all, so we have concluded to make no distinctions and omit all. Hope this explanation will be sufficient to satisfy those who have sent in reports.

—Literature, an illustrated weekly magazine, published by John B. Alden, 393 Pearl st., N. Y., at 50 cents a year, is one of the best and cheapest literary productions of the age. The extremely low figures at which Alden's books are sold is wonderful. The reading public owes him a liberal patronage on account of the revolution he has brought about in book making.

—A few of the Huntersville boys are in the habit of using the new bridge across Knapp's Creek for a shooting gallery. Now that the bridge is open for travel this practice should cease as there is great danger of frightening horses. We are satisfied it is done thoughtlessly and no harm is intended, and believe all the boys need is to have their attention called to the matter.

—We see from the Valley Messenger that Daniel O'Connell, Esq., who has been in charge of the lumber camps on Anthony's Creek, was very badly, if not seriously hurt last week while attempting to cross the Creek on a jam of logs. It seems that the logs broke loose, and coming down suddenly caught and crushed him, injuring him internally. The same paper also says that Mr. George Shires, Boom boss of the St. Lawrence Boom and Mfg. Co., had his leg broken, while at work on the Boom.

—Various and conflicting reports concerning Nelson Moore are being circulated. Of the last we have heard, one is that he was killed and his body burned in a steam engine, and another that he was shipped to the depot safe and sound in a goods box marked, "Poultry." If the first report be true it was foul play; and if the second be correct it was still fowl play.

—A sea monster of enormous proportions was seen by Capt. Stofer last week in the Greenbrier river. The Capt. think it was an Elephanoceross. When seen it was going up the river towards Galford's mill parting the water and ice like a snow-plow.

LATER: A muskrat was seen in the river near Levi Gay's, at 17 minutes past 2 this morning. Excitement intense.

—In this issue will be seen an account of the entertainment given by the Hillsboro Training school. This should have appeared in last weeks issue but was omitted by accident. The Misses Shearer, who are in charge of this school, have good cause to be proud of their success. The school is very much larger this year than it was last, and is patronized by some of our very best citizens, all of whom, so far as we have heard, are well pleased. There is no reason why it should not continue to grow and widen its influence.

Douthard's Creek Items.

Xmas and holidays are gone accompanied by Leap year. We are sorry we have to give the boys possession of the next four pears.

Miss Bertha Sharp who has been sick for sometime is improving.

Messers Albert and Gilbert Sharp and Perry Jackson, who spent holidays visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity returned to their work near Hillsboro last week.

The Literary and Debating Society which met at Lonely Dale school house last Friday night was largely attended.

Jan. 7. PHIL. O. SOPHER.

Edray Notes.

Miss Sarah Sharp, who has been critically ill with Pneumonia, is improving slowly.

N. G. Barlow has been quite ill, but is now better.

J. C. Warwick is off for Charleston this week.

Black-leg has made its appearance among the calves in this neighborhood. A full half pint of Spirits Turpentine given in sweet milk to a calf when first attacked will save it, as your correspondent can attist from experience.

Jan. 8. X.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. E. I. Holt is off on a business trip to Randolph. He was accompanied by his aunt, Mrs. Mary Darst, who will visit Mr. S. W. Holt of Mingo Flats.

Mrs. John Peters has been visiting her children at the H. T. Schol the past few days.

The Division of the Sons of Temperance at this place, are doing good work. Every week new members are aded. We had the pleasure of attending a public meeting, given by them, on Saturday night. The exercises were very interesting. It consisted of Public installation of the officers. J. H. Weiford gave his experience as one who had realized the dreadful effects of whiskey. W. H. Overholt made an excellent speech on intemperance. The exercises closed with music and the reading of the Temperace Journal. This band of workers are engaged in a good cause, and we hope to see every lady and gentleman a member of this Division.

VIVIAN.

Hillsboro Training School Entertainment.

The following is a programme of the entertainment given by the girls of H. T. School on Dec. 24th, 1888:

Long before the time for opening a large audience assembled at the public school building. There was not one vacant seat when the exercises opened.

PART I.

SALUTORY:
Christmas is here—Chorus.
Bell of H. T. School—Tableau.
Nellie Brown—Vocal Trio.
Infancy—Charade, one word, three sylables, three acts.
PANTOMIME:
I want to be somebody's darling—Vocal Solo.
Recollections of childhood—Tableau.
Bridle scene—Tableau.

PART II.

O! Thou Enfinite Jehovah—Quartette.
Rock of Ages—Cantata five scenes.
Ring out the Bells—Chorus.
Longfellow—Charade, one word, three sylables, one act.
Rock Me to Sleep—Illustrated Recitation.
Sleeping Beauty—Tableau.
In the Starlight—Vocal Trio.
Virginia as it was and as it is—Tableau.
Son, sit on the Rind—Tableau.
Waiting and and Watching for Three—Vocal Duet.
Prayer.

V.

The County Court

The County Court convened on the 1st day of January. The first day was mostly consumed in the installation of the new County officers.

Levi Gay was allowed $22.00 for services rendered in cases of lunacy during his term of office.

Randolph Harris was allowed $20.00 for making road to the bridge near Huntersville.

A settlement was made with Sheriff J. C. Arbogast and ordered to be recorded.

It was ordered that R. V. Hill appear before the Court on Friday, January 11th and show that he is eligable to qualify as Sheriff of Pocahontas County.

A rule was awarded against Levi Gay, late Sheriff of the County, returnable on January 11th, to show cause why he should not be proceeded against by the County for failure to make settlement as required by law.

H. S. Rucker and F. J. Snyder were appointed to examine the Clerk's office and make report to a future term of the Court.

The following official salaries were fixed for the term beginning January 1, 1889:

Sheriff, $175.00; Jailor, $75.00; Assessor, $325.00; Prosecuting Attorney, $350.00

Wm. H. Auldridge was appointed Superintendent of the Marlington and Lewisburg Turnpike on the sections now in charge of J. L. Cleek.

Amos Barlow was appointed Superintendent of the Knapp's Creek Bridge near Huntersville, with authority to keep same in repair.

The land owners along the Greenbrier river and Thorney creek road, and the Swago and Ratliff road, are summoned by the Court to appear before it on the first day of the next regular term to show cause why said roads should not be established.

Court adjourned till the 11th day of January, at 11 o'clock.

James McMillan, of Detroit Mich., has been selected to succeed Senator Palmer in the U. S. Senate. McMillan is a millionaire manufacturer of Detroit.

Judge Flemming's Attorneys have served notice of contrest on Gen. Goff. They claim to be able to establish beyond doubt that 1040 illegal votes were cast for Goff. This makes work for the Legislature.

Some of the leading colored politicians are clamoring for Cabinet recognition. They say it is time the republican party should give some such substantial evidence of its professed love for the brother in black. The colored man has yet to learn that he is not wanted in the republican party for any purpose but to cast his vote.

NOTICE.

On and after the 15th of January 1889, the firm of J. C. Loury & Son will have dissolved. By that date the accounts due the firm will be ready for settlement when we hope all who know themselves indebted to it will come forward and pay at least a part of their indebtedness. We need money badly to meet our obligations. J. H. Doyle will be received into the co-partnership—the style of the firm being Loury & Doyle; the business to be under the management of Joe Loury, Jr. and J. H. Doyle, who will sell goods at rock bottom prices for cash or trade. Please do not ask for goods on credit.

J. C. LOURY, Sr.,
J. C. LOURY, Jr.,
J. H. DOYLE.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
jan 10 4-t Printers fee $4.62.

Commissioner,s Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
jan, 10 4-t Printers fee $8.78.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 8th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.
jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $5.25.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 50	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 10	13 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 10, 1889.

White House Pets.

Nellie Arthur had a spotted Indian pony for the apple of her eye.

Mrs. Pierce was very fond of the black nag that her husband rode.

Mrs. Monroe brought the first white rabbit to the National premises.

Harriet Lane had a large staghound that was presented to her in England.

"Dolly" Madison's particular pet was a fine saddle nag. At Montpelier she had a pet sheep.

Mrs. Adams had a great goldfish and one of a bluish tint, sent her by a New England sea Captain.

Mrs. Hayes had a magnificent imported Japanese cat that was presented to her by a naval officer.

Martha Washington's chief pet was a beautiful green parrot. Mrs. Washington was also very fond of a fallow deer.

Mrs. Grant had a "strawberry roan" cow that was a superb milker and supplied her table with milk and cream.

Mrs. Bliss, President Taylor's daughter, who presided over the White House until her father's death, had a splendid white owl.

Miss Cleveland's pet while at White House was a beautiful rose which she found in the conservatory and which now bears her name.

An eagle occupied a cage at the mansion for a part of President Filmore's term, a gift from a political admirer, and the noble bird was often fed by Mrs. Filmore.

Mrs. Jackson never presided at the White House, but a large black and white coon that had been caught when young and trained by one of her faithful slaves had the run of the household.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Limit of a Horse's Speed.

Professor Brewer said, in a recent speech before the National Academy of Sciences: The English thoroughbred is a finished breed, and it has undoubtedly arrived at the summit of its excellence. There has been practically no new blood in this breed since 1780. This breed has been finished and completed in two senses: First, as to its grade, heredity, blood and character, and, secondly, as to its speed, in which the limit has been undoubtedly reached. We have faster horses than our grandfathers, but it is not likely that our grandchildren will have a faster breed than we have now.

In the case of trotters there has been a steady increase of speed. The fastest record is 2.08¾. Less than a dozen horses have ever trotted in less than 2.14.

The best record in running was made in Louisville, the time being 39¾.

The speaker showed a table, on which were the number of horses in the last few years which had made a record within five seconds of this time.

The nearest that any horse has come to this record is 1.40, which was done last year. A very large number of horses have made their record but once. There are many that have made as fast time as those that have records, but in not winning the race they got no record. The record as it now stands may be lowered. When I said that speed had reached its maximum I didn't think but that better time would be made. I think about 1.39 will be the speed of runners. Hereafter breeders will be expected to keep up this high standard of excellence rather than to making better time. I believe the thoroughbred has finished his evolution — Washington Star.

The Heroes Are Not All Dead.

It is generally believed in these prosaic days that heroism and chivalry are dead, that the material of which martyrs were made has all been exhausted, and that men are now controlled almost entirely by selfish motives.

This is the common talk of the day—we hear it on the street corners and read it in our newspapers and novels; in fact we can not go anywhere without hearing some cynical expression of disbelief in the nobility of human nature.

We do not believe that the heroes are all dead. We do not believe that James Givens who died the other day, was the last of his race. This man, Givens, was a common deck hand on the ill-fated steamer John H. Hanna. When the pilot house was on fire, the pilot unable to stand the heat of the flames, abandoned his post. At this supreme moment Givens took his place, and steered the vessel to the bank at the cost of his life.

This humble deck hand had no special incentive to urge him on. He did not rush to his death to save wife, children or sweetheart. He was simply a poor, ignorant fellow who loved his kind, and his great heart would not allow him to seek his own safety when he saw the lives of hundreds in danger. Blinded by the flame and smoke, he held on until the boat struck the shore. He was willing to die in order that others might live.

From time to time we hear of such men as Givens, and they will be heard from again. God will not let such heroes perish entirely from the face of the earth. Their shining examples blaze like beacon lights, and when they lay down their lives for their fellows there will always be others to take their places. Men are not all selfish and heartless. In the higher walks of life we have our "Chinese" Gordons; in the middle classe our Stanleys, and among the humble poor such men as James Givens, the deck hand of the steamer Hanna. While these names are on every lip it will not do to say that our heroes are all dead.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Southern Immigation Convention has adopted resolutions requesting the Legislature of Southern States to take co-opperative measures in the general plan to induce immigration Southward. The tide of immigration Westward is ebbing and the South is the coming great section of the country.

We have greater natural advantages than any other portion of the continent. Our soil is richer, our mines inexhaustible. Our climate for salubrity is unequaled; our scenery is renowned, and, political falsehoods to the contrary notwithstanding, our people are among the most genial, generous, hospitable and law abiding to be found on the globe.

All the South lacks is capital and population to develop her unequaled resources to make her commercially, socially and politically what she is naturally, the grandest portion of our country.

To this end the Southern Inter-State Immigration bureau has been established by the Montgomery Convention. It asks the aid of the Legislature of the States to be benefited.

The Legislature of West Virginia should and will examine into the subject carefully. West Virginia is probably the richest in natural advantages of all the Southern States, and has most to gain by incoming capital, population and the other advantages proposed by the Montgomery Convention, whose proceedings we commend to the attention of each individual member of the next Legislature.—Register.

An Odd Postal Regulation.

It is rather an odd thing that if you paste a printed slip on a postal card the Government will charge the receiver letter postage, while if the same matter is printed directly on the card nothing extra is demanded. The same slip which if pasted on a postal card would be charged extra for, may be put into an unsealed envelope and it will then go at printed matter rates, or the whole paper from which the clipping is taken may be sent, containing the article marked, at a much less rate than the Government would charge for the same article attached to the card. That is, the Government would rather carry four ounces for a cent than the four-fifths of an ounce for the same money.—Detroit Free Press.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 17, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year in advance. | No. 26.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, R. V. Hill.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Rosary of My Years.

BY FATHER RYAN.

Some reckon their age by years,
Some measure their life by art,
But some tell their days by the flow of their tears,
And their life by the moans of their heart.
The dials of earth may show
The length, not the depth, of years;
Few or many may come, few or many may go;
But our time is best measured by tears.

Ah! not by the silver gray
That creeps through the sunny hair,
And not by the scenes we pass on our way—
And not by the furrows the finger of care
On forehead and face have made;
Not so do we count our years;
Not by the sun of the earth—but the shade
Of our souls—and the fall of our tears.

For the young are oftimes old,
Though their brow be bright and fair,
While their blood beats warm their hearts lie cold—
O'er them the spring time—but winter is there—
And the old are oftimes young,
When their hair is thin and white;
And they sing in age as in youth they sung,
And they laugh, for their cross was light.

But bead by bead I tell
The rosary of my years,
From a cross to a crown they lead—'tis well!
And they are blessed with a blessing of tears.
Better a day of strife
Than a century of sleep;
Give me instead of a long stream of life
The tempest and tears of the deep.

A thousand joys may foam
On the billows of all the years;
But never the foam brings the brave bark home—
It reaches the heaven through tears.

A Meeting.

At a meeting of the citizens of the Little Levels, held Thursday, Dec. 20th, 1889; Isaac McNeel being made Chairman, and W. H. Overholt, Secretary. A committee of three being appointed, consisting of C. J. Stulting, Dr. J. A. Larue and W. H. Overholt to draft resolutions expressive of the objects of this meeting. The following resolutions were reported and unanimously adopted:

Resolved—That as citizens of the Little Levels we are proud of the name and character which our people have acquired as a community, as a temperate peaceful and law abiding people. That we recognize that the prosperity which has been vouchsafed, our community has been the result of good morals and good conduct of our people under the blessing of God. Therefore, desiring to preserve unimpaired the blessings we have so long enjoyed, and learning that there is an effort being made by persons who in disregard and open violation of our laws would introduce into our midst for sale and barter intoxicating drinks, in disregard of every interest which is dear to the citizens of this community.

Resolved—That we desire to express publicly our indignation at the promoters and abettors of such an enterprise and earnestly request the co-operation of every good citizen in an effort to maintain the laws in their spirit as well as letter and to bring to punishment any one who would attempt to destroy the peace, prosperity and happiness of our people by selling intoxicating drinks in in our midst.

Resolved—That we urge upon all persons who may be in any way connected with this nefarious business the wisdom and necessity of abandoning it at once. We entreat them by all that may yet remain sacred to them. In the name of our homes, our wives, our children. In the name of our young men, who are the light of our eyes and the hope of our country, as well as the pride and support of our age; contaminate them not with your foul and unholy business. Desist now from efforts which if successful can only involve you with others in ruin for be sure as God, lives your sin will find you out.

Resolved—That we warn all persons against engaging in anyway in the sale or distribution of ardent spirits in our community and earnestly pledge our united support to every lawful effort which may be made to wipe out this foul blot upon the good name of our citizens and in opposition to those who in disregard of the spirit of the law and the known sentiments of every large majority of the citizens of this community, would introduce spirituous liquors in our midst; we will stand for our homes our families our good names our property, and we warn them that we will find means to enforce our wishes, and in self defense use such means as God has given us to eradicate this evil.

Resolved—That after obtaining the signatures of the citizens of this community to these resolutions, that two copies of the same be posted at suitable places, and that a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the Pocahontas TIMES with a request that they be published.

On motion, the meeting adjourned.

ISAAC MCNEEL, Chairman.
W. H. OVERHOLT, Secretary.

A Letter to the Public

To the Public I would like to say that my school has already succeeded beyond anything that I expected. Despite the most excellent Public school with its highly accomplished and energetic faculty my school has grown until now it numbers 30 on roll. I still appeal to the citizens of Pocahontas and adjoining counties for help in building up a school for them. No enterprise of any consequence is without opposition: Therefore, with brave heart, fixed purpose, your help, and a firm trust in God I may make my coming among you a success. Last week appeared in The TIMES a program of an entertainment given by my girls and boys 24th Dec. The pith and humor were only to illustrate the frivolous side of life and the joyousness of the approaching season; while the more solid and serious parts were to characterize the thoughts which should sometimes enter the deepest recess of every heart.

I am well aware that much has been said about the entertainment and against it. Be that as it may, one thing is true, I have given it twice before in different sections of countries and before intelligent people, and nothing of fault was ever made of it before. It is reported too that Rev. Mr. Sydenstricker stopped his children from my school because of the grand failure of the entertainment. I will give you the direct language of Mr. Sydenstricker to myself. "Miss Georgie, owing to some chage to be made in the school over here, and because they lose so many recitations while attending your school. I will not send them any more, not that I have any objections to your teaching." Mr. Sydenstricker's children only took Latin from me and were necessarily absent a while from the other school. He also told me that he had heard no one object to my teaching. And in the course of conversation he told me that he was as much my friend as ever.

I am fully satisfied that the entertainment was all that it promised to be and that nothing of sin was committed, as some say. I wish my neighbor school will and earnestly trust that the efficient faculty may do much to implant and ground thorough principles in those entrusted to their care; for it is indeed a responsible position to be master of a school. Hoping to receive your aid I am yours Respectfully,

G. M. SHEARER.
Principal H. T. School.

Polled vs. Horned Cattle.

Academy, W. Va.,
Jan. 8th, 1889.

ED. TIMES: I venture this letter (if you will allow the space it will occupy) not for the sake of notoriety, nor to see my name in print, but with the hope that it may be of some interest to your readers, and thereby cause better writers to contribute of their views and opinions on matters more interesting, and that will add subscribers to your paper. It appears to me that our business men, in fact all our citizens should give your paper every available aid, both by patronizing it and by contributing to its columns. Our people lack neither the intelligence nor the time necessary to furnish you one page of good readable matter each week. Some two years ago Col. Gatewood, of Big Spring contributed a very interesting article on the subject of Silos and Ensilage. I would suggest to the Col. that another article on the same subject would be in order, as with two years experience he could give us facts demonstrated.

I am now very much interested in the subject of polled vs horned cattle, with my mind fully made up in favor of the farmer. I think there can be no question of doubt that horns will have to go: but the process of change will of necessity be slow. Every reason demands their expulsion, with none for retaining them, viz: safety to mankind as well as to the brutes themselves; comfort to the cattle and their owners in pens, barns and especially in shipping; by not being afraid of each other they will fatten faster; grown animals become like calves, lie down close together, will eat together and as many water from the same trough as can get to it.

The most human way to get rid of horns is to breed them off; and there are several species of hornless cattle that are very fine. I believe the polled Angus to be as fine a breed animal as the Durham or Hereford and quite as good or better for milk; and much hardier than either; especially adapted to our mountain ranges.

But for one I cannot wait for the slow process of breeding off the horns, so I have already dehorned 10 cows and a three year old bull about two months ago.
They are now well over it, and are really improved in appearance. I shall finish up my cows and yearlings about the 1st of April, some 30 head beside those already dehorned. I shall close by saying that on a trip last spring to and through Kansas. I know a great many dehorned cattle of all ages, and met with a gentleman (a farmer and stock raiser who was a Pocahontas boy—Dick Edmiston, son of Jas. Edmiston, dec'd.) He emigrated to Kan. directly after the war, and has been in the dehorning business for a length of time. From him I learned the process, and I am indebted to him for his interest in my welfare while his guest.

Respectfully,
F. A. RENICK.

Rely on Yourself.

For the TIMES.

Rely on yourself, and do not be satisfied with following the beaten track of others. Strike out new paths. Aim at higher attainments.

Only the indolent are satisfied with walking in the steps of others.

On early education, depends the intellectual efforts of children.

Take the child that is surrounded with everything that the young heart desires, and there is nothing left for the exercise of his own powers; nothing to expand the mind, and they never acquire that strength of mind which is necessary for extensive usefulness.

On the other hand take the child that has no luxuries. Give him a few articles and he will add others by his own invention.

The child derives his highest pleasure from doing something for himself—and the forming of self commences, with the first buddings of reason and imagination. The heart and moral affections must be cultivated, as well as the intellect, to form a noble character. Man is the maker of his own mind. God has so constituted the human intellect that it can only grow by its own action. So the childish intellect rises by its own efforts, and becomes an ornament to society, and and a blessing to the world.

BELLA F. CLARK,
Academy, W. Va.

Beecher's Adios.

Henry Ward Beecher in one of his latest sermons said: "To all the young that are coming into the church I say be young be gay, be hopeful, be mirthful. If God has given you a sparkling disposition, thank God and cultivate it. While it may not be the object of your life to have the joy that comes from these qualities, it is the privilege of your life to perform all your duties under its influence, and they can be performed in no other way so well. The world needs just such a development of Christianity. The world is full of sorrow it needs cheer. It is full of despondency; it needs hope. It is full of cowardice; it needs courage. It travails in pain; it wants a healthful atmosphere; sweet and balmy and radiant. It wants a singing Christianity. It wants the messenger of Christ to be a light-bearer, and no man has the right to make a dark lantern, to go home and open the light to himself and family alone. They that carry a burdensome, a woe-smitten face, dishonor God. It is contrary to his word. It is saying substancially to the world that all hope, all the promise of the divine presence, all the love which is poured like an atmosphere around about us every day from the bosom of Jesus Christ, is false and wrong. The man that carries a doubting, weary, saddened face misinterprets the religion of Jesus Christ."

Candidate's Pictures.

Foreman (great daily)—"Here's an order from down stairs to print a cut of Bilfkins, the People's candidate for Mayor. We haven't any cuts of him.

Able Editor—"How much did he pay for it?"

"Five dollars."

"Only $5. Scratch a beard on Lydia Pinkham and run that in.—Philadelphia Record.

A man in a Western town hauled 500 cart loads of dirt in one month, and the booming editor published it as "500 transfers of real estate for the month."

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 17, 1889.

From The Capital City.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 8.—To-day has been a lively day among the candidates for positions in the coming session of the W. Va. Legislature. Men of note from all parts of the mountain state graced the streets of this city to-day, coming principally to see how "the ball" would open up. Among those present were Judge Campbell, of Monroe, Hon. Jno. E. Kenna, Judge Fleming, Jno. D. Alderson, Esq., Col. B. Lucas and many others who have figured prominently in West Virginia politics, together with numerous applicants for pageship, clerks etc.

At 2 p. m. the Democrats held rather a conferee, but did not go into a caucus until 8 p.m. Everything worked nicely and nominations were made for the various positions to be filled to-morrow upon the convening of the House: Jos. J. Wood, Esq., from Ohio was elected Speaker of the House over Hon. Jos. Sprigg, of Hardy. J. M. Hamilton, Esq., was elected Chief Clerk over Col. J. B. Peyton, of Wheeling; W. B. Gibbs, of Roane, was elected Sergt-at-Arms over three other gentlemen.

Everything passed off as smoothly as could be in the Democratic House, but when we turn to the Republican Senate we find much dissension upon various points and up to this writing they have not brought out a man for the Pres. of that body, and as to how matters will turn out with them remains to be seen.

The Legislature will convene at 12 m. to-morrow. The Democrats will organize the House and it is probable that Col. Carr, the Union Labor Legislator may get the Presidency of the Senate since harmony doesn't reign in the Republican camps. The committees and committee clerks will be appointed Thursday morning.

Jan. 9.—The full Democratic ticket was elected in the house to-day; all by a majority of four.

The Senate stands 12 Dem., 13 Rep. and one Union Labor, (R. S. Carr). The Democrats nominated Mr. Carr for the Presidency of that body, and it has been balloting all day on the Presidency, each ballot standing a tie. So everything is at a stand-still and the Senate unorganized.

No business of importance was transacted in the House to-day.

W.

The Legislature.

The West Virginia Legislature met in Charleston on Jany. 9th. The House organized with but little difficulty, selecting Hon. J. J. Wood, of Ohio County, Speaker, J. M. Hamilton, of Calhoun County, Clerk, and W. B. Gibbs of Roane County, Sergeant-at-arms.

Since then the whole matter ended and from present indications may stay ended for some time. The republicans in the Senate seem determined that no organization of that body shall be effected; so from day to day the honorable Senators ballot for President, all to no purpose except that the fun is being had at the expense of the State, to the tune of about $500 a day.

The democrats first cast their votes for Col. Robt. Carr, of Kanawha County, but after several tie votes had been cast they agreed to support anyone the republicans might designate, rather than tie up business by a continued dead lock. No sooner, however, had the democrats gone over to the republican candidate than the republicans deserted him and scattered their vote in such a way as to make an election impossible.

What they hope to gain by this manner of conduct is not evident, unless it is that they hope by this means to prevent an investigation by the Legislature of the alleged election frauds, fearing such investigation might unearth things they prefer should remain buried.

There is certainly no excuse for such conduct, and it by no means argues well for those who indulge in it.

A Man and His Work.

Napoleon used to say that it did not matter what a man's trade was—if he was the best workman in his line he was a very superior man, deserving as much honor as anyone in the empire.

Young men just starting in life with a prejudice against manuel labor would do well to get this idea into their heads. When a man is determined to do his best work he will improve his methods, and his increasing brain-power and skill will be so apparent that the lowest honest occupation will be ennobled, and the toiler will have the respect of all good men.

We have in our mind as we write a man who might easly have made a reputation in literature, journalism or law, but he deliberately chose the occupation of a canvasser for a large publishing house. He knew that his education, abilities and tastes fitted him for a high place in some learned profession, but he was also conscious of the fact that he was born with a certain tact and magnetism which never failed to win men and bend them to his will. He was poor and wanted money, plenty of it, and quick returns for his work. He found that the prejudice against canvassing was so great that heavy commissions were offered to first-class men. So he made a contract with the publishing house, not to sell books, but to secure subscriptions for something in the art line. In fifteen years he accumulated a fortune. Last year his commissions amounted to $17,500, and he has several times refused a salary of $10,000 a year. This man feels a pride in his work. He knew that the only way to make his occupation pleasant and profitable was to go to the very top, and he went there. Men joke and sneer when they speak of book agents canvassers, but they become very thoughtful when this master of his business takes them in hand. They recognize in him great talent, an earnest purpose, and all the points that make a gentleman.

Now, there are hundreds of other occupations less popular, and involving more distasteful work than this business of canvassing, that can be elevated and made remunerative by the right men. When we say right men we mean men who will train every brain cell in their heads and every nerve and muscle in their bodies to aid them in doing absolutely perfect work.

Does all this require an exceptionally gifted person? By no means. It is utterly impossible to work intelligently with one's powers concentrated upon a definite object without achieving a marked degree of success, and the average man will find that this constant application and concentration will take the place of genius. The farmer, mechanic or clerk who will train himself mentally and physically for the best work that is possible in his field may make more or less than the canvasser whose story we have told for their encouragement, but one thing is certain—their measure of success and the development of their faculties will win admiring recognition, and they will take their place among the superior men of the community in which they live. There is more in the man than there is in the occupation.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Hood's Sarsaparilly Calendar for 1889 is one of the neatest and prettiest we have seen. If the medicine is half so geed it is well worth taking.

The Baltimore Sun says: "The Senate tariff bill has been getting along swimmingly until now by deferring consideration of items upon which the Republican Senators are not well agreed. Strange to say, sugar is the cause of most of the bitterness that is said to exist. Senators Plumb, Ingalls and Stanford oppose the proposal to cut down the duty on sugar 50 per cent. This opposition might be met by a bounty of 1 cent per pound on all sugar produced in Kansas and elsewhere in this country, but a bounty, too, might develop opposition. There are other features of the bill that are not wholly satisfactory. For a bill that is not to pass it has a great deal of work upon it. A worse tariff bill has never been proposed. No pretense is made now of protecting labor; the object is to "check imports."

Minister Phelps expects to return to the U. S. by March 4th, so that President Harrison can send a new minister to England without delay.

The County Commissioners of Kanawha county have torn down their old Court House, which they will replace by a new one costing over $100,000

The Delineator for February lately received is unusually good. This periodical is a general favorite with the ladies, and is well worth all it costs. Published by the Butterick Publishing Co., New York.

If the Legislature is as long about electing a United States Senator as it is organizing, there is danger of Kenna's term expiring before a successor is chosen.

The "kicking" element of the last Legislature seems to hava fallen into line very gratefully. The trouble is now on the other side of the house.

A very distructive cyclone swept over the country last week; paying special attention to portions of Pennsylvania. Great damage was kone to property and many lives lost at both Pittsburg and Reading.

President-elect Harrison has been persuaded to go this far with brother Blaine—he will tender him the Secretaryship of State, provided a solemn promise is made by brother Blaine that he will not take it.—Charleston Star.

Justice Barrett, of New York, has decided that by entering the sugar trust the North River Sugar Refining Company has violated its charter and forfeited its right to corporate existence. A righteous decision.

Nothing remains of the famous English settlement of Jamestown, Va., begun in 1607, save the ruins of a church tower, and this is crumbling year by year. Tree roots have cracked the monumental slabs in the church yard, and thus one of the few localities recalling the first years of American history is slowly losing its distinctive features.

Not long ago 3,000 tons of pig iron were sent from Birmingham, Ala., to Pittsburg. Since 1879 the iron production of Alabama has increased from forty tons to 282,500 tons a year. Alabama is fourth in rank—after Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois—as an iron-producing state. Tennessee holds the fifth place.

The biennial message of Gov. E. W. Wilson to the Legislature of West Virginia is now before the people. We regard it as about the ablest State paper the Governor has given us during his administration. He pays special attention to election laws and their abuses, and make what we deem wise and wholesomes suggestions to our law makers. Gov. Wilson doesn't hesitate to say what he thinks, nor to call a spade by its right name.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lester Henderson will preach during the year at the following places:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
" "	[illegible]	4 P. M.
2nd "	[illegible]	11 A. M.
" "	Bethel,	3 P. M.
3rd "	[illegible]	11 A. M.
" "	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th "	Bethel,	11 A. M.
" "	Sunset,	3 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—L. M. McClintic made a visit to Bath Co., Va., this week.

—A W. Moore, Esq., was in town Tuesday.

—Constable Jas. H. Buzzard was down at Hillsboro this week on official business.

—S. B. Moore and J. K. Gay, of Edray were in Huntersville Tuesdoy.

—Mrs. J. T. Rogers, of Mill Point was at the Huntersville Hotel Sunday.

—Call at Jacob Boner, if you want "cheap goods." "Say Yeah."

—Guy Slavens, who has been in Nebraska for some time, came home this week.

—J. W. Milligan and family are for the present stopping with H. M. Lockridge, Esq., on Knapp's creek.

—We are glad to learn that Quincy W. Poage is improving, and is now thought to be out of immediate danger.

—Those who send communications to the TIMES will please do so no later than by Monday's mail. It sometimes puts us to no little inconvenience to have them later.

—Geo. W. Wagoner took charge of Hotel Pocahontas last Tuesday. Mr. Wagoner is full of energy and push and will no doubt make a successful landlord.

—Mr. Lanty Lockridge, who has been stopping for sometime at Hotel Pocahontas, has taken up quarters at the residence of his nephew, H. M. Lockridge; but, as we promised not to put his name in the paper, we are unable to make mention of the fact.

—Justice Shrader held his first Court at this place last Thursday and will hold his next term beginning on the 24th. Between the County Court and the District Court Huntersville is well supplied with Courts.

—The January number of Babyhood, lately received, is fully up to past issues. This is a most interesting and instructive magazine. No mother should be without it. Published by Babyhood Pub. Co., 5 Beekman St., N. Y.

—Mrs. Wm L. Brown and Mrs J. H. Patterson of Green Bank, were down a few days ago to see their brother Jno. B. Slavens, who is quite ill at the Huntersville Hotel.

—The account of the meeting of the Citizens at Hillsboro which appears on the first page of this issue, was signed by seventy-nine of the citizens of that vicinity, but to save space we omitted all but the Chairman and Secretary.

—F. Lee Dever, Esq., was in town Monday. He informed us that he would start back to Duluth, Minn. this week. The Northwest seems to have used him well and he has no notion of leaving that section soon.

—Mr. H. M. Lockridge, who has been severely afflicted with rheumatism for some months, is now able to walk about on crutches. He was at church last Sunday for the first time since his recovery.

—Jas. H. Doyle is actively engaged in remodeling the ice house at the Huntersville Hotel. The ice crop just now is not very promising; but, if he should succeed in filling his new house, there will be no lack of the cooling refreshment at his Hotel next summer.

—We are in receipt of the Gordonsville Gazette, published by J. B. Canfield. Mr. Canfield seems to be making a good beginning in his new field. We hope he may succeed beyond his expectations.

—Our friend C. O. Arbogast returned from Charleston last Saturday. Charlie was an applicant for Sergeant-at-arms of the House of Delegates, and we are informed by those who ought to know that he would have gotten the place, had he been fairly dealt with.

—We hope the County Court will insist on the public respecting the order requiring all persons to address the Court from the bar. It is extremely undignified in a full grown man to spit on his hands, climb up the railing around the bench, whisper to the Court t'ill out of breath and then let go his hold and slide down.

—The Cosmopolitan, for January an illustrated monthly Magazine, published by John B. Walker, 363 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.—is before us. This number in point of excellence is fully up, the standard. We regard the Cosmopolitan as one of the very best periodical of thes day. Its pages are filled with choice illustrations and the writings of our very best English authors.

—On the first page of this issue appears an interesting letter from F. A. Renick, Esq., of Academy. We hope that many of our readers will respond to the suggestion of Mr. Renick by writing us an occasional letter on some timely topic. The contribution he asks for from Col. Gatewood would be very acceptable, and Mr. Renick must not make this his last.

Dunmore Doings.

Fine weather mixed with mud Every thing looks like spring. The birds are singing, and the hens laying.

Mr. J. B. White begins his subscription school at this place today.

But little sickness in this neighborhood.

Cattle are wintering well, and consuming a small amount of feed.

Robt. McGlaughlin is now thought to be out of danger, and will soon be himself again if he doesn't take a relapse. The child is also doing well.

Jan. 13th. TOM SAWYER.

Edray Notes.

Joe. Gibson, who has been dangerously ill for some time, is better.

A. Patterson Poage left last week for Indiana on a visit to relatives.

Geo. Palser, of Neb., in visiting friends and settling up some business in this neighborhood; he has sold his land on Buck's mountain to Mrs. Mary E. Lange.

Isaac Sharps is getting out a fine lot of cherry lumber at this place. Gay and Moore are also getting out a nice lot of cherry at their mill on crooked fork of Elk.

Esq. Barlow is full of business already; merchants and late sheriffs, as well as other are filling up the docket.

Your editorial of last week on changing the name of the State meets with hearty endorsement on the part of the people of this District. We don't want to be compelled to know a bone, or stop singing "West Virginia Hills."

X.

GUN FOR SALE.—Call on Z. T. Webb, at this place if you want a first class Winchester rifle and reloading tools for $12.00 cash.

NOTICE.

A reward of $10 will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our tools, etc. that have been stolen from the woods or along the railroad.

ST. LAWRENCE BOOM & MF'G CO.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

jan 14 4 t

The County Court.

The Court met, persuant to adjournment, last Friday morning, and continued its sitting until Saturday afternoon. The time was occupied principally in making settlements with the present sheriff and his immediate predecessor, and in deciding who shall fill that office for the next term.

The Court at last declared the office vacant and appointed Geo. W. Callison to act for the term of two years, beginning Jany. 1, 1889.

Mr. Callison, however, declined to accept the office, and the Court proceeded to appoint I. B. Moore.

Mr. Moore not being present at the time, it is not known whether he will accept; so the matter is not settled beyond a doubt yet.

The Court adjourned to meet on Monday, Jany. 21, at which time Mr. Moore will either qualify or resign and give some one else the opportunity to decline the honor.

If the office is to fall into the hands of anyone who was not regularly elected, we don't think it could be placed in charge of a better or more deserving man than I. B. Moore. He is qualified to do the work in an acceptable manner, and we feel sure he would make a good officer.

It is, of course, to be regretted that the office could not be filled by the one chosen at the polls by so handsome a majority.

A Family of Coincidences.

On Glade mountain, this State resides the most peculiar family in the country. It is a family of coincidences. The father and mother were married on the 14th day of October, they have had nine children, all of whom were born on the 14th of October; five of the children are dead, and all of them ceased to breathe on the 14th day of October. The name of the head of the family is Joshua Franklin. He says that he was a confederate soldier; that he was captured twice by the Yankees, and that he had lost two brothers in the war, and that all four of the mishaps or misfortunes of war occurred on the memorable 14th of October. In the neighborhood the Franklin family is regarded with superstition and not a human being can be prevailed upon to stay either in the house or on the premises on either day or night of the 14th of October.—Fayette Democrat.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN has long held the first rank among the leading publications regarding practical information about art, sciences, mechanics, chemistry inventions, and manufactures. No one who wishes to keep acquainted with the rapid advancement alodg these lines can dispense with it. Munn & Co., 361 Broadway, New York. Price, $3.00 a year. Copies of the paper may be seen at this office, and subscriptions received.

Simmons Liver Regulator produces no unpleasant effect upon the stomach no matter how long it is taken. A little taken at night insures refreshing sleep and a natural evacuation of the bowels. A little taken in the morning sharpens the appetite, cleanses the stomach and sweetens the breath.

"I never recommend a medicine unless I know it to be good. In a ministry of twenty-five years I have often felt the need of such a medicine, and when I found it I exclaimed 'Eureka!'"—Rev. J. P. PARKER, Proprietor "Christian Visitor," Smithfield, N. C.

A PROFITABLE BUSINESS.

Those who take an agency for a reliable enterprising house, learn their business and stick to it, "get on" in the world. People who have any idea of engaging in any canvassing business will do well to write George Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine—the great art and general publishers. They offer the most exceptional advantages to those who are sufficiently enterprising to be willing to make a push in order to better their condition. It costs nothing to try. Women make successful canvassers, as well as men. Full particulars will be sent to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

The West Virginia Freeman, Prohibition organ published at Parkersburg, has suspended publication.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 16 4-t Printers fee $4.00.

Commissioner,s Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als,

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill s Creek Road, and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4 t Printers fee $8.75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 8th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $6.[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered in the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 17, 1889.

THE COST OF WAR.

A Washington correspondent has been comparing the statistics of the loss by death of Union soldiers during the rebellion, with the mortality of other wars. Reports show that the northern and southern armies met in more than 2,000 skirmishes and battles. In 148 of these conflicts the loss on the Federal side was more than 500 men, and in at least 10 battles more than 10,000 men were reported lost on each side. The appended table shows that the combined losses of the Federal and Confederate forces, in killed, wounded and missing, in the following engagements were: Shiloh, 24,000; Antietam, 38,000; Stone river, 38,000; Chancellorsville, 28,000; Gettysburg, 54,000; Chickamauga, 33,000; McClellan's peninsular campaign, 180,000, and Sherman's campaign, 125,000.

Waterloo was one of the most desperate and bloody fields chronicled in European history, and yet Wellington's casualties were less than 12 per cent., his losses being 4,212 killed and 958 wounded out of over 100,000 men, while at Shiloh one side lost in killed and wounded 9,730 out of 34,000, while their opponents report their killed and wounded at 9,616, making the casualties about 30 per cent. At the great battle of Wagram Napoleon lost but about 5 per cent. At Wurzburg the French lost but 3 1-2 per cent., and yet the army gave up the field and retreated to the Rhine. At Rocour Marshal Saxe lost but 2 1-2 per cent. At Zurich Massena lost but 8 per cent. At Legnitz Frederick lost but 6 1-2 per cent. At Malplaquet Marlborough lost but 10 per cent., and at Ramillies the same intrepid commander lost but 6 per cent. At Contras Henry of Navarre was reported as cut to pieces, yet his loss was less than 10 per cent. At Lodi Napoleon lost 1 1-4 per cent. At Valmy Frederick William lost but 3 per cent., and at the great battles of Marengo and Austerlitz, sanguinary as they were, Napoleon lost an average of less than 14 1-2 per cent.

At Magenta and Solferino, in 1859, the average loss of both armies was less than 9 per cent. At Koniggratz, in 1866, it was 6 per cent. At Woerth, Spicheren, Mars la Tour, Gravelotte and Sedan, in 1870, the average loss was 12 per cent., while at Linden Gen. Moreau lost but 4 per cent., and the Archduke John lost but 7 per cent in killed and wounded. Americans would scarcely call this a lively skirmish. At Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Atlanta, Gettysburg, Mission Ridge, the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, the loss frequently reached, and sometimes exceeded, 40 per cent. Official statistics show that of the 2,000,000 men enlisted, there were killed in battle, 44,238; died of wounds, 49,205; died of disease, 186,216; died of unknown causes, 25,184; total, 303,843. This includes only those whose death while in the army had been actually proved. To this number should be added, first 26,000 men who are known to have died while in the hands of the enemy as prisoners of war, and many others in the same manner whose deaths are unrecorded; second, a fair percentage of the 205,795 men who are put down on the official reports as deserters and missing in action for those who participated in the war know that men frequently disappeared who, it was certain had not deserted, yet could not be otherwise officially accounted for; third, thousands who are buried in private cemeteries all over the north, who died while home on furlough. The nation's dead are buried in seventy-three national cemeteries, of which only twelve are in the northern states.

The proportion of deaths from all causes in the troops of each state was as follows: Maine, 1 in 7; New Hampshire, 1 in 7; Vermont, 1 in 6; Massachusetts, 1 in 9; Rhode Island, 1 in 11; Connecticut, 1 in 10; New York, 1 in 12; New Jersey, 1 12; Pennsylvania, 1 in 12; Delaware, 1 in 20; Maryland, 1 in 26; Ohio, 1 9; Indiana, 1 in 8; Illinois, 1 in 7; Michigan 1 in 6; Wisconsin, 1 in 7; Minnesota, 1 in 8; Iowa, 1 in 5 (nearly 6); Kansas, 1 in 5; California, 1 in 20; West Virginia, 1 in 9; Kentucky, 1 in 19; Missouri, 1 in 9.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Eating by the Alphabet.

"Have you got anything here beginning with 'k' that's good to eat?" inquired a new customer in a well-known local delicacy market last Tuesday. "How will pickled kidneys answer?" replied the clerk, after a moment's thought. "First rate. Give me a dozen cans. The kitten's life is saved," exclaimed the strange patron with enthusiasm. "I told my wife," he continued, "that if I failed to send home a kangaroo, dead or alive, before 2 o'clock I should expect to find the kitten served up for supper in the latest Chinese style. But your happy thought saved her. You see we all got tired of eating the same things day after day, and so last month we agreed that during December we would begin and eat up (or rather down) the alphabet, taking one letter a day, with bread, potatoes, tea and coffee thrown in as staples. So December 1 we inaugurated the dietary system with a bill of fare consisting of apples in many forms, apricots pickled, asparagus, almonds, and the staples. The next day's menu was beef, beets, beans, biscuits, buttermilk, bacon, and bon-bons. The following day we feasted on chicken, codfish balls, clams, celery, cucumbers (fifty cents each), crabs, cheese, cake, crackers, crullers, carrots, canned currants, canned cherries citrons, cider catsup and candy. And so it has gone on. The fifth day would have been a fast day had it not been for eggs, but we made an Easter of it. Yesterday we dined, breakfasted and supped chiefly on jellies. To-day your kidney suggestion saves us from starvation, while to-morrow we will grow fat on liver, lamb, lobster, lettuce, etc. A queer thing about our new food departure is the number of things it has led us to put in our mouths which we never thought of before."—Buffalo Express.

Charles Sumner and His Friends

Sumner was very careful of the feelings of his personal friends, many of whom disagreed emphatically with him on political subjects. Some of them were not of the same party with himself; some were not of the same wing of the party. After president Grant and his cabinet became estranged from the senator, certain of his friends failed to follow him. Among them was the journalist, Maj. Ben. Perley Poore who, in his letters and telegrams, took strong ground for the president and against the senator. The contest at the time was exceedingly bitter, and "Perley's" dispatches reflected the degree of acerbity felt by the president's friends.

Sumner's friends were inclined to take issue with the journalists, holding that the tone of his letters was incompatible with his personal relations toward the senator and brought them to Sumners attention. He would hear just enough of them to know what was being spoken of, and then, if the paper had been handed him, would throw it into the waste basket, exclaiming "I like him too well to read his letters." He was once asked, "How can you like him when he speaks of you in such terms?" and his reply was: "I like the person, not the writer; I do my duty as I see it; let him do his as he sees it. Why should we quarrel?"—Arnold Burges Johnson, in the Cosmopolitan.

Henry Watterson's Father.

One of the pleasant old young men of Washington, says the New York Tribune, is the Hon. Harvey M. Waterson, the father of Henry Watterson. Imagine to yourself a tall and slightly-built man, with a large head of gray hair, a white beard falling over his chest, and a pair of the brightest and kindest blue eyes you will find anywhere. Imagine this man to be seventy-five years old, but at the same time to move about with as firm a step as though he was but thirty-five. Listen to his voice, and it comes forth in strong chest tones. Talk to him and he will tell you that he feels younger as the years grow older and that he hopes to last for many years yet.

Said Mr. Watterson once to me in response to a question:

The first sign of a man's failing faculties is seen in his voice. I can go on the street and speak in such tones as can be heard 300 yards away. I spend my winters in Washington and my summers in Louisville, and while there I look over the exchanges in the newspaper office and scan about fifty papers a day. I am glad that I am alive and I feel that my good health at this age is due to temperance and in not allowing myself to be worried about anything. I am very careful of my eating and I have not had three unhappy hours from worry in my whole life. When I have stubbed my toe I have not cursed the universe because of my carelessness, but thanked the Lord I did not break my neck."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Jan. 31, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year in advance. | No. 28.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard,
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

DOES ANY ONE KNOW?

Does any one know what's in your heart and mine,
The sorrow and song,
The demon of sin and the angel divine,
The right and the wrong;
The dread of the darkness, the love of the day,
The ebb and the flow
Of hope and of doubt for ever and aye,
Does any one know?

Does any one dream of the love that is yours,
The heart that is mine;
The depth and the width of the cup which each pours
Of richest red wine;
Of the hate that is dark as the midnight of grief,
The anguish and woe,
The doubt clouds of halting and blind unbelief,
Does any one know?

Does any one see what we have in the heart
To love and to hate;
Of life's every motive an intricate part,
Of chance and of fate;
The memory of kisses, of starlight, of songs,
Of roses and snow,
Of women's sweet eyes, of prayers and of wrongs,
Does any know?

Does any one hearken to music of bells,
And the sigh of the sea,
And the whisper of woodlands that mystically swells
For you and for me;
The sound of the fond voices that ever respond,
In tones soft and low,
To the prayer we are breathing into the beyond,
Does any one know?

—[N. Waterman in New York Mercury.

Forest Preservation.

The series of articles by Professor Shaler in Scribner's has ably presented the topic of tree preservation, a topic the American people must positively give heed to. No nation under the sun was in times of peace ever so wasteful as our own. The increasing ease of securing a supply of food has tended for some hundreds of years, if not thousands, to render human beings less economical of means and careful of methods. The older races, like the Chinese, never waste; to them everything has its use. But we have destroyed as much as we have produced. Forests that nature raised by the labor of a thousand years we have burned up in a day. Civilization has invented the phrase clearing up, which means wanton removal of all things that stand in the way of our immediate needs. Where vast stretches of oaks covered millions of acres it is difficult to find a single grove or a single tree; but how inestimable such remains are when found! It is not wholly from the utilitarian standpoint that we look, but the æsthetic. These are like their surroundings. If it be undesirable to dwell in the forest, it is still more undesirable to dwell without the companionship of trees. But as a matter of economy and physical necessity we are compelled to have sympathy for and with the vegetable world. Our destiny, in common with the whole animal kingdom, is identified with the plant kingdom. In the struggle for existance, from the outset, there has been a mutual interdependence of all living things. If we destroy the trees we injure our own progress and prospects. In the present economy of nature protoplasm, or the bais of life, can only be created by the plant kingdom; from it we receive the same at second hand. But our existence is dependent on trees and plants in many other ways, and always has been. The earliest human races were littoral, or shore dwellers. They had no tools to work their way through forests, nor weapons to cope with the denizens of the forest. But with increase of the art of making tools human beings left the shore and roamed the forests as hunters. To the hunting races the destruction of trees was the destruction of their means of existence. The North American Indian saw only starvation in the white man's unsparing ax.

Civilization has brought us into even closer relation to trees, and dependence on vegetation. The equilibrium of the air, adjusting the proportions of carbon gases for our healthy existence, depends on trees. Malaria is not caused, but prevented, by a judicious proportion of forest land. Professor Shaler takes up the case with great energy to show that the most serious result following the destruction of our forests will be the consequent loss of soil, turning vast areas into deserts. "Already a large part of many fertile regions has been sterilized in this fashion; and each year a larger portion of our infinitely precious heritage of soil slips into rivers and finds its way to the sea, because we have deprived it of the protecting coating of vegetation." We have also to consider the immense vegetation deposit which is yearly added to the soil where forests abound. Our own culture takes from the soil, on the contrary, more than it gives. So the waste from the rain is greater in tilled soil than in wooded lands. In forests the soil is ever deepening; in open lands ever decreasing. This evil we must endure, but should be careful not to aggravate. The amount of soil now swept away annually is actually clogging the large rivers, compelling them constantly to change channels. The argument of Professor Shaler is pressed to show that no man has such a right in soil that he may be wasteful of it, or use it for the disadvantage of his neighbors. Gorvernment, he holds, should interfere to prevent waste of forests.

The question of forest preservation has been more or less considered by several of the states, but, in fact, apart from the encouragement of tree planting, little has been done in a systematic manner to regulate the use or prevent the waste of trees. Our relation to the vegetable kingdom grows even more intricate, and our serious dependence more emphasized constanly since the demands of civilization for timber and fuel increase, and must increase.

At present the greatest loss in the way of forest destruction is from fires caused by locomotives, malice or carlessness. Some of the railroads have already taken action to prevent the recurrence of the evil from locomotive sparks. The plan adopted is to clear away all timber growth for 100 feet on each side of the track. A furrow is then run along the outer edge of this space, and the whole kept mowed and clean. The loss from timber fires is not less than an average of $2,000,000 per state annually. This is wholly preventable.

The work of Professor Shaler is notable in this respect, that it makes the subject, which has been rather held to be local, to be a continental matter. He has enlarged the subject, and shown that it vitally touches the very possibility of human existence.—Globe-Democrat.

Royal Salaries in Europe.

A table recently prepared shows the royal salaries paid in Europe, and it forms interesting reading for those who have an idea that our own government is conducted on a wasteful and extravagant plan.

The emperor of Russia receives $8,250,000 per annum; the sultan of Turkey, $6,000,000; the emperor of Austria, $4,000,000; the king of Prussia, $3,000,000; the king of Italy, $2,400,000; the queen of England, $2,200,000; the queen of Spain, $1,800,000, and the king of Belgium, $500,000.

What a sermon against monarchical government this brief table contains. Eight persons, men and women—for kings and queens are nothing more—receive each year in the aggregate $28,150,000 for doing what? For doing nothing that hundreds—maybe thousands—of their subjects could not do just as well and possibly much better. Some of these monarchs get their salaries for really doing nothing. Queen Victoria, for example, has absolutely no function to perform except to represent in her royal person the idea of dominion and sovereignty. She has no part in the government of the country. The most irrepressible Irish member of parliament does more and has more to say about ruling the empire than Victoria has; and yet because she is what she is, the mere eidolon of a bygone autocracy, her loving subjects pay her over $2,000,000 every year for her own use and benefit.

The king of Prussia receives $3,000,000 a year as compensation for his arduous royal duties; and when it is considered that he is the emperor of Germany, that he is a man over 90 years of age, and that the reins of government have been for years in the hands of Bismarck, it must be admitted that, judged by republican standards, he does not earn his salary.

Probably the czar of Russia performs as much or more actual labor than any reigning sovereign in Europe. The form of goverument of Russia being a despotism, the czar must necessarily center all authority in himself and be, in fact as well as name, the fountain and source of all authority. But even for his duties, irksome, multifarious and difficult though they may be, $8,250,000 is more than they are worth, especially in view of the financial condition of Russia and the immense drain upon her resources.

The people of the United States thought they were doing a wonderful thing when they increased the president's salary from $25,000 a year to $50,000; and yet the larger amount is only a trifle over two days' salary of the emperor of Russia, while at the same time the United States is really better able to pay the president the czar's salary than Russia is to pay the czar the president's salary.

Royalty is simply an enormously expensive luxury, with nothing to recommend it except tradition and precedent, and the only wonder is that it can keep its hold so long on intelligent and progressive nations in this age of the world.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Shipping Gold to Europe.

When one recalls the millions upon millions of dollars in gold that annually seek Europe to provide for the necessities of our import trade, the question of how gold is shipped to Europe becomes a curious and interesting one. The Bank of America is the largest single shipper of gold abroad. Shipments are made in stout kegs, very like the ordinary beer kegs. Every one contains $50,000 in coin or in bar gold. The latter is the favorite for these shipments, since the government has permitted the sub-treasury to exchange bar for gold coin, as coin in $1,000,000 shipment is liable to a loss by abrasion of from eight to twenty ounces, of from $128 to $320, and the bars only lose about three-fourths of that amount. Where coin is sent double eagles are preferred. They are put in stout canvas bags, each bag containing 125 double eagles, or $5,000 and ten bags fill each keg.

About the only precaution taken against tampering with kegs is a treatment of the keg ends, technically known as "red taping." Four holes are bored at equal intervals in the projecting rim of the staves above the head. Red tape is run through these, crossing on the keg's head, the ends meeting at the center, where they are sealed to the head by the hardest of wax and stamped with the consignor's name. The average insurance is about $1,500 per $1,000,000. Then there is an expense of $2 a keg for packing and cartage aboard ship, or $200 for the same sum; and the inevitable loss by abrasion, whatever it may prove to be. There are great Wall street firms shipping from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 annually. Some of these have for years insured themselves, and assert that the saving has been sufficient to replace a loss of $1,000,000. These are large figures. But this has become a country of large figures and affairs.—Edgar L. Wakeman in Globe-Democrat.

Left Handed Writing.

"It looks like copperplate," remarked a prominent teacher of penmanship to a reporter, as he exhibited a handsome specimen of chirography from among the many specimens in his large collection.

"It couldn't have been written very rapidly," suggested the reporter.

"It was, though—as rapidly as the writer could make his fingers move."

"Probably he is a professional penman; bookkeeper or teacher likely?"

"Neither, and he only learned to write four years ago. He was a soldier. During the war he lost his right arm. After the war he became a traveling salesman. Five years ago he lost a leg in a railroad accident, and then took up penmanship. He had to learn it all over again. But by perseverance you see how much he has accomplished. He is the secretary of a mining company down town and draws $10,000 a year salary. One odd thing about this is that he never was a good penman when he had both arms. But in learning to use his left hand he acquired the art of making all of his characters plainly. He made them slowly at first, and now he can't write badly, no matter how rapidly he works."

"Did you ever know of a man's learning to use both hands equally well?"

"There are a few instances on record. I heard of a man once who not only wrote with both hands, but wrote with them at the same time and a different sentence with each hand. He was the wonder of the profession, but he was more of a freak than anything else. Ambidexterity is a great accomplishment, but such experiences as that are not valuable, save as curiosities."—New York Mail and Express.

Mrs. Jay Gould died at her home in New York last week.

Senator Frye, of Maine has been re-elected; and Senator Isham G. Harris, of Tenn. has also been returned.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville; W. Va.

Jan. 31, 1889.

POST MORTEM REBUKE.

The New York World, and a few other newspapers of less importance, have lately made themselves very busy in condemning Grover Cleveland and charging him with the defeat of the democratic party. A recent editorial of the World is very pronounced and bitter in its charges, and in our opinion inconsistent and unwise.

We do not pretend to say that Cleveland made no mistakes, nor do we doubt that he indirectly contributed to the result of November the 6th; yet we believe his blunders were committed in an honest and brave effort to redeem the pledges of his party and to secure for the people good and pure government. His mistakes consisted not in the end aimed at, but in the means he adopted to reach it.

No doubt his memorable message to Congress, which merged all other questions into the one great issue of tariff reform, was the beginning of our defeat. Not because the recommendations of that message were wrong, but because they were untimely, and resulted in arousing the opposition to such active energy as terminated in a suppression of the will of the people by political craftiness.

In this action Grover Cleveland was only aiming to do what the platform of his party had promised to do, and was urged on by his party leaders of no mean standing nor limited experience, in whom he had reason to place confidence: and among the many voices clamoring for tariff reform could be distinctly heard the deep-toned, persistent cry of the New York World. On the strength of these appeals the issue was made up, the battle fought and the cause lost, though not forever. How inconsistent and unfair it is for those who helped to make the issue, hoping to justify themselves, now to charge the failure entirely to that one man who was brave enough to lead the fight and who never wavered. Granting that to Cleveland only our defeat is chargeable, and that the New York World opposed his policy, it would now be extremely ungracious to make such an assault, since all admit that Cleveland endeavored to give the people a fair and upright administration; but as it is, when the World condemns Cleveland it condemns itself. Cleveland is the same man now that he was before the election and our opinion of him is unchanged. Let us not heap upon him the bitterness of our disappointment, but as we stood with him in triumph, let us now stand with him in defeat, nor abandon the cause we all believe to be just, because once defeated.

Judge A. C. Snyder has been elected President of the Supreme Court. Judge Snyder has made a most enviable reputation since he has been on the bench.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The dead lock in the West Virginia Legislature was broken on the 31st, after about two weeks had been consumed in doing nothing. Col. R. S. Carr, of Kanawha county was elected President of the Senate on the 126th ballot, receiving ten votes from the democrats and six from the republicans; so that neither side can claim any great victory in the result.

Col. Carr is a union labor man, and it is not known certainly how he will vote when it comes to the election of a United States Senator. He is a man of consideral ability and is said to possess in a large measure the qualities of a good presiding officer. But whether the selection be wise or not, it is a great relief to the people to have the affair ended.

Since the organization several ballots have been taken for U. S. Senator, in which the republicans have voted pretty solidly for Goff and the democrats scattering, with Kenna in the lead. These ballots, however, have but little significance, as the democrats have not been anxious to effect an election. The Constitution provides that balloting for U. S. Senator shall begin the second Tuesday after organization, but as one branch of the Legislature did not organize until a late day, the democrats think it wise to post-pone an election until the second Tuesday after the organization of the Senate. The democrats held a caucus, adopting the two-thirds rule, and agreeing to stand by the caucus nominee. Jno. E. Kenna lacked but one delegate was absent whom it is conceded is a Kenna man. So the defeat of Senator Kenna is not so certain after all. Gen. Goff can no doubt get the full vote of his party whenever he desires it; but it is estimated that he would still lack two votes, giving him the benefit of all the doubtful ones. To be sure, nothing is yet certain as to the outcome.

Nothing of importance has been done aside from political dodging.

The Democratic Party and the Future.

The editorial of the New York World, denouncing President Cleveland for the overthrow of the democratic party, was, as we have before shown, cowardly and unjust.

Here is the one undisputed fact of the late campaign: there was not a cloud in the democratic sky when President Cleveland wrote his message. Had that message not been written we should have had a walk-over. Even after it was written had the democratic convention reaffirmed the platform of 1884, on which it had already carried the country, it would still have been victorious. It made Cleveland's message the platform, and it not only thereby postponed the very tariff reform it was fighting for, but it sacrificed the weighter and more precious principles which it was carrying and which it must carry to the end of time!

President Cleveland is not to be blamed for this. He obeyed the pressing demand of the leaders to whom he had given his confidence —and his loyalty to them, meant loyalty to the party. Nor are these leaders to be blamed. They advised as they thought best.

We have no fear of party harmony in the future. What is best will be agreed on, and every democrat will support it. It is possible that the issue has been already made so aggressively that the democratic party is committed for the future to a fight for tariff reform in the same terms as those on which we have just been defeated. If so, all right. We shall do our part of the work in love and earnestness. It may be that Brother Watterson's "voice of agitation" with which he hoped to "arrest the attention" of the country (and succeeded) will be lowered and the voice of reason substituted therefor. If so, all the better and we shall fight with equal earnestness and more hope. Until the issues for 1892 are made up and their exact terms agreed on their should be the fullest discussion among democrats as to what is best. The policy of one democrat denouncing or suspecting every other democrat who differs with him, is not only unwise but unpatriotic.

When the issues are made up and the platform adopted every democrat must then sink his personal views and fall into ranks. Until then let us keep cool and study the situation seriously. Let us pocket pride and prejudice and put democratic success above every personal consideration. If every democrat will but do this we shall triumph again in 1892 in spite of the admission of republican territories and the apportionment of the new census.—Atlanta Constitution.

Amend the Electoral Law.

The error in the returns of the Presidential electors of Texas, even if not amended, would be immaterial as affecting the general result. It would simply reduce by thirteen Mr. Cleveland's vote in the electoral colleges, and leave Mr. Harrison's vote unchanged.

But the fact that such an error was committed and that the counting of the vote of Texas is thereby endangered suggests the very serious consequences that might ensue where the throwing out of the vote of a sovereign State would give the election to a defeated candidate.

It is necessary of course to have so solemn an act as the choice of a President performed by safe and systematic methods, that no question may arise as to the legitimacy of the election, but it would be well to relieve the law in some way of technicalities that, by misconstruction or oversight, might wholly revolutionize the declared will of the people at the polls.

It is known, beyond all quibble or per-adventure, that the people of Texas chose Cleveland electors at the last election—as well known as it is that the people of Maine chose Harrison electors, and a blunder of the electors in not signing their names in the proper place would never disabuse the minds of the people of the consciousness, amounting to positive knowledge, that the electors were duly and lawfully chosen.

Under no circumstances, short of an absolute failure or refusal of a State to send in its returns, should it be possible to count out the vote. It is not a small matter. It is a matter enough with changed conditions to precipitate the Republic into another civil war. The law must be so amended as to make such a catastrophe impossible.—Washington Post.

The $30,000,000 mortgage of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad was recorded at Richmond, Va., on Tuesday of last week, and is being recorded in every county on the lines of that railroad. The mortgage is made to the Central Mortgage Company of New York, and it is on the property of the road from a point on James river below Richmond, Va., to Huntington, W. Va., thence to a point of connection with the Elizabeth, Lexington & Big Sandy Road. It is also on the extension from Richmond, Va., to Newport News and thence to Phoebus, near Norfolk, Va., and also upon the line from Ashland, Ky., to Covington, Ky., and on the bridge between Covington, Ky., and Cincinnati.

SENATORS RE-ELECTED.

Illinois re-elects Senator Cullom, New Jersey re-elects Senator McPherson, Texas re-elects Senator Coke, Oregon re-elects Senator Dolphin, and North Carolina re-elects Senator Ransom. West Virginia ——!

A GOOD MOVE

Mr. Oates' bill on the subject of naturalization, if it should pass Congress, would go a long way toward reducing some of the evil which the country is undergoing from its lax methods of making citizens of aliens.

The provisions of the bill briefly stated, are requirement that an alien must reside five years in the United States before he can become a citizen; that at the expiration of that time he must appear in court and prove his residence, a good moral character and fitness for citizenship. If the case is in the United States Court, notice of his application for naturalization must be served on the representative of the United States, and likewise in the case of a State Court, the representative of the State Government must be notified and attend the hearing. The bill proposes to dispense with the present requirement of a declaration of intention.

The bill has made a favorable impression, and the indications for its becoming a law are good.—Charleston Star.

The electors who cast the vote of Texas for Mr. Cleveland omitted a material part of the statutory requirement in the business, and the President of the Senate directed the returns to be taken back to Texas for rectification. This will necessitate the re-convening of the electors at the Capitol of the State and the re-transmission of the vote to Washington. It is gravely doubted if this can be done in time to have the vote of Texas counted. It is astonishing that intelligent people will make such blunders in such serious matters. What a condition of excitement would now prevail if Cleveland had carried New York, and this Texas blunder should threaten to nullify his election!—Charleston Gazette.

It seems odd to read that a Governor's message in this country, should be printed in a foreign language at all but still stranger that more copies should be ordered printed in other languages than in English. The Texas Senate adopted a resolution to print 5,000 copies of Governor Ross' message in English, 3,000 in German, 2,000 in Bohemian and 2,000 in Spanish.

The Presidential electors for the State of Texas, in making their returns failed to endorse the envelope containing the vote, which makes it doubtful whether the vote of the Lone Star State will be counted. As the matter stands now it makes but little difference, but, if Cleveland had carried New York, it might have been a fatal mistake.

PREACHING.—Rev. J. Lester Henderson will preach for the year at the following places as stated:

1st Sunday,	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
2nd	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Dunmore,	3 P. M.
3rd	"	Huntersville,	11 A. M.
"	"	Mt. Pleasant,	4 P. M.
4th	"	Bethel,	11 A. M.
"	"	Bethel,	7 P. M.

HOME NEWS

—Locals and eggs are scarce at this season of the year.

—Henry Overholt, Esq., of Hillsboro, was in town yesterday.

—We are indebted to Hon. C. P. Dorr for the Journal of the Legislature and other public documents.

—Huntersville looks lonesome this week. No session of the County Court.

—Geo. W. Wagner, went up to Traveler's Repose last Saturday to look after his log drive on the river.

—Several drummers have recently visited our town with a line of Spring goods.

—Five or six communications that should have appeared this week are omitted because they were not communicated.

—Mrs. Pattie Yeager, who lives with her son, Peter D. Yeager, at Traveller's Repose, was so unfortunate as to fall and break both legs last Tuesday.

—A recent letter from Hon. H. A. Yeager announces that he is well pleased with his surroundings and hard at work for Uncle Sam. His address is Cheyene, Wyoming Territory.

—There will be no mail from Huntersville to Dunmore Saturday, Feb. 2d, unless it should be a cloudy day. We have prevailed on Andy Hughes to stay in doors if there's any danger of seeing his shadow.

—We have received the first number of the Clipper, a weekly independent newspaper published at Addison, W. Va. As a rule we don't have much use for so-called independent papers; hope, however, this may be an exception.

$100 REWARD.—Mitchell D. McGlaughlin offers the above reward to any one who can show a finer boy than the one born at his house on the 24th of Jany. Mitchell to be the Judge himself and the amount to be paid in Confederate money. Trot out your boys.

—The Housekeeper, a Semi Monthly periodical, devoted to domestic interests, published at Minneapolis, Minn., is among the most valuable exchanges we receive. The issue for Jany. 15, is exceedingly good. Every housekeeper ought to have it.

—The December number of Womans Work, a monthly household paper, published at Athens, Ga., is before us. This is a comparatively new periodical, but has in its short life gained an enviable reputation and has become quite a favorite with the ladies.

—We have just received Vick's Floral Guide for 1889. It is exceptionally well gotten up; even ahead of what it has been in the past, and everybody knows that it has always been good. This Guide is issued by one of the oldest and most reliable houses in the United States. If you want to deal with a thoroughly honest and responsible seedsman, send your orders to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. John H. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats, Feb. 4th and remain 4 days; Edray, Feb. 9th, 8 days; Mill Point, Feb. 20th, 3 days; Huntersville, Feb. 23rd, 2 days, and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted by the use of Cocaine. Gold fillings inserted in artificial teeth, which add very much to their natural appearance.

jan 24 4-t

Your worthy contemporary the Pocahontas Times has changed hands, and under the new management has become too funny for anything. It tells the Wheeling Intelligencer that a change of diet is more needed for it than a change of name is needed by West Virginia. Time would fail to repeat all the funny squibbs that have appeared. There is some speculation as to who the squibobist can be. The surmises most rife seem pretty equally divided between "Bill Arp" of Georgia, and "Billy Coles" of Brown's Mountain. Your correspondent ventures the conjecture that a member of the Huntersville bar could tell us something that would settle the question, if properly interviewed. Who will do it, is the question.—Pocahontas Correspondent, in Ronceverte News.

Yes, you can find out which Bill it is by consulting a Huntersville attorney. In all probability you will make his acquaintance and find his name to be Fee Bill, and not so funny after all. Try it.

Dunmore Doings.

The lumbermen are busy, getting in shape to move out.

Capt. Smith is done cutting logs and will move to the ark on Greenbrier river this week.

It is to be hoped the fording of the creek at this place will be kept free from logs in the future. A good deal of inconvenience has been occasioned for the last two or three weeks by logs in the ford.

Our people have not laid in a supply of ice yet, and it doesn't look now as if they would.

C. F. Moore, Esq., of Huntersville, was up on a flying business trip last week.

Col. Pritchard is doing a considerable logging business this season.

Street Items.

Snow and rain.

Look out for ground-hog day, and stay in your dens.

J. C. Harper is back from a trip to Hinton.

Miss Sallie Hamilton has gone to the Levels to attend School.

Robert Pritchard, Esq., of Healing Springs, Va., was in this section last week. Bob is a business man, but wears a smile when on Knapp's Creek not common among drummers.

Miss Edmonia Gum, of Hillsboro, and Otie Rimel, of Stribling Springs, Va., are visiting friends and relatives in this neighborhood

Mrs. Emma Harper, who has been dangerously ill for some time, is now improving.

We wold like to hear something more on the subject of dehorning cattle; it is a matter of interest. Can't somebody tell us how to denose hogs, and deheel mules. Success to you.

DICK.

The Philadelphia Times hears that Gen. Harrison had almost decided that it would seem too much like a public acknowledgement of the money influence in politics to give a Cabinet place to Mr. Wanamaker, who was creditdd with contributing $100,000 and raising an additional $300,000 for the campaign fund. Then Col. Quay came along and said that Mr. Wanamaker gave only $10,000.

"Was the dog fat?" asked the buyer of pelts in the old story.

"Fat!" exclaimed the man who wanted to sell the dogskin. "That dog was so——fat that——"

"Don't want it," interrupted the dealer. "Skins of fat dogs are no good."

"Oh, but he wasn't one of those —— ——fat dogs, you know," replied the man, with the stress on the first word.—N. Y. Sun.

Millionaire Washburne, of Minnesota, will succeed Millionaire Sabin of the same State in the United States Senate on March 3d, next.

AN EXCELLENT PRECEDENT.

There will be general appreciation on the part of public of the delicacy of the President and Mrs. Cleveland in their refusal to encourage the scheme for having a portrait of the present mistress of the White House painted for preservation in that house. This feeling of satisfaction will arise, not because the public would not be pleased to see Mrs. Cleveland's portrait thus conspicuously displayed, but because of gratitude that she has had the good taste, as well as the good sense, to discourage any such attempt at publicity.

If the Executive Mansion could contain, in some retired room set off mainly for this purpose, a complete collection of the portraits of all the estimable ladies who have ever graced the house, and if this could be provided at public expense the result thus obtained would be pleasing to the average American citizen. But this policy has not been persued, so that only an insignificant proportion of such portraits are so displayed, and the art of these few is not such as to encourage their increase or multiplication.

This last remark applies not only to the White House, but to the great mass of portraits in the various departments and in the Capitol. The art is not encouraging and nothing is more certain than that this will continue to be the case until the selection of fourth or fifth rate artists is taken from the subjects to be represented and lodged in some authoritative commission composed largely of artists who have made their careers and who are no longer competing for a work of this character.—Washington Post.

A large corporation for the mining of coal and the manufacture of coke has just been organized under the name of the Davis Coal and Coke Co. The company consists of Hons. H. G. Davis and Stephen B. Elkins, Col. T. B. Davis, Maj. Wm. Armstrong and Harry G. Buxton, Esq. The company's properties are located 50 miles south of Piedmont, on the line of the West Virginia Central Railroad near Thomas Station. Active operations and development of said properties commence at once. This is considered one of the finest coking coals in the country, being absolutely free from all impurities. The company will furnish work for quite a number of men in the near future.

A law in Massachusetts defines intoxicating liquor as any beverage containing more than 3 per cent. of alcohol by volume, at 60 Fahrenheit In a recent case before a jury, the State assayer testified that Jamaica ginger contained over 69 per cent. of alcohol, 8 per cent. of pure Jamaica ginger extract, and 28 per cent. of water. As ordinary whisky conthins only about 50 per cent. of alcohol, it follows that Jamaica ginger must be a pretty lively sort of temperance drink.

A St. Louis doctor has removed the brains from a dozen different frogs and healed the wound and let them go. They went off as if nothing had happened out of the usual, and it was plain that they had lost nothing of value. A frog which depended on his brains instead of his legs would stand a mighty poor show in a puddle near a school house.

General Harrison made the following remark the other day: "I have offered no Cabinet place to any man. I have not yet selected any man in my mind. No person shall be forced on me. I shall not disclose whom I will put into the Cabinet till after I am inaugurated and send their names into the Senate for confirmation." Would-be Cabinet makers can now take a rest.

PUBLIC SALE.

I will sell at public auction on the 1st day of March, 1889, the following property 225 Sheep mostly ewes 27 two-year-old Cattle, 4 Cows and 1 two-year old bull, 4 horses, one buggy and harness, one cane mill and household and kitchen furniture.

Terms of sale made known on day of sale. Sale will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JACOB McGLAUGHLIN.

At a County Court held for the county of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste, JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-t Printers fee $4.62.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 9th day of October, 188[illegible], in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner. JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $8.75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 5th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $6.26.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1.00	$ 3.00	$ 5.00	$ 8.00
Three in.	3.00	4.00	8.00	10.00
Qr. column	5.00	8.00	10.00	17.00
Half col'n	8.00	12.00	20.00	30.00
One col'n	10.00	20.00	30.00	50.00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Jan. 31, 1889.

A colored brother in the Alexandria valley, down in Georgia sent the following request for a minister to his bishop: "Send us a bishop to preach. If you can't send us a bishop send us a sliding elder; if you can't send us a slididg elder, send us a stationary preacher; if you can't send him, send us a circus rider; if you can't spare him, send us a locus preacher; if you can't spare a locus preacher, send us an exhorter." That settled it and he got a preacher.—Lincoln Journal.

The following curious story serves as an illustration: "A soldier in the time of William and Mary was tried by a court martial on a charge of having fallen asleep at midnight when on duty upon the terrace at Windsor. He denied the charge, and solemnly declared (as a proof of his having been awake at the time) that he heard St. Paul's clock strike thirteen. While under sentence of death affidavits were made by several persons that the clock actually did strike thirteen instead of twelve; whereupon he received his majesty's pardon." This statement was engraved upon the coffin plate of the old soldier.—Magazine of American History.

The Trouble of Writing.

One reason why women do not write more is because they have no really handy place into which to slip where they can pick up pen and paper. They have to spend as much time gathering materials together as it takes to write the first page; and, in that case, the thinking about writing and making up the mind to it are the worst part of the work. Business men have no such trials. But the farmer who comes in at night tired with the day's tasks finds it very hard indeed to write, even to absent children, unless there is a writing desk ready to almost manufacture a letter. It will do it with a few pen scratches. It is essential to every real home that such a writing place be provided; for no home has selfishness enough to live entirely to itself. The people who write the most welcome letters are those who write all of the little happenings of each day, and who feel that whatever interests them will interest the correspondent, in short, those who sit down and "talk" with the pen until the head is so full of what they want to say that the mind simply outruns the fingers.

[illegible] Americans.

An Englishman sends to an English newspaper the following remarks on [illegible] international question: "An American says 'sir' five hundred times where an Englishman says it once. Why? This is an Americanism so far as peculiar to Americans, and really, nothing more than a survival of old fashioned English courtesy. Dr. Johnson, even in addressing his intimate 'Bozzy,' continually repeated 'sir.' Here, Americans are more polite than English people. It is surely better to err on the right side through excess of courtesy than to address our acquaintances like dogs. We owe gratitude to Americans for setting us a good example, here, at least, as some compensation for the havoc played with our language in other respects." This observation is not only acute but accurate. Educated Englishmen in the last century addressed their friends and equals as "sir," nearly if not quite as often as Americans do to-day. In England this form of address is now seldom used except toward superiors, seniors, or total strangers, or else in an ironical sense toward one regarded as an inferior who has incurred the speaker's displeasure.—San Francisco Argonaut.

One Cent.

It is almost impossible to attach any importance to one cent, but at the same time it is very important coin at times.

It will take a circular to California and it will make you madder than a hatter and a March hare combined when you go to pay your fare on a horse-car and find that you have but four cents and a ten dollar bill. Especially when you see the conductor fold your ten dollar bill, and stow it carefully in his vest pocket, and then begin to deal you out a lot of change that looks as though it had been in circulation since the revolutionary war.

One cent is very small when presented to the organ grinder's monkey but when it is added to the rate of interest you receive on a stock, it possesses a stern magnificent grandeur that carries you away like a strain of music.

The penny, it seems, was made to put on church plates; and although a man may say it amounts to nothing, he will strike matches and lift mats and crawl about in the straw on a horse car, to find the one he drops. It is so small a coin that you have to take off your glove to take hold of it in your pocket, and yet it is so large when the baby swallows it, the chances of the baby's living are sometimes not worth a cent.

When a man speaks of a quail he will sarcastically call it a little bit of of a thing about the size of a cent; and he will speak of a girl's freckles, sarcastically, as being great big freckles, the size of a cent.

Although one cent is less than ten cents, yet one cent is a great deal larger than a dime. Many a man has gone thirsty all day with four cents in his pocket. For the want of that one cent the four was as useless as the eleven men on a jury who are held out against by one.

Gray Horses.

Experience, I think, will prove that, while "a good horse may be of any color," gray horses are strongest, healthiest, hardiest and most valuable. The crack regiment of the British army has always been one of calvalry, consisting of gray horses only. This regiment of Scot Grays made a charge at the battle of Waterloo which decided the fate of the great Napoleon, as the unfortunate Emperor afterward declared. The French stage horses are nearly all gray. This is the prevailing color of the horses of La Perche in that country, known as Percherons; also of the gigantic horses of Normandy which formed the cavalry of William the Norman, who subdued England 800 years ago by the aid of these stout horses. Gray horses are rarely unsound in feet or joints. The omnibus (or stage) horses of Paris are mostly of this color, and endure the constant travel over the stone paved streets of that city for an average period of ten years.

There is an old adage that "the gray mare is the better horse," and although this has been distorted in its meaning into an insinuation that the woman overpowers the man and makes of him her slave, this is only a modern misuse of the proverb, which is like most of such sayings the result of common experience.—New York Tribune.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. C. F. Moore, Editor. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 7, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 per year in advance. No. 29.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Notes by the Way.

Since the deep snow that fell upon the 25th of January, visiting varmints have been making things lively about Marlin's Bottom.

By the way Mr. Editor, the writer regrets you were not on hands to oppose and prevent the change in the name of this historic place, as you did so handsomely and effectively when objecting to any change in the name of West Virginia.

But to return from the digression; Sunday night a large Bear, came near Mr. Hughes house and lunched heartily on the remains of a calf, then retired to the spruce and laurel of Buckley mountain to sleep it off. He could not be found, however, by the party; headed by Andy McGlaughlin; so he must have covered his retreat very skilfully. Two or three nights afterwards, three or four wildcats patrolled the premises near Mr. McGlaughlin's who went in pursuit of them with, Messrs. Hughes and Tuke. Their dogs came upon a coon trial which was more to their liking and followed the same to a tree. By the time this interesting animal was done for, the hounds seemed to have lost all relish for wild cat operations or speculations and the chase closed abruptly.

> When languor and disease invade
> This trembling house of clay,
> 'Tis sweet to look beyond my pains,
> And long to fly away.
>
> Sweet to look inward and attend
> The whispers of his ove
> Sweet to look upward, to the place
> Where Jesus pleads above.

A recent visit to a home on Knapp's creek recalled these words to the writer's mind. He missed the presence of an afflicted lady, whose case had interested him very much the past two or three years. When a mere child, Miss Mary Ann Ruckman became a helpless invalid, and for thirty years required constant attention, as she could not walk nor see and had but little use of her hands. It has not been long since she died at the age of thirty-five years. She opened her mind confidingly to a ministerial friend, during his visits. The last time he met her, she tearfully said: "My afflictions have been great, but all my sufferings are sweetened by my Heavenly Father's love." Her mind was naturally of a superior order, her memory very retentive, and well stored with favorite passages of the scriptures, and portions of hymns. The 14th of John was one of her favorites, and among the snatches of spiritual song; nothing semed more precious to her than this:

> Dear Savior be my constant guide,
> And when the word is given
> Bid the cold waves of death divide
> And land me safe in Heaven.

Monday, January, 28, will be a memorable day in the writer's history, for he passed over the new road now in course of construction around the McGlaughlin fording.

Viewed from this road, Huntersville looks like a "thing of beauty," and may this pleasant village ever be a joy to our great and interesting county. In the writer's opinion Huntersville is just as good as she is pretty, and that is saying a great deal.

It was a pleasure to meet Billy Moore, of Brown's mountain, with his crowbar, punching the old mountain in the ribs, to tickle her just a little bit, and if I would just wait I would hear her giggle a few. He has a taste for what is amusing, and it will be a gloomy day when he fails to see the bright side of things. Long may he move lightly his horse up a flight of stony stairs, was a novel experience to the writer but it was successfully done, and a few rods more and the old road was reached.

W. T. P.

False Contentment.

With all that is justly said about the virtue of contentment, there is one species of it that lies like a worm at the core of all human progress. It is that which renders a man satisfied with his own achievements, content to remain where he is in the different spheres of activity or thought or usefulness, instead of ascending into others which are open to him and for which he may be fitted. Some men it is true, are too eager to press on beyond their powers, and become victims of "vaulting ambition which o'er-leaps itself," but others, for various reasons, shrink from new tasks, new duties and new responsibilities, and thus greatly retard their own development and lesson their value to humanity.

There is certainly a great temptation to a certain class of minds to holding back, in the fact in every forward step, though a real gain be made, there is always an apparent loss. In the school, each, promotion in a higher class brings with it a certain sense of inferiority. The boy who was even with or superior to his fellows now finds himself behind many of them. His work was easy before, and he was conscious of doing it well; now it is difficult, and he stumbles and perhaps often fails. So when he completes his course and enters college or begins a business life, he who was at the top, and looked down upon others, is now at the bottom, and is looked down upon by others. Last year he easily excelled and felt victorious; this year he has everything to learn and feels inferior. Yet it has been a long step awards, and having taken it he would not willingly go back. His present stumbling efforts are better than his past triumphs.

Life is full of such changes. As fast as one succeeds in any enterprise another opens up before him. He has grown accustomed to the first, and is conscious of doing fairly well in it. The next is yet untried, and involves not only fresh exertion and energy but a fair certainty of many mistakes and failures. The feeling of power will be replaced by the feeling of weakness, and the pleasure of success will be exchanged for the disappointment of short-coming. Many shrink from these painful sensations and remain satisfied with the peaceful and quiet discharge of the duties to which they have become habituated. They have, perhaps, succeeded well in their business and their domestic life. Every one respects the industry, energy, and fidelity which they have put into their work, and they, too, are satisfied. But in someway they are invited to new and untried paths. Some needed reform claims their activity and judgment, or some political crisis calls upon them to arise and espouse with all their might a cause which they have hitherto held but languidly. Or humanity, in some of its many forms of suffering, demands of them more practical aid than it has ever occurred to them to bestow. Or some truth, to which they have given only a passive assent, now needs the active endeavors of every one of its adherents to promulgate and uphold it. But they hesitate to obey the call, whatever it may be, and find plausible reasons for not responding. It is all new to them, and they doubt their powers; some one else, they think, can be found better fitted than they; their present duties claim all their time; they are contented as they are, and have no ambition to extend their sphere or multiply their obligations. Now, this kind of contentment is the one which works harm instead of good. To be content with the condition of life in which we are placed, and the circumstances which surround us, is a wholesome state of mind; but to be contented with our achievements as to be unwilling to attempt others—to be so satisfied with the height we have gained that we refuse to ascend further, to be so well pleased with our small successes that we decline to risk our reputation in further endeavors—this is an apathy which will crush all advancements and prevent the healthy growth of human power.

There is another practice which grows out of this indolent self-complacency and is the source of much cruel injustice. Such persons very often criticise in a cold and unfeeling manner those who are trying to do the very things which they have themselves refused to attempt. They seem to imagine that, because they will not touch a burden that is to be borne, they are absolved from all obligation concerning it, and that those who do try manfully to carry it are expected neither to faint nor to falter. They willl look coolly on while some brave reformer or generous philanthropist is struggling to help his fellow men, and criticise his methods or his manner, and declare how differently they would conduct the affair if they attempted it. They do not see that, with all the blunders and failures he can make, he is far nobler than they, who, assuming to know better, yet refuse, through indolence or pride, to put forth a single effort in the matter. His feeblest attempts ought rather to fill them with shame and humiliation that they have fallen so far behind him.

No past success or perfectness can be any excuse for such remissness. It only affords more reason why men should press on to further efforts. As fast as any new duty is revealed to a man, or any great need of humanity appeals to his heart, or any truth or principle requires his assistance, an obligation is at once created which he can by no means repudiate or reason away. It stands there, either to welcome him to a higher life in its fulfillment than he has ever known before, or to reproach him for neglecting its rightful claims.

> "Unless above himself he can > Erect himself, how poor a thing is man."

—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Vanderbilt Marriages.

A quiet citizen, worth his half million or more, said to me: "I always had some respect for the late William Vanderbilt and his wife when I saw how indifferent they were in the marriage of their children to money consideration. In most cases they let their children marry persons of respectability and good parentage, but without fortunes. That has been almost uniformly the case. William K. Vanderbilt, who built the $2,000,000 house, married a Virginia woman who could hardly keep her wardrobe, I have understood, from going to sale. And yet," said he, "in nearly every case they appear to be happy folks who go together. How much better it is than this everlasting greed to make love itself administer to avarice."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Senator Vance Loses an Eye.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The intimate friends of Senator Vance of North Carolina were exceedingly anxious about him today as they knew that he was undergoing a painful surgical operation. It was successfully accomplished this afternoon, word coming to the Senate at 4 o'clock that the jolly Senator had suffered the loss of an eye, which was removed to prevent the spread of a very painful disease. It is a fact not generally known among the colleagues of Senator Vance that he has been blind in one eye for more than a year, owing to a painful affliction something akin to erysipelas. All during the prolonged tariff debate, just closed, Senator Vance, who took a leading part in upholding the Democratic side of the argument, has experienced great torture, which finally became so unbearable and threatening that treatment became necessary. A few days ago the oculists told the Senator that it would be necessary to remove the blind eye to avoid the loss of sight in the other one. With his characteristic humor Senator Vance replied that as his right eye offended him they might pluck it out, and they did so to-day.

Mr. Vance is one of the most popular men in the Senate—genial, witty, and good-hearted. He is an inimitable mimic and story teller, and is on good terms with Republicans and Democrats. Every man in the Senate was deeply pained to hear of his misfortune and sent many anxious inquiries to his house to-day. When they learned that he had borne the painful operation pluckily, and that he will be in his seat in the Senate again in a few days as well as ever, they were greatly gratified. When Mr. Vance returns to the chamber he will wear an artificial eye, which will answer some purposes, but which will fail to twinkle when its owner relates his quaint anecdotes.—N. Y. Sun.

Conscience Money.

One phase in business life which is not an uncommon one, and which shows that the world wags not as badly as it is said to do, is the returning to the merchants of "conscience money." It very often comes under our notice. The last occasion I observed was the other day at Barr's when a well known Catholic clergyman came up to Mr. Franklin, by whom I was standing, and handed him $30, which a penitent of his had asked him to restore to Barr's. Whether the amount the repentant creature returned had been taken in money or goods of course no one knew, and equally so of course only the priest knew the name of the person making restitution. Not very long ago a widow who had been very wealthy, but had been robbed of everything was surprised by a visit of a gentleman who had formerly known her husband. He handed her $200, which he said had just come to him directed to his care to be delivered to her, simply labeled "Conscience money." You have heard the story of the man who sent $20 anonymously to a shop keeper, with this laconic note: "Here is $20 of money, which I stole from you. I send because my conscience 'naws;' when it 'naws' again I will send the 'other $20.'" This philosopher, illiterate, penitent is a fair sample of the kind we run across.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Pocahontas Times.

S. C. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 7, 1889.

THE LEGISLATURE.

When it was announced some some days ago that the dead-lock had at last been broken and the organization of the Senate effected, the disgusted public indulged the hope that such folly was ended, at least for this session. It was generally believed that, inasmuch as the democrats held the power to elect a United States Senator by so small a majority, they would certainly be too wise to cast anything but a unanimous vote. But, alas! we find ourselves mistaken. History is repeating itself, and the scenes of 1887 are being re-enacted.

The feature we most regret, however, is that the tie-up is partly occasioned by the conduct of our own representative, Mr. C. P. Dorr; which is as much a matter of of surprise as it is of regret. When we recall the fact that Mr. Dorr was nominated by a convention and earnestly supported by many because he was the party's nominee and for no other reason, it seem exceedingly inconsistent for him now to place himself in the attitude of a bolter.

If we properly understand it, Jno. E. Kenna was nominated in caucus by more than a two-thirds vote, thus proving him to be the decided favorite. Furthermore we believe Kenna to be the choice of nine-tenths of Mr. Dorr's constitnents, Then we are totally unable to see how Mr. Dorr can fail to support Kenna and at the same time be true to his constituency, true to his party, and true to his pledges virtually made, if not explicitly.

He may have reasons sufficient to satisfy himself that his stand is justly taken: if so, the people have a right to know those reasons. Mr. Dorr has sense enough to know that nothing in the nature of a personal difference or prejudice should keep him from supporting the nominee of the democratic caucus; and he will later discover that nothing of that character will suffice to justify his action in the eyes of those who entrusted to him the right to represent them.

We sincerely hope he will no longer persist in delaying an election, but will at once fall into line and, though it be late, still show us that our confidence was not misplaced when we cast our votes for him on the 6th of Nov. last.

Hon Anthony Higgins is the first Republican to represent Delaware in the United States Senate. Another remarkable thing is that for thirty six years, more than the life time of a generation, either a Bayard or a Saulsbury has occupied that distinguished position.

Congressman Springer, of Illinois, has introduced a resolution in the House, making the Presidential term six years and ineligibility for a second term.

Stand by the Caucus.

From the outset the Gazette has tied itself to no man's interest in the Senatorial contest. It has expressed no preference; it has not decried any gentleman's claims to the support of the democratic majority for the office of Senator. It has expressed itself with genuine sincerity in favor of whomever the democrats should, in the wisdom of the majority, select for its honors, and has remained neutral as to all. It has pleaded with earnestness for harmony; for the laying down of all motives, and the burying of all prejudices that could by possibility interfere with the attainment of that condition of organization necessary to the very preservation of the democratic party. We have asked nothing else and we have desired nothing else.

There is not the shadow of a doubt that our position is in full accord with and has the hearty sympathy of every true democrat of the State. And there is no doubt that to-day, more than ever before, the democrats are fearfully and anxiously looking to the action of the democratic majority in the State Legislature to put an end to the fights and feuds that have demoralized the party, and delivered it almost to absolute defeat, and, by concert of action, repair the damage that it has already suffered.

But what is the spectacle that now presents itself? A democratic caucus by two-thirds vote nominates Mr. Kenna for the office of United States Senator, and yet, when the ballot is taken in the Joint Assembly, the sense of the democratic party, fully and rightfully and fairly expressed by the highest and only authority in the party, is disregarded from motives that form no excuse for disobedience, and that should not be entertained by anyone who occupies his position by virtue of democrotic votes.

This is not a question to be determined by any man's personal whims, or by any man's ideas for what is best or worst, expedient or inexpedient for the party. The party judges of all these matters for itself, and in this case it has judged wisely or unwisely, no matter. Mr. Kenna is the regular, legitimately nominated candidate of the democratic party for the United States Senator. It is the duty of the democratic members of the Legislature to elect him.

It is a shame, it is wrong, it is dangerous in the highest degree to defy all the laws and precedents of the party, and risk its only chance of salvation as is being done now.

This is our position on the matter as it now stands, and it would be our position no matter who stood in Mr. Kenna's shoes.

The first principle of democracy is obedience to the will of the majority.—Charleston Gazette.

An appeal is made to the people of this city in behalf of the National Home for Maimed Confederate Veterians at Austin, Texas. We trust that there will be a generous response to it on the part of our fellow citizens, including the Union veterans of the war. It is agreeable to hear that many of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic have already taken an interest in it. A goodly sum has recently been added to the fund by the people of Boston, and an attempt to raise contributions is to be made in other Northern cities. The institution that has been established at Austin for the past two years, is wholly inadequate to meet the demands upon it, and the desire of its managers is to raise means for the erection of a structure to replace the small wooden building which is now the Confederate Home. We trust that they may very soon be able to do this, and that New York will assist them in the philanthropic undertaking.—N. Y. Sun.

A Reservoir Runs Away.

The reservoir at Roanoke, Va., mysteriously sank during a recent night. There were 2,500,000 gallons of water in the reservoir in the morning. Now there is nothing but a water abyss to be seen. The hole in the bottom of the basin is about fifteen feet in diameter, and there are large cracks in the earth extending in very direction. The water disappeared within five minutes. The Roanoke Waterworks Company's reservoir is located on Mill Mountain, about two miles south of the city. Two immense basins were only completed in the latter part of the past summer at a cost of $50,000. They are immense holes dug in the mountain's side, large enough to hold 1,500,000 gallons of water each. They were tamped with white clay and lined with brick laid with cement, after which a heavy coat of the best cement that could be procured was worked over the inside of the brick wall. The work was superintended by Howard Murphy, of Philadelphia, a hydraulic engineer of long and successful experience.

Vice President Trout when asked what he thought was the cause, said it was evidently due to caverns in that section.—Philadelphia Times.

Just what the Samoan trouble will end in is yet unknown. It is not likely that the United States and Germany will go to war; yet such a thing is among the probabilities. While the bone of contention is of little intrinsic value, the principle involved is one of great importance, and our government should act with firmness. The conduct of Secretary Bayard in the matter is highly satisfactory and commendable. Latest advices indicate that Bismark, the Dutchman, is beginning to weaken at the knees. While we are not so well prepared for naval warfare as we should be, still with the recent additions to our navy we could make it lively for the boys.

The House of Delegates unanimously adopted a resolution yerterday, refusing to consider any question connected with West Virginia's supposed share of the indebtedness of Old Virginia. To put the matter beyond all fear of recurring to vex their deliberations during this session, a motion was made to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution, and the motion to reconsider was laid on the table,

This to our mind, was a very wise disposition of the matter. There is no sense in vexing our State with this question until the action of Virginia shall create some basis for it.—Charleston Gazette.

New York city has been having considerable trouble with the employees of her street car lines. About 5,000 men have been on a strike for several days, not only refusing to work but endeavoring to keep others from taking their places. All cars that have been run for the last week have been under police protection. The mob has repeatedly undertaken to terrorize the city authorities, but have been checked in their attempts with but little difficulty. The trouble is not yet ended, but gradually dying out.

General Lawton, of Georgia, the American Minister to Austria, has forwarded his resignation, to take effect on the 5th of March, and will return to this country early in the summer. He is a man of sense and a gentleman, and has filled a diplomatic position in which there was little or nothing to do, as a man of sense and a gentleman should.

West Virginia's share of the money to be returned under the Direct Tax bill will be $181,306.

St. Louis has no less than 78 Chinese laundries, and pays out over $100,000 annually to Mongolians to have its washing done.

It is stated with a good deal of certainty by the leading newspapers that Senator Allison has declined a Cabinet position. A rare man he is, if that be true.

The latest news from Charleston is that one of the kickers has fallen into line and voted for Kenna. Dorr, however, is still unaccountably standing off. He is gaining considerable notoriety by his conduct, but not of a kind to be envied.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—The president has notified congress that Count Arco-Valley, the Germay minister, has informed the state department that Germay troops would be withdrawn from Samoa and the neutrality of Samoa preservad.—Charleston Star.

At last China has a railroad. It is eighty one miles in length and cost, so the directors say, $9000 per mile, which is regarded as the cheapest road in the world, considering the number of bridges and the length of the embankments.

It is reported that the Republican senate would probably confirm Hon. Joseph S. Miller, of this state, as civil service commissioner, if President Cleveland should see fit to appoint him. It is stated that Gen. Goff will use his influence to this end. This is a high compliment to Mr. Miller, who is a sterling Democrat, and one of the most energetic and capable men in the country.—Charleston Star.

It is said that there is only one Democratic member of the Kansas state senate. We regret that such is the case, but there is one advantage in it after all. A caucus held by him cannot fail of being harmonious and there is no danger of his failing to support the caucus nominee.—Charleston Star.

He may fail to support the caucus nominee, if as likely to change his mind as some politicians are.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following is a list of Fiduciaries whose accounts are before me for settlement.

John Ligon, Ex'r of R. D. McCutcheon dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r of acc'ts for Pocahontas county.

HOME NEWS

—Miss Minnie Gammon is spending this week on Beaver creek.

—S. B. Moore, Esq., of Edray was in town Monday.

—Miss Mattie Haynes, of Alderson is visiting Misses Minnie and Mary Beard, on Beaver creek.

—[illegible] McLaughlin, Esq., wife, and little son have returned from visiting relatives and friends in Highland county.

—We understand that M. J. McNeel, Esq., of Mill Point, has made application to the County Court for the appointment as Sheriff of Pocahontas County.

—Last week we stated that Mrs. Bettie Yeager, of Traveler's Repose had fallen and broken both legs. Since we have learned that but one leg was broken, and that she is doing well.

—Let everybody rest easy; we don't think there is any immediate danger of war with Germany. If anything of the kind should occur we promise to let our readers know in time to load their carbines.

—One of our most welcome visitors is Jno. B. Aldens illustrated "Literature," published at 393 Pearl St. N. Y. for 50 cents a year. Subscribe for it.

—The Housekeeper, published at Minneapolis, Minn., 16,18&20 North Fourth St., Semi Monthly, still visits us regularly. This paper is very deservedly popular with housekeepers.

—The ladies Home Journal, Published Monthly at 435 Arch Street Philadelphia is one of the very largest and best ladies papers we receive. Terms 50 cents a year. You cannot do better than to subscribe for it.

—Babyhood, a monthly periodical published at No. 5 Beekman Street, N. Y., at $1.50 per year for the month of February is exceptionally good. The contribution by Dr. Wm. H. Flint on "Common or Winter Colds" deserves special attention.

—We have received the February number of the Cosmopolitan, published by John B. Walker, 361 Fifth Ave. N. Y. Mr. Walker has recently taken charge of this magazine, and will no doubt keep it up to its usual excellence, if we may judge by his past labors.

$20 REWARD.—I shall pay the above amount to any one giving information that will lead to the discovery of the person who has been stealing my wood.

H. S. RUCKER.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. John H. Weymouth will be at Mingo Flats, Feb. 4th and remain 4 days; Edray, Feb. 9th, 8 days; Mill Point, Feb. 20th, 3 days; Huntersville, Feb. 23rd, 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted by the use of Cocaine, Gold fillings inserted in artificial teeth, which add very much to their natural appearance.

jan 24 4-t

A Card of Thanks.

On last Saturday night, a large crowd of our friends from this and adjacent neighborhoods came to the Parsonage and gave us a good "pounding". They "pounded" us with a great variety of weapons in the shape of beef, pork, corn, cabbage, clothing, groceries, &c., &c., and also with the hard cash. We recovered however, from the shock sufficiently to thank them for their liberal donation, but we desire to express our heartfelt thanks to all of our friends through the columns of the TIMES. Special thanks are due to Misses Minnie and Mary Beard for getting up the donation. We also tender our thanks to friends in Huntersville who donated to us, but were not present.

M. M. EVERLY,
Pastor.

—Mr. McGuire, of Addison, the present assessor of Webster county, was at Huntersville this week. His business was to obtain signers to a petition requesting the Hon. C. P. Dorr to abandon his present tactics, fall into line and be one of his party. No Democrat who was approached with the paper hesitated to add his name.

Accidental Shooting.

Mr. George Haliday, a young Englishmen who for some time past has been boarding at the home of H. M. Lockridge, Esq., on Knapp's Creek, was accidentally shot last Thursday. He was at Dr. J. B. Lockridge's at the time the shooting occurred. It seems that he and one Dick Jordan, (Col.) were carelessly handling a pistol when Dick in his effort to "show off" pointed the pistol at Haliday and discharged it. The ball entered Haliday's right side just below his vest and ranged backward, lodging somewhere in the region of the Spine behind the hip bone.

He was attended by Drs. Lockridge, Ligon and McClintic. He is doing as well, perhaps as could be expected; but must, of course be in a right critical condition.

Haliday is about seventeen years of age. Dick, the colored boy, about sixteen, but very much of a man in his own opinion.

A Row in Town.

Our usually quiet town was the scene of some very disorderly conduct on last Saturday night. One Edward Martin who had for some time time been boarding at Hotel Pocahontas left a few days ago and took up quarters at the Huntersville Hotel. Saturday night, while under the excitement of little much snake medicine, he concluded to go back to Hotel Pocahontas and "paint it red." Several times he was asked by the proprietor, Mr. Geo. W. Wagner, to leave the house, but Martin refused to obey, saying he would not leave. At last when he found he would be put on het began a promiscuous assult on the inmates of the Hotel. In the difficulty he seized a large iron-stone pitcher that happened to be in the office and threw it across the room striking one Daniel Murry, a boarder, on the right eye, smashing the pitcher and inflicting a very ugly and dangerous wound on Mr. Murry's face. Martin was finally expelled from the office with two black eyes.

Dr. S. P. Patterson was called in to see both Murry and Martin.

On Tuesday morning a warrant for Martin was issued by Justice R. C. Shrader and put into the hands of Constable J. H. Buzzard, who executed the same by arresting said Martin and bringing him before said justice Shrader for preliminary examination. A number of witnesses were examined at length, when the Court decided that Mr. Martin should give bond in the penalty of $500, to appear before the next grand jury; in default of which said Martin was committed to jail.

Mr. Murry was at the time paying a short visit to his friend Mr. Coughlan, a boarder at Hotel Pocahontas.

He seems to be a very quiet, gentlemanly young man, and everybody regrets exceedingly his misfortune.

It is not known as yet how his wound may terminate; at present his condition is somewhat discouraging and it is thought that even if he gets well, he will lose the sight of his eye.

Illinois courts are vexed over a question of ownership. A lottery ticket stolen from the mails and sold to an innocent third party, drew a $1,000 prize. The party to whom the letter was addressed claims the prize. There is no precedent to establish the nature of such property as prizes in a lottery; therefore the Judges tear their wigs.

Dunmore Doings.

Not much news since the logs have gone out of the ford.

Wm. H. Cackley, of the firm of Cackley & Co., has sold his interest in the Dunmore Store to R. L. Nottingham.

Misses Sallie and Mary Wakeman, arrived here last week from Warren Co., Va. They are first class dressmakers and milliners.

Rev. W. T. Price preached at this place Sunday night.

The ladies about Green Bank and Frost have been making war on the foxes; they have caught seven.

Several schools in this district have closed.

Wm. H. Hull of Green Bank shipped eighteen whole deer to Staunton this winter.

J. P. Wooddell and Geo. C. Cooper have built new houses ar Green Bank.

Feb. 4th. 1889.

What a War Would do for Us.

If our government is in the humor to adopt a vigorous foreign policy the Samoan affair offers a very inviting opening.

Without reviewing the causes of the strained relations now existing between this country and Germany, it will be of interest to consider some of the advantages and disadvantages of a foreign war, so far as this country is concerned.

A war of any magnitude, lasting a year or so, with such a power as Germany would keep us busily occupied. The probability is that it would not be altogether a naval warfare. There would be fighting on land and sea, and our weak coast defenses would tempt the enemy to attack our seaboard cities.

Hundreds of thousands of men would be withdeawn from their peaceful occupations, and scarcity of labor and higher wages would necessarily follow. Large army contracts for food, clothing and munitions of war would keep our industries booming. The government would again flood the country with greenbacks, making flush times and stimulating speculation. Everything would be unsettled, and fortunes would be lost and made in a hurry.

Unexpected events would occur. Germany would make a desperate attempt to extend her colonizing policy to this hemisphere. France would be certain to take advantage of the situation by occupying and fortifying the isthmus of Panama. The war, beginning with a squabble over far-off Samoa, would perhaps extend the scope of its operations until it circled the globe. The example of France on the isthmus would be followed by the British in Venezuela, and there would be an odor of gunpowder in every direction.

That the United States would finally come out with flying colors is a safe prediction to make, but it would be a costly triumph in blood and treasure. Then would follow long years of taxation to pay off the increased national debt, years of currency contraction, and last, but not least, a flood of new pension bills.

There are other things to be considered. A foreign war would make the American people bury their sectional differences, but it would also bring with it widespread demoralization. It would build up and it would destroy. It would enrich, and it would impoverish. It would make our flag feared and respected, but it might excite a warlike spirit that would not rest satisfied for a generation to come.

In view of the past policy of our government, it is not likely that the Samoan trouble will lead to a war with Germany, but it can do no harm to take a long look ahead and estimate the results of such a conflict.—Atlanta Constitution.

There is a movement to revive the old half cent and add it to the currency.

NOTICE.

A reward of $10 will be paid to any one who may give information leading to the recovery of any of our tools, etc. that have been stolen from the woods or along the railroad.

ST. LAWRENCE BOOM & MF'G CO.,
Dunmore, W. Va.

jan 14 4-t

SALESMEN

Wanted for our complete line of Nursery Stock. All new, choice and Fast-selling Specialties. I can furnish PAYING POSITIONS to workers. My large experience in the business enables me to offer special advantages to beginners. I CAN MAKE A SUCCESSFUL SALESMAN of any one who will follow my instructions. Permanent employment. Wages paid each week. Outfit free. Apply at once, and secure choice of territory.

EDWARD P. SNELL,
Nurseryman, Rochester, N. Y.

MENTION THIS PAPER.

jan. 31 13t.

Simmons Liver Regulator produces no unpleasant effect upon the stomach no matter how long it is taken. A little taken at night insures refreshing sleep and a natural evacuation of the bowels. A little taken in the morning sharpens the appetite, cleanses the stomach and sweetens the breath.

"I never reccommend a medicine unless I know it to be good. In a ministry of twentp-five years I have often felt the need of such a medicine, and when I found it I exclaimed: 'Eureka!'"—Rev. J. P. PARKER, Proprietor "Christian Visitor," Smithfield, N. C. 17 4t

PUBLIC SALE.

I will sell at public auction on the 1st day of March, 1889,
the following property
225 Sheep mostly ewes
27 two-year old Cattle,
4 Cows and 1 two-year old bull, 4 horses, one buggy and harness, one cane mill and household and kitchen furniture.

Terms of sale made known on day of sale.

Sale will commence at 10 o'clock, a. m.

JACOB McGLAUGHLIN.

SHOEMAKER'S SHOP,
at
Huntersville, W. Va.

I am prepared to make in the best style and order, Boots and Shoes of all kinds, also repairing done in neat style.

J. C. THOMPSON.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court-House thereof on the 1st day of January 1889.

It is ordered that all persons having business to transact with the Court hereafter, shall either present it to the Court in person from the bar or by their attorney, and that the Court will not hear any matter unless presented in the foregoing manner.

A copy, Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan 10 4-t Printers fee $4.63.

→JACOB BONER←

—(HAS THE)—

CHEAPEST STORE

IN POCAHONTAS COUNTY, and the BEST goods.

He has received a fine lot of DRESS GOODS NOTIONS, GROCERIES &c. &c., and will sell you 25 per cent. cheaper than any other store in the county, and exchange goods for produce.

Come and see for yourselves, at Huntersville, W. Va.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

5TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required, by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $8.75.

Notice to Lein Holders.

To all persons holding liens by Judgment or otherwise, on the real estate, or any part thereof, of John F. Wanless.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the a cause therein pending, to subject the real estate of the said John F. Wanless to the satisfaction of the liens thereon you are hereby required to present all claims held by you and each of you against the said John F. Wanless, which are leins on his real estate, or any part of it, for adjudication to me at my office, in the town of Huntersville, on or before the

8TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1889.

Given under my hand this the 8th day of Jan., 1889.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

jan. 10 4-t Printers fee $6.36.

IF YOU WANT

Letter Heads,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Official Blanks,

Posters,

or

Anything

In That Line,

REMEMBER

AT

THE TIMES Office

They may be procured

at

Lowest Rates

and of

Best Style

and

QUALITY.

TRY US

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE
LOURY & MOORE,
PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	11 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.
These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 7, 1889.

When to Cut Timber.

Timber for most purposes is cut in the winter, not for the reason that it is better and will keep longer, but there is more leisure from other occupations. And the woods in midsummer are usually too hot for the active work of cutting timber. And yet the superior quality of timber for posts, ties, carriages, wagons, agricultural implements, etc., is sufficient to change the time of cutting. We are aware scientists and skilled workmen differ as to the exact condition of timber when it should be cut, and some even dispute the superiority of summer over winter cut timber. A civil engineer who claims to have verified his statements by thirty years' experience, who knows his skill and whereof he writes, gives the time to cut and the reasons for it in the Farmers' Review.

When the growth commenced in the spring is completed there is a period of rest before the storage of nutrition in the roots begins. Between these two periods if timber of any deciduous trees is cut off the stump the sap will not ferment and worms will never get in the wood. It will season hard and the wood if oak will have a horny toughness and great durability. Wood cut during that period is mature, having completed its growth for the year. This period varies in length, being short in the North and longer in the South, and is varied again by the character of the season, which if wet is shorter and longer if dry. In the North, in Northern Illinois or Wisconsin, it may be four or six weeks; in Southern Illinois from six to ten weeks, and one season of prolonged drouth I have known it twelve weeks. Timber cut from the stump in this period need not be worked up for a year and will take no harm lying in the woods. If railroad ties were cut from the stump and worked out during the balance of the year they would last from three to five times as long as those cut in the winter, and yet I have seen specifications requiring them to be cut in the winter from a mistaken idea of improving their durability. A bent fellow manufacturer in New Jersey called my attention to this fact thirty years ago, and said he had for sixteen years thus followed the practice of requiring in his contracts for timber that it be felled during a period of six weeks from the 1st of August to the middle of September. Any time in a year afterward they might cut up the logs.

Legal Holidays.

It may be interesting to know just what days are legal holidays in the various states, and how they came to be so. While every other day is not holiday, as is said to be the case in Mexico, still the citizens of this great Republic cannot complain at the lack of days of recreation.

Independence Day or Fourth of July as it is more generally called; Christmas Day which falls on December 25, together with Thanksgiving Day, which is appointed by the President of the United States and comes usually on the last Thursday in November, as well as Fast Days that are appointed by the Chief Executive of the country are legal holidays in all the States. New Year's Day, or January 1, is a holiday in all States but Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Rhode Island and South Carolina. February 22, or Washington's Birthday, is a holiday in all States except Alabama, Arkansas, Floriday, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Tennessee and Texas.

Election Day generally the Tuesday after the First Monday in November, is a holiday in California, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin. Florida Louisiana, Minnesota and Pennsylvania observe Good Friday, while Shrove Tuesday is a holiday in Louisiana, and also the cities of Mobile, Montgomery and Selma, Alabama. Memorial Day, April 26, is observed in Georgia, while Louisiana has made the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, which falls on January 8; Lincoln's Birthday on February 12 and Fireman's Anniversary, of March 4, legal holidays. March 8, which is the anniversary of Texan Independence, and April 21, that of the Battle of San Jacinto, are holidays in Texas.

Labor Day, the first Monday in September, is a comparative new holiday that is celebrated in this State and Massachusetts. Every Saturday, after twelve o'clock, is also a holiday, or rather half-holiday, in this State.—New York Telegram.

A 40,000 Acre Farm.

The Grandin wheat farm of Dakota consists of more land than any one man can cultivate cleverly and feel at home on. It comprises 40,000 acres, of which 13,000 are now under cultivation. Forty five double gang plows and harrows are used, sixty-five self-binding harvesting machines and steam threshers. The threshers which are very large ones, will each knock out 2,000 bushels of wheat a day. In the use of mule and steam power machinery every effort is made to economize as much as possible in the employment of men. There is no poetry or domestic bliss in such farming. It is some satisfaction to know that as regions grow older in settlement this big scale kind of farming declines.

A lawyer of Temple Court was looking over some papers his German client had brought, and every signature had a menance to it as it stood:

"A. Schwindler."

"Mr. Schwindler, why don't you write your name some other way; write out your first name, or something! I don't want people to think you are a swindler."

"Vell, my Got, sir, how much better you dink that looks!" and he wrote—

"Adam Schwindler."

The combined wealth of the Vanderbilt family to-day is $274,000,000. It is divided by millions as follows:— Cornelius Vanderbilt, 100; Wm. K. Vanderbilt, 55; Frederick W. Vanderbilt, 16; Geo. W. Vanderbilt, 12; Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, 12; Mrs. Wm. D. Sloane, 12; Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly, 12; and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, 12. Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt, the widow, has no fortune, but has an annuity of $200,000.

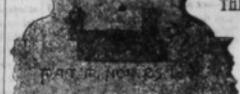
TIMES $1.00.

Tramp—"Please, mum, I just arrived from Dakota. I'm a blizzard sufferer, mum."

Housekeeper—"See here, it ain't three weeks since you told me you just arrived from Florida and were a yellow fever sufferer."

"True, mum. I hurried right on to Dakota to get shut of yelow fever, and I got caught in a blizzard, mum."—N. Y. Weekly.

There are now in Chicago about 100 school buildings, which are filled by about 90,000 of the city's children, under the care of 1600 teachers. Of these teachers about 1530 are women.



POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 14, 1889. | Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 30.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
[illegible]
Deputy Sheriff, [illegible]
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. F. Moore.
Assessor, [illegible]
[illegible] C. B. Beard, Pres.
[illegible]
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A Little Hand

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things,
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the Lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

A little hand that softly stole
Into my own that day,
When I needed the touch that I love so much,
To strengthen me on the way.

Softer it seemed than the softest down
On the breast of the gentlest dove;
But its timid press and its faint caress
Were strong in the strength of love.

It seemed to say in a strange sweet way:
"I love you and understand;"
And calmed my fears as my hot, heart tears
Fell over that little hand.

* * * * * * *

Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things
Somewhere in this sun-bright land;
But I thank the lord for his blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand.

—F. L. STANTON.

The Moon and the Weather.

Adam Forepaugh sat on a nail keg on the elevated seats. "Chicago?" said he, "why Chicago is the greatest show town in the world; and then the moon—why, we've got another week of the moon before the change."

"What's that got to do with it?" the reporter asked.

"A good deal," he answered. "It's a dry moon. Whenever you see a moon lie on its back it never rains."

The above conversation took place one afternoon, and within thirty-six hours thereafter the first rain in several weeks was falling.

Of all surviving pseudo-superstitions, that of the influence of the moon on the weather dies the hardest; and the belief that the (so called) "changes" of the moon are accompanied or followed by changes in the condition of the terrestrial atmosphere is still to be found among a very large number indeed of otherwise educated and enlighted people. A recent writer in The English Mechanic has examined the grounds of this belief and attributes it to the weather predictions in the almanacs of the early part of the century.

As to the moon "changing," one would imagine, to hear the majority of people talk, that a "change" of the moon is in some sense cognate with a conjuring trick, in which the performer, after showing that he has nothing in his hand, instantaneously produces an egg, an orange, or a ball from it. Now nothing could well be farther from the truth than this, the fact being that the moon is always changing—10 seconds after it she is waxing, and so throughout her monthly path. When her (celestial) longitude is identical with that of the sun she is said in the almanac to be "new;" when such longitude differs 90 degrees from the sun's toward the east she is in her "first quarter;" when they are separated by 180 degrees the moon is "full," and when she has traveled to that point in her orbit in which she is 90 degrees to the west of the sun she is said to be in her "last quarter;" in each case it being assumed that she is viewed from the earth's center. The use of the word "change," then, in connection with her position in these four points of her orbit, is a solecism, pure and simple.

"But," people are heard to say, "as the moon influences the tides, why should it not affect the atmosphere too?" To which the immediately obvious reply is that the tides are a semi-diurnal phenomenon, so that, on this principle, the weather ought to change twice a day also—a supposition too absurd to be entertained. Nevertheless the moon does influence the atmosphere by causing the production in it of tides so minute as under ordinary circumstances to be masked by other fluctuations. The existence of these atmospheric tides was first definitely established by the observations of the late Professor Daniell, but if these minute tides influenced the weather in the slightest degree it must change twice a day—a supposition too ridiculous to merit notice.

The "moon on her back," as a weather sign would appear to be a good deal like the old woman's indigo test—if the dye was pure "twould either sink or swim, she disremembered which." Mr. Forepaugh says it's a "dry moon," but in many parts of the country, and uniformly in England, the belief prevails that when the young moon is "lying on her back"—in other words, when the line joining her cusps is nearly or quite parallel to the horizon she is "holding water," and rain will certainly follow. How either belief arose it would be idle to speculate, but the explanation of the phenomenon itself is sufficiently simple. In the outset the moon is never much more than 5 degs. either to the north or south of the ecliptic, or apparent annual path of the sun through the heavens. Now the line adjoining her cusps (the sharp points of her crescent) is always square to a great circle passing through the sun and the moon. Two minutes' study of a celestial globe will show how variable is the inclination or the ecliptic to the horizon, and consequently that of the line joining the cusps of the moon also.

Finally, the most elaborate comparisons of meteorological records made in France and in England (where the Greenwich observations for forty years were carefully collated with the moon's phases during that period) have sufficed to show that no connection whatever exists between them. The solitary observable effect of the moon upon our atmosphere was believed by Sir John Herchel to be exhibited in the tendency to disappearance of cloud under the full moon, and this he attributed to the heat radiated from her surface.—Chicago News.

Preserve the Forests.

One of the most important questions with which our national and state legislatures have to deal, and yet one that is too generally neglected, is that of the preservation of our forests. Independent of the fact that they add to the wealth of the nation at the rate of $700,000,000 annually, or ten times more than the output of all of our gold and silver mines—which alone ought to secure for them proper care—the significant conclusions reached by scientific men, to the effect that they determine, to a great extent, the climatic and the hygienic conditions of our country, and regulate the distribution of moisture and the character of both our great and small water ways, certainly place the preservation of our timbered lands among the subjects that should receive the early, constant and careful consideration of our legislators.

It is estimated by experts who have devoted much time and thought to the inquiry that at least 10 per cent. of the entire agricultural region of any country should remain permanently in forests. Twenty years ago it was asserted that the annual clearance of woodland throughout the United States amounted to 10,000,000 of acres, and that at this rate individual owners would ultimately be entirely stripped of their holdings. But it is not only the ax that is destructive to forests. Browsing animals and fires are quite as detrimental.

To these injurious agencies must be added the enterprising and conscienceless railroad contractor, who annually destroys 30,000,000 vigorous young trees in his quest for ties. Taking these and other enemies of our forests into account, it will be seen that but for the energetic action of our national and state governments the terrible calamity of the entire sweeping away of the natural covering of the soil would be among the possible events of the future—a disaster that would, in half a century, reduce the greater part of the continent to the condition of a desert incapable of supporting man or beast.

Nor is this a mere flight of the imagination. It may seem to the superficial observer to verge on the extravagant to talk of a possible timber famine in a country so new as ours, and one that was so lately reclaimed from the "forest primeval;" but it is an undeniable fact that we are cutting down our trees far more rapidly than we are planting them, and although our inheritance of timber has been great, such a policy steadfastly adhered to in the future can lead to but one result. To bring about a better state of things, an intelligent public sentiment ought to be created, and landowners and farmers should be informed how intimately their prosperity is bound up with the preservation of the wooded land.

They should be made to understand that by the effect of the forests on the water courses the entire navigation, and much of the transportation, system of the country is regulated. Manufacturers are also largely dependent for the water supply for their factories and mills on the wisdom that protects the timber lands where these streams take their rise and through which they flow. No profitable milling could be done where the water course was a torrent during one-fourth of the year and a dry bed for the remainder of the season.

It is encouraging to note that the subject is now receiving practical consideration in many localities, and especially in this state and in Pennsylvania. The report of the New York forestry commission, presented to the legislature, contains many interesting facts and valuable suggestions; while the Agricultural society of Pennsylvania is actively engaged in spreading the facts before the people. The establishment of "schools of forestry," in accordance with the plan that has worked so admirably in Germany, is earnestly recommended, together with other measures all tending to further the end in view. On one point all authorities seem agreed—that it is unwise to hand the timber resources of a country over to private parties, leaving them independent of all government control. At one time this state owned every acre of the Adirondack region, but this noble domain was given away with a recklessness that is scarcely credible, and what it now possesses it has gained through tax sales, while its title is of the most precarious character, the land speculators being engaged in a constant struggle to procure a cancellation of the sale. The wholesale purchase of forest lands from individual owners is urged by the commission, to remedy this state of things, and to prevent the stock of timber in the state from being too largely depleted.—Frank Leslie's Newspaper.

Another Desert Disappearing.

The Australian desert which was once supposed to cover the larger part of the interior of that continent is going the way of all the other deserts that have failed to stand the test of exploration. Just as the early explorers of the African coasts filled all the regions that had not been visited with uninhabitable wastes, so a great part of inner Australia has been represented as utterly valueless to man. The faith in this illimitable desert was somewhat shaken in 1872, when Giles found Amadeus Lake, 250 miles long, at its geographical centre; and the few explorers who have since visited inner Australia have whittled off great sections of the desert and put forests and streams where only sand was supposed to be.

Sir Samuel Davenport, in an address at Adelaide a short time ago, said that the recent travels of Messrs. Lindsay and Tietkens had proven that inner Australia was by no means a Saharan waste, and, though now uninhabited, it was capable of supporting a large population. They found not only wide regions covered with luxuriant grass, but also mineral deposits that are certain to attract attention. Almost in the geographical centre of the continent Tietkens found several large rivers whose head waters were on the northern slopes of mountain ranges. The rivers flowed north, and as far as he traced them he found a great deal of large and valuable timber along their banks.

Lindsay's investigation between 18° and 24° south latitude resulted in some surprising discoveries. In the McDonnell range of mountains he found garnets and rubies and abundant indications that mining in this region for precious stones will be highly profitable. On Tennant's Creek he found gold-bearing quartz in abundance, and he brought home stories of almost boundless pasture lands, of water in abundance, and of deep, blue lakes, one of which, some 300 miles north of Amadeus Lake, is of large and as yet unknown extent. His explorations covered a region, extending several hundred miles north and south, and both east and west of his route stretches a vast and wholly unknown region that gives promise of being equally inviting.

The great railroad which is to extend across the continent from north to south, through the eastern part of the country once supposed to be a desert, will much facilitate the work of exploration; and although inner Australia has been sadly neglected by travelers, it will not be many years before the last of her geographical secrets is revealed. This railroad is now in operation for 600 miles north of Adelaide. Track-laying is pushing steadily on and the line is growing southward also from Port Darwin, its northern terminus. An exploring party has just been sent out by the Geographical society of Australasia to more fully explore the region, of which our first accounts have been so unexpectedly gratifying.—N. Y. Sun.

Not so Favorable.—Deacon Williams—Brudder Jones, how did yer son come outen de trial?

Brother Jones. De Judge done give 'im two munfs in de jayel.

"Pears ter me like as if yer oughter be pow'ful thankful. He got off mighty light, ter did."

"Twarn't so light 's yer seem ter think. Dey's a gwine' hang 'im when de two munfs is up."

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. P. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. P. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 14, 1889.

DORR.

Mr. C. P. Dorr, we presume is now one of the best advertised men in the country. For the last few weeks he has been discussed in private and in public, by friend and by foe. For sometime we have been waiting for Mr. Dorr to explain his position on the Senatorial question; at last he has attempted to do this, but to us his explanation is as inconsistent and unsatisfactory as his conduct.

He endeavors to excuse the stand he has taken against Senator Kenna on the alleged ground that Kenna is responsible for the apparent democratic loss in this State and should therefore be retired. But he goes on to say that he would vote for Kenna, if he knew he could be elected which he says is impossible, as he knows that several persons are voting for him who would not if they thought it would elect him.

Now look at the fallacy of his reasoning.

In the first place Mr. Dorr has given us no proof to support his allegation that Mr. Kenna has proven a failure as a leader, nor that he is at all responsible for the decline of democracy in this State. It is a mere assertion of Mr. Dorr's opinion, while on the other hand numbers of our public men with as much political experience and insight as Mr. Dorr strenuously repudiate the charge. But if we grant that the charge is true, still is his explanation grossly inconsistent. He claims to oppose Kenna because Kenna would destroy the democratic party, and yet says he would support him if he knew he could be elected. In other words, he is patriotic enough to defend his party against the destructive rule of John E. Kenna so long as it is not in his power to put him in a position to rule, but, if it were possible for him by his vote to elect this man, Kenna, who he declares to have been so destructive to the interests of the democratic party, then he would vote for him. Mr. Dorr should first of all respect the wish of his constituency, which is almost unanimous for John E. Kenna; but failing to do that, if he opposes Kenna on the ground of unfitness, then he should oppose him consistently and not only at such times as he knows it is impossible to elect him.

Again, if it be true as Dorr asserts, that some are voting for Kenna who would not if they believed he could be elected, the only proper way for Mr. Dorr to clear his skirts is to vote with his party and put the responsibility where it belongs. Let him show the people who these deceivers are by casting his vote for Kenna and thus make it necessary that an election be effected or that these pretended friends of Kenna show themselves.

It would seem too that Mr. Dorr has but recently made the discovery that Kenna is a failure and a fraud, or else has but recently been convinced that a failure is not a good thing; for it can be shown that during the campaign when he was asking for votes he more than once declared himself in favor of Kenna, and upon that very ground many did vote for him; while the impression was made on all who supported him that he would certainly vote with his party.

The truth is Mr. Dorr has for some unknown reason heeded neither the desires of those who elected him nor the usages of the party that has elevated him, and no amount of explanation can ever suffice to gain for his course the approval of the democratic party, particularly that portion of the democratic party that lives and ever shall live in Pocahontas county.

A Degradation of the Cabinet.

According to the latest news on the subject from Washington, it seems probable that both branches of Congress will agree to add a new member to the Cabinet, to be known as the Secretary of Agriculture.

Such an addition will have a tendency to lower the whole Cabinet as a body in the estimation of the people. Other things being equal an increase in the number of the President's advisers lessens the honor and distinction belonging to a place in the Cabinet. Furthermore, the new post will be of so little importance as compared with that of each of the other heads of departments that it is certain to be regarded as inferior.

The country does not need a Secretary of Agriculture any more than the President needs an eighth adviser. The Constitution of the U. S. does not invest Congress with any power over agricultural affairs or impose upon it any duties with reference to agriculture. It was doubtless the intent of the great men who founded our Government to leave these matters to the management of the several States; and we believe that so far as the great mass of the farmers in the Union are concerned, they would prefer to have the general Government let the farming interests alone. At all events, there has been no general demand on their part for any such representation in the Cabinet as is now proposed.

For many years, however, there has been at Washington an officer known as the Commissioner of Agriculture, whose principal function has been the distribution of seeds to people who do not want them. Why the Federal Government should distribute seeds to farmers any more than chocolate to children, we have never been able to understand. As a rule, the Commissioners Agricultural knowledge was not their most prominent characteristic, but they have furnished more or less amusement to the country as objects of satire on the part of the press. We doubt whether the new Secretary will serve any more useful purpose.

Some of our readers may possibly be aware that we have not always regarded the system of civil service examinations with enthusiastic favor. It strikes us, however, that if there is any place for such examinations under our form of government, it would be in reference to such an office as that of the new Secretary of Agriculture. If we must have this new office, let us have a farmer from Farmersville to fill it, and let his fitness be ascertained by an Examining Board consisting exclusively of practical farmers who have held the plough and know the difference between a silo and a scythe.

If we must have a Secretary of Agriculture we want a man who knows more about the wheat crop of the country than he does about the Presidential vote of the several States at the last election.—N. Y. Sun.

The following extract from the Charleston Star gives a fair specimen of the disgraceful scenes being enacted at the State Capital. No good citizen, whatever his politics may be, can fail to be heartily ashamed of the present legislators. We are glad to see President Carr is a man and trying to do his duty.

"After the dissolution of the Joint Assembly last night, the Senate repaired to their Chamber and the President resumed the Chair. It being found that a quorum of the Senate was not present, Mr. Oxley introduced the following resolution, which, the rules being suspended, was immediately considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the doors of the Senate be closed, and that the following members appearing to be absent, to-wit: Messrs. Campbell, Davis, Furbee, Lowther, Maxwell, Morris, Scott, Minear, Worley, Morrison and Woodward, be brought forthwith before the Senate.

Whereupon, the President appointed the following assistant Sergeant-at-Arms: Messrs. ——— Boss, Jno. B. White, Percy Laidley, F. H. Scott, Charles Bryden, A. A. Franzheim, J. E. Watson and Clarence Moore, who were immediately started out, each armed with a copy of the resolution, in search of the recreant Senators. After various experiences and many vain searches through the hotels and boarding houses, Mr. Minear was at last brought before the Senate. Seizing the first opportunity, Mr. Minear managed to escape through the transom of the water closet and ran like a deer for his liberty. Whereupon, on motion of Mr. Pritchard, action on the case of Mr. Minear was temporarily postponed. The hands of the town clock had in the meantime kept pace with the Sergeants-at-Arms until they now registered nearly five o'clock, when the Sergeants having battered down a door at the Hotel Ruffner and met with many other adventures, finally bagged part of their game and appeared before the bar of the Senate with several of the Senators. Then the trial began and "they all with one accord began to make excuse." Many and varied were the excuses offered, but the general verdict on motion of some Senator was "six dollars and cost—next." Mr. Worley (it being known by many present that he was actually sick) was on motion excused. Mr. Davis who also proved that he was sick was excused, but the following viz: Messrs. Maxwell, Campbell, Lowther, Furbee, Minear and Morrison were fined, $6 and costs each.

President Carr is determined as far as lies in his power to compel the Senators to be present on certain occasions even if they will not work.

The Monroe county Watchman is still the official organ of the Kickers, freely volunteering to defend any one who defies the will of his party.

Some of the animals of the Charleston menagerie are becoming unmanageable and dangerous. Morris, and four or five others broke their chains a few days ago and were recaptured with great difficulty. Dorr has also shown signs of madness, and it may become necessary to adopt Forepaugh's plan and strangle him, for the safety of the other animals.

We presume that no man can say with certainty who shall constitute the next Cabinet; unless it be President Harrison himself, and we have every reason to believe he has not fully made up his mind. Indications seem, however, to point to Jas. G. Blaine for Secretary of State, Jno. C. New for Secretary of the Treasury and John Wanamaker for Postmaster General. It is thought Mahone will be left out. Thanks to Mr. Harrison for that.

A Washington correspondent says that General Mahone will be offered a Foreign Mission. This will be acceptable news to General Mahone's fellow citizens of both parties, for while it will relieve the Southern Democrats of the odious presence of the King of Scalawags, it will also save the Republican party from the political abuses of these Southern policy, that solidified the decent people of Virginia even under the mismanagement of the Democratic party.

In accrediting Billy Capricornus to a foreign nation the new President will have the satisfaction of illustrating the dignity of the American people officially in the same high manner that Bill Chandler did it for the navy of jobs. But the question is, to which country shall Billy be sent, and though it is not our business to advise a Republican administration beforehand still as General Mahone is a Virginia man, we take leave to suggest that this State would feel under obligations if President Harrison would so far recognize the genius of her pet abomination as to send him as Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to the King of Congo, his Majesty Bibassy, whose color would match the General's politics, and who could be relied on not to cook and eat such a lean specimen as long as there are other monkeys in the native trees. —Richmond Times.

There is a dog employed in the Postal Service in the office at Allentown, Pa.—N. Y. Sun.

We are glad to know that but one dog was employed in the postal service during the term of President Cleveland. Perhaps, they will be more plentiful after the 4th of March.

After March 4th, we will have four Governors, Fleming will claim it, and Goff will claim it, Wilson will claim that until the Contest is settled he is entitled to hold over, and President Robt. Carr will claim that as there is a vacancy the office is really his. Governors will be as plentiful as Constables.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following is a list of Fiduciaries whose accounts are before me for settlement.

John Ligon, Ex'r of B. D. McCutcheon dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK, JR.,
Com'r of acc'ts for Pocahontas county.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOWRY. C. F. MOORE.

LOWRY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 50	$ 6 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.50; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 14, 1889.

Worth Telling Again.

Waverly Magazine: Twenty years have passed since a certain Bath sea captain, entering the port of New York, telegraphed his wife at Bath to join him at the metropolis prepared for a sea voyage. Accordingly a day or two after the arrival of the message saw the wife embarked upon the through train from Bath to Boston, accompanied by an infant child scarcely two years old.

This car was coupled on to the end of the Portland train at Brunswick, and, leaving the child asleep, the Captain's wife seized the opportunity to fill the baby's bottle with milk in the depot restaurant. While the mother was intent upon her errand the train slipped quietly out of the station, and when the mother emerged from the restaurant door it was fast disappearing under the Spring-street bridge. Eagerly she explained the situation to the sympathizing group of railroad men who gathered around. Baby and purse, containing all her money and ticket, were in the fast disappearing train. A hurried council followed, and a plan was instantly formed.

Old No. 23, "The Brunswick," was sidetracked, waiting the passage of the train just gone. Uncle Thompson, the station baggage master at that time, ran hastily to this engine and asked her aid to overtake the flying train. The genial Charles, ever ready to aid the case of any female in distress, volunteered to catch the robber. Hastily filling the firebox with wood from the tender, while Thompson was assisting the woman to mount the engine, with a command to the switchman to "give us the main line," with hand upon the throttle, No. 23 flew quickly over the switches and commenced her run.

An empty engine chasing a heavy train up "Oak Hill grade," which extends four miles straight away from Brunswick has an easy task, and before they had covered more than half of that distance they could see the object of their pursuit.

To sound his whistle, calling the attention of the train men to the chase, and thereby stop the train, was not part of the programme, fearing that he might run over them should they suddenly stop. So quietly running along the roar of the train deadening the pursuit, he is soon immediately behind them. Then his tender—for they are running backward—rubs against the rear platform of the train, and while the engineer holds her there Thompson assists the woman over the tender, down upon the platform of the car containing the baby, still fast asleep, the mother clasping tightly the bottle of milk.

The Prohibition question is to have another test in Pennsylvania at a special election to be held next June.

Fixing the Responsibility.

Blundering men, instead of admitting their responsibility, try to excuse themselves by throwing the blame on others. A Single story illustrates this tendency of human nature, and also the French proverb: "He accuses who excuses himself." On night thieves broke into a rich man's house and carried off all his valuables. On being arrested, they excused their crime by saying that "they were blameless, as the walls of the house were so badly built as to tempt them to break through. The mason was therefore to blame for the robbery. The mason was brought before the magistrate. "The fault is not mine," said he, "but that of the coolie who made the mortar badly." The coolie laid the blame upon the potter who had sold him a cracked vessel in which he could not carry sufficient water to mix the mortar properly. The potter explained that the blame could not be laid upon him but upon a pretty woman, who, passing while he was making the vessel, so riveted his attention that he forgot about his work. The woman protested that the goldsmith was at fault. He had failed to send home her earrings and she passed the potter's shop on her way to get them. The goldsmith, not being able to offer an excuse for his neglect, was sentenced to be hanged. His friends begged the judge to spare him, as he was sick and ill favored and would not make a pretty spectacle. "But somebody must be hanged," said the judge. His attention was thereupon called to a fat Moor in a shop opposite, and the judge ordered him to be hanged in the goldsmith's stead.—Argonaut.

In Hindoostan, where three varieties of sacred monkeys enjoy the freedom of every town, those fur banded pensioners often assist the police in enforcing the riot laws by charging enmasse for the scene of every dog fight and schoolboy scuffle. They will rescue worried cats and, for greater security, deposit them on the next roof, or suppress rowdyism in general; the stout Rhesus baboon for instance, being physically as well as morally qualified to quell the aggressive disposition of the fiercest cur. On the platform of a public warehouse the British residents of Agra, a few years ago, witnessed a scene which put the character trait in even a stronger light.

A little street Arab had spread his pallet in the shade of a stack of country produce, and had just dropped asleep, when the proprietor of the Planters' hotel strolled up with a pet leopard that had learned to accompany him in all his rambles. A troop of tramp monkeys had taken post on the opposite end of the shed, and, like the beggar boy, seemed to enjoy a comfortable siesta, but at sight of the speckled intruder the whole gang charged along the platform like a squadron of spahis and, instantly forming a semicircle about the little sleeper, faced the leopard with bristling manes, evidently resolved to defeat the purpose of his visit.—Popular Science Monthly.

Collector: I have called six times, sir, for the amount of this bill already.

Citizen: Wha-at, six times? Is it possible you have been put to all that annoyance? Now, I'll tell you what I'll do: when I feel like paying the amount I will call on you myself. It's outrageous to give a man the trouble I have unconsciously given you.—Life.

Her grandmother was so sick that the report got out that she was dead. A sympathetic old gentleman met the child on the street.

"And when is your grandmother to be buried, my dear?" he asked her.

"Not till she's dead, sir."

—The House Wife for February published at Greenfield, Mass., is a most excellent number of this popular household periodical. It is well worth all it costs, 50 cents per year.

During Jan. there was a net increase of $6,750,000 in money and bullion in the Treasury, and yet you can't borrow a dollar from Sam, no matter how hard up you are.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. | C. F. Moore, Editor. | Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, Feb. 21, 1889. | Terms of Subscription, $1.00 per year, in advance. | No. 31.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. B. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

[illegible] Beard, in the 79th year of his age.

In the death of Joseph Beard Pocahontas county loses one of her oldest and most respected citizens, whose long and eventful life is honorably and inseprably identified with the history of the county. He was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va. on the 20th day of Sept., 1810, and removed to Pocahontas county in the year 1857. Early in life he was united in marriage to Mattie Jordan, daughter of John Jordan, Esq., with whom he happily lived till the day of his death, and who now survives him, an aged and lonely widow. As the issue of this marriage were born three children; one son, John J. Beard, the present Clerk of the Courts of Pocahontas county, and two daughters, Mrs. Isaac McNeel, and Mrs. Wm. L. McNeel, now deceased.

In the year 1833 Mr. Beard made a profession of religion and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1844 when the division came, Joseph Beard without hesitation cast his lot with the M. E. Church, South.

His life was marked with unusual energy and activity, but in no enterprise was this more manifest than in his labors for his Church. He was not a religious enthusiast, nor specially demonstrative, but unceasingly gave those better and more substantial evidences of a firm and abiding faith in Christ and his church. In the prosecution of church work of every kind, he was always ready to do his part, and never slow to suggest to others their duty when the occasion demanded. He was a man of firm convictions and decided opinions, yet ever maintained a liberal respect for the belief of others. There never lived a more sincere man; deceit had no place in the make up of his character. Indeed his habit of telling the truth plainly, and his outspoken candor in commending the good and reproving evil sometimes falsely led those who were not well acquainted with him to think him in some matters a harsh man, but he was not so; underneath the surface of solid belief and rigid candor was hidden a heart as tender as the heart of a child, the sympathies of which responded to the gentlest touch. His generosity and hospitality were proverbial, the friend and the stranger were ever his welcome guests, nor did he ever weary sharing the comforts of his home with as many as chose to partake of them. He was possessed of a peculiarly happy nature; disappointment nor calamity could never abdue for any time his cheerful spirit. It was his rule to always do his best and to be satisfied with the result.

He will long and widely be missed. He was affectionate and indulgent toward his kindred, and true in his friendship. He was a good and useful citizen, ever ready to contribute in any manner to the good of society and of his country. But most of all will be missed by his church, whose interests were first in his heart. His life is ended, but

Dehorning Cattle.

My former article on the above subject seems to have excited one writer to, not only notice it, but to suggest two more very important improvements in the [illegible] safety and good appearance of other domestic animals. Such as the despaying of hogs and dehorning mules. Nothing can be plainer than the duty, if not the obligation of the proposer of these two improvements to enlighten the world by making a practical proof on his own case of these highly desired improvements. The genius that prompted the suggestion ought to be equal to the execution or invention of plan of operation. I am still in favor of dehorning cattle and have practical proofs to show its merits every day. I have just learned from a reliable source that my friend Dick Edmonson, of Kansas has removed the horns from 3,000 cattle last fall. I am running in some boundary, horses, cows and bulls, with perfect safety, and now, after two months test, my animals look well in order, better in appearance and decidedly more comfortable to themselves and me. So as far as I am interested, horns will have to go. The present hard times and dullness of the cattle market, demands a thoughtful consideration of every economical device or plan by which our farmers and stockmen may reduce their expenses and handle their stock to better advantage. I think this one step in that direction. I will now suggest one or two more, and would be very happy to have other and wiser heads to make an expression of their views and opinions thereby benefitting their fellow men and making the TIMES, a necessity to every family in the county.

But few farmers in this locality that do not use fertilizers and believe that they pay; notwithstanding the heavy tax they are subject to. What tax? Profits of the middle men, perhaps the largest. Then excessive freight. To illustrate—none of our middlemen will handle and sell for less than a five dollar profit per ton, (often more,) then they secure another profit by charging their customers rates of freight per 100 lbs when they get reduced rates per car-load of 10 tons. If you pay $30.00 per ton at the railroad to an agent, you can very readily see that you are paying $5.00 to $7.00 for agents profits and high freight then if you buy on time, 10 per cent. to add on cost. The remedy is this, let our farmers pool their orders, select one of their number to get manufactors to make bids for the order, and by paying spot cash, get their fertilizers $10.00 to $12.00 per ton less. We all have ourselves to blame for a great deal unnecessary tax. A co-operative style of buying salt and groceries, if nothing else would run down the expense of the farmer very materially, every year. Salt now by car-load will only cost $1.30 per sack instead of $1.75 or $1.80.

F. A. RENICK.

Alderson vs. County Commissioners.

Now that the fourth of March is rapidly drawing near, by which time the law requires that the governor shall issue his certificates to the congressmen elect from this state, and in view of the fact that our Republican friends are claiming that McGinnis will undoubtedly represent this district in congress for the next four years, it may perhaps be well to review this somewhat celebrated case. In the beginning, when the recount was demanded by Mr. Alderson, the county commissioners refused to allow him to appear by counsel, to introduce witnesses or to cross-examine witnesses introduced by the Republicans, and refused to sign bills of exceptions until the supreme court, by a mandamus, required them to make a record. When Mr. Alderson procured an injunction restraining the county court from certifying the result of the recount, as they ascertained it, until he could have their action reviewed by certiorari proceedings, the commissioners violated the injunction and certified the returns to the governor. That injunction is still in force. Judge Guthrie dissolved it, but Mr. Alderson took an appeal to the supreme court, where the case is still pending. As soon as possible after the bills of exceptions were signed, Alderson appealed to Judge Guthrie for a writ of certiorari, which he awarded, and the clerk of his court, who by the way, is a Republican, was directed to issue a writ to the county commissioners, directing them to send up their record for review. The writ was not issued until about ten days after it was awarded. The record of the county court was copied and compared with the original, and the copy furnished to the commissioners to certify. The Star has it from a reliable source that the commissioners kept the copy in their hands for ten days before delivering it to the clerk of the circuit court. Alderson's counsel demanded an immediate hearing of the case, but the court at the instance of counsel for McGinnis, postponed the case until February 1st. When that time arrived, McGinnis' counsel asked further delay, they well knowing that Judge Guthrie had to go to Mason county to hold court there, on the following Monday. The case was argued for Alderson, and Judge Guthrie took the papers stating that the other side would be allowed to argue, and that the case would probably be decided when the term of court in Mason, was over. No reflection is intended by the Star, upon Judge Guthrie, but everything goes to show that there has been a desire on the part of McGinnis' counsel to delay the proceedings as much as possible, in order to prevent Mr. Alderson from having Judge Guthrie's decision, should it be averse to him, reviewed by the supreme court, before the 4th of March. Mr. McGinnis' counsel and friends think their case in the best shape possible, and they are afraid of the superior court, well knowing that the partisan action of the county court, must be reversed. The certificate now is the hands of the governor, from this county, is certainly void, and we feel sure that Governor Wilson will do what he conscienciously believes to be right in the premises. We would not presume to even suggest what he should do, but we can see but one course open, and that is, to issue a certificate before the fourth of March disregarding the certificate of the Kanawha county commissioners, or regarding the result of the recount made by them. Mr. Alderson is elected by a majority of sixteen, to give him the benefit of the recount. The bill of exceptions shows this to be true, and it seems to us that the recount is better evidence of the true result than a certificate made void by an injunction and certiorari proceedings.—Charleston Star.

Now they say we'll have to fight Portugal. Well if nothing else will do, Uncle Sam can slap her out of existence some morning before breakfast.

The chance for war with Germany seems to be decreasing. We are not afraid of Germany, but peace is more to be desired than war.

Several persons are said to have frozen to death in Dakota during the big storm last week. The picnic season in the Territory is over for this winter.—Washington Post.

National Library at Washington.

The National library contains many rare and curious works. It has some of the most valuable books ever published in America, and among these is the first American Bible printed in the European tongue in this country. It is a German Bible, which was printed at Germantown in 1743 and which Mr. Spofford bought at a book auction about two years ago. It is kept in a box like case in one of the alcoves of the ground floor, and is truly a curiosity. Though not as thick as Webster's Dictionary, it weighs about as much, and though printed over 120 years ago, it is still in good condition. It is about six inches thick and eight inches wide, by ten or twelve inches long. It is bound in oak boards, covered with a rich brown leather, and on its corners there are heavy brass bosses, with little heads jutting out of them to keep the leather from resting on the table. Its clasps are of leather, with brass fasteners, and its paper now yellow with age, is printed in queer old German type. The first page is in colors and on the fly leaves there are several genealogical records. It was originally owned by a German, but in 1798 it was bought by Enoch Rittenhouse, a member, I doubt not, of the old Rittenhouse family of Philadelphia.

Another Bible that the library has is that printed for the Indians by John Eliot in 1663. This is the first Bible printed in America. It was printed in Cambridge, and in the Indian tongue. The library has a chapter devoted to Bibles, and the chapter of theological works is the largest one in the library. I looked at this big bookcase of Bibles the other day; they are of all sizes and shapes, from the little vest pocket edition to one big enough almost for a mounting block for horses. They are in all dialects and languages, and the Chinese Bibles look like so many bunches of manilla wrapping paper. The print of these Bibles is as queer as the languages in which they are printed, and they have every style of types, from the illuminated script of the monks of the middle ages to the common print of to day.

The manuscripts of the National library include many valuable autographs. Among them are two autograph journals of George Washington, one of which was made during Braddock's expedition and one in 1787, at Mt. Vernon. Here is a private journal of Arthur Lee while he was minister to France, at the breaking out of the revolution, and there are two volumes of an original military journal of Maj Gen. Greene, written now over 100 years ago.

The National library was founded about 1801, and the first installment of books was carted to Washington in trunks. They were ordered from London, and they cost altogether $[illegible].—Frank G. Carpenter in the Cosmopolitan.

The grand jury in Birmingham, Ala., has declined to indict Sheriff Smith, or any of his posse, for the killing of the persons who, with others, attacked the jail in that place on the night of the 8th of December last. The grand jury was three weeks investigating the matter and examined over two hundred witnesses. This is doubtless the end of the prosecutions against the Sheriff and his assistants.

The New York street car strike is at last ended, with an advantage gained by the strikers.

Pocahontas Times.

S. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

PROPRIETORS.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 21, 1889.

THE SITUATION.

The latest from Charleston shows that C. P. Dorr, of Webster county is solely responsible for all further delay in settling the Senatorial question.

On the last two ballots taken the three labor delegates, who had previously been voting for men of their own party divided their votes between Kenna and Goff; Carr and Merrell voting for Goff and Harr for Kenna.

Of the 85 votes cast Goff received 42 and Kenna 42, leaving the matter to be decided by Dorr, who threw away the opportunity by voting for W. T. Ice.

When the democratic majority is so meager and the danger in delay so obvious, there could be no explanation made of Mr. Dorr's conduct that would satisfy his constituency or the party at large. His action is a gross and shameful betrayal of political faith. Whatever his motive may be, persistency in his present course must subject him to suspicions not to be envied.

When we remember that the strongest appeal made to the people who elected him was that he was the nominee of his party, and that his large following was due to the very same reason; it is exceedingly difficult to understand how Mr. Dorr, in the face of these things, can presume to set himself up in opposition the party's nominee for the Senate, and in opposition to the voice of the democratic party of the state. No amount of explanation or excuse can suffice to justify him in the opinion of the public.

It is greatly to be deplored that the power to decide between Goff and Kenna has fallen into the hands of a man who so lightly regards his pledges virtually and absolutely made to the people who were the means of his elevation.

Mr. Dorr may talk of Kenna's destroying the party, but in our opinion the recent conduct of Mr. Dorr has done the democracy of Pocahontas county more harm in a day than Kenna has done in his entire life time.

Ex-United States Senator Camden of this State, has just completed the formation of two companies to further develop the coal fields of the State. One is the Monongahela Railroad Company and the other the Upper Monongahela Coal and Coke Company. The capital stock of $2,000,000 has been all subscribed. Traffic arrangements have been made with the Baltimore & Ohio which it is expected will prove of mutual benefit.

General Stephen D. Lee is nominated for Governor of Mississippi. The old soldiers remember this brilliant soldier, who was a corps commander in Johnson's army after having made a splendid record in the Army of Northern Virginia.

History of the Samoan Troubles.

Troubles have existed among the Samoans since 1830. In that year the German Commercial and Plantation Society at Apia, or, rather, its predecessor, the firm of Godefroy, of Hamburg, stood on the side of Malietoa, a chief belonging to one of the most distinguished families of Samoa. Throughout the succeeding twenty years the foreigners who settled in Samoa—Americans, Englishmen and Germans—sought, by taking sides with or against Malietoa, to strengthen respect for their respective nations, and thereby increase their commerce. In 1878 the United States, which had previously obtained a concession of a magnificent harbor in the Samoa Islands and established a coaling station there, made a treaty with Samoa. The local government in in 1879 being a state of great confusion, Sir Arthur Gordon, as Queen Victoria's commissioner in the Western Pacific, established King Malietoa firmly on the throne and issued a proclamation. This proclamation was followed by a treaty with Malietoa, dated August 18. 1878. In the same year Germany also made a treaty with Malietoa. The treaties entered into between the United States, Great Britian, Germany and Samoa were teraties of friendship and reciprocity, agreed to for the purpose of promoting the trade which American, English and German merchants had gone to the remote Samoan Islands to establish. It was understood and agreed upon among the treaty powers that the independence and neutrality of these islands should be forever preserved. While America and England have remained consistent to the treaty obligations and have recoguized Malietoa as the legitimate ruler, the policy of the Germans has been a wavering one. At one time they would reeognize Malietoa as King, at another they would take sides with the opposing King. In 1884 King Malietoa was coerced into an agreement with the German Government and sent a protest about it to the German Emperor. Following the protest there was sent a petition to the English Queen, signed by nearly all the Samoan chiefs, praying for annexation to Great Britain on the ground, among others, that they were afraid of being forcibly annexed by the Germans. In 1885 and again in 1886 further attempts were made by Germany to seize the sovereignty of the Samoan Islands, but each time the attempt was successfully resisted by the British and American representatives.

In the autumn of 1886 a German named Brandeis appeared in Apia. The public was given to understand that he was in the service of the German Commercial and Plantation Society Among the employes of this firm, however, it was known that he had been selected to be the Minister of Malietoa's rival, Tamasese, Brandeis at once be an to study local conditions, and worked at times at the German Consulate, made himself familiar with the business and social relations of Apia, and then went to the home of Tamasese, in the immediate vicinity of the great cotton and cocoa plantation of the German Commercial and Plantation Society. There a house was built and furnished by this society for Brandeis, and there he stayed, without it being publicly known, as the adviser of Tamasese and perfecting himself in the Samoan language. Tamasese and his adherents were then amply supplied with arms and munitions. At the beginning of 1887, within a brief period, hundreds of muskets were sent through the German Commercial and Plantation Society and through Brandeis to Tamasese's party. A little later a German fleet of four or five ships was at anchor in the harbor of Apia. Four days later the German Consul wrote to Malietoa complaining that German settlers had been attacked by the natives on March 22 of that year, and that from time to time during the previous four years the German plantations had been damaged to the amount of thousands of dollars a year. A heavy demand for compensation was made for the damage to the plantations, without a single item of particulars being given to the Samoan King. The monstrous demand was made that the sum claimed for compensation should be paid the next day—a demand which; in such a country, it was practically impossible to meet. The King wrote, promising an answer in three days, and the reply given by the German commander was the landing on the next day of seven hundred troops from his squadron, and the issuing of a proclamation in the name of the Government of Germany, declaring Tamasese King of Samoa. At the same time Malietoa was deported, first to Hamburg, then to Bremerhaven, was lodged and boarded under police supervision at Lehr, a suburb of Bremerhaven, and then was taken to Australia on board the steamship Neckar, by a German naval officer.

The native opposition to Tamasese, or to the Brandeir-Tamasese Government, as it is called, reachep its climax on September 9, 1888, on which date they crowned Mataafa, a legitimate successor to Malietoa, King of Samoa, with the title of Malietoa, Tooa Mataafa. Notices of the event were at once sent to the American English and German Consuls, the French priest, and to Tamasese. Mataafa is still at the head of the Government and is doing all in his power to keep it out of the hands of Tamasese and his German allies. The position of the United States to-day is contained in the following instructions which Secretary Whitdey telegraphed to Admiral Kimberly at Panama on January 11:

"You will proceed at once to Samoa and extend full protection to American interests, citizens and property. You will consult with the American Vice-Consul, examine his archives and otherwise inform yourself as to the situation and all recent occurrences. You will protest against the subjugation of the native Samoan Government by Germany as in violation of positive agreement and understanding between the treaty powers, but inform the representatives of the British and German Governments of your readiness to co-opperate in causing all treaty rights to be respected, and in restoring peace and order on the basis of recognition of Samoan rights to independence; endeavor to prevent extreme measures against the Samoans."

The coprah trade of Samoa seems to be the cause of all the present trouble. Coprah, the dried kernel of the cocoanut, is the staple commodity of the Samoan Islands, as it is of all the islands of the Western Pacific. In 1885 the exports of this article for German account were estimated at the value of $222,742. The competition of four American houses has greatly irritated the German traders, their profits being thereby much decreased.

President Cleveland has appointed Col. John C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, as Inspector General of the United States army, with rank of brigadier general, and the appointment has been confirmed by the senate.

A. E. Stevenson, at present holding the position of First Assistant Postmaster General, has been appointed to the place upon the Bench of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia made vacant by the death of Judge Merrick.

Dorr Says he doesn't call himself a "Kicker." Neither does a mule.

There is one thing left to console us; they can't call him Dorr of Pocahontas, but he must be spoken of as Dorr of Webster.

On the last ballot for U. S. Senator Mr. Dorr, Webster County, voted [illegible]

he is [illegible]

HOME NEWS

—Dr. G. L. Austin, of Green Bank, was in town Monday night.

—On Monday there was a considerable rise in the waters in this section. The lumbermen were busily engaged driving logs.

—Messrs. John J. Beard and C. F. Moore, with their families, were down at Hillsboro last week attending the funeral of Mr. Joseph Beard.

—James Grimes and Mrs. Jacob Cockley, living near Mill Point, are both on the sick list. Dr. Mathew Wallace in attendance.

—Geo. R. Curry, Esq., of Hillsboro, steps higher than ever and won't speak to common people. Another big boy at his house.

—Mr. Peck, President of the Beaver Lick Lumber Company, was in Huntersville Monday looking after the interests of his company.

—Mr. John R. Slaven, who has been sick at the Huntersville Hotel for some time died just a few minutes before the paper for this week went to press—Wednesday, Feb. 20, at 2:30 p. m.

—We are informed that H. M. Lockridge, Esq., has for some days been suffering from a renewal of his old trouble, rheumatism.

—N. J. Brown, Esq., Mill Point's enterprising merchant, is keeping up well with the times. He has a full line of spring goods already displayed in his store.

—George Haliday, the young man who was accidentally shot some two weeks ago is said to be doing as well as could be expected.

—Daniel O,Connell, Esq., who is associated with the Cumberland Lumber Company, spent several days in Huntersville last week. Before a great while he contemplates locating in this vicinity and says he intends to run one of the best Buck wheat Mills in the Country.

—Our efficient Constable, Jas. H. Buzzard, while crossing Thorny creek last Monday, narrowly escaped being drowned. His mule stumbled and fell, throwing Mr. Buzzard into the water. Fortunately he was thrown near a fence, by means of which he succeeded in getting ashore.

—The Delineator for March is fully up to its usual excellence. The publishers of this magazine spare no pains nor expense to make their publication what the ladies demand. It's one of the very best illustrated periodicals in the country. Price $1.00 per year. Published by The Butteric Publishing Co., 7, 9 & 11 West Thirteenth St., N. Y.

A CARD OF THANKS.—I desire to express my thanks to the people of Huntersville, and others, for the kindness shown me during my recent affliction at Hotel Pocahontas. I shall ever remember it with sincere gratitude.

DANIEL MURRY.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Heavy rains and plenty of mud.

Mr. E. I. Holt is off on a trip to Mingo Flats.

Miss Doshia Sharp, of Douthard's creek, entered last week as a pupil of the H. M. and F. Academy.

Messrs. John Hill, of Kansas and Winters Beard, of Missouri, are visiting friends and relatives at this place.

Miss Lena Hill, of Jacox, entered this morning as a pupil of the H. M. and F. Academy.

We had four trials in town last Saturday. I tell you a man has to walk straight while he stays in town now.

The Hillsboro division of the sons of Temperance are gaining ground every day, and doing an excellent work at this place.

Died, on last Thursday morning Mr. Joseph Beard, of Rheumatism in the throat. Mr. Beard was an aged and respected citizen and a devout member of the M. E. Church, South. All deeply sympathize with his sorrowing relatives, but we feel that his home is now with the Blest.

PRUNELLA.

Died.

At his home in Hillsboro, Pocahontas county, West Virginia, on the 14th day of Feb. 1889, Joseph Beard, in the 79th year of his age.

In the death of Joseph Beard Pocahontas county loses one of her oldest and most respected citizens, whose long and eventful life is honorably and inseprubly identified with the history of the county. He was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va. on the 20th day of Sept., 1810, and removed to Pocahontas county in the year 1857. Early in life he was united in marriage to Mattie Jordan, daughter of John Jordan, Esq., with whom he happily lived till the day of his death, and who now survives him, an aged and lonely widow. As the issue of this marriage were born three children; one son, John J. Beard, the present Clerk of the Courts of Pocahontas county, and two daughters, Mrs. Isaac McNeel, and Mrs. Wm. L. McNeel, now deceased.

In the year 1883 Mr. Beard made a profession of religion and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1844 when the division came, Joseph Beard without hesitation cast his lot with the M. E. Church, South.

His life was marked with unusual energy and activity, but in no enterprise was this more manifest than in his labors for his Church. He was not a religious enthusiast, nor specially demonstrative, but unceasingly gave those better and more substantial evidences of a firm and abiding faith in Christ and his church. In the prosecution of church work of every kind, he was always ready to do his part, and never slow to suggest to others their duty when the occasion demanded. He was a man of firm convictions and decided opinions, yet ever maintained a liberal respect for the belief of others. There never lived a more sincere man; deceit had no place in the make up of his character. Indeed his habit of telling the truth plainly, and his outspoken candor in commending the good and reproving evil sometimes falsely led those who were not well acquainted with him to think him in some matters a harsh man, but he was not so; underneath the surface of solid belief and rigid candor was hidden a heart as tender as the heart of a child, the sympathies of which responded to the gentlest touch. His generosity and hospitality were proverbial, the friend and the stranger were ever his welcome guests, nor did he ever weary in sharing the comforts of his home with as many as chose to partake of them. He was possessed of a peculiarly happy nature; disappointment nor calamity could never subdue for any time his cheerful spirit. It was his rule to always do his best and to be satisfied with the result.

He will long and widely be missed. He was affectionate and indulgent toward his kindred, and true in his friendship. He was a good and useful citizen, ever ready to contribute in any manner to the good of society and of his country. But most of all will be missed by his church, whose interests were first in his heart. His life is ended, but its influence will still be felt, and truly may it be said of him that "being dead he yet speaketh."

DIED.—At the home of his parents on Knapp's Creek in Pocahontas County, on the 15th day of Feb., 1889. Pryne Herold, youngest son of Andrew Herold, Esq.

The immediate cause of his death we are informed was diabetes. He had been sick a very short while, and when it was announced that he was dead his many friends were greatly surprised and shocked. Pryne was a bright, promising boy, highly esteemed by all who knew him. His premature death is a grievous stroke to his family and friends, to whom we extend our deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA.

Volume XI. carries this work from Debt to Dominie. The 640 pages are packed with information of just the kind which the vast majority of reading people desire to obtain. Like its predecessors it is truly manifold in its character. In a single volume it gives an unabridged dictionary, and a cyclopedia of information which is ample for practical use, is fully reliable, and is brought down to the present year. Among the articles treated at some length we notice that Debt, with its various sub-heads, has over 7 pages; while kindred topics, as Debtor and Creditor, occupy over 6 pages more. Delaware has about 5 pages; Delirium Tremens, 4 pages; Democracy, nearly 7 pages; Denmark, about 10 pages; Dentistry, about 6 pages; Descent of Man, 6 pages; Development, 11 pages; Diet, 8 pages; Digestion, 23 pages; Diphtheria, 5 pages. There are, also, a large number of really helpful illustrations. The form of the book is most convenient; the paper, printing, and binding are all very good. This is emphatically the Cyclopedia for the people, and the extremely low price—onlp 50 cents a volume in cloth, or 65 cents in holf Morocco—brings it within the reach of all. A specimen volume may be ordered and returned if not satisfactory. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Atlanta, and San Francisco.

The New Cabinet Officer.

NORMAN J. COLMAN,

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Presidents Clevelands appointment of Norman J. Colman as Secretary of Agriculture, the new Cabinet office, is universally approved. During the administration about to close this distinguished man has been Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture. As head of a department comprising Seed, Entomological, Horticultural, Pomological and Propagating, Statistical, Chemical, Forestry and Veterinary divisions, he has been eminently successful in carrying out the intention of the law of May 15, 1862, which established the Department of Agriculture.

The new Cabinet officer is a New Yorker by birth and a Missourian by adoption. He was born at Richfield Springs, in 1827. From the age of sixteen up to twenty-eight he was a teacher in New York State, and Louisville Kentucky. While at Louisville he studied law and took the degree of LL. B. He subsequently formed a partnership with M. C. Kerr, afterward Speaker at Washington, and began practice at New Albany, Indiana. Mr. Colman became District Attorney. In 1885 he removed to St. Louis and bought out an agricultural paper. Mr. Colman is the suggestor and originator of the Missouri Horticultural Society, the State Board of Agriculture. He was a member of the Legislature during the exciting political contest of 1865-66 which passed the Drake Constitution, and was a leader of his party. In 1868 he was nominated for Lieutenant Governor but was defeated. He was unanimously nominated for Lieutenant-Governor and elected in 1874. During the war he was a Union man and Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment of enrolled Missouri militia. Secretary Colman is a power in his command of information pertaining to agriculture and kindred subjects.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 20th day of January, 1888, and on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the Chancery cause of N. J. Brown vs. E. N. Grant Jr. and others, the undersigned Special Commissioner will proceed to sell on in front of N. J. Brown's store at Mill Point, Pocahontas County, W. Va., at public auction to the highest bidder 16½ acres of land, the property of the defendant, E. N. Grant, Jr. Said land is situate near Greenbrier river, about one mile from Mill Point in this County, is fertile and in a fine state of cultivation and has a comfortable dwelling house and out buildings upon it.

SATURDAY, MARCH THE 23rd, 1889

TERMS OF SALE: Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and expenses of sale and the residue upon a credit of 6, 12 and 18 months, the purchaser giving bonds with approved security for the deferred payments, bearing interest from date and a lein to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Social Commissioner.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the Commissioner above has executed bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

feb 21 4t Printers fee $8.23.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following Fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

George W. Callison Adm'r of Martha E. Dorsey, dec'd.

Charles Lightner, Ex'r of William Lightner, dec'd.

I. B. Moore, Adm'r of Margaret Moore, dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Com'r Accts.

FIDUCIARY 2.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

L. M. McClintic and C. F. Moore, Adm'rs of Jacob Bible, dec'd.

JAMES W. WARWICK,
Com'r Acc'ts.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, rendered on the 16th day of October, 1888, in the chancery cause of John W. McNeel's adm'r.

vs.

John W. McNeel's Heirs, et als.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed, in front of the Court House of said County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, subject to the dower of the widow therein, on the

5TH DAY OF MARCH, 1889,

the following real estate, situate in said County, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro on the Hill's Creek Road; and also, another certain lot or parcel of land containing one acre, lying above the first mentioned lot, in and adjoining the town of Hillsboro. Both of said lots were bought by J. W. McNeel from James Griffy. They are valuable lots, and the title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE:

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue of purchase money the purchaser will be required to give bonds, with good and approved personal security, bearing interest from day of sale, falling due in Six and Twelve months respectively from date, and a lien will be retained as ultimate security.

H. S. RUCKER, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond, as required by law has been given by the above Special Commissioner.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

jan. 10 4t Printers fee $6,75.

Pocahontas Times.

B. B. LOURY. C. F. MOORE.

LOURY & MOORE,

Proprietors.

C. F. MOORE, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

Feb. 21, 1889.

Weather and Common Sense.

It does not always require that a man should be a prophet to make a shrewd guess as to what the weather will be some months in advance. There are probabilities, we will not say certainties, regarding times and seasons that are obvious to every one who knows the difference between storm and calm, heat and cold. We know, for instance, that one extreme is likely to follow another. If one winter is extremely cold it is highly probable it will be followed by another correspondingly moderate. An unusually cold wave so called, will generally be succeeded by a spell of weather of great mildness for the season. To a very dry season, or a succession of dry seasons, there is sure to succeed a period of weather to make up the deficiency of rainfall. If any particular spring is cold and wet and late, we may generally expect that the succeeding autumn will be warm and pleasant, and that winter will be slow in coming. If the entire year should be bad on account of the excessive cold or unseasonable storms, the compensation may not come till the next year, but that it will come in time is as sure as that the sun will continue to rise and set. It is one of the first laws of nature that rain shall alternate with sunshine, storm with calm and heat with cold, and it is by studying these movements of the elements more closely than the rest of mankind that some pretended weather prophets have occasionally succeeded in coming somewhere near the truth in their predictions.—San Francisco Chronicle.

That Meeting.

Pursuant to a call, the Democrats of this country, met at the Court-house, to take action, and pass resolutions in regard to the conduct of Hon. C. P. Dorr, delegate of this county, in not giving his support to Hon John E. Kenna, for re-nomination and re-election to the U. S. Senate.

T. B Horan called the House to order, stating the object of the meeting, and on his motion W. H. Hoover was made chairman, and B.D.Hutchison secretary. The chair appointed T. B. Horan, P. W. Bruffy and E. H. Morton, who reported Resolutions which were unanimously adopted. The Resolutions set forth the fact that the democracy of the Delegate District, and who are Mr. Dorr's constituents desire Mr. Kenna's re-election and to instruct our Hon. delegate to vote to that end, etc., etc.

On motion of T. B. Horan a copy of the Resolutions were sent to Hon. John E. Kenna, and on motion of the secretary, a copy also be sent to Hon. C. P. Dorr.

After speeches by Hon. C. Mac Dodrill, Horan and Hutchison, the meeting adjourned.—Addison Clipper.

The Horses Were Spared.

When Mr. Cole, a well know circus proprietor in the south, sold his stock in New Orleans, three dun ring horses that he had owned for years went with the others by mistake. Mr. Cole at once bought them back, saying he would never consent to have the horses become the property of any one who would make them work, and he had decided to put them to a painless death. He proposed to bleed them to death, but W. B. Leonard, a liveryman, suggested that the use of chloroform would be a little better and less painful mode. This was finally decided upon, and a reliable man procured, who was to have performed the operation.

They were all collected in the circus tent. There was Cole, Leonard, the riders and the clowns, the ringmaster, the tumblers and the leapers and the three pet duns. Calling the little mare by name, he told her to kiss them all good-by. The intelligent animal, stretching forward her head, kissed each one. This was more than they could stand, and the sacrifice was put off. Cole had no place to take them to, so Mr. Leonard promised to find some one who would assume charge of them, under a guarantee never to work them, but to keep them in good order until death should claim them for the grave.—St. Louis Republic.

Good Humor and Good Discipline.

Several years ago the convicts in a large penitentiary conspired together and made an unsuccessful attempt to escape. In the struggle the leader of the prisoners and one of the keepers were killed. The men were secured, but they remained in a gloomy and vindictive temper for months afterward.

Stricter discipline was enforced, and then after sometime, kindness was tried to conciliate them. Their rations improved in quality and several new privileges were granted them, but it was all in vain.

"We are sleeping on a volcano," the warden reported, "They are in a murderous humor."

He then recommended the appointment of a certain Dan Pickerell as assistant warden, the man who held that office being a grim, sarcastic fellow, especially disliked by the prisoners. Dan was inexorably firm as an officer, but he was a fat jolly embodiment of good humor. He exacted every jot and tittle of service from the convicts; but, that rendered, he took an interest in them, in their rheumatism their toothaches, their children, their plans for life after discharge.

They were human beings to him, not numbered beasts in cages; he was not afraid to joke and laugh with them. In two weeks' time the men were quiet and contented. Good humor had done its work The revolt was over.

"Good humor," says a German writer, "is one of the rank and file of human virtues, which we are apt to overlook; but it wins more battles in life than do a mighty intellect or lofty imagination."—Youth's Companion.

Leather Shoes for Horses.

The day will come when the present mode of protecting the foot of the horse will be discovered to be a mistake. Its horny substance was never intended to be pierced by nails. No wonder that so many horses fall lame and are perpetually ruined. We were recently shown a horse shod in leather. It struck us as an excellent idea and worthy of adoption. We should not be surprised that leather shoes had superseded shoes of iron. If, however, iron be a necessity, let it be nailed on the leather shoe. Now, shoemakers, please get up a neat set, and show them to all your horsey friends. Don't take "no" for an answer; stick to them till you have overcome their prejudices.

When you have succeeded apply to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for a medal and if they decline to give you one be content to know that you have done more good than the society in question with all its wealth.—Scotch Paper.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May., 16, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 43.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE FAR PASTURE.

There are water-cress, and Brindle and Bess,
And Brownie and Bonnie Kate—
Though I am to mind her,
Nowhere can I find her—
And now it is growing late.

Over the meadows and through the shadows,
I have sought her long and well—
At last I have found her,
Tall grasses around her,
Led by the sound of the bell.

She had gone astray, and had lost her way
In the clover blossoms white,
The cool, sweet clover,
Tempted her over
To the pasture far, tonight.

I tenderly led her, through valley and meadow,
To lead and not drive, seemed but right,
'Twas the sweet rank clover,
That tempted her over—
And who of us always does right?

And the strangest feeling is o'er me stealing,
And seems through the shadows to come:
As beneath the wide bars,
And the silver stars,
"Bonnie Katie" and I go home.

The damp dew is falling,
And voices are calling,
I too have strayed off from the right—
And the sweet red clover, has tempted me over,

But oh! will he blame me; or seek to reclaim me?
If I call to Him now, will He come?
And over the meadows, and
Through all the shadows,
Lead his poor wanderer home?

—M. E. NOBLE.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

The small but thriving and enterprising town of Seedville, in the State of Ohio, was plentifully posted with bills bearing the above title, lavishly printed in all the hues of the rainbow. How the manager of the Seedville Academy of Music ever succeeded in securing so great a star of the dramatic firmament as Charles Cheriton was a matter of much speculation and wonder to all but Seedville citizens; but then Seedville always was smart for a small place and managed to keep abreast of the great cities of the country in everything, from natural gas to natural actors. And if the lively manager was enable to furnish high-class entertainment for the play-goers of Seedville, the said play-goers were not mean enough to pass by the opportunity with unappreciative indifference. They read the show-bills, bought their tickets and on every evening thronged the seats of the really pretty theatre.

The piece was what is technically known as a high-class comedy, but it was a comedy in which was displayed a good deal of the tragedy of mental suffering, of misunderstandings, of cross purposes and bitterness of heart; though, from the fact that all the pain and sorrow was finally turned into gladness and joy through the instrumentality of a little child, men termed it a comedy.

The drama gave the principal actor, Charles Cheriton, a fine opportunity for displaying his power of acting, and many a time had this man moved great audiences almost to tears in his representations of the deep passions of human nature.

On the particular evening which concerns our story, Cheriton was at his best. With the rare modulations of his deep, far-reaching voice, with his expressive features and gesticulations he swayed the feelings of the throng before him as the autumn winds bend the topmost boughs of the forest trees.

Toward the end of the second act the large audience noticed that the actor did not do his part justice, and not during the rest of the evening did he rise to his usual standard of excellency. No one knew the cause, for, in the intense interest felt in the play, no one had perceived a little wee baby figure steal quietly down the extreme left aisle of the balcony. No one but Cheriton. He was in the midst of his delivery of some most pathetic lines and his eyes were raised upward, so that they rested precisely on the balcony aisle to the left of the stage. He saw the tiny but graceful form of a child—a little girl—not five years old, clad in a quaint, but rich and dainty, dress of black velvet with ruffled sleeves and white lace edging at the wrists and neck; he noticed the broad-brimmed hat trimmed with a narrow but exquisite wreath of simple meadow daisies, and above all he beheld, beneath the hat, the cluster of sunny, golden hair and the clear blue eyes of the childish, angel face.

The baby, with baby grace and abandon, stole softly down to the balcony rail, upon which she rested her little arms, and with her chin nestling in her dimpled hands (like one of Ralphael's cherrubs) silently watched the play. Cheriton felt absolutely certain that the baby was the child of—well, a woman he once knew. He was positive of it, and would have backed his opinion with every thing he possessed.

He was no longer in the Seedville Academy of Music. Mechanically he proceeded with his part in the performance, but he saw none of the people before him, save the baby—and even the baby only served to remind him of another face, long since lost to him—while his thoughts and memory were afar off in a city of the sunny South.

He remembered how in the City of Mexico, exactly six years before, he had loved with a mad and irresistible passion just such a fair sweet face as was the baby's in the balcony; he recollected the faultless form, the natural grace of movement and the bewitching smile; he called to mind the sunny hair and the quaint dresses of velvet and old lace—yes, it all came back to him with the baby leaning there over the balcony rail. How he tried to forget it all, on the stage and off! How he had sought to bury it far out of his sight and memory! He had traveled East, West and North (never South) only at last to find the past as fresh as ever, in the little theatre of quiet Seedville.

Naught saw he of the footlights or the orchestra, of the stage or the house—he was away on a vine-covered veranda in the outskirts of the City of Mexico. He was telling a fair young girl of his love and adoration, and ringing in his ears was her cold, hard reply: "It is impossible, to-morrow I am to be married."

The second act of the play came to an end. When the curtain rose for the third and last act, the baby had disappeared.

The performance was almost concluded when through that terror stricken assemblage rang the alarm of "Fire!"

Aroused from his reveries and dreams of the past Cheriton became aware that smoke was issuing from the left wings. He was quickly alive to the situation, and stepping to the edge of the stage, in a loud and commanding voice he directed the movements of the affrighted men, women and children.

The fire quickly gained on the building, and before the one fire engine of Seedville could get to work the theatre was doomed.

Cheriton was one of the last to leave the stage, and when he did so the danger to the audience was over, for all had reached the street. When the alarm of fire was given Cheriton was attired for the play as a laboring man, without coat and vest; so dressed he appeared on the street.

Standing with the crowd watching the flames was a beautiful woman, perhaps twenty-five or twenty six years old. As Cheriton emerged from the building he was cheered by the crowd, and casting his eyes (from force of habit acquired on the stage) along the throng of faces, it rested on this woman.

He was seized with an inspiration, and rushing hastily to her, he grasped her arm tightly and almost rudely.

'Were you in the theatre to-night?'

'Yes.'

'Alone?'

'No; with my mother.'

'No one else—positively, no one else?'

'No one.'

'Ah,' thought Cheriton, as he hastened away, 'the child was left at home and, doubtless, knowing where her mother had gone, followed her to the theatre.'

By this time the fire was all over the house and the auditorium was filled with a dense mass of smoke. But heedless of the scorching heat, the blinding and suffocating smoke, and deaf to the warning cries of the firemen, Charley Cheriton rushed into the ill-fated building. He made his way to the left aisle of the balcony which was standing yet, and there, near the railing fast asleep or dead, he found the fair-haired baby girl. He grabbed a shawl which some one had left in the hurry to escape, and dashing again through the smoke and flames emerged once more on to the street.

A loud hurrah and deafening hand clapping greeted him, but he walked straight to the lady whom he had before addressed.

'Here is your little girl, madam. I noticed her in the balcony this evening. Do not be afraid; I just felt her move and heard her try to speak. If you will show me your house I will carry her home for you.'

The lady was too much affected to speak. Silently they walked a short distance until they reached a pleasant home not far from the theatre.

When they entered the parlor the mother took her child and mentioned Cheriton a seat.

In a few minutes the lady returned.

'My baby is not hurt at all, and is now sleeping as if nothing had happened. Mr. Cheriton, how can I thank you?'

'I am thanked sufficiently already,' he replied.

Then there was silence. It was a strange meeting; the actor in his stage costume, his sleeves rolled up, his hair and moustache singed and his face blackened by the smoke, while near him sat a beautiful woman scarce able to restrain her tears.

He waited until she regained some composure, and then he rose as if to go.

'Good-bye,' he said. 'I am glad to have been able to give you your little girl. I suppose you have nothing more to say to me, so good-bye.' He held out his hand as he spoke and she took it in both of hers.

'Yes, I have something more to say, and I will say it whatever you think of me for doing so.

'Listen. Six years ago you thought me heartless and cruel because I told you that it was impossible to marry you, though you thought I had given you to understand that I loved you. Well, I did love you. Perhaps it is unwomanly to say it but I did love you. The man I married—the father of my little girl—died before the baby was born. He was a good man, a good husband, but I did not love him. I loved you all the time and sacrificed love and happiness for what I thought to be duty. Charley, I love you still; you have saved my little girl—will you save me? Save me from a lonely, unhappy future and from all the misery of bitter memories? Will you, Charley?'

Well, every thing had seemed very strange to Charley Cheriton that New Year's Eve—the place, the baby, the fire, this meeting—but somehow it did not seem at all strange when he passed his large bare and blackened arm around the slender waist, while the well-rounded head with its fair hair rested upon the smoke-begrimmed shirt which covered his broad shoulder, And he thought of the title of his play—"A little child shall lead them."

Two gentleman were walking on F street yesterday when one said:

"Let's cross the street. There comes a man to whom I owe some money, and I don't want to meet him."

"Does he dun you?"

"No; that's the worst of it. He never speaks of it."

After they had crossed over the debtor walked on some distance in thoughtful silence. Then he said, seriously:

"I wish that man would get mad about it and go at me with a club. I can't pay him the money, and I wish he would thrash me like fury and settle the matter so that I wouldn't ever be afraid again to meet him."

There is a bit of good, clean human nature in that reflection.

The minister was dining with the family, and Bobby thus spoke out:

"Ma, what's an adjective?"

His mother explained the meaning of the word, and then foolishly asked him why he wanted to know.

"Because I heard pa say that the sermon this morning was a dayvilish poor one; and when I asked to tell me what 'dayvilish' was he said it was an adjective."

Stranger—Where is the county seat?

Kansas (as "dark, funnel-shaped cloud" approaches)—Wal, it's yere if that thar cyclone goes slaunchwise towards Hemecker's. If it don't the location uv the county-seat is liable to be sorter indefinite an' promiscuous like, to speak.

A well-known scientist announces that he is about to write a book which shall go a long way "towards bridging the psychological distance which separates the gorilla from the gentleman." He has set himself a hard task. Had he substituted the word "monkey" for "gorilla," and "dude" for "gentleman" he would be sure of success.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 16 1889.

The town of Staford, Kan., was wiped out by a cyclone last week.

There is going on in Richmond, Va. a tremendous religious upheavel among the negroes.

Two young men in Summerset, Pa., hanged their father to get their inheritance.

Was it the Harrison family or the republican party that was elected last November.

All the records smashed. The City of Paris crosses the ocean in 5 days 23 hours and 7 minutes.

The State claims 90,000 population for Richmond, with a suburban populatio of 25,000 more.

The Parkersburg Journal seems to think that the prospects for the "Black Diamond" railroad are more encourageing.

Had it been Cleveland, it would have been tariff reduction—as it is, Harrison and wage reduction, remarks an observant exchange.

Carter B. Harrison, who was last week appointed marshal of the middle district of Tennessee, is a brother of the President.

Mrs. Louisa Sheffy, of Staunton, is dead. It was just about four weeks after the death of her lamented husband, Judge Sheffy.

The only woman ever convicted of horse stealing in Missouri was a beautiful girl of 18 years, on May 7. The jury gave her two years.

It is said that they have had to put folding beds into the White House to accommodate the numerous branches of the presidential family.—Ex.

Henry W. Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is to address the literary societies of the University of Virginia at their final celebration on the 25th of June.

It is intimated the President will spend a portion of the heated term in the mountains of West Virginia, near Davis, on the new West Virginia Central Railroad.

It is conceded by republicans as well as democrats that the best all round speech at the New York centennial was delivered by ex-President Cleveland in response to the toast, "Our country."

Frank W. Palmer, of Illinois, has been appointed Public Printer. The newspapers offices along the railways leading out of Washington will now prepare for a deluge of tramp printers.—Ex.

Where is the increase in the price of wool that the republican orators told you about so positively last fall if a republican President was elected? In fact where is anything true that they told you?

Eleven fourth class postmasters were removed in Pocahontas county last week. Clarkson is getting in his work pretty fast.—Braxton Democrat.

Mr. Democrat we haven't heard of them as yet.

There are five banks and six newspapers and an average daily sale of fifty dollars worth of postage stamps in Guthrie, Oklahoma, a town which did not exist prior to April 22nd. In a few days more we may expect to hear it boasting, with the rest of its occidental contemporaries of "the finest opera house west of the Mississippi."

Where is the protection to American labor that you republicans talk about? We don't know where it is! but there is one thing we do know, that there are thousands of working men, working for whatever compensation they can get, and thousands upon thousands who are out of employment altogether, and have large families in a starving condition.

West Virginia is talking a phenomenal boom. More miles of railroad will be constructed during the present year than in any other one year in her history, and she is a Democratic state, too. Our Republican friends who are continually howling about old fogies and mossbacks and claiming that nothing but a Republican administration can attract capital into a state, should make a note of this.—Charleston Daily Star.

Rather a funny little episode happened near Philippi last week. A young man went to the clerk of the court and obtained a permit to wed a young lady. On his way home he called at the residence of another young lady, to whom he had been paying some attention, and exhibited to her his license to wed her rival. She, with rather more spirit than her sex usually possesses, getting the paper into her possession, very deliberately preceeded to tear it to pieces, and consign it to the flames, and the young man was compelled to postpone the wedding to another day.—Nicholas Chronicle.

The New York World sees in Mr. Cleveland's conduct, since his retirement from the Presidency, many evidences that he again aspires to become his party's leader in the next National struggle. It sees in Mr. Harrison's disregard of the civil service, and the consequent disgust of the mugwamp element with the President, an opportunity for Mr. Cleveland. It says: "If Mr. Cleveland can and will make himself the expouent and champion of the real ideas and true principals of Reform—reform in politics, reform in administration, reform in legislation, reform in justice—his nomination would be quite possible, and he would have a vigorous supporter in the World."

Is it possible that the World is beginning to arrive at the light at last? It lists a number of reforms which it would have Mr. Cleveland to make himself the champion and exponent of, on condition of its vigorous support. Well could Mr. Cleveland say to this proposition: "All these things have I kept from my youth up." The World knows that it is setting no pattern for Mr. Cleveland. He walked the reformer's path all through his administration, and hence his defeat. No man could have done more than he in the way of the reforms indicated—because no man was ever more honest, or firmer than he. The open opposition of the World to Mr. Cleveland began the very hour of his inauguration, and was fierce, relentless and unjust from that day till now. We are glad to see it ready to acknowledge at last that the man to lead the Democracy to victory in 1892 is Grover Cleveland.—Kanawha Gazette.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

Washington, May 10th.—Harrison made the best appointment that he has yet made when he selected Ex.Gov. Thompson, of South Carolina, as the democratic member of the Civil Service Commission. Gov. Thompson was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland's administration, and was during the last days of Congress appointed by Mr. Cleveland to the same position he has just received from a Republican President, but the Senate did not act on his nomination.

There is a weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth among the little crowd of late applicants for the position of Public Printer, five of whom are understood to have made a combination, each promising to give the other four appointments in the office if made Public Printer, over the fact that the coveted prize has gone to Ex-Congressman Frank W. Palmer, formerly postmaster at Chicago. Whether Harrison suspected the "combine" which these applicants had entered into I can not say, but it is known that some days ago he told a gentleman that he should not appoint any of the applicants up to that time and asked him to name a good man for the office. Palmer was named, and after further investigation the office was tendered to him, and he accepted it. When the appointment was made public it was really amusing to see the members of the "combine" chasing around trying to find somebody to introduce them to the new Public Printer so they could get in their applications for the "fat" positions under him. It is thought that one of these men-Donath, nominally of Pennsylvania, really of the District of Columbia, may lose his mind so great a shock has the disappointment been at not being made Public Printer. He was so certain that he was to get the appointment that he had already given away several of the most important places in the Government Printing office.

It is evidently the purpose of the the republican politicians to make the census bureau an asylum for their political proteges. The Interior Department has decided that the appointments in this bureau will have next year when it gets regularly to work, over 1500 clerks, besides an army of special agents, and the most of these will be kept for two years or longer. It will be a great convenience to prominent republicans to use these positions to pay off their political debts, and if the appointments were made under civil service rules that would be impossible.

The first of the fifteen contested election cases which are to come before the Fifty-first Congress was opened by the Clerk of the House this week. It was Calmers vs. Morgan, of the second Mississippi District.

Harrison having provided a snug place for his brother is now, so it is said, about to appoint Blaine's brother to one of the most lucrative local offices in Washington Register of Wills.

The new Secretary of Agriculture in order to prove his familiarity with farming implements, and maybe to get solid with the farmers of the country, put in a half an hour cutting grass with a scythe in the grounds surrounding his department, one day this week. Of course he was entirely ignorant of the fact that several newspaper men had their eyes on him during the entire performance.

Republicans are already beginning to compare Harrison with Hays and Arthur, they say that he is timid almost to the extent of cowardice.

It is said that the Post office Department is appointing clerks in the Railway Mail Service and dating their appointments in April in order to avoid compliance with civil service rules under which all such appointments should have been made since May.

Senator Gorman thinks that Calvin S. Brice will be elected chairman of the National democratic committee to succeed the late ex-Senator Barnum. This is taken here to mean that Senator Gorman will not accept the position.

Theodore Roosevelt of N. Y., who has just been appointed as one of the republican Civil Service Commissioners, is a pronounced free trader. Funny isn't it, that a man elected President solely because he was a rigid protectionist should give such a prominent appointment to a free trader.

The newspayer man's luck has not yet deserted him. The new Public Printer is a member of the fraternity.

ANN[illegible]

TO THE V[illegible] COUNTY [illegible]OCAHONTAS

[illegible] per[illegible] from [illegible] of the County, I here[illegible] myself a candidate [illegible] the of[illegible] Superintendent. Thanking you [illegible] years, I again solicit [illegible] the coming election [illegible] May 21st 1889.

[illegible] M. G. MATHEWS.

MASONIC [illegible]

HUNTERS[illegible] LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the [illegible] evening preceding each Full [illegible] unless the Moon falls on Fri[illegible] then on that evening.

J. H. Do[illegible], W. M.
S. P. Pat[illegible], Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Sheep Shear[illegible].

—Corn planting is over.

—[illegible] new subscribers this week.

—A special term of the County Court met last Tuesday.

—What's the matter with the correspondents this week.

—Geo. W. Siple, of Green Bank was in the city Tuesday.

—Rain and sunshine make grass grow.

—Charley Arbogast was, in town Tuesday.

—Sheriff McNeel was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—L. W. Herold, of Frost was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Lots of new Subscribers this week. Let more come.

—E. A. Gibbs, of Raphine, Va., is in town.

—Capt. Stofer, who has been on Elk for some time has returned.

—[illegible] Jelinko, of Charleston was in town last week.

—A. F. Wickline, of Monroe Co., was in our city last Thursday.

—S. M. Walls of Baltimore, was in town Sunday.

—L. B. Trent, of Huntington was in town last week.

Go to John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—Andrew Price, and Henry McGlaughlin were in town the first of the week.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3.50 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Renoverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—The County Court, Messrs. Moore and Beard, were here Tuesday.

—A Barbour county man is going to put thirty-seven acres of ground in peanuts.

A nice line of ladies hats just received at Herold & Moore's, Frost, W. Va.

—Eli Baker, has been appointed postmaster at Beverly, Randolph Co.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Renoverte, W. Va. 30-2m.

—They are going to vote for a six months school in the Little Levels.

If you want a good suit of clothes go to Herold & Moore's, Frost, W. Va.

—Lots of fishing going on now. The fellow who catches the biggest fish is usually the biggest liar.

—Don't forget that we are trying to run a good local paper, and want the news and if you know of any thing please report.

NOTICE.

The Final Celebration of Hillsboro Male and Female Academy will take place Thursday and Friday evenings May 23rd and 24th [illegible]. Exercises will begin promptly at 7:30 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to the Public to attend.

W. B. LAWSON,
Principal.

—H. Dever, of Knapp's [illegible] was at this place Tuesday.

Go to Herold & Moore's, F[rost], W. Va., for your dry goods and [no]tions. Best styles and lowest pri[ces].

—The State Press Association of this State meets at Wellsburg, on the 18th of June.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co., Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12t

—C. E. Hoge, of Christiansburg, Va., was at this place the first of the week.

Call an examine our stock of queensware, we can suit you in both quality and Price. Herold & Moore, Frost, W. Va.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Messrs. E. H. Moore, Joe. McNeel and R. M. Beard, of Academy, were in to see us Tuesday. Mr. Beard was driving a fine pair of match bay mares.

—Sheriff McNeel and C. E. Beard, brought one Perry Townsend to jail last Tuesday, on a capious for non payment of fines &c., made at the last term of the Court.

—The Greenbrier Independent says that Mr. John Furgiesong, of Lewisburg, died at his home, on Thursday last, the 2nd inst., in his 74th year.

—Don't forget that next Tuesday 21st is school election day. Come to the polls and vote for Mr. M. G. Mathews, for County Superintendent; he is the only candidate in the field.

Herold & Moore, Frost, W. Va., have just returned from the east, and are now receiving the nicest, best and most complete stock of goods they have ever offered the public, which will be sold low down for cash or good produce.

—Messrs. B. C. McCullough, Geo. Grant and C. A. Church, were in this vicinity a part of last week looking after inducements for a branch railroad from the C. & O., from the White Sulphur to this place.

—Don't forget the poor editor when you have a news item, says an eastern exchange. If your wife licks you, let us know it, and we will set it all right before the public. If you have company, tell us, if you are not ashamed of your visitors. If a youngster arrives at your house begging for raiment, buy a lot of cigars and come around, and, if you are a cash subscriber, we will find a name for him or her as the circumstances will permit. And if you have a social gathering of a few of your friends, bring around a big cake, seven or eight pies and a ham not necessarily to eat, but as a guarantee of good faith. You needn't bother about inviting us, for our wardrobe isn't suitable for the occasion. We mention these things because we want the news, and we are bound to have it.

Lew is Dead.

The faithful old nag belonging to Capt. Stofer, passed beyond this world of toil, a few days ago, on Elk. She was 22 years old, and has long since through the Capt's. generosity, been the errand nag of our town, and her death will be regretted by those who depended on her, when they wanted to ride a short distance.

[illegible] Point Pickings.

Fine weather for planting corn and making garden.

Withrow McClintic and M. F. Gum left last Thursday for Raleigh Co.

The farmers are nearly all done planting corn.

Mr. Hindgarner has moved to Hillsboro.

Mr. J. T. Hogsett is quite ill at this writing.

Miss Mary Hacker is visiting in our neighborhood.

We had a big rain and hail storm last Saturday night.

E. P. G.

[illegible] of Sheriff [illegible] J. Mc[Neel], [illegible] W. Herold was appointed deputy sheriff.

Samuel M. Gay was appointed Superintendent of the roads over which Jas. Gibson, Jr., is toll collector, in the room and stead of Samuel B. Moore, refusing to act as such Superintendent.

The following commissioners of election were appointed for the school election the 21st of May.

Traveler's Repose;

Peter D. Yeager, A. M. V. Arbogast and Lafayette Burner.

Green Bank;

John R. Warwick, J. H. Patterson, and Adam Arbogast.

Dunmore;

Wm. H. Cackley, Ernest M. Moore and George Arbogast.

Frost;

Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and W. A. T. Sharp.

Huntersville;

D. A. Fisher, S. L. Brown and Sheldon Moore.

Edray;

Geo. K. Gay, Wm. M. Sharp and W. T. Via.

Split Rock;

E. D. King, S. S. Varner and Harman Sharp.

Little Levels;

R. V. Hill, Jno. P. Kinnison and C. W. Eskridge.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.—A dispatch from Wheeling, W. Va., says a terrible accident is reported from Braxton county. P. H. Harr and family lived in a thinly settled district, and on Sunday last, May 5th, he and his wife and two children started to visit a neighbor. The mountain stream in their path was swollen out of its banks, but Harr attempted to cross in a canoe. Half way over the boat capsized and the whole family were thrown out. The wife and one child immediately sank. Harr, who was an expert swimmer, seized the other child and made desperate efforts to escape. He caught on to the canoe, but was swept down the stream and perished before help could reach him. The bodies have all been recovered.—Ex.

The Suicidal Mania.

The readers of the newspapers recently must have observed that the suicidal mania in this country threatens to become an epidemic. In Chicago there are five sucides a day. Since the first of April there hav[e been] over a hundred in the coun[ty], and since the first of January, over six hundred.

What is the matter with the people? Why are they so anxious to shuffle of off this mortal coil? Statistics show that the men who go off and deliberately kill themselves are the very ones who can be of some service to the state and to the country. The Chicago Tribune says that "within the last three months three clergymen, three post-masters, six physicians, twelve well-to-do merchants, seven office-holders, three lawyers, three bankers, four railroad officials, two artists, three mayors, one journalist, one army officer and two capitalists have, for various reasons, voluntarily shuffled off this mortal coil."

Where is the physician who can minister to this form of disease? Where is the sanitarian who is able to prescribe a remedy for this kind of epidemic? It is a very important matter.—Atlanta Constitution.

Gov. Lee, of Virginia, is said to have attracted the most attention at the New York centennial, and Gov. Wilson, of West Virginia, was the only Governor present who did not wear a silk hat. Our own E. Willis generally gets there in some kind of shape. To those doubting this assertion we refer them to Carr and Goff.—Ex.

Orders of Publication.

No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als.
vs. } In chy. No 1.
Wm. F. Arbogast & als.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing [illegible] acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David V. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee; James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sholts, Amos Gum, Thos. G. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart Slaven Sr. and of Annie Sheta are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one months after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.28

No 2.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May 1889.

[illegible] &c.,
vs. } In chy. No. 2.
Wm. F. Arbogast &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,735 acres, lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto, according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O. Wade, Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Angol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife, and Junetta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, decd, are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiff without effect, to ascertain in what county, Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regor, (formally Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3.

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c.,
vs. } In chy. No. 3.
Wm. F. Arbogast, &c.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,576 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Angol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of west Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Patta, dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar (formerly Arnold) and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, }
C. F. MOORE, } p. q.
may 9 4 w printers fee 10.97

Order of Publicatio[n].

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Adm'r,
vs. } In chy.
Rebecca J. Hill & als.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To convene the creditors of said decedent. To subject the real estate of which said Geo. Hill, dec'd died seized to the payment of his debts and to construe the will of the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Thos. C. Hill, James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. H[ill] are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
[John] J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may 9 [illegible] printers fee [illegible]

PRIVATE SALE OF LAND.

I wish to sell at private sale, 100 acres of land lying within one half mile of Greenbrier River opposite to the mouth of Stamping Creek, formerly known as the [illegible] place. I will sell at a sacrafice. I will remain in the County two weeks, in the vicinity of Little Levels and Huntersville, after that

Address, Jas. E. A. Gum,
Raphine, Va.

CARPET SWEEPERS.

If you want something that will keep every thing as clean as a new pin, and dust from getting over every thing in the house, buy a Carpet Sweeper of Brison Hill, Jacox, Pocahontas Co., W. Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

[illegible] cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray tur [illegible] cts. mar. 25.

PATENTS.

Caveats, and Trade-Marks obtained, and all Patent business conducted for Moderate Fees.

Our office is Opposite U. S. Patent Office and we can secure patent in less time than those remote from Washington.

Send model, drawing or photo., with description. We advise if patentable or not, free of charge. Our fee not due till patent is secured.

A Pamphlet, "How to Obtain Patents," with names of actual clients in your State, county, or town, sent free. Address,

C. A. SNOW & CO.
Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

Commissioner's Sale of Land.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered on the 3rd day of April, 1889, in the chancery cause of

Frederick Burr's Heirs
vs
Frederick Burr's Exr &c.

I, as Special Commissioner appointed in said decree, shall proceed to sell in front of the Court House of said County, at public auction to the highest bidder,

ON THE 17TH DAY OF JUNE 1889

the following real estate, to wit: Two hundred and Twenty-Two acres adjoining lands of [illegible] Frist and others, being lot No. 8 in the partition of the lands of which Frederick Burr Sr. died seized. Said land is considered valuable for farming purposes, but especially on account of the fine pine timber growing thereon. The title is believed to be clear.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash in hand sufficient to pay expenses of sale and one third of the costs of suit; and for the residue, the purchaser to execute three several bonds, falling due respectively in Nine, Eighteen and Twenty-seven months from day of sale, with interest from date and with good personal security. A lien will also be retained until the future order of the court.

[illegible]
Spec'l. Com'r.

Bond as required by law has been given by the above Commissioner.

Apr. [illegible] JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k
[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

(Rate table illegible.)

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25, after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 16 1889.

Blackbird and House-Snake.
Forest and Stream.

One bright morning last summer I was walking out in the country near town, looking for anything I could find, and seeing what I could in the bird line, when I was surprised to hear a great noise of birds ...

Was it the Harrison family or the republican party that was elected last November.

All the records smashed. The City of Paris crosses the ocean in 5 days 23 hours and 7 minutes.

The State claims 90,000 population for Richmond, with a suburban population of 25,000 more.

The Parkersburg Journal seems to think that the prospects for the "Black Diamond" railroad are more encouraging.

Had it been Cleveland, it would have been tariff reduction—as it is, Harrison and wage reduction, remarks an observant exchange.

Carter B. Harrison, who was last week appointed marshal of the middle district of Tennessee, is a brother of the President.

Mrs. Louisa Sheffy, of Staunton, is dead. It was just about four weeks after the death of her lamented husband, Judge Sheffy.

The only woman ever convicted of horse stealing in Missouri was a beautiful girl of 15 years, on May 7. The jury gave her two years.

It is said that they have had to put folding beds into the White House to accommodate the numerous branches of the presidential family.—Ex.

Henry W. Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is to address the literary societies of the University of Virginia at their final celebration on the 26th of June ...

A boy sixteen years of age, named Albert Parsons, attempted to elope with his step grandmother, Mrs. Mary Mall, aged twenty-two, last Saturday. They were intercepted at Clarksburg and the scheme failed. They were both from Taylor county.—Randolph Enterprise.

Mrs. Henry Yeager, of Greenbank, and Mr. Burner, of Traveler's Repose, with their families, all of Pocahontas county, passed through Monterey on April 24, enroute for Cheyenne, Wyoming.—Highland Recorder.

Wonder what the striking and locked out miners of Pennsylvania and Ohio, and those of Indiana and Illinois who have just been forced to suffer and unprecedented cut in their wages think of the success of "protection to American labor.—Register.

A Pointer For Enterprising Citizens.

The Grafton Eagle Sentinel says: The young men are the bone and sinew of the land. If we want to build up our State and bring about greater prosperity, we must keep our young men at home, and in order to do this we must offer them such inducements to remain as will overcome the attractions of other sections. This is a big, wide country of ours, but there is no section ... possesses greater advan... the State of West Virginia ... if our young men can ... to remain here and ex... energy they can do just better than they could ...

... Times reporter feigned ... and was committed to ... County Insane Asylum ... was to satisfy himself of ... ment of inmates. He re... rrible story of cruelty and ... on the part of several of ... dants, the result of which ... death of a patient. The ... expose was verified by ... tem examination of the ... ate, and the attendants ... sted.

... King, the colored wo... has fasted forty days at ... Ill., sank down by the ... eight-gallon stone jug ... water, before many spec... prayed the Lord to turn ... into wine. Tears trick... her cheeks as she earnest... request, but the water ... still.

... ever occur to you," said ... a man to a New York ... er, the other day, "What ... om John Wanamaker's ... business must be having ... There are some 60,000 ... postoffices in the country ... that 50,000 of them ... all country stores. Don't ... that when John Wana... drummer comes round to ... stores he has a pretty good chance of getting an order? I'll bet that there are not a hundred such postmaster storekeepers within a thousand miles of Philadelphia who do not buy all they can at Wanamaker's nowadays, and even in more distant parts of the country ...

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, May 10th.—Har... made the best appointment yet made when he se... Twenty-... the...

A lady who was very talkative but at the same time very silly, complained that she was bothered by people who stayed too long.

"If they don't go why then don't you talk to them?" replied a female friend.

Mistress—"Why, Bridget, what in the world are you doing with my new dress on?" Bridget—"Sure, mum, it's yerself what gave it to me." Mistress—"I gave it to you!" Bridget—"Yis; yez said Oi cud have it as soon as yez had worn it out, an' begorra yez were it out yestherday afthernoon.—Harper's Bazar.

A maiden from the city tripped lightly 'mid the trees and snuffed the repuglant odor that floated on the breeze. "Oh tell me ancient farmer, with arms so brown and here, what is that wondrous flower that scents the morning air?" Loud laughed the ancient farmer till the tears rolled down his cheek: "Why bless you that's a polecat and I've smelt him for a week."

Philadelphian—You are very fond of society, I see. Do you belong to the exclusive set?

New Yorker—No, unfortunately there is a dark stain on my social record.

"Indeed!"

"Yes, it's too true. I once walked two squares on Fifth avenue with a very dear friend of mine, an eminent scientist who had on a suit of ready-made clothing."

"Well, Ned, I proposed to Miss Jenkins last night, and she has accepted me."

"Did you, though? Why I never for a moment thought you had the slightest idea of marrying."

"I didn't but Miss Jenkins won me so completely by her beautiful tact and delicate forethought."

"In what respect."

"Why, when I called, she walked up to the mantel-piece and stopped the clock."

"Why do you speak in such a low voice?" said a member of a certain church to the pastor.

"Well," he replied, "when I first began to preach they called me a shouter, because I spoke so loud. One Sunday morning, just after I finished the prayer, and while the solemn hush was still upon the congregation, a little fellow broke the silence with the question: 'Ma, is God deaf?' I have never shouted since."

... the Railway ... World recommending their executions by means of ... order to so-called "thanatelectric" service, that's the use of adding ... appoint... necessary terrors to the made ...

Pocahontas Times.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May., 23, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 44.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

BUCKLEY MT.

For The Times.

Those mountains cross the river,
So lonely look and dark;
No human sound, no human step,
I ever see or mark.

The seasons come, the seasons go,
White snow flakes gently fall;
The trees take on their fresh green leaves,
But still 'tis silence all!

If I could see a child at play,
Or sturdy manhood's walk,—
Something to break the lonliness,
Something with which to talk.

I gaze until the topmost pines
Gaze darkley down at me,
And summon to my wanted task,
What'er the skies may be.

If sadness reign, or gaisty,
If friends are stern or kind,—
Duty, the bright and guiding star,
United God's rest we find.

MRS. ANNA L. PRICE.
Marlinton, W. Va., May 1889.

In the Throat of A Boa.

BY COL. EDWARD B. TAYLOR

"I can never look upon one of those writhing, slimy things without a shudder," said my friend, Colonel Paul Ballantyne, as we three (his pretty South American wife was of the party) stood in front of the boa constrictor's cage in the serpent-house at the Philadelphia Zoological Garden.

"And yet, dear," interposed Mrs. Ballantyne—and she laid her hand lovingly upon her husband's arm, and looked up into his handsome face with a wealth of love glowing in her lustrous brown eyes—"if it had not been for the serpent you would probably never have met me. But perhaps you regret that!" she added, with a pretty pout.

"Ah, that was the recompense!" said the Colonel, and he eyed her fondly. "But for that, I think I could never have summoned up fortitude enough to again look upon one of the monsters. As it is I cannot repress the shudder, and in fancy I feel myself again being sucked down to death."

"You had an adventure, Colonel?" I ventured.

"Adventure!" he echoed. "Well, I should say so. The most horrible a man ever experienced. But you dine with us to-day, and then I'll tell you the story."

He did, and gave me permission to print it, which I have done without material alteration, and with the substitution of fictitious names for the real actors, who will doubtless read and recognize this history.

Three years ago my friend was sent to Venezuela, as the agent of a firm of mahogany importers, who had purchased some valuable forestry concessions in that country.

The lumber tract lay along the banks of one of the bayous of the Orinoco River, about one hundred and fifty miles above the Isle of Barima.

The Colonel examined the tract, selected a site for a logging camp, and proceeded to La Guayra, purchased supplies, and engaged a native Venezuelan, named Guzman Mendo a, to superintend the logging.

Indian laborers to fell the trees could be engaged in any quantity in the vicinity of the mahogany forest.

Mendoza was a slightly built, surly-faced fellow, with an ungovernable temper, to which he gave way at the slightest provocation. He was accompanied by an Indian servant, named Jose, who was much attached to his master.

Colonel Ballantyne had several wordy quarrels with his forman, on the way up the river, and he began to regret having engaged so uncompanionable an assistant, but Mendoza thoroughly understood his work, and soon convinced his employer that he was worth more than the liberal salary that was paid him.

The camp was established, a corps of native axe-men engaged and preparations were made to get together the material for a big mahogany raft, which would be floated down to the mouth of the bayou, where the precious wood would be loaded in vessels sent out by the firm which employed the Colonel.

Accompanied by Jose, who was familiar with woodcraft, the Colonel made daily excursions into the forest in all directions, to locate and mark the trees.

The tract proved to be a rich one. Mahogany trees were there by the thousand, and the forest was intersected by creeks in all directions, along which timber might readily be floated to the bayou, and thence to the river.

They had been in camp about a week, and the work was progressing satisfactorily, when Mendoza, who had heretofore been kept too busy to quarrel, got into a dispute with his employer, and had it not been for the interference of some of the Indian workmen, one would have shot the other, for both men drew their pistols.

After they had both had time to cool down, the Colonel, who is naturally of the most forgiving disposition, apologized to his antagonist, and requested that the matter be forgotten.

He held out his hand in token of amity, but Mendoza, with a shrug of his shoulders, and a contortion of his dark face, turned on his heel and walked away.

That night he and Jose held a long conversation, which was carried on in a low tone of voice, but although they looked frequently toward the Colonel and exchanged significant [illegible], he did not dream that they were plotting treachery.

The next morning the Colonel and Jose started, as usual, for a short expedition in the forest.

It was a feast day with the Indians, and they were making merry in the camp.

Jose carried a small hatchet for marking the trees, and over his shoulder was slung a haversack, containing lunch.

The Colonel walked in advance, armed only with a small rifle.

By noon they were ten miles from the camp, and further down the bayou than they had ever been before.

When they stopped for luncheon near a small spring, Jose informed his patron that they were only a few miles distant from the extensive coffee and indigo plantation of General Antonio De Silva, who controlled leagues of forest land in the vicinity, and from whom the American mahogany merchants had purchased the logging right.

After lunch the Colonel lighted his pipe, and leaned his back against a great tree-trunk to enjoy an after-dinner smoke.

Near by was a clump of low bushes, bearing a yellowish berry and he asked Jose if they were good to eat.

Jose examined them, and immediately declared that they were excellent.

"I have often eaten them down toward the coast, senor," he said, "but I have never seen any before so far in the interior.

He tasted the berries, pronounced them delicious, but somewhat different in flavor from them growing near the coast, and picked some for the Colonel, of which the latter ate liberally, without any suspicion of evil effects, finding them, as Jose had declared, of a most delicious flavor, and in taste something like the raspberry.

He did notice that Jose ate only a couple, nor did he see the look of cunning exultation on the Indian's face.

Ten minutes after eating the first berry, the Colonel felt strangely exhilerated, and burst out into a rollickly college song with the boisterous hilarity of one intoxicated with absinthe.

His whole nervous system, even to his finger tips, tingled with pleasing exeitement. He had a vague recollection of making a resolve to check his ludricous outburst; of seeing Jose glide away into the forest with his rifle over his shoulder, and a look of malignant hatred on his swarthy face; of struggling to his feet and calling to the Indian to come back, and then he rolled upon the ground and all became blank.

Not until the following day did consciousness begin to slowly assert itself. He then awoke, with a horrible sensation of helplessness.

The lower half of his body was numbed and paralyzed by a terrible gradually constricting power from all directions.

His limbs appeared dead, and all the blood forced out of them into the upper part of his body. His eyes seemed starting from their sockets; there was a singing in his ears, and he breathed with great difficulty.

His throat was hot and dry, and he was consumed with a raging thirst.

He was lying face downward, and having determined to throw off the stupor, he raised his hands to his head.

Instantly he was dragged backward several feet along the ground.

Horrified and bewildered, he made a frantic effort, raised himself on his elbows and looked about him.

He was half engulfed in the throat of a monster boa-constrictor!

The reptile had begun to swallow him without first crushing him within its coils, as is usually the case.

When the serpent moved, an indescribably sickening odor arose and almost stupefied the imprisoned man.

Maddened at the loathsome prospect, the Colonel gave a horrified scream of agony, and clutching frantically at the ground, struggled to release himself from the deadly embrace of the serpent's throat.

But the teeth of his devourer were fastened in his buckskin coat, and held him like a pair of hungry nippers, while the horrible suction pump below was worked with renewed energy.

The Colonel ceased his struggles, and looked about anxiously for Jose.

"What has become of him? Was he, too, being devoured, or was he already destroyed?"

While he was puzzling over these speculations, he suddenly remembered that just before consciousness left him, the Indian had disappeared in the forest, and then, like a flash, he recollected the fellow's conference with Mendoza, and he realized that he had been left to perish.

At the terrible thought, he made another effort to escape.

The movement disturbed the boa, and again it dragged him backward two or three feet, and again the constricting suction from below began.

So long as he kept perfectly quiet the serpent seemed content to let matters take their course, and to remain in a semi comatose condition.

He put down his left hand, to feel the taut rim of the boa constrictor's jaws.

They were three inches higher up his body than when he first regained consciousness.

The excitement through which he had passed had exhausted his emotions, but this dire discovery awakened them.

He tried to form some plan of putting an end to his existence, but his brain was no longer equal to the concentration of a definite idea. He was beyond all power of action.

Once he fancied that he heard the cry of some animal or human being near by, but he was too far gone to pay much attention.

At last all seemed to be over with him. It was as though the darkness of night had gradually closed over him, the roaring noise in his ears continued for awhile and then all was silent.

He had sunk into the unconsciousness of complete exhaustion.

"I remembered no more," said the Colonel, "until I came to my senses again, and found myself lying on a luxurious bed, in a cool pleasant room."

"The first face that I saw as I opened my eyes, was that of the lady who afterward became my wife. At the time I thought her an angel from heaven, and—well, she is as near one as a mortal can be.

"I was very weak, and it was several days before I fully recovered. Then she told me the story of my rescue.

She is extremely fond of scientific pursuits, and was botanizing in the forest, accompanied by her maid and two trusty servants, when she suddenly beheld the head and shoulders of a man protruding from the mouth of a monster boa, whose scaly body lay in serpentine length along the ground.

Taking it for granted that I was dead, and chilled with terror, she uttered the horrified cry that I had dimly heard.

"It brought to her side the servants, who were armed with sharp axes, to cut a path when necessary through the tanggled undergrowth of the forest.

"They boldly attacked the serpent and succeeded in chopping him completely in two just below the bulge in his body caused by my feet and legs. It was necessary, however, to slit open the severed head and neck before I could be released.

"At first they thought me dead, but were soon rejoiced at discovering a lingering spark of life."

Under Miss De Silva's directions the Colonel was taken to her father's house, and there she nursed him back to life and health.

A tender passion, each for the other, was developed during his convalescence, and when he was able to return to the logging camp, she had promised to be his wife.

He then learned from one of the Indian wood-choppers of the cowardly plot against his life.

Jose had seen the gigantic serpent crawling slowly toward the Colonel while the latter lay smoking under the tree, and had determined to assist his master, Mendoza, to a terrible revenge.

Knowing the stupefying effect of the yellow berries, the Indian had induced his companion to partake of them, and then had left him to his horrible fate.

When he returned to camp, he reported that the Colonel had been killed and devoured by an enormous serpent; but when news reached the camp that the supposed dead man was safe at General De Silva's plantation, he and his unscrupulous [illegible], Mendoza, deserted, and were never seen nor heard of afterward.—Saturday Night.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance, after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 23 1889.

"An Era of Prosperity."

On the fourth of March the Republican legislature of Kansas, after singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," passed a resolution "that we congratulate the nation upon the incoming at this moment of a republican administration, and a consequent era of prosperity and good government." A few days later came the failure of the Reading iron works with liabilities of nearly $2,000,000, and throwing 2,000 men out of employment. Then the failure of the Excelsior pottery of Trenton, N. J., employing 300 hands, followed by the shutting down of the rolling mills at Reading, Naomi and Gibralter, Pa., and the Findlay, O., Iron and Steel company, with liabilities of over $100,000. A few more days passed and then came a lookout at the Fall River, Mass., calico works, in which 6,000, men, women and children were thrown out of employment. Scarcely a day passes without a forcible reminder from somewhere that the "era of prosperity" of which the Kansas solons spoke has dawned upon the country. This is shown by the reduction of wages of mechanics and laborers and a decrease in the price of farm products all over the land. It is probably an "era of prosperity" for somebody and "protection" is doubtless a big thing for somebody, but for whom? Is it for the laborer, the mechanic, the farmer or the producer in any of the branches of manufacture or trade? Not much. Such prosperity is not recognized by the money kings and the gentlemen who now have our government under their control. It may be an "era of prosperity" for them and it doubtless is. If it did not pay them to pursue their present tactics and if it did not pay the millionaire manufactures to shut down their works they would not not do it, would they? Well, it is hardly probable. But what are you going to do about it? "Protection" is the watchword of the administration that will be in power for nearly four years to come and if the people, who are supposed to be the real rulers of the country do not develop more good sense during that time than they showed at the last election, it is likely to remain so for four years longer. The workingmen who voted for Harrison and the kind of "protection to American labor by the broad shield of American law," that Gen. Goff talks about, has no right to "kick." He ought to take his medicine like a man. He asked for it, and he has got it, but we imagine that it does not taste as good as he thought it would. Experience is said to be a dear school, and it has doubtless been a dear one to many a Republican who has followed his party wherever it led, without stopping to ask himself what his own interests were. But after all, they may learn something by it, and we hope they will. If not, we had better turn the country into a vast idiot asylum and let "protection" rule the roost until its followers starve to death hugging their idol, which is in reality the most gigantic fraud of the nineteenth century.—Charleston Star.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, May 17th.—Hon. Samuel J. Randall who has been confined to his residence in this city for several weeks past, is now much better, although not yet well enough to get out of doors. He contemplates spending the summer at the seashore.

Solicitor General Jenks, of the Department of Justice, who tendered his resignation at the beginning of the present administration, has been notified of its acceptance by the President to take effect on the 15th inst. Mr. Jenks will continue in the service of the Government as counsel in the telephone cases until they are disposed of. This position was the bone of contention which brought on the recent bitter wrangle between Senators Sherman and Quay. It was privately promised to Sherman's candidate Alphonzo Hart, of Ohio, some weeks ago, but for some unknown cause the appointment has not yet been publicly announced.

Ex-Senator Riddleberger, would be-Congressman Laughton and other anti-Mahone Republicans come to Washington and chin the President all they want to, but so far everything given out in Virginia has gone to a Mahone man.

A big scramble is now taking place daily at the Government Printing office, Palmer the new Public Printer having taken charge of the office Monday, since which time he has hardly been allowed an opportunity to eat or sleep so great is the rush. He has made but few appointments yet, but one of those few-Chief time keeper, was secured by ex-Senator "Billy" Chandler, of New Hampshire, who is one of Palmer's bondsmen, for his private secretary. "Billy's" friends are also likely to be heard from when the contracts for the year's supplies for the office are made next month.

Chief Justice Fuller has gone to Norfolk, and from there he will proceed to South Carolina on his district tour.

Harrison's first negro appointment Rev. James Townsend of Indiana, to be recorder of the General Land Office has created quite a commotion in the Land Office. In the division of which Townsend is to be Chief there are 25 white lady clerks and every one of them is trying to get transferred to some other division in order to escape the negro chief. As one of the ladies puts it; "We naturally have to pay a certain amount of court and deference to our Chief, and it will be very disagreeable for me to treat a negro as my superior, I shall get into some other division if I can; if not I suppose I shall have to stand it, as my bread and butter depends upon it."

Oklahoma does not propose getting left in the great scramble for office. Corporal Tanner has appointed a board of pension examiners for Guthrie, and the Civil Service Commissioners have received a letter asking how soon examinations are to be held in Oklahoma.

It is said that the Sherman and Foraker factions of Ohio republicans have got up a compromise on the Federall officers in Cincinnati, and that ex-Mayor Amor Smith will be surveyor and Col. D. W. McClung collector. The first is a Sherman man and the latter pins his faith to Foraker.

One man has appeared here as a candidate for office that every respectable man in the country should rejoice to see disappointed. I refer to W. E. Haskell, editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, who wants to be minister to Denmark. Haskell is the man who publicly insulted Mrs. Cleveland by a scandalous editorial in the columns of his paper while she and her husband were the guests of his city. It is surprising that he could get anybody to endorse his application.

The Court of Claims has decided that the celebrated Triggs' swords, which have been in the custody of the Treasury department ever since the war should be turned over to Mr. Myers, the executor of the General Triggs' estate.

Ex-Congressman Ochiltree, who spends his time in New York, but for political purposes, claims a residence in Texas, says that Harrison has given him control of all the Federal patronage of Texas. It may be just as Mr. Ochiltree says, but you know Mr. Ochiltree is the champion romancer of the country.

Ex Public Printer Benedict and brother, ex chief clerk of the Government Printing office have been presented with handsome gold-headed canes by the clerical force of that office.

A Mysterious Death.

On Wednesday of last week some fishermen discovered the body of a man lying on the bank of Greenbrier river, about three miles above Alderson, in Fort Spring district, this county. The body had evidently floated down during the recent rise in the river and deposited where found. The authorities of that district were notified, and a jury of inquest went down from Ronceverte to investigate the matter. The body was very much decomposed, and was that of a man 35 years of age and was well dressed, having on a tailor made suit of clothes, worth about $35 or $40. Nothing on his body was found to identify him. The only articles found were a couple of pocket handkerchiefs a money purse, (no money in it,) and a small knife. There were some indications that he might have been foully dealt with, but, no doctor being present at the inquest, this was not positively ascertained. He was evidently above ordinary men in position and circumstances, but who he was and how he met his death are mysteries.—Greenbrier Independent.

In New York.

THE WEST VIRGINIA TROOPS CHEERED FROM ONE OF THE LINK TO THE OTHER

A gentleman who returned from New York, and who saw the great parade there, says the West Virginia delegation showed up in great shape. There were about 150 members of the National Guard in line from this State, being headed by Gov. E. W. Wilson, Gen. E. L. Wood and the Governor's Staff, including Col. A. A. Franzheim of Wheeling. Then came the Governor's Guard and the two companies of 150 men. The boys marched like old-timers and where cheered all along the line.

There were few Governors in the line who received more cheers than Governor Wilson and he was one of the very few who received bouquets. While passing up Fifth avenue an immense bouquet of carnations was thrown to the Governor from one of the mansions on that thoroughfare.

The Governor's Guard band was along and made splendid music, and altogether the turnout was a creditable one for which the men should receive praise, as they all paid their own expenses.—Ronceverte News.

There are fifteen contested Congressional election cases to be settled by the next Congress. Three of them are from West Virginia.

The Illinois house passed the bill appropriating $50,000 for a monument to the late John A. Logan.

The West Virginia soldier boys gets $8.685 as their share of the $400,000 appropriated by the last Congress for distribution among the National Guards of the several States.

THE supreme court has decided that the Scott Chinese exclusion act is constitutional. This must me quite unpleasant to Gen. Harrison and other lovers of the almond-eyed Mongolian.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Fine rain last Sunday.

—Read Loury & Doyles new ad. this week.

—Read A. M. McClintic & Co's new ad this week.

—E. J. Holt, of Academy was in our city last week.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3, $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Ronceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—Charley Arbogast was in town yesterday.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—W. H. Wallis, of Baltimore, was in our burg the first of the week.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30 2m.

—Go to Loury & Doyles for all kinds of fine goods.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Talk about hard times; you would think they are hard sure enough if you would see how cheap Loury & Doyle are selling goods.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9 12

—Geo. W. Wagner, has been appointed postmaster at this place and Amos Barlow removed, and W. E. Hannah at Frost.

—B. H. Waugh and son, passed through town Monday, on their way to Rockbridge Baths, Va.

Married, on Wednesday, May 15 at the residence of the brides parents Mr. [illegible] Sheets, of Green Bank to Miss Mary O. Simmons, of Buckeye.

DIED.—Slaven of pneumonia, at the home of Mr. Hoover, on cheat Mt., May 11th 1889, Prior V. Slaven in the 82d year of his age. Prior had been a great sufferer for many years, but his end was peace.

W.

Died, Mrs. T. H. McGlaughlin, of Gillaspie, this Co., formerly of near this place.

Public Commencement

The grand public commencement of the H. T. School Academy W. Va., will be held Tuesday, June 4th, beginning at 8 p. m. The public are cordially invited to attend.

Miss O. M. SHEARER,
Principal.

Election returns at this place are as follows: For Co. Supt. M. G. Mathews, 26; C. F. Moore, 1 and Miss Emma Warwick, 1

For Commissioner—P. M. Harper 20; H. M. Rucker 3 and Sheldon Moore 6.

A Letter

Mr. Dilley, P. M. at Dilley's Mill is very much mistaken about the registered package coming up missing at Dunmore. I got the package and it was for me; registered to me from S. L. Myers & Co., N. Y. Sept 13th 1888.

I get registered packages sometimes, without taking other peoples. This report was started to injure me, but I don't think it did.

Respectfully,
C. B. SWECKER.

Gladstone has refused to write twenty-five newspaper articles for $22,000 for a New York newspaper syndicate; says he is bad paid.

Mill Point Pickings.

Fine growing weather.

Lee Cackley, wife and baby and Mrs. Curry and daughter, passed through our town a few days ago on their way to Green Bank.

Trench Sutton who has been visiting relatives at this place has gone home.

Mrs. Luther Auldridge and Miss Mintie Smith are visiting friends and relatives at Edray.

Lieu Gibson, of Kansas city, made a short visit here a few days ago.

J. L. Cleek, has finished working the turnpike on Droop mountain.

Mathews Ruckman, wears quite a smile. Its a girl.

E. P. G.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Miss Jessie Kinnison, is suffering from an attack of diphtheria.

Mrs. Felix Crummett, is on the sick list.

The Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro Male & Female Academy taught by Prof. Landes will be Thursday and Friday nights a select choir has been picked from the best singers in the Levels and the parts well rehearsed, so a pleasant time is expected.

The Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro Training School will take place the night of the 4th of June. Those who attended the excellent Commencement gotten up by Miss O. M. Shearer, know what to expect and we feel they will not be disappointed.

PRUNELLA

Dunmore Doings.

S. C. Pritchard, is off for Staunton.

M. G. Mathews, got a majority for Co., Supt. at Dunmore and Split Rock to hear from.

Work has commenced on the new church.

Several Drummers stopped at the Wakeman Hotel last week.

I understand from the Co. Court that each district in the county was provided with two road scrapers and the owners should get them and make use of them.

Died, Mrs. Jacob H. Arbogast, at the home of her son-in-law near Traveler's Repose on the 20th inst., at an advanced age.

D. B. McElwee will be appointed P. M. at Dunmore and C. B. Swecker removed.

Quite a number of our people will attend the musical association at Frost.

Subscribe for THE TIMES.

TOM SAWYER.

Notes by the Way.

This is a most pleasant time for jaunts over the country, and your correspondent has never had more exquisite enjoyment, than the past few weeks. One recent morning while reflecting on the beauties of natural scenery, the writer felt that he ought to be very careful to keep the commandments of the Lord his God, to walk in his ways and to fear Him, for God in his providence in permitting him to have a home in Pocahontas, brought him into a good land of water of brooks and of fountains that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley and vines and honey; a land wherein one may eat bread without scarceness; a land whose stones are iron, see Deuteronomy 8, 8 and 11, 11.

It would be hard to find a region that has more points of resemblance to the promised land, than our section of West Virginia.

> The flowery spring at thy command
> Embalms the air and paints the land.
> The summer rays with vigor shine,
> To raise the corn and cheer the vine.

A useful lesson.

Last Sabbath morning, May 12, while on the pleasant way to Huntersville, where a most enjoyable forenoon was to be spent with some of the best people in the world, in Sabbath school and preaching services, my mind for a time was preoccupied with reflections suggested by a little spruce pine tree, near Spice Island.

It is growing upon the decaying branch of a sycamore tree, that overhangs the water.

It is only a question of time when the branch to which it clings will fall away, and then all will be swept down the flood, and it will never be the tree it would have been, had it chosen a more lowly place to live in.

For the present it seems to have the pre-eminence over its contemporaries, but it will not be so, very long, for its very growth and development, but shortens the time of its ruin.

This world like the decaying branches is passing away, and if my immortal nature should have nothing but it to cling to and be nourished by, then its ruin is only a question of fleeting time, when to be swept away by the "dark rolling flood."

GOOD READING.

Some of the best reading accessible to your correspondent, he gets from Lovell's Library. In a recent issue, Farrar's "Seekers after God" much is said of Seneca, the wisest of pagan moralists and the teacher to Nero, the vilest of pagan rulers. The author points out the mistake Seneca, made in teaching his illustrious pupil. Seneca neglected to take to heart, what Homer taught; "it is better to die than to live in sin." He allowed Nero to indulge in some bad habits, so as to keep him from worse ones, and hence it was an education of compromises. So alike in the studies of Nero's boyhood, and managing him respecting the graver temptations of his manhood, Seneca acted on the [illegible]

"Had the [illegible]
The soil is [illegible]
The grain [illegible]

The wib[illegible] approval [illegible] worst chara[illegible]

All observ[illegible] well as pagan [illegible] "Just as the tw[illegible] inclines." So it [illegible] proverb.

"The child is fa[illegible]

Seneca seems to [illegible] what Horace wrote [illegible] long retain the odour of fa[illegible] has once been poured into it, when new." He might have received a hint from Quintilian also, for in describing the depraved influences which surrounded even the infancy of a Roman child he said "From these arise first familiarity, then nature."

So christian teaching, and pagan philosophy jointly agree, that first impressions are for weal or woe, for time and eternity, in a persons history.

First impressions are always made at home, how all important that our homes should be pure and good, and how can they be pure and good unless the parents be pure and good, to begin with.

Let the source be pure, then will the stream be pure and cleansing wherever it flows. Let the homes be pure, then society will be pure, and government will be pure, and the people happy and prosperous.

Impure homes results in the down fall of Rome, and should the United States come to ruin the historians recording the deplorable disaster will trace the primary cause back to American homes.

> In a most impressive sense,
> "There is no place like home."

W. T. P.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 35 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a fertile State of Cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC.
Special Com'r

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
C'l'k Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.70 may23 4w

Orders of Publication.

No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als. vs. Wm. F. Arbogast & als. } In chy. No 1.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing 6,000 acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Allegheny mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David V. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee; James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sheets, Amos Gum, Thos. G. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart Slaven dc. and of Amos Sheets are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one months after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.30

[illegible] and Potts, [illegible] due diligence has been [illegible] of the plaintiff without effect to ascertain in what county, Lorenza [Humphries] and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regar, (formerly Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3.

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c., vs. Wm. F. Arbogast, &c. } In chy. No. 3.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,576 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Arnold and Amos Stephenson, John V. P. Wade and Rebecca his wife and Jenetta Grover are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan [illegible], dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar formerly Arnold and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may9 1 m printers fee 10.97

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Adm'r. vs. Rebecca J. Hill & als. } In chy.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To convene the creditors of said decedent. To subject the real estate of which said Geo. Hill, dec'd died seized to the payment of his debts and to construe the will of the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Thos C. Hill, James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. Bradley are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may9 4t printers fee $9.62

PRIVATE SALE OF LAND.

I wish to sell at private sale, 195 acres of land lying within one half mile of Greenbrier River opposite to the mouth of Stamping Creek, formerly known as the Cambell place. I will sell at a sacrifice. I will remain in the county two weeks, in the vicinity of Little Levels and Huntersville, after that

Address, Jas. E. A. Gibbs,
Raphine, Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

2½ cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for 4 cts. mar. 28.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Postoffice at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 50	$ 5 00
Two inch	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
[illegible]	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.50; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 23 1889.

The True Home Life.

From Good Housekeeping.

What is the central point of the home life? Is not this the question which we should each, as home-builders, ask ourselves? What are the things of all that we do, daily, weekly, or returning in their appointed time, which are only not necessary, but are harmful to the true home life? It may be that the only reason for doing certain things is because the proceeding generation has done the same things, and that, too, in very mechanical ways. A mother holds her first child while it sleeps upon her lap; it becomes accustomed to it. When she grows stronger she must lay it down to do necessary work; it frets and cries and refuses to take its naps. The mother is worn out in her efforts to do the work and quiet the cries; so she carries the child about in her arms. It is slow to walk. She becomes nervous and irritable, toward her baby, even. Her second child is cross and restless. She bears and rears several children. All through these years the mistake pursues and wears her out. The children are not taught to depend upon themselves and to be helpful.

This mother does non-essential things and leaves the essential undone. Her mental growth stopped long ago; alas for the time when the little children find that mother cannot help them in their little studies, and alas for the mother who has let the knowledge of her girlhood slip from her, and has not added to it both for herself and family! What is more beautiful to see than great sons and daughters asking mother's opinion of some point which they are in doubt about, which they bring to her to have settled before they return to school? To have them hasten eagerly to tell her upon their return that their work was right?

Sometimes it is through suffering only that a woman learns that there are many things which need not be done. It is often in these times of forced quiet that she sees most clearly that real living is not a part of her home life. After her experience is gained and she has but little strength, she can then think what she should do with the strength which is still left to her.

Temporal wants and pleasures must be considered, and indeed planned for, but there are many things done in the way of cooking food unwholesome through its richness, which should be made rarely, if at all. Sacrifices which take away rest and sleep to keep up pride in dress or some adornment, should never be made.

Let children be taught that they may have fussy clothes when they can make, iron, and keep them in order. In a home where the work is done by the mother and daughters, this plan is pursued. She found that when her daughters were old enough to iron much ruffled white dresses they preferred plain ones.

Nothing can take the place of neatness and order. These depend much upon good management, for one can always be cleaning, yet never clean, always arranging, yet never in order. Sometimes one's own spirit is restless which is the secret cause of the lack in the divine part of a true home life.

She Thought it Time to Get to Business.

"Oh darling Ethel," said the young man, as he moved nearer to the blushing maiden, "you really do not love me as I do you, or you would not be so cold."

"I am not cold, Herbrt," murmured she.

"Yes you are. Here I have loved you madly for months, and to-night I have told you so, and yet you refuse to let me kiss your sweet lips only once to seal our compact."

"It would not be right, Herbert," she sighed.

"Yes, it would, my darling one. It would not harm you; it would never be told to the cold ear of the world; it would be a token I should never forget. Do you give me one, just one, my affianced bride."

"Well, Hubert," said she, as her liquid eyes beamed love to his, "If I give you this token, will you give me one to keep near my heart?"

"Anything, darling, any token you may wish!"

"Only your name, dearest; your name on a piece of paper, It is only an odd, a romantic, aye perhaps a foolish, girlish idea of mine, but I want your dear name that I may carry it in my bosom, and gaze on it and kiss it when you are away. Just put your name here."

And Herbert did so only too gladly, and she placed the paper in her bosom, and when she reached her room she took it out and gazed on it. And above his name where he didn't happen to see, appeared this legend, which had been written just before he called:—"Evansville March 28, 1889. This night I promised to marry Ethel, and I hereby bind myself to do so at the time we mutually agreed on.—HUBERT MONTRAVERS."

"Yes," she muttered to herself as she sank to rest on her pillow, "I think I've got him foul. There have been too many ducks kissing and slobbering over me for the last five years, and I think it's time to take a tumble and get a sure grip on one."

His Honeymoon.

The following rather singular method of of enjoying a honeymoon may commend itself to impecunious bridegrooms if it does not to their brides. The colored female cook of a family living in Boston came upstairs one afternoon, and, twisting the corners of her apron with embrassament, said to her mistress:

"You see, missus, I thought it mought be bes' to be tellin' you dat I—dat I done got married las' week."

"Ah! and what is your name now, Hannah?"

"Mis' Williams, ma'am. You see, my husban', he am a cook, too. He am a sheft in a hotel."

"A chef, eh? That's very nice. And do you expect to leave us directly?"

"Not d'reckly, mum. I'll stay for de present. You see, my husban', he's done gone to New York an' Washin'ton on his honeymoon, an' it'll be nigh onto six weeks befo' he comes back."

Form in your children the habit of daily reading in the bible. Say to each of them in your own way that which Sir Matthew Hale wrote to his child: "Every morning read seriously and reverently a portion of the Holy Scriptures. It is a book full of light and wisdom, and will make you wise to eternal life."—Rev. R. Heber Newton.

A ship ruled by woman—courtship.

Mrs. Blossom: "What's that? O horrors, the hotel afire." Mr Blossom: "Yes come on; we've no time to lose." Mrs. Blossom: "But here I am in my night dress." Mr. Blossom: "Good enough; I'm glad you got out of your balldress, and into something decent."

As it is the manly man who wins and satisfies a good woman, so it is the womanly woman who pleases and retains the desirable man. She need not be soft or silly, or weak or nervous—she may be strong, vigorous, resolute and brave; but, whatever she is, she must be womanly in order to please.

"'Tis said absence conquers love," quoted a husband, in writing home to his wife from whom he had been some time away, "I hope, dear it won't be so in your case." "Oh no," she replied in her next letter, "the longer you stay away the better I shall like you." He had to take it thus ambiguously, as he was afraid to risk asking an explanation.

Sickness in Farmer's Families.

A paper in a Massachusetts health report gives this suggestive summary of the principal cause of sickness in families of farmers:

1. Overwork and exposure; the women being more frequently overworked.
2. Improper and improperly cooked food.
3. Damp location of dwellings.
4. Want of cleanliness about their houses, especially in reference to drains, privies, cellars and proximity to barnyard and hog-pens.
5. Impure drinking-water, largely due to preceding causes.
6. Bedrooms imperfectly ventilated and on the ground floor, with the too general use of feather beds.
7. Insufficient recreation.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May. 30, 1889. No. 45.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

THE COURTS.

Atty-at-Law,

READY TO BE MARRIED.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 50	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 30 1889.

Fourteen lawyers have been president of the United States.

A Cincinnati man, in order to keep peace in the family, has married his mother-in-law.

Governesses are going to the front. Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts was a governess and so was Mrs. Levi P. Morton.

Mr. Gladstone's visit to Italy has improved his health immensely. When he returns to London he will look ten years younger.

Francis D. Duffin, of Brooklyn, a printer, bet $500 on the losing horse at the race, and then settled his grief by committing suicide.

Hon. Thorndyke Rice, recently appointed by President Harrison United States Minister to Russia is dead.

Prince Louis de Ligne and Vicomte de Jonghe fought a duel at midnight by torch light in a French forest. Nothing was wounded except trees.

THE Democrats have secured a majority of five in the constitutional convention of Montana. The prospects for the future do not look so dark, after all, do they brethren

Mrs. Oscar Folsom, mother of Mrs. Cleveland, was married on the 20th in Jackson, Mich., to Henry E. Perrine, of Buffalo. He is secretary of Buffalo City Cemetary Association.

Hon. John Wanamaker, distributed $100 000 among his employes last week. It was the result of his profit system adopted in his Philadelphia business house.

Hon. Jno. T. McGraw has resigned as Collector of Internal Revenue. He will be succeeded by A. B. White, editor of the State Journal, a bitter partisan paper at Parkersburg.

The Boston Journal reports that Samuel Cummings of that city while leaning against a rail in his grain-mill, "began sneezing and sneezed so hard that he dislocated his shoulder."

Miss Jane Woods, a young lady who lives in Wetzel county, has completed a nice quilt containing 22,140 pieces. She commenced it when seven years old, having worked at it for fourteen years.

A Republican exchange says: "A man who is addicted to drink, is not likely to get anything from Harrison." We can understand now why it was that so many of the brethren who seemed to have every prospect of success failed to get there.

A Clay county preacher has been indicted on four accounts for gambling at cards. The failure of his flock to ante promptly in the Sunday "pot" is, no doubt the cause of the minister's efforts to replenish his purse by a little game of draw.

Old Kanawha did nobly on Tuesday. Cutting down a majority of 1,500 to about 150 is not so bad, even if a full vote was not polled. At the same rate of increase we will be able to carry the county by about 800 majority at the next election.—Charleston Star.

The iron makers of the South are driving the Pennsylvania furnaces out of blast. The Southern mills have been selling pig-iron in New York at $16.50 a ton for a year, while the Pennsylvanians have been compelled to get $18 per ton for theirs, or close their mills. The Tariff will not help Pennsylvania hereafter. Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama are the countries from which Pennsylvania must protect herself, and she can't do that by a tariff.—Charleston Gazette.

The editor of the New York Times, Mr. C. R. Miller, in a closing lecture before the Dartmouth Alumni Tuesday on the "Art of Making a Newspaper," said among other things:

"The art of making a newspaper, like any other art, demands of him who would practice it a special skill and some information. The vulgar error that the newspaper art demand no special training, but may be taken up at a moment's notice and a generous salary by any man or woman temporarily out of work or unacquainted with any kind of work, is traceable to an obvious source. Young men are admitted to the practic of the law, they are graduated in medicine, and they are ordained or appointed ministers of the Gospel, in each case after a fixed term of study has elapsed and an ascertained degree of professional knowledge has been acquired. Of him who asks for work in a newspaper office no degree, license, or certificate is exacted. Yet no contention is that the training which fits one successfully to practice the art of making a newspaper is no less arduous, is usually rather more prolonged, and yields no smaller volume of attainment than the special studies preparatory to the practice of law, of medicine, of engineering, or architecture, or the instruction of ingenous youth."

WASHINGTGN LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, May 24th.—"Harrison has a weak back bone," said a republican Senator, and it is constantly growing weaker. There is every indication that we are to have a repetitiod of the worse features in the Hayes and Arthur administrations." This language was used by a man who is generally regarded as being very friendly to the administration, and there is no doubt that he is, but he was asked by a republican friend his opinion of the President and he gave it without reserve. And the known facts in a number of cases bear the Senators statement as to a weak back bone out. For instance he wants to put his old law partner Attorney General Miller in the Supreme Court bench, but owing to a vigorous protest from the Indiana republicans, who want Judge Woods of that State appointed, he does nothing. Again: In the early days of the administration John Wanamaker selected a business man of Philadelphia to be Postmaster at that city, and Mr. Harrison lacked the nerve to make the appointment. And again: Some time ago John Sherman was promised that Ex-Congressman Hart, of Ohio, should be appointed Solicitor. General, Hart was telegraphed to and told to come on and get the appointment. Quay made a big row accusing Sherman of lying etc., and intimating that the administration might go to jericho, for all he cared. Once more Harrison's back bone went back on him and Hart's appointment has not yet been made out. The cases mentioned are all well known, doubtless there are many similar ones that the public never hears of, but these are sufficient to prove that the Senators indictment is a true one.

Oklahoma can't have a national bank. So says the Attorney General to whom the application was referred by the Treasury department.

Some absurd rumors about the sending of an English man of war to Alaskan waters to prevent the provisions of Harrison's recent proclamation, as to the seizure of all vessels found illegally taking seals, from being carried out, forcibly if necessary, have been floating around here this week but nobody seemed to take any stock in them.

Justice Miller of the Supreme Court, having failed in his purpose of getting ex Secretary of War McCrary, appointed as his successor, or rather in getting a promise to that effect from Harrison, now says that he has no intention of retiring.

Washington has been the scene of some very heavy fighting among some of the big fellows in the republican party during the present week. Blows have been passed that will be remembered for years and revenged too, if the opportunity comes, and it most always causes strife among the leaders-distribution of the patronage. The first skirmish was between Representative Cannon, of Illinois and Senators Cullom and Farwell of the same state. Cannon got one of his constituents appointed collector of Internal revenue without consulting either of the Senators. Cannon has the best of it so far out the Senators swear vengeance. The next engagement was a battle royal that has raged all the week. It is over the Philadelphia Federal appointments. On one side is "Cheap John" Wanamaker, Representative Harry Bingham and Boss McManes, and on the other Senator Quay alone, with all his war paint on. The fight has been carried to the White House nearly every day and poor Harrison has been compelled to act as referee much against his will. This fight is still on, with the result in doubt. Another engagement was caused by a U. S. Marshalship in New York, Senator Evarts dared to oppose the candidate of Senator Hiscock and Boss Tom Platt, and not only to oppose the other candidate but to have one of his own. The three met here this week and indulged in a few roupds. Evarts is believed to have been completely knocked out. It seems to be generally believed by the republicans that Harrison will call an extra session of Congress in October. Of course everybody knows that there is no earthly occasion for an extra session except to give the republicans two months to fight over the organization of the House and to perfect their arrangements to get at least three-fourths of the contested seats.

Blaine, Windom and Proctor deny that they propose resigning, as was rumored.

Many people from Washington, have gone to Alexandria to-day to witness the unveiling of a handsome monument to the Confederate dead.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The [illegible] of regular meeting of this lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. B. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

HOME NEWS

—Geo. W. Siple, of Green Bank, was in town Friday last.

—Geo. Ginger, of Dunmore was in Huntersville last Saturday.

—R. A. Coulter, of Aytmer was in to see us last Saturday.

—County Supt. Mathews, was in the city Monday.

—R. K. Burns, of Academy was in Huntersville Monday.

—Harry Moore, of Dunmore was in town last week.

—J. W. McNeil, of Edray, was in to see us Monday.

—Rev. W. T. Price of Marlinton was in to see us Monday.

—Dr. Mathew Wallace, of Mill Point was in to see us Tuesday.

—Quite a little snow in several parts of the county last Saturday. How's that for the 25th of May?

Buggy harness and Saddles at $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—The County Court, Messrs. [illegible] Beard, S. B. Hannah and Geo. Moore were in town Monday.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Binders. may 9-12t

—The County Court met last Monday to count the election returns.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30 2m.

—The school election is over and Mr. Mathews, elected Co. Superintendant.

—Guy Slaven who has been attending the Hillsboro Academy has returned.

—Miss Mary Curry, has returned from the Hillsboro Academy where she has been an attendant.

The Wurts & Co., of Frankford, WVa., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

Isn't it about time somebody was doing something toward getting up a big Fourth of July celebration?

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—One Jess Smith, a logman, is wanted, for rape, committed on one Miss Perkins, on the river near Hillsboro.

—Mrs. C. A. Damron and family are visiting her parents Mr. J. C. Lory, at this place. Mr. Damron came with them but returned Monday.

—Quite an enjoyable afternoon was spent Sunday in singing at this place, led by Profs. S. B. Moore and A. J. Smith, of Edray, and M. A. Friel.

—M. G. Mathews, the only candidate for County Superintendent was elected by a handsome vote. The vote taken at Academy for a six months school was defeated by two.

—Rev. W. E. Miller, of Hillsboro preached at the Methodist Church at this place on Monday night and Tuesday. His sermons were interesting and instructive and very much appreciated by the audience.

—The residence of Bruce and Chesney at Mingo, was destroyed by fire last Sunday. The fire originated from a defective flue. The property destroyed is known as the [illegible] homestead. The loss is estimated at $2,000. No insurance. —Enterprise.

—Dr. C. L. Austin and Maj. J. C. Arbogast, of Green Bank, were in town Tuesday. The Doctor says if a person were to depend upon the United States under the present administration there would be no certainty about getting married. On Friday last he mailed a dollar to the Clerk with the request to send by return mail a marriage license, but no letter nor dollar has yet reached the clerk; so the Doctor had to come to town himself.

—The Pocahontas Musical Association held very pleasant sessions at Frost, May 23-26, under the direction of Prof. S. B. Moore, aided by a corps of Musical teachers, and organists. The attendance was large, and enthusiastic, and the interest in sacred music enhanced. Profs. Swecker, Smith and Ruckman, Capt. Gilmer, from Highland, Rev. G. P. Moore, Profs. A. C. Moore and M. A. Friel, were among the more prominent of the lectures. Rev. O. B. Sharp, was secretary, Misses Ida Herold Nina Herold Ida Smith and Mrs. Laura Herold rendered very efficient service upon the organ, that added much to the success of the convention. Outlines of an address, to be published by request of the convention, may be looked for in our next issue.

—Geo. Marteny, a young man about 17 years old, was instantly killed yesterday, Thursday, near his home, two miles east of Beverly, by the accidental discharge of a gun in his own hands. He had his gun ready to shoot a squirrel on a tree near by, and it is supposed, that forgetting that he had it cocked sat it down on the ground with sufficient force to discharge it, the ball entering his breast and passing through his body lodged just under the skin. He clasped his hands upon the wound and ran about twenty-five yards, when he fell and instantly expired. A younger brother, who saw the accident, immediately informed his parents and the lifeless body was carried to the house near by. He was a quiet, industrious, well-behaved boy, and the tragedy has cast a gloom over the community.—Enterprise.

Church Notes for June

Sacramental meeting at Liberty church, 1st Sabbath of June, 11 o'clock, a. m. Preliminary services Saturday night.

Sacramental services at Marlin's Bottom, 3rd Sabbath of June. Preaching services Saturday morning before, 11. a. m. The aid of Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker is expected.

All day meeting at Mary Gibson's Chapel, on Elk, on the 5th Sabbath of June. Parties will please bring their baskets and spend the day in social singing and religious exercises.

W. T. P.

Split Rock Splinters.

Sunday school was organized at this place Sunday the 19 inst with an enrollment of forty.

Mr. Gibbs who has been visiting friends in this county and Miss Cicie Taliaferro who has been the guest of Col. Gatewood the past two weeks, left for their homes Wednesday morning.

Twenty-three scholars enrolled at the Big Spring school.

Capt. Stoler was over on Elk a few days ago but as he was afraid of snakes he did not stay long. One morning he met two ladies who had started to gather wild flowers. They saw a very large snake and called to Capt Stoler, after he had passed to come back and help to kill it, but he pulled off his hat and ran until he reached Col. Gatewood's. There the ladies found him an hour afterwards sitting in a comfortable arm chair, he thought they killed the snake and when they went in Capt. Stoler jumped up and said: "Wasn't that a monster snake we killed ladies."

S. L.

Hillsboro Happenings

Wm. Cackley and Will McGlaughlin and Misses Mollie Smith and Mary Cackley attended the Commencement exercises of the Hillsboro M. & F. Academy.

Rev. Wm. E. Miller is absent helping Rev. W. E. Balleagee with the Quarterly meeting at Dunmore.

The Quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church will be held here next Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Miller will be assisted by Bro. Kinzer, P. E.

Mrs. Minnie Wissinger, of Ronceverte, passed through town last week on her way to visit her parents on Beaver creek.

Married—the 5th of May at the residence of the bride's parent in Burr's Valley, Miss Caroline Rider to Mr. Geo. Dunbrack, of Novasco tia and at the same time by the same minister, Mr. David Dean to Miss Susan Rider. The young ladies were sisters and the one that Mr. Dunbrack married had never been over a mile from home in her life.

PRUNELLA

The Buckhannon papers say they have on exhibition in that town now, a portion of the skeleton of a giant, which, when living measured twenty-eight feet in height. One half of the jaw bone, extending from the point of the chin to the back, measures twenty eight inches and weighs sixty five pounds. Three front teeth are missing, the balance, four molars, are intact and about the size of a pint cup. The tibia or shin bone, from the knee to the ankle, measures about five feet; a portion of the lower extremity, however, is gone. The rib bone is about thirty-three inches in length. There is also on exhibition the jaw bone and shin bone of an ordinary sized man. The depressions in the one correspond exactly with the other also does the nerves, etc. This skeleton was unearthed by a Mr. Morgan, in the northern part of Louisana, in 1878, and it is estimated to have weighed when living, eight thousand pounds.

Minnesota has a law on the subject of intoxication, the operation of which will be watched with a vast deal of interest. It makes it a crime to be drunk, either in public or in private, and it punishes by fine and imprisonment.

There is, to our mind, something wholesome in this law, and we believe it will accomplish more in the way of reforming the intemperate than any legislation yet devised. It will prevent the frequency of the example, and increase accordingly, the disgrace of the crime.

Make it odious to be intoxicated—as it ought to be—and there will be fewer cases of drunkenness, and less use of intoxicating drinks.—Charleston Gazette.

While Bismark was at college he fought twenty-eight duels.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

11th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 33 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the Waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and is in a partial state of Cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Special Com'r

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Cl'k Cir. Ct.

printers fee $8.78 apr25 4w

Orders of Publication.

No. 1.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas L. Austin & als. vs. Wm. F. Arbogast & als. } In chy. No 1.

The object of this suit is to have partition or sale of a tract of land containing 6,480 acres, known as the lots No. 7, 8 and 11, lying on the Alleghany mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds thereof divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Chas. Wade, Anson O. Wade, Paul L. Gay, Helen M. Gay, Signora Warwick, David Y. Buckman, Chas. W. Gum, Granville Eastham Trustee, James Arbogast, Virgil S. Sholtz, Amos Gum, Thos. G. Gum, R. Lee Gum, Clara Conrad, S. A. Porter and Lillie his wife, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, that the heirs of Stewart Slaven Sr. and of Annie Shots are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs, without effect, to ascertain in what county Margaret Dyer resides. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4t printers fee $11.20

Mrs. Harrison has sent to the Art Loan exhibition at Washington two porcelain plates of her own painting.

No. 2.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia on the first Monday in May 1889.

Chas. L. Austin &c., vs. Wm. F. Arbogast &c. } In chy, No. 2.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,735 acres, lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas County and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto, according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O. Wade, Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Angol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife, and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, decd, are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiff without effect, to ascertain in what county, Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Allen Stephenson, Julia Regor, (formerly Arnold) reside, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may 9th 4 w printers fee $10.16

No. 3.

At rules held in the Circuit Court, Clerk's office of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the first Monday in May, 1889.

Chas. L. Austin, &c., vs. Wm. F. Arbogast, &c. } In chy. No. 3.

The object of this suit is to have a sale of a tract of land containing about 1,376 acres lying on the Alleghany Mountain in Pocahontas county, and the proceeds divided among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Anson O., and Chas. Wade, William, Peter, John and A. M. Hartman, Mary Driscol, Andrew, John, Angol and Amos Stephenson, John V. B. Wade and Mobola his wife and Jenetta Groves are non-residents of the State of west Virginia, and that the heirs of Susan Potts, dec'd are unknown, and that due diligence has been used on the part of the plaintiffs without effect to ascertain in what county Lorenza Humphries and Jane his wife, Julia Regar (formerly Arnold and Allen Stephenson reside. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

L. H. STEPHENSON, } p. q.
C. F. MOORE,
may9 1 m printers fee 10.97

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, west Virginia, on the first Monday in May, 1889.

George C. Hill's Adm'r, vs. Rebecca J. Hill & als. } In chy.

The object of this suit is to settle the accounts of the administrator of George C. Hill, dec'd. To convene the creditors of said decedent. To subject the real estate of which said Geo. Hill, dec'd died seized to the payment of his debts and to construe the will of the said Geo. C. Hill, and it appearing from affidavit filed that Thos C. Hill, James F. Hill and Elizabeth J. Bruffey are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

C. F. MOORE, p. q.
may9 4t printers fee $9.62

[Po]cahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
[ED]ITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

[Entere]d at the Post-office at Hunters[ville, W.] Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
1 inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
[On]e in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
[¼] column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
[H]alf col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
[On]e col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Standing notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 30 1889.

Continued from first Page.

the child by the hand, walked with her up to the slope through the orchard.

"'Twas up here you was going to see the sun dance, wasn't it?" he asked, and when they were seated together on the church steps he made many inquiries about her, learned that there was in her mind a vague memory of a brother, and that mamma had said he would surely return some time. Presently the bell in the steeple above them struck one, and the stranger tried to persuade the child to her house and bed. She persisted in her desire to see the morning dance of sun and moon, but her eyes were heavy, and before she knew it, she was fast asleep in the stranger's arms. He had taken off his coat to shelter her, and in a corner of the church portico they passed hour after hour of the slow Easter morning.

It was yet some minutes before sunrise when Mrs Durant was startled from her sleep by a violent knocking at her chamber door.

"Mis' Durant! Mis' Durant! Haste ye up! Elsie's gone!"

Maggie, on the way to the earliest of early masses, had glanced into Elsie's room. During the few minutes that followed, confusion and anxiety contended for possession of the household. Then Mr. Durant set out to warn the constable, and Mrs. Durant, painfully agitated at the thought of losing another child, began to search the neighborhood. She went by the road that wound about the hill to the church. As she neared the building she saw a man crouching in the portico, and she determined to ask him if he had seen Elsie. He did not see or hear her. She had come quite near when the sound of his voice made her stop stock still with a fearsome faintness about her heart.

"Wake up, Elsie," he said; "the sun is just getting up."

"Is he dancing?" inquired a small sleepy voice from a bundle in his arms, "Where is the moon?"

"Elsie! Willie! My children!" cried Mrs. Durant, running forward.

The man, a young and not bad looking fellow, albeit haggard and roughened by exposure, rose quickly and said:

"We're here, mother."

And did the sun and the moon really dance that morning? The first rays of the sun fell on a deeply happy group in front of the church, and the paling moon looked on from the other side of the sky. If they did not dance then it is doubtful if they ever have done so since the first Easter.

The government appropriated $[illegible] expenditures for 1889-90.

The Horns Must Go.

It may safely be set down as a fact that Western farmers, at least those who raise cattle mainly for beef, have concluded that the horns must go. A great many dairymen are undecided because of the vehement assertion that dehorning destroys the "butter potency" of bulls and the milking qualities of cows—an unproved theory as yet—but the beef grower has made up his mind. It is now simply a question as to the manner of their going—whether they are to be bred off by the use of polled bulls, or sawed off, or gouged out, or whether they will simply kill the horns as they do weeds when they begin to sprout.

The cattle raising world has been startled in the last three months by the announcement that by the simple and single application of a chemical costing 2 cents per head, the discovery of Mr. John March, of Shullsburg, Wis., the growth of horns can be entirely prevented. We are skeptical at first, but a representative of the Journal visited the farm of Mr. March and made a personal and critcal examination of a number of grade short-horn calves from seven to ten months old dehorned by this method, and came away with firm conviction that the method was a complete success. Probably the most convinicng proof is furnished by the skull of a seven-months-old calf, which our representative examined carefully, and which was semi-dehorned by this method the chemical having been applied to one side and not to the others.

It is not necessary for us to enter into any argument as to the advantages of dehorning beef cattle. We have advocated that from the beginning for all grade cattle. We have commenced taking them off even the thoroughbreds on the Journal farms, and will dehorn this year's calves with the chemical. It is folly to grow horns on cattle when for two cents per head they can be prevented, with scarcely any pain, without danger and without any possible deformity.—Western Farm Journal.

Household Notes.

Fresh milk boiled with cut sugar will soothe a cough when other things fail.

Boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm, salt or gum arabic dissolved.

A strip of flannel or a napkin wrung out of hot water and applied round the neck of a child that has croup will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

To cure toothache, pulverize about equal parts of common salt and alum. Get as much cotton as will fill the tooth, damp it, put in the mixture and place it in the tooth.

Bath a sprain with arnica diluted with water, and bandage with soft flannel moistened with the same. A sprained wrist thus treated will grow well in a few days.

A tablespoonful of common baking soda to every five gallons of lard, when cooking, will improve the lard. It should be added when the lard is nearly done, and if not carefully watched will boil over.

Old furniture that has a dull, greasy look should be rubbed with turpentine and then polished with some good polish. The improvement in its appearance will repay you for the trouble. White spots on furniture can be removed by wetting a piece of flannel with turpentine and then rubbing the spot hard. It may require several applications of the turpentine and considerable patience.

The biggest circulation ever reached by a newspaper was by the New York World the 7th of November the issue for that date being [illegible] copies. The same day the Boston Globe printed 438,230 papers.

"Three years ago I went into the Board with $25,000, and in less than two years retired."

"With an independent fortune?"

"No; until I could raise a little money to go into something else."

Youth—Can you give me anything to do, sir?

Merchant—What is your line.

Y.—Clerk, sir.

M.—Clerk? Why, clerks are a drug in the labor market just now.

Y.—They are? Well, if that's the case I had better look for a job as a drug clerk.

Mrs. Cahokia—Alfred. I have been reading about the hot air treatment for weak lungs, and I think I should like to try it.

Mr. Cahokia (struck by a happy thought)—All right, Esmeralda. This is April. Next month is May. We'll spend the whole month right here in St. Louis.

Jinks—I called at your boarding-house to day and saw the table nearly set for dinner, and I must say things looked very neat. I never saw a whiter table cloth in my life.

Blinks—No, she doesn't make her tea, coffee or soups strong enough stain.

A lady in this town recently set a pot of cream in a spring near the house, so that it might keep cool. During the night a frog fell into the cream pot, and his struggle to get out actually churned the cream, so that when the lady visited the pot the next morning she found the frog sitting on a ball of butter, washing his feet in the butter-milk.—Middletown Enterprise.

"John, Mr. Jackson has bought a phonograph."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. You ought to see it. It repeats everything that's told it."

"I don't see how Edison got a patent on it."

"Why not?"

"Because it's no improvement on you women."

Mrs. Elite (in $5,000-a-year flat)—Oh, it's perfectly terrible the way things have gone to-day. That janitor has been just as contrary and disagreeable as it is possible for a human being to be.

Miss Elite—Did you bow to him deferently this morning?

"Indeed I did. I always do. Did you?"

"Yes, ma, I bowed to him most humbly."

"Well, something is the matter. Tomorrow morning try kissing him."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 13, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 47.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. P. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Silver Lining.

There's never a day so sunny
But a little cloud appears;
There's never a life so happy
But has had its time of tears;
Yet the sun shines out the brighter
When the stormy tempest clears.

There's never a garden growing
With roses in every plot;
There's never a heart so hardened
But it has one tender spot;
We have only to prune the border
To find the forget-me-not.

There's never a cup so pleasant
But has bitter with the sweet;
There's never a path so rugged
That bears not the prints of feet;
And we have a helper promised
For the trials we may meet.

There's never a sun that rises
But we know twill set at night;
The tints that gleam in the morning
At evening are just as bright;
And the hour that is the sweetest
Is between the dark and light.

There's never a dream that's happy
But the waking makes us sad;
There's never a dream of sorrow
But the waking makes us glad;
We shall look some day with wonder
At the troubles we have had.

Love and a Blizzard.

The Post lay bathed in sunshine. The sweet air untainted by the foul breath of the town, blew as it never does east of the Rockies, in regular, rhythmical swells.

Although it was early April, the prairies were green, and covered with the hardy blue and crimson flowers which bloom beneath the snow. It was just the day of all others when confinement within four walls is intolerable, and the joy of mere animal existence demands expression.

On the piazza of her father's quarters Katy Dare was standing, looking at the sky, which was hidden by architectural deformities, undimmed by the smoke of trade.

"Oh, gift of God! Oh, perfect day Where in shall no man work, but—play," she sang softly. "That's just it; we must do something. Think of letting this glorious weather go by without recognition. To-morrow we may be perishing with cold."

Quickly the dainty maiden ran beneath the row of prim cottonwood trees which looked more than ever like hop-poles in their leafless state, and rapped impatiently at the door of a quaint, old adobe house which stood with its many blinking windows facing the parade ground. Mrs. Rensome, wife of the Captain, who mothered every girl in the garrison, and was a perfect mine of new and delightful special projects, would know just what to do with this June day which some way had slipped into April's calendar.

Seated in the pretty parlor waiting for the busy housewife, Katy Dare made a lovely picture. From the crown of her pretty head to the tip of her tiny shoe, she was simply irresistible. You could no more classify her beauty than analyze the perfume of a violet. There were no standards in her case. She was herself and therefore to be loved. The strongest-minded person well fortified by theories, became her most unreasoning slave. Absolute, unconditional surrender was the fate of all.

The wife of the Chaplain, Mrs. McGraft, who had long since constituted herself the moral policeman of the garrison, had been known to defend the most bare-faced flirtations on Katy's part, and lay all the blame upon the victims of her charms—"those designing young men."

From the gray-haired commanding officer to the colored striker of the youngest Lieutenant, she was "queen of hearts." Sweet and gracious was her sway. Even the most oldest noticed that there were fewer card parties at the sutler's store since Katy's return from boarding school; and brave indeed was that man who ventured into her presence with his lips tainted with wine. Yet she was far from perfect; a more wilful, arrant little flirt never lived. Her love affairs kept the garrison in a state of breezy excitement. The number of pale, woe-begone young men who periodically asked to be exchanged into far distant regiments was legion. It was darkly hinted that every unmarried man within a radious of one hundred miles had proposed and been rejected.

Major Dare protested that the discipline of the Seventh was being ruined; the men did not half attend to their duties, and then begged Katy to forgive him for his cruelty; and at last the suffering victims of her irresistible ways found themselves to be regarded as presumptuous offenders. Still the army of martyrs grew.

At the time when our story opens a consumptive Episcopal clergyman was softly sighing at her feet. Rev. Jame Little had come to Wyoming Territory in search of health. His cousin, Captain Little, had found him quarters in the town near the Post, and introduced him to the social life of the garrison.

A wonderful change now took place in Katy Dare. Waltzes and operatic songs were banished from her music-stand, and Gregorian chants reined in their stead. Regularly she went to Caldwell, where the enthusiastic churchman had commenced to hold daily services. The surplices for the choir boys were fashioned by her dimpled hands. Demurely seated in the rough, bare room, which did duty as a chapel, she listened attentively to eloquent discourses on love and the domestic virtues, which at this time formed the theme of the rector's sermons.

The round eyed choir boys forgot their notes and nudged each other knowingly. "The parson is sweet on Miss Dare," they whispered.

The contagion spread. Red haired Bob Jackson, who was of a jealous disposition, tried to trip the Rev James during the professional; mysterious packages of strong peppermint lozenges were placed in the seat occupied by Katy; Jimmy Brown and Tommy Timmons came to blows in the vestry room; in fact, choir and rector alike were demoralized by the blue-eyed worshipper.

The commanding officer became alarmed. Could it be that his darling had passed so many splendid fellows of "Ours" to take up with the crooked stice, "that one lunged Eastern dude?" he queried, anxiously.

Katy gave no sign. The chants were wailed forth nightly by a thin, quavering tenor. Ecclesiastical embroidery lay on the table. The Major swore fiercely as he stumbled over huge volumes of church history, and led his stricker such a life that the poor darky, with the morals of his race, seriously thought of murdering the rector.

The interests of the lookers on grew intense. What was she thinking of? Was it another example of the law of contrasts? Would the Major consent?

Through all the commotion the principal personages of the drama moved serenely. The rector in his immaculate broadcloth escorted Katy to and from the services, carrying a gorgeous prayer-book in his hand. Stepping meekly at his side the lady, her golden bangs pushed demurely back from her pretty brow. Her face was tilted upward with an expression in which respect for the office was deftly blended with admiration for the man.

Whenever Jack Reynolds, the Quartermaster of the regiment saw this by-play he bit the ends of his moustache savagely. "Of course it is none of my business, but how dare the little cad have such assurance! He walks around talking about his bronchial tubes, and he seems to like it," he groaned. Tall, athletic, with a pleasant, manly face, Jack was the most awkwark, bashful member of the Seventh.

Katy had always turned up her saucy little nose at him, and refused to believe the stories which were told of his bravery in scenes of danger. "He is a perfect boor!" she had said more than once, and Jack had friends enough to tell him the little autocrat's verdict. Too proud to show how deeply he was wounded, he went his way, and found excuse after excuse for not attending the hops and parties where he would be likely to meet the Major's daughter.

But while we have been gossiping, Katy has waited impatiently for Mrs. Rensome's appearance in the parlor. That good lady had intended for some time giving Katy Dare a piece of her mind, but when she came within the witching influence of that witching face she kissed her instead, and obediently entered into plans for the day's enjoyment.

"We must have a picnic to Lake de Senet, dear," she said.

"The very thing!" cried Katy, rapturously, and entered into a brisk discussion of ways and means.

At one o'clock a gay cavalcade left the Post. The commanding officer led the way in his drag; then came the ambulance filled with ladies who did not ride; and following that, a long procession of carts, buggies and horse-back riders. An escort wagon, far in the rear, carried the band.

Races frequently occurred. The Major, the finest whip in the service, yielded the lead to no one. His four magnificent horses were as wax in his hands. Poor man! He was desperate. The unscrupulous Katy had seated Rev. James at his side, and the little man chatted complacently about the relative merits of flaxseed and porous plasters, till the Major was blue in the face with suppressed profanity.

Jack Reynolds was not one of the party. His duties as Quartermaster would detain him, he told Mrs. Rensome. Katy had openly given thanks for his absence, remarking pertly that blunderbusses were not pleasant companions. Never had she looked more beautiful. Mounted on her bonny brown nag she rode like the wind, winning every race.

After eight miles traveling over the springy plains they reached Lake de Senet. A more beautiful scene the eye could not rest upon, than this sheet of water lying clasped in solid bowlders. Hidden away in the foot-hills of the Big Horn mountains, sea-gulls flew over its surface, and regular sea breezes blew from its alkali waters. In the little sailboat, party after party went around the lake, exploring its shores. Afterward the band, grouped upon the rocks began to play a waltz, and soon every one except the rector was dancing merrily.

Just at sunset the trumpeter blew the supper call, and a hungry army hastened into the quaint old kitchen of a deserted ranch at the side of the lake. In the huge fire place a mass of burning logs was spattering sancily. Captain Little, who prided himself on his [illegible] qualities, presided gallantly over an immense caldron of coffee, the Major dressed the salad, and, of course, the youngest officer [illegible].—How good everything tasted! [illegible] ride and exercise in the [illegible] air had sharpened every appetite. For over an hour they sat at the table, ticking as no people in civil life do or can; for after all, it is pleasant to have a fairy god-mother to look after your well being, even if she comes in government form.

Rising from her place at the rector's side, Katy ran to the door and looked out for the moon that was to guide them home. The sky was gray and misty, and keen air cut like a knife.

"No moon to-night," she announced, in a disgusted tone.

"And no dancing, either," cried the Major, as he looked over her sunny head. "Come, good people, we must get back to the Post."

Hastily bundling bag and basket into the ambulance, they started on their homeward journey. The horses ran, as from the approach of an enemy. The Major glanced anxiously at the sky, and harshly told Katy to keep at his side. It grew colder and colder. Soon the air was alive with snow—the blizzard was upon them. The sky, the horses, the ambulance, were swallowed up in the whirling mass. There were no landmarks. The trackless plains surrounded them. The wind was due north and in their faces. The frozen particles cut their skin like razors. Numb hands dropped the reins, and the horses began to plunge madly. Nothing could contend with the awful "Norther and live.

Standing in the drag the Major shouted to the officers to take their sword-belts and fasten the ladies to their saddles, and then "mount—forward—gallop!" They must trust to the instinct of their horses.

What a ride that was! After what seemed like years of misery of when even Katy's heart had failed for fear, they heard above the roaring of the gale the beating of a drum. The escort wagon had been overturned at the door of a cabin in the wilderness. The horses had saved their masters.

The white owner of the cabin and his squaw wife received their half-frozen guests most hospitably. The horses were turned into the corral, and the entire party crowded into the one room of the house. What a relief it was to be sheltered from the icy touch of the blizzard! How beautiful the fire looked blazing upon the hearth! Katy felt that she could kiss the not over clean face of the Indian hostess, she was so happy. Life is sweet at eighteen.

No one slept that night. Grouped about the fire, the officers told story after story of adventure upon the plains. The most romantic chapters of unwritten history are told by soldiers' lips, and few are fortunate enough to hear them.

When morning came the storm showed no signs of abating. The eatables at the cabin, though coarse, were abundant, and the remnants of the picnic collation were served for breakfast. At noon, the members of the band went to the corral to feed the horses, leaving the bugler stationed in the little window, to blow the buggle as a guide to their movements. When at last they came staggering through the storm, they carried the stiff, half frozen body of a man in army blue.

"What's this?" cried the Major in a tone of horror.

"The Quartermaster, sir," replied

(Continued on fourth page.)

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 13 1889.

AFTER THE FLOOD.

In the midst of a calamity, or immediately after its occurance, we are very apt to overrate the injury sustained. Ten days ago the Knapp Creek Valley seemed to be an almost total wreck, and those who sustained the greatest loss were disheartened. But no sooner had the waters subsided everybody went to work with renewed energy, till now but few traces of that awful destruction are left. True some damage was done that can never be fully repaired, and some few will feel the effects of the recent flood for years to come; still when we consider our losses along with the losses elsewhere, how insignificant they seem. We might indeed murmur and become disheartened if like the sufferers of Johnstown, Pa, our injuries could not be estimated by dollars and cents, but at the cost of human life. Within the bounds of Pocahontas County we have heard of no one who even lost a home, much less a life. Then let us not go about with long faces because the waters carried away a few hundred rails, or destroyed a few acres of corn or wheat; these may all be replaced; but let us rather be thankful and rejoice that our lives are spared and the lives of our families and friends. Indeed our injuries are not worthy to be mentioned when we compose them with others.

Damage by the recent Floods.

EDITOR TIMES: All over the State, (except in Pocahontas County,) the County Courts have been called together to consider and adopt measures necessary to repair the damage done to public property by the recent floods. No precaution on the part of anyone could have prevented the damage we have suffered and since it has been visited on us in common with others, who have suffered much more, it ill becomes us to stand idle until another rise in the waters shall complete what the recent flood began.

It is said that the middle pier in the bridge at Marlin's Bottom is so injured, that another flood will be likely to destroy for us a bridge which cost something over $11,000 whereas if repared at once, at a comparatively small expense, it can be saved to us.

The public roads, along all the streams running through this County are in a terrible condition, and in some places new roads will have to be made. Why should not our County Court meet at once and see to this matter? It is the duty of this Court, and the safety of the traveling public demands that this have attention at once.

The damage to the bridge across Knapp's Creek, is not so great as [illegible] from [illegible] considerably [illegible] repaired be[illegible] we will certainly lose what money the people have in it, and, I think I know our citizens well enough to say, they will always approve of any necessary expenditure of public money for the public good.

There will necessarily be employed masons, carpenters and those who understand building roads, in this work of repair; and the County Court, as far as possible should favor the workmen of Pocahontas in contracting, that this money may stay among us, and not go to increase the circulating medium of some other County or State.

I know that an increase of the levy to make these repairs will bear heavily upon our citizens at this time, but I belive they have the pluck, and pride to do their duty in repairing any public loss to Pocahontas County, and to cry down the sycophant who undertakes to ride into public favor by denouncing the County Court for doing its duty in laying a proper levy to meet the public need.

Let us hear through your paper from all sections of the County, and if the County Court can assign any good reason for not giving prompt attention to this matter, of so much importance to our citizens, we would be glad to hear also from the gentlemen who compose the Court

Yours &c.

CITIZEN.

Academy W. Va. June 8.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 7.—"Cheap John" Wanamaker is treading on dangerous ground. He wants to abolish Sunday work in the post offices, and in order to get some foundation to work on he has sent a circular letter to the postmasters of one hundred of the largest cities asking for suggestions as to how Sunday work may be stopped etc. Of course all good men believe that the Sabbath should be observed in as general a manner as possible, but at the same time all sensible men know that a certain amount of work must be performed by somebody even on that day, and the carrying and rapid handling of the mails is a work too important to be stopped at any time, for any cause. In fact the efficiency of the Post Office department is more in need of being increased than decreased in this very matter of Sunday handling of mails and if Wanamaker isn't very creful he will raise a tempest in the business world that will be strong enough to sweep him out of the office that cost him so much money. And there is another view of the subject that should not be lost sight of. In the more than one hundred years of its existance no attempt has ever been made to have this Government officially recognize any religious denomination or sect, and the precedent would be a dangerous one to estalish. Suppose for instance that Wanamaker, who is a Presbyterian, should succeed in having all work stopped in our post offices on Sundays during his administration of the post office department. So far all right, but now suppose that in the unexpected upheval of politics he should be succeeded by a Hebrew, or a Seven day Adventist, both of which sects regard Saturday as the sabbath day, and that he should insist on having all post office work stopped on his sabbath. Then what a row we should have. Church and State both have important functions to perform in this as well as every other country, but let us keep them separate and distinct, for if history teaches anything it is the utter futility of successfully uniting the two.

Politics have this week been pushed to the wall that "one touch of nature that makes the whole world kin." Democrats and republicans have vied with each other to provide succor for the thousands of people made homeless by the great floods in Pennsylvania. Washington has shown the world that however heartless she seems to be in her dealings with political and social doings, she in reality has a great big human heart, throbbing just now in sympathetic accord with her suffering brothers and sisters of the Conemaugh Valley, upon whom such a terrible calamity has fallen. A public meeting was held to provide organized methods of collecting money and clothing; it was attended by an immense crowd and was presided over by the President who made a strong appeal for subscriptions. About $50,000 in cash has been raised besides an enormous quantity of blankets clothing disenfectants etc. Everybody seemed disposed to give something; poor people who were unable to give money gave a blanket or a cast off garment; bootblacks and news boys handed in their nickles alongside the millionaires thousand dollar checks, and the children emptied the pennies out of their little banks in order to turn them over to the Committee. For the first half of the week nothing was talked about or seemingly thought about but the awful news from Johnstown. Washington's flood had done a damage to property public and private of several millions of dollars but that was entirely forgotten in the face of the great loss of life by the Pennsylvania horror.

Already the republican acting Commissioner of the General Land office has begun to undo the good work of the democratic administration. He has given notice that he intends abolishing the Board of Review and the Division of Contests, both established under Mr. Clevelands administretion and both recognizes as being in the interests of the homesteader and against the land-grabber. But as the last named class have for many years, with the exception of from '85 to '89, controlled that office the change can hardly be surprising.

The Civil Service Commission is busily engaged in discovering "mare's nests." It has just reported a large one in the New York custom house, and is now in Troy, N. Y. hoping to find one in the post office. Next week it is to start west on a grand tour of discovery which will embrace a dozen cities.

It is rather early to begin the naming of choices for 1892, but the following from the Atlanta Constitution is worth reproducing:

If the Democratic party fails to make Grover Cleveland its leader in the campaign of 1892, it will repeat the stupendous folly in which it set aside Mr. Tilden in 1880 for General Hancock. * * * * Grover Cleveland is the leader under whom the Democracy can march to triumph in 1892 and he is proving himself more and more worthy of the great work to which he is consecrated—the redeeming of the goverument from the hands of the Democratic party, which is the party of the people.

Heavy storms of rain and hail at Huejutla, Mexico, have caused the river to inundate that town, drowning many persons and cattle, washing away many houses and destroying crops.

Married persons who have no children are seeking to adopt the children orphaned by the flood. None of these little ones will be allowed to suffer.

A heavy storm has been raging in Hong Kong, China. Immense damage has been done.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. R. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Circuit Court convenes next Monday.

—Atty H. S. Rucker was down at Hillsboro last Saturday.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—C. J. Stalting of Academy, and Mrs. Eli Doyle, of Valley Center, Va., were at Huntersville Hotel last Friday.

Buggy harness and Saddles at $3, $10 and up to $40 at A. P. Leist's Ronceverte, W. Va. 30-2m

—Atty C. F. Moore and Mrs. John J. Beard, were down at Hillsboro last Saturday.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—The bridal tour of Dr. C. L. Austin was not so extensive as was contemplated. Being brought to a halt at McDowell by the high waters, the party had to be content with visiting that place, Monterey and Top of Alleghany.

—We were pleased to learn that our young friend Clawson McNeil, of Swago, who was a law student at Morgantown, graduates at the head of his class with distinction.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—Any one wishing to procure a good calf-shed or sheep-house would do well to attend the next County Court; no doubt the bridge at Huntersville can be bought low. And we do not doubt that the road around the mountain will be given to any one who will haul it away; some pieces of it are left that would answer to patch up mud holes.

Sewing machines from $25 to $50; warranted, for sale by A. P. Leist, Ronceverte, W. Va. 30-2m.

Dunmore Inklings.

A problem for some of the school boys to solve: "If it takes a letter 20 days to go from Green Bank to Huntersville a distance of 20 miles, how long will it take Andy Hughs to travel around the world at the rate he travels.

Capt E. A. Smith, is up from the ark.

The lumber company did not loose as much as reported at first.

M. J. Moore, brother-in law of Capt. E. A. Smith is here from near Johnstown, Pa.

Mrs E. A. Smith has two sisters living in Johnstown.

The road overseers have had their hands out up this way, and have fixed up the roads in pretty good shape. Let others do likewise.

C. F. Moore was up Sunday and gave a very interesting lecture to the Dunmore Sunday school.

Not much sign of war, so says Jake Cary and Phil Edmiston. They are both girls and all doing well.

A. K. Jackson, has returned to Ronceverte.

Registered at Hotel Wakeman last week and this—J. Lowy, of Baltimore, O. Gay, the celebrated French cook, Z. H. Jackson, A. H. Jackson, W. J. Pritchard, H. M. Moore, C. P. Tilas, Jas. Siple.

Set out your cabbage plants while the weather is wet.

C. B. Swecker, the comical auctioneer has been in cry sales in Pocahontas and adjoining counties. Give him a call.

Success to the Ed.

TOM SAWYER.

Marlinton Items.

It is reported some fishermen near Gallilee, toiled all night and caught nothing. A party of Marlins Bottom fishermen toiled part of the night recently and caught one cat fish and sixteen dog fish. The dog fish in make up is pretty much mouth and intestines, like some greedy people in the world. One of the young fishers fell into water, he thinks ten feet deep, upon examining his boot legs however, and finding the boots not full of water, the estimate of deepness may be modified. One thing is true he has been cool as a water melon ever since on the matter of fishing.

Mrs. Florida Price the estimable wife of Calvin Price Esq. of Clover Creek, who has been quite ill is reported better. This is gratifying to a large circle of attached friends.

The casualties of the flood, at this place, while unconvenient, did not occasion very much irreparable damage.

D. H. Garber lost one raft of cherry and walnut lumber. He thinks that most of it can be identified as the sawing was done by a vertical saw.

It looks as if the question of riparion rights, will need attention in the near future. As our lawyers are wise, this word is enough.

H. K. S.

Mail Sub Contracting.

The mail route between this place and Traveler's Repose, has been sub-contracted for by John F. Wanless and C. O. W. Sharp, at about $800. How's that? a mail 60 miles a day, every day in the year except Sunday, over mountains, streams and everything else for $800.

We can't understand why men that claim to have good judgment will let a man from another State come in here and tell us what we shall work for; and take his mail routes off his hands at about half the actual cost that it will take to run them.

It looks as though some men will have a mail route if they have to pay some one to get it. Why is it? Is it an honor to carry a mail on an old poor horse over mountains, streams and through all sorts of weather and in mud and snow three feet deep and arrive at all hours in the night? If there is any honor in it we fail to see it.

The government don't want the mails carried for nothing; it is able to for it, if you will ask it; and why will you let these infernal star route contractors come in here and shove their contracts at a starving price off on you.

It's none of our business what you work for; but it worries us to have our mails come in, at all hours in the night. It would worry the devil himself.

What we want is good service, and we don't believe any one can give good service on a route as the above for $800

School Commencement.

The second Commencement of Hillsboro Training School took place last Tuesday night June, 4th., in the Pavilion erected for the purpose in the presence of a large audience. Every foot of space was occupied and many forced to stand throughout the exercises which they did good naturally.

The appearance of the stage with the light hearted students arranged in a semicircle presented a pleasing scene. The stage settings were beautiful flowers, and the central piece a horse-shoe formed of roses and mock orange enhanced the beauty of the scene presented to the vast audience. The paintings and drawings of the art pupils were handsomely arranged on the back ground and right of the stage. On the left were well executed specimens of penmanship by the writing class. Among the names of those deserving special mention for their painting and drawing are Misses Helen Clark and Mollie Peters, both of whom did excellent work as could be seen by some lovely paintings and drawings exhibited that night, and proved that they have a talented teacher at the head of this department. Miss Rose Shearer's writing class as well as her art class, show decided improvement in that line. Promptly at 8 o'clock to the strains of a beautiful march the students took their seats upon the stage. Miss G. M. Shearer, Principal, occupied a seat on the right, at the head of the class. On the left was the Motto "Peace Be still" on the right "Vincit qui Patitur" and just back of the Piano, in a half circle the lovely old german word "Wilkommen." As the last strains of the overture died away Miss G. M. Shearer invoked the blessings of the Almighty God upon the students, and the audience. As it would take too much space to make special mention of each piece. We will give the order of the program which was as follows:

Note the Bright Hours only opening chorus by the whole school.

Salutatory—by Edna Clarice Shearer

Bootblack—Illustrated Recitation by Earnest Marshall, John Peters and Forrest Harper.

Trouble your Head with your own Affairs—Recitation by Miss Delia Edgar, which was nicely prepared and well delivered.

Perseverance Polka Trio—by Misses Oneida Shearer, Maggie McNeel and Nettie Callison.

Will no Maiden Marry Me I'll Vocal Solo—by Gus Eskridge which was one of the best things of the evening, Mr. Gus acted the song to perfection as was shown by the hearty applause which followed it.

Ingenuity Essay, by Miss Annie McNeel, which was certainly an excently gotten up essay on this difficult subject, and could only have been written by one possessing this qualification. Her essay abounded in fine thoughts which were expressed in a way that secured for her, close attention.

Some Day I'll Wander Back again—Vocal Solo and Cho. by Misses Needa and Rose Shearer and Jeannie Clark.

Earnest Marshall 1st orater of the evening.

Parade March—by Misses Needa Shearer and D. Marshall.

The Battle of Bunker Hill—a beautiful recitation by Miss Virdie Clark.

Golden Ringlets.

Selection of Trades—by six boys and one little girl.

Children's Glee Song—by seventeen children.

A short recess was now given while attention was called to the art collection by Miss G. M. Shearer.

Part II

"A Voice From the Waves" Vocal Solo—by Misses Fannie and Rose Shearer.

Gus Eskridge 2nd Orator of the evening subject, Our Honored Dead.

"Drifting With the Tide" Vocal Solo and Cho.—by Misses Rose, Fannie and Needa Shearer.

Miss Duffie Marshall, Historian of the Evening, Class of H. T. School

Cymbeline Galop—by Miss Needa Shearer on the Organ and Misses Annie McNeel Delia and Bessie Edgar on Pianos.

Commonplace Critics Select Reading—by Miss Vertie Marshall.

Huntresses Vocal Duetth—by Misses Georgia and Rose Shearer.

Curiosity, Rec.—by Miss D. Marshall. Fan Drill and Wand Exercise.

Valedictory—by Jeannie Clark, Remarks, Distinction cards &c.

"Good Night" Closing Cho.— by school; so ended one of the very best of Commencements. The Fan Drill and Wand Exercise was excellent the young ladies and little girls were attired in blouse costume and the little boys with waists and sashes to match. The whole drill showed good and careful training.

There was in all about 96 movements in the two which were made in perfect time. Destinction cards were awarded to those who had not been tardy at morning worship and were received by Miss Neelie and Master John Peters, Marshall and Virgie Isabel and Cilla and Villa Marshall. Distinction cards were also awarded to those who averaged over 95 per cent. in daily recitations and examinations and were received by Misses Duffie Marshall and Jeannie Clark. The music was especially good and the pieces "A Voice From the Wave" "Drifting With the Tide" "Huntresses" and "Cymbeline Galop" deserve special mention as they were beautiful pieces, in fact pieces that can hardly be surpassed. All acquitted themselves most creditably and show they have teachers at the front who know what they are about. Miss Shearer is one of the best teachers we have ever had in our midst and deserves the patronage of the public. Her training both mental and moral is certainly deserving of the highest praise. Truly conscientious teachers are hard to find, but are certainly to be appreciated when we have them. Decided improvements have been made in the Art and music departments, the past session and we certainly wish her success.

Y.

WOULDN'T ACT AS CHAMBERMAID.—Widow Brown owned a lodging-house in Denver, Colorado. A year ago she became infatuated with J. J. Medley, proposed to him and married him. Medley expected to have a comfortable home and an easy life, but his wife's ardor soon cooled and she compelled him to perform all the offices as chambermaid in the hotel. Last week Medley soaked his humiliation in wisky, bought a revolver and deliberately killed his wife.

The Driver of a hearse at Wilkesbarre Pennsylvania, was startled the other day by a noise in a coffin. He opened the coffin and the supposed dead man scrambled out and asked for a drink of whisky.

When Mr. Randall says that the democratic outlook is bright, the republican organs are inclined to make fun of him. They will laugh in a different way in 1892.

Last week, severe storms prevailed throughout France. The greatest damage has been done in the departments of Seinet-Marine, Aube, Yonne, Haute Soane and Ardennes, where insome places the country is almost devastated.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Order of Publication.

R. S. Turk vs. Geo. W. McDonald } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to have partition made of three tracts of land containing respectively 1034 394 and 167 acres of land lying on the waters of the Big Spring Branch of Elk River in Pocahontas County West Virginia, between the plaintiff and defendant, and to Enjoin and inhibit the defendant George W. McDonald, and all others from cutting and removing the Merchantable timber from said lands until partition thereof is made.

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Geo. W. McDonald is a non resident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit. The plaintiff has executed his bond as required by the order granting said injunction.

Teste JOHN J. BEARD Clk.

June 6 4t Printers fee $6.82

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 33 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a partial state of Cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC.
Special Com'r

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Clk Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.70 may23 4w

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 13 1889.

(Continued from first page.)

the drummer, sadly; "we found him lying near the corral, almost buried in the snow."

With a cry of utter anguish, which those who heard it never forgot, Katy Dare flung herself upon the floor.

"It's Jack!" she cried, "my Jack! I loved him all the time."

The voice he loved so well pierced the death-like stupor which was fast stealing over him. The warm, clinging lips brought back the breath of life. Slowly his eyes opened and rested upon the bonny tearful face so near his own.

"My darling," he said, "have I won you at last?" Katy clung sobbing to his neck.

"All the world loves a lover." Even the little squaw smiled sympathetically upon the soldier who had wrung his happiness from the grasp of a "Norther."

The major was delighted, but mystified. He could not understand it.

"Why, she never liked Jack, and was devoted to the rector," he said feebly.

"Just so!" replied the sagacious Mrs. Bensome. "In dealing with a girl, Major, remember it's never Jim but Jack, and if she flirts with a parson, she is pretty sure to marry a soldier." And Katy did.

Letter from Kansas.

EDITOR TIMES: Having recently received from a friend in Pocahontas, a few appreciated copies of THE TIMES and not seeing anything in its interesting columns from the great state of Kansas, I have concluded, with your permission, to pen you a short article for publication, feeling assured that a few thoughts from so fine a country; one abounding in rolling plains and grassy meads can not fail to be appreciated by your many readers.

Kansas is favorably situated in the great Miss. Valley, about midway from ocean to ocean and occupies a vast territory, stretching from the border line of Mo., westward four hundred miles to Colorado and two hundred and eight miles from Neb., on the north to the Indian Ty., on the south, thus embracing one of the finest agricultural regions in the world. In addition to this there are important mineral deposits of coal and salt.

The latter is found in various portions of Southern Kan., at a depth of about 400 feet, beneath the surface of the earth.

There is a salt factory at Anthony city twelve miles south of Harper where the strata of salt is three hundred feet thick and extensive quantities are manufactured daily.

It may be interesting to some of your readers to know something about the process, by which the salt at so great a depth can be readily utilized. This is done by drilling down with a heavy drill then tubing the aperature, and with the same engine pumping fresh water down, dissolving the mineral and the process is completed by evaporation.

The country is finely watered in the central and northern portions of the state by the Kans. river and its numerous tributaries.

The southern by the Arkansas river winding its way like a great silver thread, for hundreds of miles, from the summits of the snowcapped Rockey Mountains of Colorado to the Miss. The country lying along and between these great rivers is interspersed by smiling valleys and rippling streams, whose banks are fringed with grass or clusters of timber thus presenting a grand and beautiful scene.

The soil is alluvial consisting of a dark sandy loam, which produces a luxurant growth of vegetation, such plants as are indigenous to a tropical region.

Corn, wheat and other sereals are extensively cultivated and the prospect for fine crops, the coming harvest flattering in the extreme.

The fruit crop is extensive and abundant, especially apples, peaches, plums, and cherries. In fact the fine rains have brightened the prospect of all crops beyond expectation of the sanguine tiller of the soil.

Society and refinery are steadily and surely gaining the ascendency.

Education is trumphantly waving her golden banner on the broad plains of progress.

There are no momentous questions at present agitating the political mind, such as the negro problem of the South. The presidential cyclone of '88, is long since a thing of the past. The loud "Hurrah for Harrison," in the banner republican state of the Union, have died away and are gently reposing on the calms of Oblivion, and all is peace.

I see I am digressing, so I will bring my letter to a close. Thanking you for space and wishing my many friends in Pocahontas and THE TIMES success, I am very truly yours,

W. B. H. M.

Harper, Harper Co. Kans.

Well handled.—The pump.

Sharp shooters—Aching teeth.

Dining room—An empty stomach.

A droll dog—A wag with a funny tale.

Adversity may be a good teacher, but she brings you down instead of bringing you up.

"Shure, which is the entrance out?" asked an Irishman at a railway station the other day.

Speaking of butter, we may respect its colour, but we do not hesitate to turn up our noses at its rank.

"I thought you took an interest in my welfare," said an unsuccessful lover. "No, sir," only in your farewell."

An eminent artist lately painted a snowstorm so naturally that he caught a bad cold by sitting near it with his coat off.

There is not much future for a young man who has learned how to spend a fortune before he knows how to make one.

What is that which everyone wishes to have, and wich everyone wishes get rid of directly he obtains it? A good appetite.

"This is a sad and bitter world," remarked Sir Boyle Roche. "We never strew flowers on a man's grave until after he is dead."

Customer: "I say, waiter, this venison hasn't been hung." Waiter (new to the biz): "'Ung, sir? In course not, sir. I believe it was shot, sir."

"Pitch your voice in a low key," says a writer on etiquette. We presume etiquette can be temporarily dispensed with when trying to wake the children in the morning.

Ladies' high-heeled boots produce hysteria. We have seen a man's squaretoed boot, number 14½, give a strong healthy pedlar about the worst fit of hysterics that ever afflicted mortal man.

Miss Keand to handsome young physician: "Oh, doctor, how do you do? You look killing this evening." Young Physician, quietly: "Thank you, but I'm not; I'm off duty, don't you know."

It is not good to take tea in the middle of the day. The man who tried it in a cafe in town, when he thought the waitress was not looking is our authority.

Stern Parent (to a young aspirant for his daughter's hand)—Young man can you support a family?"—Young man (meekly): "I only wanted Sarah."

Philadelphian (in St Louis): "Will you kindly tell me where I can get a drink of water?" Policeman: "Mein frient, I haff been only three months on dis beat."

Every man thinks he is about right himself. An old Quaker said to his wife—"All the world is queer except thee and me, and thee is a little queer."

Tailors are the most playful paradoxes in the world; why, whenever you may want something new, they will recommend you something that is much worn.

The Duke of Wellington was told that his bed was not large enough to turn in. He replied that when a man began to turn in his bed it was time to turn out.

It is said that no one can arrest the flight of time, but who is there who is not able to stop a minute? Bill Sikes adds—Especially if a drink is going to be stood.

"Although unseen, my influence is felt," remarked the lively flea.

"Waiter, take away this beer; it's muddy." The waiter, without stirring—"You are deceived, sir. It is the glass which is dirty; the beer is excellent. Taste it."

An Irishman was recently heard to declare that the present state of affairs in his country was "enough to make a man commit suicide, or perish in the attempt."

Family doctor: "Your wife needs out-door exercise more than anything else." Husband: "But she won't go out. What am I to do?" "Give her plenty of money to shop with."

The Central Criminal Court—Conscience.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 20, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 46.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. B. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

The practical plain, young girl,
Not afraid of the rain young girl,
A poetical posy
A ruddy and rosy,
A helper of self young girl.

A home in her place young girl,
A never will lace young girl,
A toiler serene,
A life pure and clean
A princess of peace young girl.

A wear her own hair young girl,
A free from stare young girl,
Improve every hour,
No sickly sunflower,
A wealth of rare sense young girl.

An early retiring young girl,
An active, aspiring young girl,
A morning ariser,
A dandy despiser
A progressive American girl.

An honestly courting young girl,
A never seen flirting young girl,
A quiet and pure,
A modest, demure,
A fit for a wife young girl.

A sought everywhere young girl,
A future most fair young girl,
An ever discreet.
We too seldom meet,
This queen among queens young girl.
—Mrs E. E. Woods, in N. Y. World.

Old Siegel and His Son.

BY THE MARQUIS OF LORNE

Many years ago, while making a tour through that beautiful tract of mountain scenery in the south of Bavaria known as the Saltzgammergut, I stayed for a fortnight at Berchtesgaden. I spent much of my time there in fishing for grayling and in taking to the chamois-hunters, with many of whom I had made acquaintance during a previous visit. I used often to sit for hours listening to their hunting stories, and on one occasion I hunted with them.

The mountains immediately around Berchtesgaden are kept as a royal chamois preserve, and as the King was expected to arrive shortly, none but his Majesty's own jagers were allowed, during the time I was there, to disturb the chamois.

I was, however, very anxious to have at least one day's sport, and arranged with old Siegel and his son Franz, chamois hunters whom I had known for some time, and on whom I could depend, to have a "jagd" on the morrow. Siegel persuaded Gotting, a friend of his, to come with us.

We started early in the morning, and after toiling for several hours up through the dark pine woods which became more scant and scrubby the higher we went, emerged at last on the open snowfields.

We now separated; Franz and Gotting made a long detour to the left, while Siegel and I hastened on to reach some commanding position above, in case any chamois were driven up. After an hour,s more climbing, we halted on the top of a precipice, which shaped in the form of a crescent, made a complete cul de sac for any chamois driven up by our friends below.

We had hardly been watching ten minutes when two chamois appeared in sight, bounding up the mountain-side and coming directly toward us. When the foremost had come within range, I fired and missed, as most men would have done, firing as I did at so small an object from a height almost perpendicularly above it.

The beasts turned, and springing with wonderful speed over the sharp rocks, were soon out of sight. I fired a second shot just as they were disappearing, and think I struck one of them, but it contrived to get away, and we never saw it again.

Siegel and I, somewhat crestfallen, trudged on up the mountain, keeping a sharp lookout on all sides, and halting now and then to give the others time to overtake us.

Suddenly we heard, far down below us, a shot, and then all was again silent. We were much surprised, as it is one of the first rules in this kind of hunting never, except when absolutely necessary, even to raise the voice, much less, of course, to fire a rifle, which scares the chamois completely.

We knew that Gotting and Franz, directly below us as they were, could not possibly have seen a chamois, as our shots must have driven them quite out of reach. After a minutes anxious listening, we fancied we heard shouts, and fearing we knew not what, called loudly Franz's name.

We then heard—and this time quiet distinctly—the voice of Gotting saying:

"Come down! come down! It's all over! Franz has shot himself!"

Siegel and I were standing together ankle deep in the snow. I glanced into his face, and I think I shall never forget the look of mising I saw there. Before I knew what he was about, he had seized his rifle, and presented the muzzle to his head, and was feeling with his foot in a frenzied manner for the trigger.

I snatchbd the piece away just in time; he did not try to recover it, but throwing himself on the snow, burst into a most passionate, most eloquent torrent of praise of his son's many virtues. He told me what a good son he had always been to him, anxious to fulfil his slightest wish.

I at length succeeded in partially soothing him, and in rousing him to action. We scrambled down as fast as we could guided by Gotting's shouts.

It was a long time before we reached them; to me it seemed an age. I accused myself of being the author of all this misery, and my anxiety was heightened by the reflection that we were in reality poaching, and we should very likely, in consequence of this misfortune get into trouble on our return.

We found poor Franz lying shot through the back and in great pain among stunted "knie-holz"—a plant something like our whinbush. It appeared that he had, contrary to all jager rules, carried his rifle capped, and that in walking through the knie-holz, he had stumbled and fallen, and his rifle had somehow or other exploded, causing a severe wound,

We stanched the blood as well as we could with our handkerchiefs, and then held a consultation. Gotting said he knew of a chalet some way off to which he thought we might manage to carry Franz.

I lifted him up as carefully as possible, and walked for some way over the abominable knie-holz, which threatening to trip one up every moment. I managed, I think, to go about two hundred yards with my burden, and then, exhausted, had to lay him down. His father tried to carry him next, but unnerved and half blinded by his tears, had also soon to give it up.

Gotting was the only one of the party who could carry Franz for any great length of time over the rough ground we were now compelled to traverse; he was a small man but seemed to be wire and muscle.

It was, however, evident that the slow pace we were obliged to go we should never, even if we knew the exact direction—which, by the way, none of us did—get to the chalet before nightfall. Some other arrangement must be made.

Gotting proposed that he should stay with the wounded man, while Siegel and I should go forward and attempt to reach the chalet. Gotting was the only one of the party who had ever been there, and that was years before. He gave us directions how to find it.

We were to pass to the right or left of certain peaks he pointed out to us, and then he said we should see a large field of snow. We were to cross this, and the chalet was in a hollow about half a mile above and to the left.

Well, we started—Siegel and I—leaving all the provisions except a few sandwiches with Franz and Gotting. A weary walk brought us to the peak where, according to Gotting, we were to see the snow field. But there was nothing of the sort there; peak rose upon peak, but there was no great, level snowfield stretching away at our feet, such as he had described.

We looked at each other in dismay. To add to our distress, the weather, which had hitherto been beautiful, began to get overcast. Light wreaths of mist were setting on the highest summits of the mountain, sure signs of a coming storm.

However, there was no use in going back. We should perhaps not be able to find Franz and Gotting again if, bewildered as we now were, we attempted to get back to them. Our only chance was forward.

Tired and dispirited we walked on turning around only to look at the gathering clouds which were now piling themselves dark and threatening behind us. The wind, too began to rise. We determined to go downward; indeed, we were too much exhausted to go any higher, or waste any more time in looking for the chalet.

The ground seemed to get more rough the lower we went, and the tremendous gusts of wind which whistled round us made the decent most dangerous. Great, spattering raindrops now began to fall and we halted on a ledge of rock, utterly worn out.

The storm increased and in a short time was at its height. The rain came down in torrents, completely drenching us. The lightning with blinding flashes played all round, hissing and illumining for an instant the awful grandeur of the scene, while the thunder pealed and crashed overhead, each crag and wall of rock echoing the sound and increasing it and hundred-fold.

We had thrown our rifles away, afraid that the lightning would strike them, and stood waiting for the storm to abate. When we resumed our decent we were trembling with cold in every limb. The air, which was warm enough before, was now piercingly cold and the wind drove snow and bits of ice against our faces with blinding force.

I went first, and for a long time neither of us spoke. Only when a particularly dangerous place was crossed I gave the warning "Look to the right!" or "To the left!" as the case might be.

Siegel led the way when I was tired, and thus we proceeded with greatest caution, as a false step would have been almost certain death, till we got to more level ground.

Here we again encountered thickets of knie-holz. We were already congratulating ourselves on having got the worst over, when we were suddenly stopped by a precipice or "Wand," down which it would have been impossible for a goat to go. It was a sheer decent of at least eighty feet.

This was a dreadful disappointment. We walked along the edge for some way, but as far as we could see the Wand extended for miles. I had already thrown myself on the ground and had given up all hopes of life, when a shout from Siegel who had gone on a little way, made me once more spring to my feet.

I hastened to him. He was standing over a narrow hole in the rock almost hidden by bushes of the knie-holz.

"We are saved! we are saved!" he cried. He explained to me how, when I had given up in despair, he suddenly thought that he remembered the place we were in, and had remembered, too, that if it were indeed the part of the mountain he supposed it to be, there was a circular hole in the rock forming the Wand by which the chamois hunters scaled this otherwise inaccessible place. He had gone on, had found the opening, and fearful of losing the spot had stood over it and called till I came.

We slid safely down this chimney like hole, which is not much more than twenty feet in depth, and easily descending the lower part of the Wand, which is here much broken, arrived, famished and half frozen, at 10 o'clock at night, at a woodman's hut Siegel knew of in the valley below. Here we obtained warmth and shelter.

Three of the woodmen immediately started up the mountain and returned in a few hours with poor Franz, who was very much exhausted, not so much from cold—as Gotting had contrived to light a fire, and they had provisions—as from loss of blood.

I once asked Siegel what he would have done if he had not found that opening. "We should," he said, "have struck our alpenstocks into the ground, and have walked round them all the night to keep off sleep, which if it conquered us would, of course, have been fatal. If we lived till day broke we should have tried to find our way back to the others."

Whether we were likely to succeed in so doing, cold, hungry and exhausted as we were, the reader may judge.

As for Franz, he completely recovered from his wound, and I have hunted many a time with him since that memorable day.—Youth's Companion.

"I know that you love me," he said, sentimentally, as he held her to his vest. "I know that you love me," she repeated: "because when I lay my head against your breast your heart beats so loud that I can hear it." "That," gasped the poor fellow as the awful truth dawned upon him. "That is not my heart. That's my Waterbury watch."

Mrs. May E. Bryan gets $3,000 a year for editing Munro's Fashion Bazar.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 20 1889.

Jefferson Davis celebrated his eighty first birthday at Beauvoir last Monday. He was in fine health and spirits.

Old Jubal Early's speech at Winchester will be a godsend to the republican papers. The general stuck to it that the confederate cause was right, and was particularly rough on the confederates who have deserted since the war.

Humanity.

To the man gifted with sufficient spiritual strength to enable him to look over the heads of the crowd, humanity is a curious study.

From his perch on the edge of a cloud such a man can look down in wonder and pity on the restless throng—doing and undoing, striving and suffering, sorrowing and sin-stricken. Gdo has given to humanity the earth and the fullness thereof, and, not satisfied with the glorious heritage as it comes from His hand, mortals are forever struggling to make such changes as will adapt its conditions nearer in accordance with their erratic imagings.

As an illustration, there are the millions of treasure expended and the thousands of lives wasted in the attempt to break the continuity of the western hemisphere and send the blue billows of the Pacific and the wild breakers of the Atlantic dashing away to meet and embrace each other among the hills of Panama. The people of the east and the people of the west have, by much labor and pains, flung a rope of steel across the ocean, and, having caught the secret of the summer lightning, they talk in strange whispers from one side to the other of the world.

To mankind collectively, humanity is tender and charitable. To the individual sinner how unpitying it is. On the field of battle he who destroys most of his fellow creatures is the greatest hero. But he that kills his neighbor in a moment of passion is pursued most unrelentingly, and above his devoted head the hand of the avenger is forever uplifted.

Ah, humanity, humanity! In its strange and unreasoning perversity the gentle voice of the living God is drowned by its uncouth clamorings. The moment that the soul awakes and finds itself an inhabitant of time, begins to plan some mischief to do. Wild and willful, prone to wander, insatiate in its capricious desires and strange appetites, cursed by a thousand unexplainable longings.

"Eloi, Eloi Lama Sabachthani!" came the thrilling appeal from the weird and widening gloom of Calvary. Centuries have come and gone and the dust of the earth has passed through myriad transformations. Spring has painted the sky with hues and tints pilfered from the easels of the angels, and rugged winter has coated the eternal pillars of nature with the snows of nearly two thousand [illegible] cembers since that touching and pitiful cry was wrung from the anguished heart of a suffering God. But its fervor deepens and its passion intensifies as it goes wailing and echoing down the path of the ages, and every day and every hour and every moment—every heart-throb of time—is burdened by that woful refrain: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"—Atlanta Constitution.

Some of the Great Floods of History Described.

From the St. Louis Globe Democrat.

It becomes interesting to note some of the great floods of history. One of the most notable was that which, according to the old Historian Camden, washed away Earl Godwin's land on the coast of Kent, and left only the Godwin Sands. Holland has furnished many a coast flood. At Dort, in 1446, the sea broke in through the dykes and drowned the people of seventy-two villages, in all 100,000 persons. The dykes failed in 1530 and nearly 400,000 people died. The celebrated Ripon flood in Yorkshire was in 1771, and in 1787 over 2000 persons lost their lives by the sudden torrents from the mountains of Navarra. In 1813 the overflow of the Danube drowned 3000 Turkish soldiers on a small island near Widden, and in Silesia the floods practically ruined the French army under McDonald. The Vistula overflowed and broke its dykes in 1812 and swept away 10,000 cattle and 4000 houses.

Two famous floods in France were those of 1840 and 1846. The former was in the southeast, and upward of 1,000 houses were swept away by the Rhone. The other was in the central and south-western part of France, and destroyed $20,000,000 worth of property, including numerous costly railroad viaducts.

By the bursting of the reservoir at Lorca, in Spain, twenty square leagues were devastated, and over 1,000 persons were drowned, April 14, 1802. The property damage was estimated at $7,000,000.

The giving way of the dam of the Bradfield reservoir near Sheffield, England, on March 11, 1864, let loose a flood which swept fourteen miles of valley in two hours and caused a loss of $1,800,000, besides drowning 250 persons. This is the disaster which is made to figure in Charles Read's "Put Yourself in His Place." The area of the Bradford reservoir was seventy-eight acres, and its dam at the highest place was 95 feet high.

The Williamsburg, Mass., disaster was on May 17th, 1864. The dam of a 100-acre reservoir gave way, and $1,000,000 worth of property was ruined. One hundred and fifty persons lost their lives.

The South Fork reservoir accident of Friday night surpasses all simplar casualties in every respect. This reservoir had an area of over 2,800 acres, and its waters, when freed from confinement, devastated an area of hundreds of square miles.

TO THE MEDICAL PROFESSIONAL

The Census Bureau Issues an Important Circular—Mortality Statistics.

The following is received from the Census Bureau:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
CENSUS OFFICE,
WASHINGTON D. C., May 1, 1889

To The Medical Profession:

The various medical associations and the medical profession will be glad to learn that Dr. John S. Billings, Surgeon U. S. Army, has consented to take charge of the Report on the Mortality and Vital Statistics of the United States as returned by the Eleventh Census.

As the United States has no system of registration of vital statistics, such as is relied upon by other civilized nations for the purpose of ascertaining the actual movement of population, our census affords the only opportunity of obtaining near an approximate estimate of the birth and death rates of much the larger part of the country, which is entirely unprovided with any satisfactory system of State and municipal registration.

In view of this, the Census Office, during the month of May this year, will issue to the medical profession throughout the country "Physician's Registers" for the purpose of obtaining more accurate returns of deaths than it is possible for the enumerators to make. It is earnestly hoped that physicians in every part of the country will co-operate with the Census Office in this important work. The record should be kept from June 1, 1889, to May 31, 1890. Nearly 26,000 of these registration books were filled up and returned to the office 1880, and nearly all of them used for statistical purposes. It is hoped that double this number will be obtained for the Eleventh Census.

Physicians not receiving Registers can obtain them by sending their names and addresses to the Census Office, and, with the Register, an official envelope which requires no stamp will be provided for their return to Washington.

If all medical and surgical practitioners throughout the country will lend their aid, the mortality and vital statistics of the Eleventh Census will be more comprehensive and complete than they have ever been. Every physician should take a personal pride in having this report as full and accurate as it is poossible to make it.

It is hereby promised that all information abtained through this source shall be held strictly confidential.

ROBERT P. PORTER.
Superintendent of Census.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
URIAH HEVENER,
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
June20 4-w Green Bank W. Va.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—We understand their will be a big picnic at Dunmore this year.

—There were a good deal of business done at this term of the Court.

—We will give the full proceedings of the Circuit Court next week.

—Lots of new subscribers this week.

—Thanks to those who paid us cash this week.

Go to John Warts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—Good envelopes at THE TIMES office for 15c per 100.

John Warts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be he e during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Hon. C. P. Dorr has retired from the Webster Springs Call, and it will be conducted hereafter by Messrs B. S. Woaddell and E. H. Merton. Success to the new managers.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Warts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—We return thanks to the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, for invitation to the annual commencement and semi contial celebration to be held there the 4th of July.

—The Greenbrier Independent, one of our very best weekly exchanges has passed its 24th birthday. It is welcomed by its many readers in Pocahontas, and may it long live and prosper.

—The Chancery suit of Frank Barrett vs. Wm. M. McAlister and others was at this term of the Court submitted to special Judge J. W. Arbuckle. The case was argued at length by C. P. Moore, of this place and E. B. Knight, of Charleston for the plaintiff, and C. P. Jones and John W. Stephenson for the defendants. A decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $2500 and costs. There has never been a chancery case in this Court that excited more interest on the part of the deople, nor one in which the oral argument was more entertaining. It is probable the case will be carried to the Court of Appeals.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION of Huntersville District will meet in Huntersville on Friday, June 21st, 1889, for the purpose of settling with the Sheriff and attending to all other business that may be necessary.

By order of the President.
JAMES W. WARWICK JR.,
Secretary of Board.

Dunmore Doings.

R. P. Bloom, was in town last week.

The carding machine is in full blast at Dunmore.

There will be singing at the Cross Road school house, on Sunday, 23rd, at 2 p. m. Let all attend and bring your books.

L. S. Moore and family were on a visit to Edray last week.

J. W. Moore, will start for Johnstown, Pa. this week for his family.

Mrs. E. A. Smith's sister living at Johnstown, during the flood was saved.

Circuit Court Notes.

Circuit Court convened on Monday 17th; Judge A. N. Campbell presiding.

The lawyers attending Court from a distance were, C. P. Jones and J. H. Stephenson, of Braxton; Wm. M. McAlister and Jno. W. Stephenson of Warm Springs; Hon. W. Arbuckle and Jno. W. Holt, of Lewisburg; Wm. Skeen, of Covington and E. B. Knight, of Charleston.

Quite a large crowd were in attendance Monday.

B. F. Harlow, late proprietor of the Greenbrier Independent was among us.

We will give the proceedings next week.

Notes By the Way.

It is a matter far beyond thanksgiving and praise to witness the cheerful alacrity with which our people hasten to repair the effects of the recent flood.

During the whole spring season, there seemed to be unusual industry all over the county, clearing land repairing fence, and improving roadways.

Taken for everything there is no region on the face of the earth, that surpasses West Virginia, and Pocahontas may be made equal to any county in the state, for all material comforts. Patient industry is sure of its reward in a region like this.

AN INTERESTING SUNDAY SCHOOL.

There is a flourishing Sunday school, at New Hope school house on Brown's Creek, near Huntersville, under the joint management of Mr. James W. Warwick and W. T. Moore.

On a recent Sabbath afternoon the writer witnessed a scene there, not to be met with in any other Sabbath school in the world.

The first Sabbath School even taught in West Virginia, and for that matter, anywhere west of the Alleghanies was conducted by Mrs. Mary Warwick in her old age.

Though she was so infirm, that when seated, she could not arise from her chair without assistance yet she would have her servants to place her on a horse, and she would ride four miles to a log school house located near what is now called the "Jerry Friel cabin" on Jacob Sharp's property, where she met her Sunday School. She was the only teacher, and would open her school at 8 or 9 o'clock and continue teaching until one or two in the afternoon then she would go to William Sharp's, rest awhile, take dinner and thereupon return to her home at Clover Lick.

One of her favorite scholars was little Lizzie Sharp, now known and much esteemed by many of your readers, as good old Aunt Bettie McGlaughlin verging close to ninety years of age. She was at the Sunday School the afternoon referred to, and seemed interested in all that was going on. Mr. Warwick is a great, grand son, of her old Teacher, and Aunt Betsy says she can see her old Teacher's eye in Jimmy Warwick's head. It was a touching coincidence, that two such persons, should meet in sabbath school, after seventy-five years should have passed away, and is if histane significance in the literature of Sunday school.

AN IMPRESSIVE BURIAL SCENE.

Last week the pleasing information was furnished by one of your correspondents and published, that Mrs. Florida Price, was thought to be better of her serious illness.

It now appears this was but evenescent, for she died Tuesday morning, June 18th, aged 33 years. She was one of five daughters, in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Adam See, near Elkwater, Randolph Co., West Va.

About four years since, she was married to J. Calvin Price, Esq., and soon after they took up their residence on Clover Creek.

Two little boys are left motherless and a wide circle of relatives and attached friends, mourn the decease of a most excellent person.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, June the 12, she was buried from the Clover Lick Chapel followed by one of the largest funeral processions ever seen in our county, anywhe e. She was enterred in the historic Clover Lick grave-yard, close to the grave of her great-grand mother Mary Warwick, mentioned in a former note.

Outside of the cities, the writer, has rarely seen a grave more beautifully finished up. It was sodded with freshly cut turf, and adorned with a cross, and tastefully arranged garlands and wreathes of roses and evergreens.

The beautiful testimonies she bore of her confidence in the love and power of Jesus to save, are of the most consoling character.

Thinking of her, one is most touchingly reminded of these lines as beautifully appropriate

"She sleeps in the Valley so sweet,
About her the green willows wave,
We planted the rose at her feet,
To bloom and decay o'er her grave.
She sleeps in the valley so sweet,
No sound e'er disturbs her repose;
So quiet in this calm retreat
She rests safe, secure from life's woes.

How calmly she rested in God;
"To thy arms my Savior I come,"
Come quickly, come quickly, O Lord
And welcome thy wanderer home.
She sleeps in the Valley so sweet,
Her spirit has taken its flight,
Her form is but dust neath our feet,
While she is an angel of light.

W. T. P.

The Heroine of the Flood.

If the valley of Conemaugh has its heroes it also has its heroines.

The story of one woman's sublime courage and unselfishness at a supreme moment of peril makes a bright page in the gloomy record of the Johnstown calamity.

Mrs. Ogle, the manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Johnstown, stood by her key to the last. She was notified time and again that certain death awaited her if she did not seek safety in flight. But the brave little woman thought of the thousands of people in the valley below and stuck to her post, sending out message after message of warning.

Suddenly a deafening roar filled the air, and a black wave, mountain high, could be seen rolling down upon the doomed city.

The pale-faced woman gave one look and dashed the tears from her eyes.

"This is my last message!" the key ticked out to to the operator at South Fork.

There was no time to ad another word. The mad torrent struck the building and an instant later the lifeless heroine of the flood was washed through the raging waters, onward through the rocky mountain passes, and downward to the smiling plains below.

The bravest are the tenderest, and the tenderest are the bravest.

The Floods of the Future.

The Conemaugh valley disaster must not be viewed simply as a calamity. It is a warning.

When the boats navigate Pennsylvania avenue in Washington, and carp invade the houses of that city, we see the shadows of coming events—something even worse than the Johnstown horror.

We have more than once pointed out in these columns the probable consequences of the floods that will visit this country in future. The destruction of our forests will make the cloud-burt as familiar to us as the tornado is to the dwellers on our western plains. Ven Bebber, in his work on "The Influence of Forest Growth on Climate," says: "The old experience that the destruction of woods accentuates climate extremes, and more especially enhance the danger of floods, has not thus far been contradicted. Nay, it receives calamitous confirmation in the disasters which, in the South Tyrol, for example, recur so frequently, and which it is vainly sought to prevent by artificial works."

We are energetically setting in motion the very machinery that must necessarily increase the area and the destructive power of these tremendous floods.

Warnings we have had in abundance, but we take no thought of the morrow. We read of half a million lives lost by the overflow of Yellow river in China, and smile when the comforting thought occurs to us that it is on the other side of the world. We hear of the cloud-burst in the south of France after that region was stripped of its timber—cloud-bursts which turn cow-paths into ragging torrents and sweep away houses, cattle and human beings. But all this, we say is in France. The awful warning comes nearer and in a deadlier shape, from time to time, until we have its breathless culmination and climax at Johnstown.

The thoughtful observerver who has watched these events, studied their lessons, and looked ahead into the future, can come to but one conclusion. A century hence Macaulay's New Zealander may not be here to shake his wooly head over our ruins, but the scientific and progressive American of that day will have many strange chapters of history to relate. He will tell his children the story of our scores of dead cities that went down in the black night of a mighty deluge. He will describe the destruction of Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis and New Orleans. In Georgia and Tennessee he will name the cities of—but this comes too near home to be calmly discussed, and predictions would not be relished by any of us.

It is enough to say that a century hence, when the intelligent American of that day takes a glance backward, he will bitterly denounce our criminal waste and neglect in the matter of forestry, and it will be a mystery in his eyes that we allowed so many warnings to pass unheeded, and rushed on to our doom.
—Atlanta Constitution.

Boy—Mother, since I have been using Wolff's Acme Blacking my shoes wear longer than ever before, and I never get my feet wet, but I do not think they look as smooth as when I first used it.

Mother—Indeed, my son, I am sorry you are so careless. You forgot that even a good thing is only good when properly used. You have not even looked on the directions, for they are put around the neck of the bottle. Now you must read them, and they will get you out of your trouble. Your father and I keep our shoes in elegant order by its use. I use it about once a month and pups about once a week.

Wolff's ACME Blacking

Is wonderful; preserving and Waterproofing any leather; giving it a deep, rich black lustre which lasts a week. Don't use a brush. Do not confound ACME Blacking with any other. Sold by Shoe Stores, Grocers, Druggists, &c. Try it on your Harness.

WOLFF & RANDOLPH, PHILADELPHIA.

A. R. SMITH,
Academy, W. Va.

UNDERTAKER

Is prepared to furnish and deliver Coffins upon very short notice and at reasonable prices.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

JOEL FLACK, Carrier.

Order of Publication.

R. S. Turk vs. Geo. W. McDonald } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to have partition made of three tracts of land containing respectively 1024 204 and 127 acres of land lying on the waters of the Big Spring Branch of Elk River in Pocahontas County West Virginia, between the plaintiff and defendant, and to Enjoin and inhibit the defendant George W. McDonald, and all others from cutting and removing the Merchantable timber from said lands until partition thereof is made.

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Geo. W. McDonald is a non resident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit. The plaintiff has executed his bond as required by the order granting said injunction.

Teste JOHN J. BEARD Clk.

June 6 4t Printers fee $8.82

Commissioner's Sale.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered in the Chancery Cause of E. J. Silva vs James P. Ginger and Wm. C. McClure, on the 3rd day of April 1889 I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree shall on the

17th DAY OF JUNE 1889

proceed in front of the Court house door of this County to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for Cash, a certain tract of land containing about 35 acres, the property of the defendant James P. Ginger situate on the waters of Stamping Creek, adjoining the lands of the Heirs of A. D. Grimes and others. This tract of land is fertile and productive and in a partial state of cultivation.

L. M. McCLINTIC
Special Comr.

I John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD,
Clk Cir. Ct.

printers fee $9.70 may 23 4w

PATENTS.

Caveats, and Trade Marks obtained, and all Patent business conducted for Moderate Fees.

Our office is Opposite U. S. Patent Office and we can secure patent in less time than those remote from Washington.

Send model, drawing or photo., with description. We advise if patentable or not, free of charge. Our fee not due till patent is secured.

A Pamphlet, "How to Obtain Patents," with names of actual clients in your State, county, or town, sent free. Address,

C. A. SNOW & CO.
Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D. C.

LOOK TO YOUR INTERESTS,

—AND GO TO—

LOURY & DOYLE'S

Where you can see a large assortment of

SPRING AND SUMMER

Ready Made Clothing,

Also a nice line of

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, ladies gents, and children's SHOES, and the latest styles in ladies HATS, just from New York.

Call and see them, and we assure polite and careful attentin will be shown you.

They are also Proprietors of

Huntersville Hotel,

Where, if you stop, you will receive the best accommodations.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 20 1889.

Faithful.

Two boys were at work rigging a small sailboat. It lay in an inlet on the New Jersey coast, and had been hired from them for the season by a stranger from New York.

"Come along, Bob," said of the boys. "It's all right now. We'll be too late to see the ball match, if we don't start at once."

Bob had taken down some of the old ropes, and had rigged the boat with new ones. The halyards he had not yet examined.

"They're all right," urged his companion, trying them,—"strong enough to last for years."

"No; I'll put in new halyards. I promised to make a thorough job of it."

"Then you'll miss the game. I'm off!"

Tom ran across the field; Bob hesitated as he looked after him. It was a sharp disappointment to miss the game. The old halyards were worn but they were still stout.

"They'll stand this summer well enough!" muttered Bob.

Then with a quick, decisive movement he cut them, and proceeded to put in new ropes. "I'll make the job thorough," he said.

That very evening the New York gentleman took a party of his friends out for a sail, among them several persons whose lives were especially valuable to the community, and whose death would have been a calamity. When they were a mile from the land, a fierce squall struck the boat. They steered toward the shore. The boat was carrying too much sail for such a wind.

"If your stuff gives way we are gone!" said a physician in the party, in a low voice.

"It all depends on the halyards. They are new. But there's a terrific strain on them."

Every eye in the boat was upon the short knotted ropes. They creaked ominously; but they bore the strain, and in a short time the boat was driven up on the beach. Bob's stout bits of new rope had saved the lives of all on board.—Youth's Companion.

TO THOSE OFF TO THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

He was a summer rover,
And to France he did go over,
And he dwelt there
Till he felt there
That a Frenchman born was he;

And he now calls Paris, Paree,
And his sister Mary, Marie,
Mere, his mother,
Frere, his brother,
And his lady love, cherie.

A traveling man for a certain house was put in the witness chair. "Do you solemnly swear," said the clerk, "that the evidence you shall give in the case now on hearing, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." The witness hesitated and then said, "I've been selling goods for—and Co. for five years, but I'll do my best."

Shad Fishing.

The life of a shad fisherman is not a happy one, nethor is it very remunerative. They have to make their money in a short season and they are liable to lose their fine nets, which sometimes get caught in passing vessels. The nets cost several hundred dollars each. The net consists of two rope lines, each about 1000 feet long, with small pieces of lead fastened to one line six feet apart and pieces of egg shaped wood fastened to the other line. A fine linen net with meshes three and a quarter to three and five eight inches in size is strung on the lines, which are placed about twelve feat apart. The fishes are caught by the gills. Their head passes through the meshes, and when they try to retreat they are held prisoners by the silken twine. But if the nets are not lifted at the change of the tide they are liable to make their escape, and then there is mourning among the fishermen.

Two men operate a boat. The boats now used are thirty feet long and flat bottomed. They are cheaper than the keel boats and more stable. They are stout, and yet light and easy to handle. One man rows, and the other tends or throws the net, generally in the shape of a letter "L." When the net is cast, a line is fastened from the boat to the nearest end of the net, and away the party goes, drifting with the tide.

Sometimes the net is liable to catch on an obstruction or on the keel of a steamer or a tugboat, and then the net is damaged $50 or more. After drifting with the tide for a time the man tending the net commences to haul in. Soon there is a splash, and a nice shad is found "gilled." Perhaps this is the only one, and maybe there are ten thirty or a hundred more.

Then the boat is rowed back over the course and the same routine is gone through until the tide changes or the fishermen are thoroughly exhausted. The fishing is done in the night, and when the air is clear and the moon shines out the sight presented by the hundreds of fisherman, with their white lamp lit boats, is a fine one. The fishermen have to suffer many hardships, though, on a foggy or cold night.

In the morning the fishermen carry their nets ashore and clean and mend them. They are then wound on a reel. The speculators that are to be found in every fishing town buy the shad and ship it to this city.

There is great rivalry among the fishermen to see who will catch the first shad. The lucky one receives $10 from the speculators. A fisherman generally averades $3000 for his season's labor.—N. Y. Star.

Farm and Garden Notes.

One of the essentials of soiling is a fertile soil.

Boys and girls are the best crop raised on the farm.

Every farm ought to have its experimental patch.

It is better to dehorn every bull than to have one man killed.

Muriate of potash has proved to be a remedy for the white grub.

The early killed is the easily killed weed, and the weed that robs the crop least.

If you are careful to keep the furrows straight you will do faster and better plowing.

The smaller the field the more fence required and the more land taken from cultivation.

A deversity of crops distributes work, receipts and expenses more evenly through the year and through the years.

The plum curculio is injuring our apples. To prevent this set plums among the apples. Spray the apples once, and the plums three times to destroy the insect.

In no other way can the farmer so radically do the work of nature to his advantage as by using tile, for under-drainage both lengthens the seasons and deepens the soil.

An attractive paper.—Fly paper.

At the Theatre.—Blobson (rising excitedly): "Down with that red umbrella in the front!" Mrs. Blobson (drawing him back) "For mercy sake hush up! That ain't an umbrella; it's a new spring hat."

Mrs. Jason: "Jehiel was there ever any such person as the fool killer?" Mr. Jason: "What idiotic questions you do ask. How the dickens do I know? I never met him." Mrs. Jason: "Oh I know that."

Diner-out: "Waiter, how's this? I have just discovered a collar button in my soup." Waiter: "Yes, sah, you's de lucky man. We has prize soup on Monday an' Wednesdays. A harnsome gift in every twenttieth plate."

Mendicant: Please help a poor blind man, Kind old lady: Blind? Why bless me, there's a shilling for you. Mendicant: Thank ye, heartily, ma'am. I knowed the minnit I see ye' comin' ye was a kind hearted ole 'oman.

An Irishman being asked on a late trial for a certificate of his marriage, exhibited a huge scar on his head, which looked as though it might have been made with a fire-shovel. The evidence was considered satisfactory.

Judge (to prisoner): "Your wife says you dragged her out of bed by the hair." Prisoner: "I didn't touch her hair, your honour. It was hanging on the back of a chair where she put it the night before." Case dismissed.

We are never weary of reading a good epitaph—one which indicates the work of a lifetime in a few short, crisp words. Here is one, for instance, which needs no explanation. It was inscribed on the tomb of a cannibal: "He loved his fellow-men."

Ragley (sternly): Aurelia, let this thing stop Mr. De Twirliger. Aurelia: Oh; paw, do not forbid Albert the house. Ragley: He may come every night in the week if he pleases, but he shall not bring his dog into my parlor. Last night its howlings kept me awake for an hour. Aurelia: Why paw, that was Albert singing a selection from "Ermine."

Between the Acts.—"How truly rural that scene was." said a husband to his wife as the curtain descended after the first act, and then he went out to see a man. At the close of the play—it was a five act play—he again expressed his admiration for the truly rural scenery, but as he pronounced the "tooly looral" his wife got him home as quickly as possible.

A gentleman who [illegible] another praised the meat very much and inquired who was his butcher. "His name is Addison." "Addison!" echoed the guest; "pray is he any relation to the poet?" "I can't say; but this I know, he is seldom without his steel by his side."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, June 27, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 49.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Little Beer.

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
In your meek and lowly sphere,
Many a thirsty neck you wet,
Drowning many a vain regret,
In your song there's lots of cheer,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
Place my name on record here,
That all the liquids known,
From temperate to intemperate zone,
Standest thou without a peer,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
I do love thee. Yea, I fear
My affections too intense,
Cling around thee deep and dense,
Loved not wisely, but too dear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
Stream of amber bright and clear
Do you mind the days that I
Tried to drink the brewery dry?
Oft you got me on my ear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle little beer,
Ah! How many a bitter tear
Sparkles in thy shining foam—
Many a desolated home—
Many a sorrow, dark and drear,
Little beer!

Gurgle, gurgle, little beer,
You may think it rather queer,
But I feel that I must shun
You or give the job up, one.
No more schooner will I steer.
Little beer!

—M. M. Folsom, in Atlanta Constitution.

Three Marine Mysteries.

I suppose that a hundred ships come and go where one is lost, but when one reflects on the dangers to which they are exposed he must marvel that so many escape. I saw a list of thirty-six missing ships the other day, missing from American English and French ports, and the fate of each was unknown or guessed at. Say that half of them foundered in mid-ocean, five were run down in collision, five more were wrecked on capes or shoals where all hands perished, and what became of the rest? Say that three of the remainder were destroyed by fire and what fate shall we attach to the other five? From the moment a vessel leaves port to begin her voyage she is exposed to danger, and though a sailer may be ever so brave and hardy, he cannot shake off the knowledge that he lives on the verge of the grave. There are gales, and fogs, and collisions, and fire, and hidden rocks, and powerful currents; and so I repeat that it is a marvel more sailing craft are not added to the lonesome list of missing which is recorded year by year.

In the year 1885, as the British bark Lord Oldham, of which I was second mate, was approaching the Canary Islands, and when about 180 miles distant, we were caught in the tail end of a cyclone and badly knocked about. We got out with some slight loss and a great deal of discomfort, and were bearing up again to our course when a great calamity happened. Half an hour before midnight, while the bark was doing her best under a fresh breeze, a sudden and great shock was felt. Her masts went by the board, and, as I reached the deck, a minute after the shock, the hull seemed to split open from stem to stern. I had gone below to get a glass of bitters, leaving the deck only thirty seconds before the shock came. I was knocked down and confused, but it could not have been over sixty seconds before I regained the deck. It was just in time to be carried overboard. I went with a lot of raffle, from the decks, and amid the frightened cries of the men, and a quarter of an hour later, when I had lashed myself in the crosstrees of the mainmast, I could not get an answer to any of my calls to the rest of the crew. How it was that all were lost I never could make out. There was raffle enough to have floated 300 men, and my watch certainly all wide awake at the moment of the collision. The only explanation I can give is that they were somehow caught and crushed. I drifted during the rest of the night, and was picked up in the morning by a vessel bound in. By that time the wreckage had drifted apart until nothing could be found. Nothing whatever was picked up or cast upon any shore, and had I not been saved, the fate of the bark could only have been guessed at.

What did she collide with? The lookouts were on the bow, and alert and the night so clear that a ship could have been seen a mile away. The chart showed clear water for a hundred miles about, and we must have run full tilt upon some vessel which had been dismasted and bilged in the hurricane. If loaded with timber, her decks would have been awash, and she would have been as bad as a rock to collide with. There was only one shock, and the whole bows of the bark were crushed in by it.

Three years later, while off the Banks of Brazil in a small English ship called the White Cloud, another strange thing happened. I was first mate of this ship, and about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, the weather being very fine and the wind light, I had all the men on deck setting up the rigging, some of which had slackened away. A man aloft suddenly hailed the deck with the information that a large whale was bearing down on the ship head on. We were a merchant vessel, and the sight of a whale had no interest for us. We went on with our work for three or four minutes, when the man again hailed me with:

"If that fellow holds his course he will be dead on to us. He's a big fellow, and coming like an iron steamer."

I ran forward to get a look, and the sea was so smooth that I had no difficulty in making out the whale. He was still a mile away, coming down at about steamer speed, and holding a course as straight as if somebody aboard of him was steering by compass. I was not a bit alarmed, expecting to see him show flukes every moment but the Captain came on deck and ordered the man at the wheel to break off two or three points. This brought the whale on our port bow. As I told you, I expected to see him sound every moment. It was astonishing that he had not discovered us long before. I could scarcely believe my eyes as he held on, and by and by we had him alongside. I am telling you the truth when I say he actually rubbed us as we passed each other, and the odor of him was so rank that some of the men cried out in disgust. That whale was ninety feet long if he was an inch, and he had a head on him like a brick wall. So far as we could see he was carrying no harpoons and had no fresh wound, but he was moss-grown and barnacled as if he had knocked about for a couple of hundred years. The fact of his holding his own in such a bull-headed way was alarming, and when we were clear of him we fell to congratulating ourselves over the close shave.

We were perhaps a mile apart when the whale slewed around. The moment we discovered what he was doing we knew that he meant to attack. The breeze had now died away until we could not hope to dodge him, and he had not yet fairly turned when we dropped the yawl from the davits and ran her alongside to the bow. Two men were ordered to get water and provisions into her, and as the whale headed up for us we went off before the light breeze to give him all the room we could. Three or four minutes settled the question of whether he was after the ship or sailing his own course. He headed up for her, coming faster and faster, and when he was two cables' length away there was a great white wall of water rolling before him, and his speed was from eighteen to twenty miles an hour. He struck us full on the starboard quarter, and the shock was as if two ships had collided. Planks and ribs gave way before him, and as he recoiled from the blow our ship settled down stern first and was under water within two minutes. Everybody was knocked down by the shock, and everybody got up to rush for the yawl. I was sucked down almost as soon as I reached my feet, and after a struggle, in which I came out first best by a close shave, I was shot to the surface amid a lot of deck raffle. There were two or three men around me at first, and as I was heaved up I caught sight of the yawl with at least two men in her. The whale was still at hand, lying very quiet, but I feared he would soon be aroused and attack us in turn, and I seized the galley door and paddled away to get out of his reach. While doing this a squall came down and hung on for twenty minutes, and when it had passed I could see nothing of boat nor whale.

That afternoon, an hour before sundown, I was picked up by the American whaler Richard Knox. She already had our yawl, which she had found bottom up, but had not seen any of the men nor met with any wreckage. I was again the only one saved, and but for my testimony the fate of the ship would have forever remained a mystery. As to why the whale attacked us was made more clear after my rescue. The Knox had raised and chased him the evening before, and he had been "gallied" or annoyed so often during the month past that he had become ugly. He came for us with the intention of sending the ship to the bottom, and he succeeded only too well in carrying out his purpose.

A third mystery was the case of the Janet Wilcox, an American brig bound for Rio Janeiro. I was second mate of her when the occurrence took place. We had bad weather for a good share of the voyage, but the brig was new and stanch, and was at no time in imminent peril. About 300 miles off Rio, while enjoying a bit of good weather, we one morning raised a long-boat full of men dead ahead of us. Indeed, the boat had taken down her sail and was waiting for us to come up. There were nine men aboard of her, and they had plenty of water and provisions. The story they told was that they were a part of the crew of a large British ship which had been burned two days before. They claimed that all had got off in the boats, but that the boats had become separated in the heavy weather. They were a hard-looking lot, composed of all nationalities, and when we had taken them aboard our captain was by no means satisfied with their story. One of them claimed to be second mate, and, as the crew had all got off in two boats, it was a puzzle that the first mate was not in command of one. Other strange things came up, and the story of the men did not hang together, and so all hands were ordered to keep an eye on the fellows.

We got a good slant of wind and had run down to within fifty or sixty miles of the coast when the fellows showed their hands. They had been allowed to mingle freely with our crew, but had carefully abstained from a remark to indicate that they had an evil purpose in view. Their boat was large and unwieldly, and we had towed it after us rather than to cast it loose or to attempt to hoist it inboard. I was on watch from eight to twelve and nothing suspicious occurred during the first three hours. About 11 o'clock, as I stood near the man at the the wheel, I was hailed from the foremast with:

"Mr. Merlin, will you please step forward and take a look at something we can't make out?"

I afterward recalled that it was not the voice of one of my watch, but I did not heed the matter at the time. I started forward, and had reached the waist of the vessel when two men seized me, lifted me clear of the deck, and before I could recover from my astonishment was flung overboard head first. It was more by instinct than any plan of my own that I swam for the boat towing astern. Had the brig not been sailing close hauled, and therefore sailing at a moderate pace, I should not have reached it. It was a close shave, and as I hung to the gunwale for a moment I heard a great confusion on the brig. It was mutiny, of course, and I was the first victim. My idea was to get aboard again as soon as possible, and the only way was to get in into the yawl, pull her close up, and then shin up the painter. After an effort or two I pulled myself in, and just then there were oaths and cries and pistol shots from the brig, followed by a couple couple of splashes alongside, which meant that two bodies, living or dead, had gone overboard. I had hold of the painter when it was loosened from above, and I drifted rapidly astern. The fight continued as long as was within hearing. I was out of it entirely and could only hope that our crew, who were all good men, would overcome the mutineers in the struggle.

After the brig was out of sight I got sail on the boat, and followed her to the best of my judgment. It was just in the gray of morning that I was picked up by a British ship bound into Rio. It wasn't so very mysterious that we picked up the boat and that her crew attempted our capture, but it certainly was queer that from the hour she left me to this day that brig has never been heard of. But for my escape she would have been rated as lost, and the insurance paid. As it was the insurance company contested payment, and won their case in court. The insurance of that day, at least, did not provide for any such emergency. The naval and merchant service of every power was notified of the circumstance, and for two or three years every sea was under observation, but the brig was never overhauled, nor any of her old crew heard of. My idea is that she foundered within a few days with all hands, but others differ. She certainly did not turn pirate, and she was never heard of as a wreck. There is no such British ship as the men said, nor was any raft burned as they stated. They must have been lying in wait; but it is queer that they would be so far out to sea in such a boat. Taken all in all, it was a strange case, and no one has ever got the right end of the thread to solve the tangle.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 27 1889.

Young Men to the Fore.

One thing that is needful on the part of the Democrats in coming political campaigns in this State, is to get new material in the vanguard of the party. The old leaders have been leaders too long. They have grown stilted and dogmatical in their leadership, and are firm set in the belief that they alone must have the front places, and receive most of the spoils of victory. The old leaders of the party have led it most to its doom. They have quarreled among themselves while the enemy has been silently undermining their camp, and yet the danger, though certainly known, does not impel them towards that harmony of action that alone can save the party. It is the case everywhere.

Rivalries, jealousies and enmities becomes rife between men who have been leaders too long. The Democratic party of West Virginia needs new men at its head—young men. Men who have toiled in the ranks like Trojans, caring for nothing but the triumph of the principles of the party. To put them there would inject new methods, new fire, new life into the contests, and tend very much to the purification of the party. The hacks who have broked down their party and themselves should be given the post of observers only, while the forces so long in reserve should be brought to the front.

There should be organization of young men's Democratic Clubs effected all over the State, to which no man over the age of thirty five years should be admitted. Men under that age are much more in love with principle much more zealous in the discharge of their duty, and much more ambitious to achieve success for their efforts than the men whose blood time has rendered sluggish, and contact with the sharp points of life made callous to those things which are remote from self-interests. Give us the young men's Clubs. Let the boys take hold with their enthusiasm and dash, and they will pull the wheels out of the mire. There is material enough in this Magisterial district alone for several of the Clubs. They should be organized speedily and thoroughly, and should devote much time to the study and dissemination of the true maxims of Government which are Democratic property, and are indispensible to the success and permanency of a Republic. It is time to be reforming the lines for the next great contest. The tendency of the people's mind now, more than ever is to tariff reform. The evils of the present tariff system are leading upon the energies of the nation more closely every day. The times are full of complainings, and of the distress which comes from the iniquitous and unjust taxing system that robs the people of the fruits of their toil, and denied them the opportunity for labor in a land which, under fairer laws, would furnish constant work for millions more.

There never was a grander time for the exhibition of the power of young America than the present. The nation is in the grasp of a power more dangerous to its institutions than any enemy which ever confronted it. The power of monopoly cannot be lightly overborne. To defeat it and save the country from dispotism—to save the people their freedom—to save the birthright of the American citizen—the young men of the Republic must buckle on their armor and go forth into the fight against the foes of he Republic.

We want in this State new brains to think, new hearts to dare, and new arms to work. We want honesty of purpose in politics as in other affairs of life. We want men to fight battles for the party, and not for self. We want the Democratic party reformed, rejuvenated, and reclaimed. The young men can do it, if they will. Will they?—Charleston Gazette.

The recent address of Gen. Jubal A. Early, at Winchester, Va., has attracted considerable attention. He spoke his honest sentiments, and for this feature, if for no other he has been greatly praised. The following sentiment has been applauded universally: "As I have said on a former occasion, if ever I repudiate, disown, or apoligize for the cause for which Lee fought and Jackson died, may the lightning of heaven blast me and the scorn of all good women and true men be my portion." General Early added:

"And again I say that the Confederate who has deserted since the war, for the former has gone over to the enemy at no personal risk to himself and simply from motives of gain, while the latter took his life in his hands, knowing that he would be shot if captured, and in a number of sases he was tempted to leave the service to go the assistance of his family, which he was induced to believe was starving at home."

The General closed by paying a high tribute to the ladies of Virginia and the South.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 21st.—Harrison as a junketer bids fair to be on a par with his republican predecessors. He returned Monday evening from a three day trip down the river and to-day he has gone to Cape May to remain until next Tuesday. If he is overworked now, as he says he is, God help the country if an occasion should arise demanding some real work of its executive. If he is overworked many members of his party would like to know what the nature of the work was; he has done absolutely nothing, so far as the public knows, towards establishing a national policy of any kind and the two hours a day which he gives up to the hungry place seekers is hardly enough to break him down. If he is overworked it is from nursing "Baby McKee" probably the hardest work he has performed since his inauguration.

Corporal Tanner has just allowed an increase of pension to Senator Manderson of Nebr. that comes along with it $4000 arrearages. It may seem a little strange that the Senator never applied for this increase of pension before but then, perhaps Gen. Black was not as anxious to oblige the Senator as the Corporal is.

Attorney General Miller must be mad because he has not received that appointment to the United States Supreme Court which he so confidently expected a short time ago. He has refused to give an opinion on the question referred to him by the Treasury department as to whether it would be a violation of law for the Catholic University to be located here, to bring over from Europe a corps of instructors. The solicitor of the Treasury has already given his opinion. He says it would be a violation of law. One of the most prominent lawyers of this city the same gentleman is one of the board of trustees of the University says the University will bring over instructors, and he does not believe that any court in the country will sustain the administration in construing the alien contract law so as to exclude them.

A bit of scandal has leaked out about the sudden resignation of the private secretary of Corporal Tanner. It was thought a little strange that he should prefer being a timber agent of the Interior department in the far west to being private secretary to the Commissioner of Pensions. Now that the facts are out it is thought that he was very lucky not to be kicked out of the government service entirely. The trouble with him was the same as with a good many others, he was not satisfied to confine his "mashing" propensities to his wife who would probably appreciated them, but must thrust them upon some other woman, who does not appreciate them. The story is a very short one; the private secretary came in with Tanner and at once became smitten with one of the lady clerks in the Pension office. He persecuted her with attention and wrote her many notes, the last one indecent and threatening her discharge. The lady then went to Secretary Noble, told her story and placed the notes in the Secretary's possession. That gentleman sent for Tanner and told him that Squeers—that's the "mashers" name must go. Tanner agreed easily because he wanted to give the position to his daughter just out of school, but owing to many obligations he had to stick to Squeers, therefore he persuaded Secretary Noble to appoint him a special timber agent.

"Mr. Face-both-ways-at once" is Harrisons new name. His attitude on civil service reform earned the hyphenated cognomen. It seemed a little tough for him that the morning paper, containing the associated press interview with Commissioner Roosevelt which was telegraphed from Indianapolis, stating that the President had instructed the Commissioners to enforce the civil service law in letter and spirit should have printed on the same page a most glaring violation of that same law by Harrison. The violation referred to was the changing of the rule, which says that no person who has been out of the classified service for more than a year can be reinstated without a regular examination, so that an exception is made in favor of veterans of the Union army, who can now be legally reinstated at any time no matter how long since they were discharged, if they have sufficient influence. The fact should be remembered that about seven out of every ten of these men that will be reinstated will cause the discharge of men who obtain the position they now fill through a Civil service examination. The Civil service law does not prevent a clerk being discharged.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. [illegible] A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Levi Gay, Esq., was in town Tuesday.

—Some of our townsmen have been catching some nice bass, lately.

—Atty. L. M. McClintic and wife are visiting his parents at Buckeye.

—A little fire has been quite comfortable in the mornings and evenings for the past few days.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—Good envelopes at THE TIMES office for 15c per 100.

—Dr. Hezekiah McClintic, of Mo., and Geo. McClintic of Covington, were in town last Saturday.

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9-12t

—Mrs. Joe Smith, and daughter, of Mill Point, passed through town Monday on their way to Green Bank.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—Mr. J. H. Curry, of Mill Point, and Miss Birdie Nottingham, of Green Bank made us a pleasant call Monday.

—The stable of Attorney L. M. McClintic was broken open, and his horse taken out and ridden Tuesday night.

—If you want a history of the Johnstown flood, send to C. B. Swecker, Dunmore, who will furnish you a copy as soon as they are out.

—Atty L. M. McClintic, D. A. Fisher and S. F. White, have gone to William's river, to spend a few days fishing.

—We wish some body would bring us a mess of fish. Here we have to stay all the time, in old newspapers and dirt, up to our ears and work like a dog or nigger, and can't get a chance to go fishin'.

—We understand that Mr. Sam. Gay, better known as "devil Sam," of near Edray, and Miss Genna, daughter of Mr. A. N. Taylor, of William's river will be married next Wednesday.

—Wood Stealing is getting to be a common occurrence about town now, and we are afraid wood won't be [illegible] thing stolen during the coming winter. They say we are having [illegible] times since "Mr. Face [illegible]" administration!

[illegible]

[illegible] sun shines, go [illegible] when it rains and work the [illegible] when you can.

The [illegible] July is coming and we'll go to the [illegible] grounds and meet the flying dutchman.

Capt. E. A. Smith is off to Ronceverte.

D. B. McElwee is off to [illegible] C. H.

Dr. Jno. Ligan is off to Washington city, with his pat. fence and cattle stall.

[illegible] E. Taylor and wife are off to [illegible]

[illegible] wagons are out for Staunton.

Mrs. John [illegible] is visiting [illegible]

Mrs. [illegible] and Miss Kittie Lakin [illegible] the dipping at Edray Sunday.

Quite a number of guests at Hotel [illegible]

The singing at [illegible] Roads school house was [illegible] attended. There will be singing again at the same place on Sunday, the 30th, at 2, p. m.

Part of the lumbermen are getting out raft timber on Greenbrier river.

Dr. Lacy, will preach at Clover Lick on Sunday 30th inst.

Mrs. Boyd Bartlett, of Mill Point, is visiting friends in this section.

Rev. Jasper Sharp and family of Beverly, W. Va., are visiting relatives in this county.

Couldn't some one give us a snake story about a foot long.

Morgan Wakeman has been on the sick list for a few days.

Success to THE TIMES.

TOM SAWYER.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

Court convened on Monday 17th, with Judge A. N. Campbell on the bench:

CHANCERY CASES.

C. L. Austin &c. vs. Wm. F. Arbast &c suit No. 1, decree of partition; No. 2 and 3 decree of sale.

Hugh M. Carpenter's adm'x vs. Margaret M. Carpenter &c., order of reference.

Susan C. Pyles vs Jas. Pyle's Heirs, decree confirming assignment of widows dower.

Allen D Grimes' adm'r vs. Allen D. Grimes' Heirs &c., decree confirming sale.

Geo. C. Hill's Adm'r vs. Rebecca J. Hill &c., order of reference.

Jno. W. McNeel's Adm'r vs. Jno. W. McNeel's Heirs &c., decree confirming sale.

Jno. Sharp's Adm'r vs. Jno. Sharp's Legatees, cause dismissed.

Jas. Pyles' Adm'r Jas. Pyles' Heirs &c., cause dismissed.

Frank Barret vs. Wm. M. McAlister &c., decree entered in favor of Plaintiff.

STATE CASES.

Perry Townsend A. & B. No. 1, judgment on confession, and fined $25; No 2 carrying deadly weapons, found guilty.

Jane Allen, A. & B., nol pros.

Wm. Hill, A. & B., found not guilty.

Sallie Hill, A. & B. found guilty and fined $1.00.

Adam Polin, No. 4, unlawfully selling liquor, found not guilty.

A. J. Kertner, unlawfully selling liquor, judgment confessed.

J. D. Hamilton A. & B., judgment confessed.

W. L. Taylor, A. & B. found not guilty.

Z. T. Webb, selling deadly weapons to miner, found not guilty.

J. B. Apperson, unlawfully distilling, judgment confessed.

Jno. A. Alderman, misdeamenor, nol pros.

Suicide in Irish Corner.

On last Friday, the 14th, Dr. M. A. Gates was summoned to the scene of a tragical occurence, by which a human soul was hurried into eternity. On that morning Mrs. Mary Mann, wife of Davis J. Mann, farmer, living in Irish Corner, district, about two miles south of Ronceverte, hung herself in a granary, between the hours of 8 and 10 a.m.

On receipt of the intelligence Justice T. H. Adwell summoned a coroner's jury and proceeded to hold an inquest, by which the following facts were developed:

Davis J. Mann, husband of the deceased testified that he had been away that morning to a neighbor's on business. His wife had spent the night at her uncle's, about one mile from home, and returned home about 8 o'clock a. m. He returned about ten a. m., and not finding his wife about the house, began to look for her. Not seeing her, he returned to the house for some tobacco, which he always kept in a particular place in a drawyer. On opening the drawyer he found a note, of which the following is the substance:

"DAVIS: I hope the Lord will bless you, for you have done all you could to get me well, but my head had got in such a fix that I was no satisfaction to you or anybody else. I hope you may see much pleasure, but I wanted to get away where people would not see me. I got in such a fix that I wasn't allowed to live any longer. God bless you in all your troubles. I never thought that I would ever have to take my own dear life. You done all you could."

On reading the note he hurried out to a small out-house (used for a granary) where he found her lying on the floor. She had made a slip noose with a piece of cord about the size of wool twine, put it around her neck, tied the end to a rafter, and lay down. He did not touch her being satisfied she was dead, but ran to a neighbor's and gave the alarm.

Dr. Gates, the family physician, testified that she was of sound mind, but that ill-health had probably destroyed her desire to live. Her death was the result of strangulation, and the character of the surrroundings indicated deliberation, as she could easily have saved herself.

A neighbor woman testified that only an hour before the occurence she overheard deceased remark that she was tired of living.

The jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to death by her own hand.

Mrs. Mann was the daughter of Mr. George W. Morgan, and was about 24 years of age. She was buried on Friday in the Morgan graveyard.—Greenbrier Messenger.

What Do they do With It

We know what the young men graduates will do with the book learning, be the same much or little, which lies back of the diploma. They will try to get a living with it; and as their learning has been more or less practical their chances will be better or worse. The young man just from college is expected to find or make a way to apply what he has learned.

What about the young women graduates? What are they going to do with it? What can they do with it? Fewer avenues being open to them, their course of instruction should have been on lines the most practical, the most likely to fit them for usefulness to themselves and society. Little dashes of polite learning not too well learned are but a thin veneer on a very slight foundation.

The day is coming when the girls of America as well as the boys will be educated to do something that will bring them a living. An idle young woman in a family will be no better thought of than an idle young man.—Ex.

The Republic—"Her Mark."

Some of the newspapers are printing a fac simile of the autograph of Abraham Lincoln's mother.

Plain Sarah Lincoln signed a document in a very simple and old-fashioned way. A friendly hand traced her name, with the explanatory words, "Her mark," and Sarah then made the familiar "X."

That one mark is an epitome of the history of the republic. From such crude and simple beginnings have sprung our culture and civilization. Humble Sarah Lincoln gave to the world a son who wrote his name in imperishable letters of light on one of the proudest pages of our annals.

It is the story of the republic—out of the depths to the highest place in the temple of Fame—out of the darkness and into the light!—Atlanta Constitution.

Gov. Lee has issued a requisition upon the Governor of Missouri for Robert Warwick, who was indicted in the County Court of Highland county, Va., in January, 1884, for the murder of E. D. Atchison. Warwick made his escape from jail after the killing of Atchison, and eluded arrest until a few days ago when he was captured in Shelby county, Ind., and lodged in jail.

Ex-Senator Cameron, of Pa., is very ill.

The Prohibition Amendment was defeated in Pennsylvania by 200,000 majority.

A policeman was shot badly but not fatally, in Wheeling, on the 19th, by a man whom he attempted to arrest.

It is said that a cousin of the rich Astor family in New York recently committed suicide to avoid starvation. 'Tis a sad world, after all.

Mrs. Hayes, the wife of ex-President Hayes, was stricken with apoplexy on the 21st inst., at her home in Fremont, O.

In England and France many women dress in men's clothes all the time. They claim that when they pass themselves off for men they get better wages and suffer less annoyance.

Sitting Bull gives indications of remaining a "bad Indian" for a while longer. It was thought that he was about to check his baggage for the happy hunting grounds a few days ago, but he is now reported as recovering. The doughty chieftain may be old, but he seems to still be very tough.

A young man named Joseph Smith, on the 2d, threw a stone at the cars as they were passing Weyer's Cave Station, on the Shenandoah Valley Road, at high speed. It struck the cars, and rebounding struck Smith on the head, killing him instantly.

William Nye has sailed for Europe to interview the queen. But Mr. Nye cannot get an audience with her maj. Court etiquette requires that all persons visiting the queen should comb their hair. Mr. Nye has no hair to comb, and consequently he will be compelled to play in the backyard with the queen's grandchildren and have his dinner sent to him.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

June 27 1889.

VERY SLIGHT CLEWS.

How Tom Marshall Once Upon a Time Detected a Burglar.

"Tom" Marshall was at one time the favorite hero of the bar in Kentucky. His acumen, his wit, his magnetic power over a jury, whether he happened to be drunk or sober, gave rise to numberless anecdotes about him. One of the least known is the following:

Marshall, after a prolonged holiday, found himself in a little inland town, the center of an admiring circle of newly-made friends who were ignorant of his real position or occupation. Chief among these was a young dentist, a hard-working, frugal fellow, when by dint of strict economy, had saved a few hundred dollars. He was about to be married, and bought a snug little house, and withdrew his money one day from the bank to pay for it.

The bargain was to be completed on the following day. He carried the money to his chamber, a small room back of his shop, and, locking up the roll of bills in his secretary, went to bed.

About midnight he was wakened by the flash of a dark lantern in his face. He sprang up. A man was climbing out of the open window. His desk was open and rifled. He rushed upon the thief, who fired at him twice and escaped. The poor dentist, on the eve of his wedding-day, was left dangerously wounded and penniless.

The country was searched for traces of the thief, but in vain. Marshall took a keen interest in the matter, questioned the policemen closely, and when they gave up in despair, asked permission to visit the dentist's rooms. After a close search, he found upon the floor a small pellet of burned paper, which he carried home. It was the wadding out the thief's pistols. When examined, it proved to be half of a receipt for water tax, signed by John Jones, town clerk.

The date was entire, but the name of the man paying his tax was torn off, excepting two letters, Pe——. Marshall at once searched the records of the town clerk, and found on the given date Peter Scott had paid his water tax. Peter was arrested, and the money was found in his possession.

Marshall soon after left the village, followed by the blessings of the grateful dentist and his bride. Long afterward they discovered that their friend was the famous eccentrick lawyer of Kentucky.

Another story which lingers in the gossip about the courts in the same State is of an old lawyer named Hunt, who, in the early part of this century, was known as "the sleuth-hound," so unerring was his pursuit of a criminal. On one occasion he was employed to defend a poor colored porter in a bank, accused of robbing the vaults after the cashier was gaged and tied.

The circumstantial evidence was complete against the negro, but Hunt was convinced of his innocence. The thief, too, had dropped a bit of cloth on the floor, apparently the torn lining of a hat, about which Hunt's keen scent detected a faint, peculiar perfume.

"The man who wore this is a tanner," he said to a detective.

There was but one tannery within forty miles. One of the owners was a dissipated young man. He was watched and soon detected in passing some of the stolen money. Being arrested, he confessed his guilt, and Hunt's client was saved.

The old saying, "Murder will out," is true only when some intellect is acute enough to gather the proof of guilt from trifles which other men neglect.—Youth's Companion.

The World Full of Death Traps.

According to the American Analyst, the worst enemies of the human race are the doctors, who try to prolong our miserable existence in a world full of death traps. One medico tells you not to eat or drink too much. Another says that you must only eat what you fancy, because otherwise you will bolt your food without giving to each morsel the thirty-six mastications which are necessary for digestion. You must wear a respirator over your mouth, a pad on your chest, and a swarth of flannel round your loins. If you live in town, you will die of fog; if you go to the country, you will be poisened by bad drainage; if you drink water, you are tempting the typhoid fiend; milk spells scarlatina, and tea cake is sudden death. Do you shun these tempestuous pleasures of the senses and take refuge in the recreations of the mind? Do you borrow a novel from the circulating library? That is to import the germs of disease into a healthy household. The volume in your hands may have been pursued by a person recovering from an infectious illness!

Farm and Garden Notes.

Don't forget the dust bath.

Don't plant corn that will not grow.

Be sure and test your corn before planting.

Don't plow the land when wet or sticky.

One of the essentials of soiling is a fertile soil.

Mix the dry horse manure with the wet cow manure.

Cooked rice, fed cold, is good for diarrhœa in chicks.

Don't breed a draft mare to a trotter or a thoroughbred.

Don't feed sulphur to young chicks—it produces leg weakness.

Hard-boiled eggs and cornmeal makes a good first feed for ducklings.

Don't breed to a mishapen ungainly horse, even if he has a long pedigree.

It is a mistaken idea that a hen's nest ought to do duty a year with renewing.

A gentleman who was driving up Fourth street avenue the other day came to several empty barrels in the street, and he halted and asked of a boy who sat on the curb:

"Say boy, who rolled those barrels out here?"

"Pa did. We are cleaning house," was the answer.

"Whose children are those out there in the street?"

"They are ours. Ma sent 'em out to get rid of them."

"Is that your dog making such a fuss in the back yard?"

"Yes, sir. We are seeing how long he can keep it up."

"And I suppose you lugged that ladder out here?"

"Yes sir—I'm playing with it."

"Well, you seem to be doing about as you want up here?"

"Yes sir except that I can't dry that letter box off the lamp post. Haven't got a crowbar in the buggy have you? I just want that to be happy."

Miss De Sweet—"I'll never touch another chew of gum as long as I live."

Proud Mother—"I am glad to hear you say so, my dear; but what has reformed you so suddenly?"

"Last evening Mr. Richfellow proposed to me just at the moment when my jaws got stuck, so couldn't say anything, and he went off."

Flap—"I'm in love, and the only disagreeable thing about it is that the girl is older than I."

Jack—"How old are you now?"

"I'm eighteen."

"And the lady is what?"

"Twenty two."

"Well, make your mind easy. By the time you are twenty-one she'll be only twenty."

Husband (after some words with his wife)—"Well let us drop it. I don't care to say any more about. And, besides I like to talk to a sensible person when I am talking."

Wife (with a sarcastic laugh)—"You don't always do it, then."

H.—"I don't."

W.—"No I sometimes hear you talking to yourself."

Household Hints

Wash out common oil stains in cold water.

The nicest fire to broil with is made of charcoal.

Burnt alum is the best cure for proud flesh in "man or beast."

Pickles may be greened with cabbage leaves. Never use coloring.

When dress silks become wet pat it between the hands to dry quickly.

"William," said Mrs. Trembly, "hear that horrid dog! Isn't it awful!"

"Is that the same dog that kept us awake last night?"

"I think so. It sounds unlucky doesn't it?"

"Didn't you ever hear that the howling of a dog was a sure sign of death in the family."

"No. Whose family?"

"The dog's," said Trembly in a firm voice as stepped out of bed and reached for his revolver.

"Well, sir," said an old gentleman indignantly, "what are doing around here again. I thought the delicate hint I gave you just as you left the front door last night would give you to understand that I don't like you very well." And the speaker looked at his boot in a reminiscent way.

"It did said the young man," as a look of mingled pain and admiration came over his face. "But I though I would come and ask you—"

"Ask me what?"

"If you would like to join our foot-ball association."

Chawles—"Who is she?"

Jawdge—"My fiancee."

"Chawles—"Pshaw! I thought you had more taste. I wouldn't marry a girl who wore a red dress with a green back to it."

Jawdge—"It's the greenbacks in her pocketbook I am after, dear boy."

IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT 'THE TIME.'

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 4, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 50.

Slander.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet the fair good name was wilted,
And friends once fond grew stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
Its craven whispers, hushed and low—
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one,
That muttered low for very shame,
The thing the slanderer dare not name—
And yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul in one short hour
Lies crushed beneath its blight.

Prize Winners.

We played progressive euchre
The livelong winter through,
She was a skillful player,
And I was lucky, too.

Our luck gave rise to envy,
And us together drew,
Whereat—since she was charming—
I murmured not. Would you?

So, when the playing ended,
Each night she took my arm,
And acting as her escort,
I yielded to love's charm.

A year now we've been married,
And, much to our surprise,
Somehow we both keep thinking
We won the booby prize.

Mine or Thine.

"You refuse me, then?"

The tone in which the few words were spoken was low and even, as if they were of no moment, but the face of Philip Lowry contradicted the forced composure. His eyes—large dark eyes full of intellect and character—were fixed upon the face of his companion with an expression of pain, and his lips quivered under his heavy moustache.

Maude Ingersoll looked at him with scorn in her blazing blue eyes, her lips curled contemptuously, and her cheeks flushed with anger.

Always a beautiful woman, her usually cold impassive face was doubly facinating when lighted with passion.

"Refuse you?" she said quickly; "Yes. You do not love me, you do not wish to marry me. You came here in obedience to the wish of my uncle, and you ask me to be your wife because he wishes you to share the wealth he left to me. I will not submit to such arbitrary wishes—to such forced wooing!"

"You mistake," was the reply; and now the voice was eager and full of passion; "I did come here because my friend—my adopted father—desired it; but my resolve was taken before I came. If I could love you, I would obey him if not, I determined never to ask for your hand. Maude, I love you. Were your uncle's wealth to be lost to you to-day, I should still plead for your hand. My whole life shall prove my love, if you will accept it. Darling!" for he saw her blue eyes soften, "you do love me!"

Her face grew hard again, and she said haughtily.

"We have talked too long. I must decline the honor you propose."

And before he could speak again, she swept past him and went to her own room, locking the door that no one might surprise her in the violent fit of weeping she could no longer control.

Love him! How could she help but love him! With a noble face, a tall manly figure, to captivate her fancy, he combined rare powers of intellect to command admiration and a tenderness almost womanly, to win her love. She had resisted each and all, and yet they conquered her.

With her whole heart Maude Ingersoll loved Philip Lowry. But she was proud, a woman accustomed to adulation, and one who fully appreciated the golden halo that was added to her personal charms.

When her uncle, Stephen Ingersoll, had sent for her from the boarding school where she was educated, he had told her that the dearest wish of his heart had been to see her the wife of his adopted son. There had been a life-long friendship between Stepen Ingersoll and Philip Lowry's father, and the boy had been a precious legacy of love. He had been educated at home sent abroad, and studied law as a profession, but his adopted father had left him but four thousand pounds out of his large forturne. There was, however, a sealed letter, and it contained two requests. One was that on his twenty-fifth birthday he should ask Maude to be his wife, and the other that he should go to Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer on the same day, and hear what he had to communicate.

Smarting still under Maude's repulse, yet sure that she loved him, Philip left the house that had been his boyhood's home to fulfil the desire of his benefactor before returning to the city where he had opened a law office.

Conscious that he had not been influenced by Maude's wealth in his wooing, it galled him to think of the avowed cause of her rejection, and it required a long walk to work off his anger before he was sufficiently composed to present himself to Mr. Freybold, the late Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer.

He was a fussy little man, brimming over with importance, and he shook Philip's hand, and almost pushed him into a chair in his feverish impatience to impart his tidings.

"My late client," he said, after the first interchange of greeting was over, "was, as you are aware, Mr. Lowry, a very peculiar man—a man of force; to be sure, but—well, you may not be aware of the fact, but he was vacillating in some respects—very much so about the final disposal of his property.

"I did not know that, certainly," Philip said.

"No! Well, he made fourteen wills in this office; some left every thing to you, some left all to Miss Maude, some divided the property. But the last one—the very last one—which was not to be opened until to-day, leaves Miss Maude four thousand pounds, and leaves you sole heir to all the rest. But Mr. Ingersoll, although he made no such condition in his will, was satisfied that this will would make no material difference to his niece, but simply place the money in her husband's hands. He told me that."

"Can I see the will?"

"Certainly—certainly. It is, you see, quite brief, but plainly expresses his wish."

"And if this one did not exist?"

"Why the money would still be Miss Maude's."

"I see. Mr. Ingersoll, you understand, Mr. Freybold, wrote this will under a mistaken impression. Miss Maude is not engaged to me."

"Not engaged to you! But I thought you were to see her to-day, before you came here."

"She had a woman's privilege, and she took advantage of it. I did see her, and she rejected me."

"Then she will lose her money. Bless my soul! but that is hard now, isn't it? Perhaps if she understood—"

But here Mr. Freybold choked himself, seeing the wrath upon the young man's countenance.

"I understand you, sir," Philip said coldly; "but you are quite mistaken. Miss Ingersoll would not marry me to keep her uncle's fortune, even if I gave her the opportunity. But the question need not be discussed. I love her! I tell you this that you may know why I refuse to accept riches that are taken from her. This will being made under a mistaken impression is better—There!"

And as he spoke he tore the document with his strong nervous hands across and across, and tossed the fragments into the waste paper basket.

"Bless my soul!" gasped the little lawyer. "Are you aware that there is half a million of money in the estate?"

"I am quite aware of that fact," was the quiet reply: "and I wish Miss Maude every happiness its possession can give her."

But the wish, sincere as it was, did not bring to Maude Ingersoll either happiness or rest. She had not known the strength of her love till her lover had left her. The hours when she had expected his daily visits dragged heavily, and Mrs. Marsh, the companion who represented propriety in the house of the heiress, wondered uneasily if Miss Ingersoll had, after all, a bad temper. She had been cold and proud, but never snappish before; but her sore heart made her irritable, and Mrs. Marsh certainly was trying in her praises of Mr. Lowry, and openly expressed wonder at his sudden departure.

Society was dull since Philip was no longer Maude's escort; the opera lost its charm when he was not beside her; her admirers all seemed silly and wearisome, comparing their vapid small talk with Philip's vigorous intellect and well chosen conversation.

But two years dragged along, and the wound, self-inflicted had ceased to be an ever present agony. Maude had taken up study, charity, constant occupation of varied kinds, and tried to believe she had quite lived down her heartache. The self-deception asserted itself one morning when business called her to Mr. Freyhold's office. The fussy little man, after the errand had been executed, said regretfully:

"That is sad news from Mr. Lowry. A fine young man."

"I have heard no news of him," Maude said, her heart suddenly hammering at her side with sickening rapidity.

"No? He has been seriously injured in a railway collision. He was on his way here, and was brought on in the next train, and is at the National Hotel. There is but little hope of his recovery, and if his life is spared, his left arm is gone—amputated to-day. Dear, dear! He could not do again what he did two years ago in this office."

"What was that?" Maude asked in a low choking voice.

"He would not have told you, and he may not thank me for doing so; but he, Philip Lowry, in this office, two years ago, tore into a hundred pieces the last will of Stephen Ingersoll, which left him heir to the property that is now yours."

White to her lips, Maude Ingersoll heard this story that contradicted so completely the mercenary motive with which she had charged her lover. It struck her like a blow—this proof of his devotion and generosity, but she rallied presently.

"Thank you for telling me," she said, and was gone, while Mr. Freybold, listening as her carriage rolled away from his door, rubbed his hands together and said aloud:

"Bless my soul! I do believe I've made that affair all right."

Suffering still from the shock of his injuries, faint from loss of blood, crushed by the loss of his arm, Philip Lowry lay in his room at the National Hotel, almost hoping to die.

He had not gone home to mope over a broken heart, but had manfully borne his lost love. Still, the pain, numbed somewhat, was not dead, and when the physical love torture was added, the love of life seemed gone from him.

"As well to die as to live crippled and alone!" he thought drearily, as he lay back weary and faint. "How long, I wonder, must I lie here?"

The nurse was fussing about, the doctor had just gone, and there seemed only an endless blank before him when there came a soft wish of silk across the floor.

Very slowly it approached the bed, until, bending over him, Philip saw Maude's face.

Very low her voice sounded, scarcely above a whisper, but he heard every word as she said:

"Philip, will you forvive me? I love you! I cannot live without your love. Will you let me be your wife now, Philip?"

"But you do not know, he said feebly; "my arm—"

"I know all!" she said, her lips pressing his.

"Oh, my love, do not send me away."

"I cannot!" he whispered.

Mrs. Marsh will never cease to tell of her amazement at the hasty summons to attend a wedding at the National Hotel, for Maude left Philip no more. It was his wife who nursed him back to health, and there is no question of "mine or thine" in their possession of Stephen Ingersoll's wealth.

Good for a Museum.

From the Youth's Companion.

The old lady who never spoke ill of anyone and even intimated that satan himself set some good people an example of perseverance, must have been a relative to the woman who lived in Sussex, England, in the days when the kettle was hung from the cane in an open fireplace. An English clergyman tells the story:

A man whose wife was blessed with a remarkably even temper went over the way to a neighbor one evening and said:

"Neighbor, I should like to see my wife cross for once. I've tried all I know and I can't make her cross no way."

"You can't make your wife cross?" said his neighbor. "I wish I could make mine anything else. But you do just what I tell you, and if that won't act nothing will. You bring her in some night a lot of the crookedest sticks you can get, them as won't lie in no form, and see how she makes out then."

The pieces of wood were accordingly brought in awkward and crooked and contrary as could be found. The man went away early to work and at noon returned to see the results of his experiment. He was greeted with a smile and the general request. "Tom, do bring me in some more of those crooked sticks, if you can find them; they do just fit around the kettle so nicely!"

Frog (to elephant)—How far can you jump, you big lummix?

Elephant—I can't jump at all, froggy woggy.

Frog (hoisting his shoulders)—You're unlucky. When I see an enemy approaching, with a few jumps I am out of danger.

Elephant—When I see an enemy approaching I don't have to jump.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 4, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 50.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. N. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Slander.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet the fair good name was wilted,
And friends once fond grew stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
Its craven whispers, hushed and low—
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one,
That muttered low for very shame,
The thing the slanderer dare not name
And yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul in one short hour
Lies crushed beneath its blight.

Prize Winners.

We played progressive euchre
The livelong winter through,
She was a skillful player,
And I was lucky, too.

Our luck gave rise to envy,
And us together drew,
Whereat—since she was charming—
I murmured not. Would you?

So, when the playing ended,
Each night she took my arm,
And acting as her escort,
I yielded to loves charm.

A year now we've been married,
And, much to our surprise,
Somehow we both keep thinking
We won the booby prize.

Mine or Thine.

"You refuse me, then?"

The tone in which the few words were spoken was low and even, as if they were of no moment, but the face of Philip Lowry contradicted the forced composure. His eyes—large dark eyes full of intellect and character—were fixed upon the face of his companion with an expression of pain, and his lips quivered under his heavy moustache.

Maude Ingersoll looked at him with scorn in her blazing blue eyes, her lips curled contemptuously, and her cheeks flushed with anger.

Always a beautiful woman, her usually cold impassive face was doubly facinating when lighted with passion.

"Refuse you?" she said quickly; "Yes. You do not love me, you do not wish to marry me. You came here in obedience to the wish of my uncle, and you ask me to be your wife because he wishes you to share the wealth he left to me. I will not submit to such arbitrary wishes—to such forced wooing!"

"You mistake," was the reply; and now the voice was eager and full of passion; "I did come here because my friend—my adopted father—desired it; but my resolve was taken before I came. If I could love you, I would obey him if not, I determined never to ask for your hand. Maude, I love you. Were your uncle's wealth to be lost to you to-day, I should still plead for your hand. My whole life shall prove my love, if you will accept it. Darling!" for he saw her blue eyes soften, "you do love me!"

Her face grew hard again, and she said haughtily.

"We have talked too long. I must decline the honor you propose.

And before he could speak again, she swept past him and went to her own room, locking the door that no one might surprise her in the violent fit of weeping she could no longer control.

Love him! How could she help but love him! With a noble face, a tall manly figure, to captivate her fancy, he combined rare powers of intellect to command admiration and a tenderness almost womanly, to win her love. She had resisted each and all, and yet they conquered her.

With her whole heart Maude Ingersoll loved Philip Lowry. But she was proud, a woman accustomed to adulation, and one who fully appreciated the golden bait that was added to her personal charms.

When her uncle, Stephen Ingersoll, had sent for her from the boarding school where she was educated, he had told her that the dearest wish of his heart had been to see her the wife of his adopted son. There had been a life-long friendship between Stepen Ingersoll and Philip Lowry's father, and the boy had been a precious legacy of love. He had been educated at home sent abroad, and studied law as a profession, but his adopted father had left him but four thousand pounds out of his large forturne. There was, however, a sealed letter, and it contained two requests. One was that on his twenty-fifth birthday he should ask Maude to be his wife, and the other that he should go to Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer on the same day, and hear what he had to communicate.

Smarting still under Maude's repulse, yet sure that she loved him, Philip left the house that had been his boyhood's home to fulfil the desire of his benefactor before returning to the city where he had opened a law office.

Conscious that he had not been influenced by Maude's wealth in his wooing, it galled him to think of the avowed cause of her rejection, and it required a long walk to work off his anger before he was sufficiently composed to present himself to Mr. Freyhold, the late Mr. Ingersoll's lawyer.

He was a fussy little man, brimming over with importance, and he shook Philip's hand, and almost pushed him into a chair in his feverish impatience to impart his tidings.

"My late client," he said, after the first interchange of greeting was over, "was, as you are aware, Mr. Lowry, a very peculiar man—a man of force, to be sure, but—well, you may not be aware of the fact, but he was vacillating in some respects—very much so about the final disposal of his property.

"I did not know that, certainly," Philip said.

"No! Well, he made fourteen wills in this office; some left every thing to you, some left all to Miss Maude, some divided the property. But the last one—the very last one—which was not to be opened until to-day, leaves Miss Maude four thousand pounds, and leaves you sole heir to all the rest. But Mr. Ingersoll, although he made no such condition in his will, was satisfied that this will would make no material difference to his niece, but simply place the money in her husband's hands. He told me that."

"Can I see the will?"

"Certainly—certainly. It is, you see, quite brief, but plainly expresses his wish."

"And if this one did not exist?"

"Why the money would still be Miss Maude's."

"I see. Mr. Ingersoll, you understand, Mr. Freyhold, wrote this will under a mistaken impression. Miss Maude is not engaged to me."

"Not engaged to you! But I thought you were to see her to-day, before you came here."

"She had a woman's privilege, and she took advantage of it. I did see her, and she rejected me."

"Then she will lose her money. Bless my soul! but that is hard now, isn't it? Perhaps if she understood—"

But here Mr. Freyhold choked himself, seeing the wrath upon the young man's countenance.

"I understand you, sir," Philip said coldly; "but you are quite mistaken. Miss Ingersoll would not marry me to keep her uncle's fortune, even if I gave her the opportunity. But the question need not be discussed. I love her! I tell you this that you may know why I refuse to accept riches that are taken from her. This will being made under a mistaken impression is better—There!"

And as he spoke he tore the document with his strong nervous hands across and across, and tossed the fragments into the waste paper basket.

"Bless my soul" gasped the little lawyer. "Are you aware that there is half a million of money in the estate?"

"I am quite aware of that fact," was the quiet reply: "and I wish Miss Maude every happiness its possession can give her."

But the wish, sincere as it was, did not bring to Maude Ingersoll either happiness or rest. She had not known the strength of her love till her lover had left her. The hours when she had expected his daily visits dragged heavily, and Mrs. Marsh, the companion who represented propriety in the house of the heiress, wondered uneasily if Miss Ingersoll had, after all, a bad temper. She had been cold and proud, but never snappish before; but her sore heart made her irritable, and Mrs. Marsh certainly was trying in her praises of Mr. Lowry, and openly expressed wonder at his sudden departure.

Society was dull since Philip was no longer Maude's escort; the opera lost its charm when he was not beside her; her admirers all seemed silly and wearisome, comparing their vapid small talk with Philip's vigorous intellect and well chosen conversation.

But two years dragged along, and the wound, self-inflicted had ceased to be an ever present agony. Maude had taken up study, charity, constant occupation of varied kinds, and tried to believe she had quite lived down her heartache. The self-deception asserted itself one morning when business called her to Mr. Freyhold's office. The fussy little man, after the errand had been executed, said regretfully:

"That is sad news from Mr. Lowry. A fine young man."

"I have heard no news of him," Maude said, her heart suddenly hammering at her side with sickening rapidity.

"No? He has been seriously injured in a railway collision. He was on his way here, and was brought on in the next train, and is at the National Hotel. There is but little hope of his recovery, and if his life is spared, his left arm is gone—amputated to-day. Dear, dear! He could not do again what he did two years ago in this office."

"What was that?" Maude asked in a low choking voice.

"He would not have told you, and he may not thank me for doing so; but he, Philip Lowry, in this office, two years ago, tore into a hundred pieces the last will of Stephen Ingersoll, which left him hair to the property that is now yours."

White to her lips, Maude Ingersoll heard this story that contradicted so completely the mercenary motive with which she had charged her lover. It struck her like a blow—this proof of his devotion and generosity, but she rallied presently.

"Thank you for telling me," she said, and was gone, while Mr. Freyhold, listening as her carriage rolled away from his door, rubbed his hands together and said aloud:

"Bless my soul! I do believe I've made that affair all right."

Suffering still from the shock of his injuries, faint from loss of blood, crushed by the loss of his arm, Philip Lowry lay in his room at the National Hotel, almost hoping to die.

He had not gone home to mope over a broken heart, but had manfully borne his lost love. Still, the pain, numbed somewhat, was not dead, and when the physical love torture was added, the love of life seemed gone from him.

"As well to die as to live crippled and alone!" he thought drearily, as he lay back weary and faint. "How long, I wonder, must I lie here?"

The nurse was fussing about, the doctor had just gone, and there seemed only an endless blank before him when there came a soft wish of silk across the floor.

Very slowly it approached the bed, until, bending over him, Philip saw Maude's face.

Very low her voice sounded, scarcely above a whisper, but he heard every word as she said:

"Philip, will you forvive me? I love you! I cannot live without your love. Will you let me be your wife now, Philip?"

"But you do not know, he said feebly; "my arm—"

"I know all" she said, her lips pressing his.

"Oh, my love, do not send me away."

"I cannot!" he whispered.

Mrs. Marsh will never cease to tell of her amazement at the hasty summons to attend a wedding at the National Hotel, for Maude left Philip no more. It was his wife who nursed him back to health, and there is no question of "mine or thine" in their possession of Stephen Ingersoll's wealth.

Good for a Museum.

From the Youth's Companion.

The old lady who never spoke ill of anyone and even intimated that satan himself set some good people an example of perseverance, must have been a relative to the woman who lived in Sussex, England, in the days when the kettle was hung from the cane in an open fireplace. An English clergyman tells the story:

A man whose wife was blessed with a remarkably even temper went over the way to a neighbor one evening and said:

"Neighbor, I should like to see my wife cross for once. I've tried all I know and I can't make her cross no way."

"You can't make your wife cross?" said his neighbor. "I wish I could make mine anything else. But you do just what I tell you, and if that won't act nothing will. You bring her in some night a lot of the crookedest sticks you can get, them as won't lie in no form, and see how she makes out then."

The pieces of wood were accordingly brought in awkward and crooked and contrary as could be found. The man went away early to work and at noon returned to see the results of his experiment. He was greeted with a smile and the general request. "Tom, do bring me in some more of those crooked sticks, if you can find them; they do just fit around the kettle so nicely!"

Frog (to elephant)—How far can you jump, you big lummix?

Elephant—I can't jump at all, froggy woggy.

Frog (hoisting his shoulders)—You're unlucky. When I see an enemy approaching, with a few jumps I am out of danger.

Elephant—When I see an enemy approaching I don't have to jump.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 4 1889.

THE FOURTH.

The time is again at hand to celebrate the birth of American liberty. The people of the United States, all ages and sexes, are engaged in commemorating an event in their history that marks the beginning of free institutions.

But the Fourth is not what it was a century ago. Perhaps we make more noise, and enter into the jolliffcation with more eagerness than our forefathers did; but it is not with the same feeling. We celebrate a liberty that is ours by gift and good fortune, but those who assembled one hundred years ago to commemorate the event, celebrated a liberty bought dearly, bought with blood and privation. Never having tasted the bitterness of foreign oppression, it is impossible for us in the evening of the nineteenth century to appreciate fully, the blessing of freedom. It is not to be wondered at that they who fought to release our land from foreign bonds should have entered with all their hearts into the celebration of that day where tyranny was forever banished from American soil. Proud of their victory, they commemorated the event with hearts full of gratitude to the God of battle, who rules the destines of nations.

But what is the spirit of to-days excitement? It is to be feared that many who are to-day most jubilant never once reflect on the origin of the day. A dance, or a drunk, or a fight, is to some, the most desireable manner in which to commemorate the occasion, with little thought or care for the sacrifices or triumphs of others. Let us not forget what the day means, and take time for at least one grateful thought of our worthy ancesters who secured us the right to rejoice without fear.

Gubernatorial Contest.

GRAFTON, W. Va., June 26th.—Including the alleged returns from Kanawha county, General Nathan Goff had a majority over Judge A. B. Fleming of 110 votes in the November election. In the contest before the legislative committee, votes stricken out increasing this alleged majority by five votes. To-day Messrs. Kee, Sprigg, Lively, Maxwell and Morris were present at the session of the committee. The returns from Brooke county were considered. Fleming challenged 139 votes and Goff challenged 44 votes. Of those challenged by Fleming 84 votes were stricken out. Of those challenged by Goff five votes were stricken out, showing a clear gain of 79 votes in Brooke county and a net gain, so far in the contest, of 74 votes for Judge Fleming. General Goff's apparent majority at the present time, therefore, is reduced from one hundred and ten to thirty-six votes.

How the Republicans howl fraud and declare the votes were disallowed on a "technicality." If only technical objections were necessary to throw out votes, about twice the number would have been thrown out. The contest committee has been entirely impartial in its work thus far. If there has been any partiality shown it has been shown to Goff, almost all of his objections being purely technical as the records show.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Blaine's young man with bangs, William Walter Phelph, of New Jersey, has been appointed Minister to Germany. There is nothing strange about this appointment which was known and discussed in Berlin, where Phelph was with the Samoan Commission, six weeks ago, except the absurd attempt on the part of Blaine, Harrison and Phelphs to make it appear to the public that the latter was very much surprised when tendered the commission as minister, whereas a matter of fact the thing has been fully settled ever since shortly after the Senate rejected the nomination of Murat Halstead to the same position. By accident I discovered the cause for this little display. Phelps wants to spend the most of the summer in this country, and it was concluded that if it was given out that the position had been given him unexpectedly, he could plead "private business" as an excuse for not going to Berlin for several months. Verily the tricks of the politicians are many.

Commissioner of Pensions Tanner is supposed to be rather thick-skinned but the charges of favoritism towards a certain firm of pension agents here which were recently made against the Pension office "broke him all up," as the boys say. Before leaving for the west, where he goes to attend several soldiers meetings, he called on the President to assure him that he was innocent of the charges. He also told the President that when he returned from this trip he proposed making a personal investigation in order to ascertain whether there was any basis for the charges.

There is to be a big discharge at the Government printing office tomorrow. I am informed that Public Printer Palmer has instructed the foremen in the several departments that he wanted none but democrats selected for dismissal.

The Indiana republicans that stay at home must be very different from those that come to Washington, or else Representative Owens, of that State, who is just from home, be fibbing when he says, speaking of his constituents: "The people of the State feel that superior to patronage, personal ambition for place, and all that, is the abuse that Indiana has a President whose administration they may be proud of." For several reasons I am constrained to believe that Mr. Owens is only giving the man in the White House "taffy" with the hope of "catching on" to something for some of his aforesaid constituents. First, because in the eyes of all the republicans from Indiana that I have ever seen nothing was superior to official patronage. Secondly the administration of the Indiana man has hardly been long enough or its acts important enough to either be proud of or ashamed of.

The traveler who is at present occupying the White House is working the railroads in great shape. He returned from Cape May Monday night and to-day he has gone back there. He will return here the first of the week, bringing his family. Tuesday or Wednesday he is to carry the old lady and the babies to Deer Park where a deadhead cottage has been placed at his disposal for the summer. He is then to go to the Fourth of July celebration at Woodstock. How many drummers do more traveling than this, in the same time.

The Civil Service Commission has returned from its investigating tour. The Commissioners are disappointed and almost discouraged. In only one place did they find the law being strictly carried out—Chicago. The visits of inspection will be kept up and unless the courage of the Commission shall all ooze out the law will be strictly enforced without fear or favor. This treatment, if persisted in, will make the law a permanent thing or it will cause it to be repealed.

Mr. Porter, Superintendent of the Census, proposes to set up a little opposition to the Civil Service Commission. He refuses to take his clerks through the Commission, and has arranged a list of questions which he says all applicants must answer satisfactorily before appointment. The only difference is, if furnished by the Civil Service Commission some of the clerks would be democrats, while Porters plan makes sure of all being republicans.

Special orders have been given collectors of Internal revenue as to watching fruit distillers, during the coming season.

Eight years ago there were only forty cotton seed oil mills in the south with a capital of $3,500,000. Now there are 175 mills, with a capital of $16,000,000.

The Democratic State Convention of Virginia, will be held in Richmond on the 14th, of August when the next governor will be nominated.

The death of Hon. Simon Cameron, has removed a good man and one of the most conspicious figures in American politics. He started in life at the printer's case.

C. P. Huntington is building a ship yard at Newport News which he claims will be the largest establishment of the kind in the United States.

"A little common sense," says the New York World, "is sometimes equal to a whole volume of grammar." It is a pity that this idea cannot be hammered into the heads of pedagogues, grammarians and verbal critics.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—County Court meets next Tuesday.

—Dr. M. Wallace was in town Tuesday.

—The new mail carriers come in Monday.

—We believe it has rained every day for six weeks.

—Atty. C. F. Moore, went up to Dunmore to-day (Wednesday.)

—Levi Gay, Esq., was in our city Monday.

—Good envelopes at THE TIMES office for 15c per 100.

—Deputy Sheriff L. W. Herold, of Frost was in town Monday.

—Mr. P. M. Harper, of Sunset was in town the 1st of the month.

—Wm. H. Gross, Esq., went to Covington Monday on business.

—Teacher's Institute will be held at this place, commencing August 26th.

—Mails three times a week from here to Frost and White Sulphur now.

—Some communications were crowded out this week for lack of space, but will appear next.

—Mr. Dan'l. O'Connell, of Anthony's creek was in the city a few days this week.

—French Hull, Esq., went down to Frankford, on a business trip the first of the week.

—We failed to call attention last week to the ad of the University of West Virginia in that issue.

—Oats and corn are looking fine, grass is good, and wheat is almost ready to cut.

—The board of education met Monday, for the purpose of settling up and allowing accounts.

—H. F. McGlaughlin, Esq., went to Highland Co., on a pleasure trip last week.

—Jno. A. McNeel, Esq., of Knapp's creek was in Huntersville Monday.

—Remember THE TIMES is $1.00 in advance and $1.25 after six months and $1.50 at the end of the year.

—Mrs. Isaac McNeel, her son Summers and little daughter, of Mill Point were the guests of Mrs. Jno. J. Beard, the first of the week.

—Mr. Wm. H Cackley, wife and little son of Dunmore, were the guests of Atty. C. F. Moore Tuesday.

—Look out there! you'll step on some poor unfortunate democratic fourth class postmaster's head, they are lying promiscuously all over the country.

—If you want a Lock Lever hay and grain rake or any repairs Call on H. F. McGLAUGHLIN agent Huntersville W. Va.

—We have received the July number of the Cosmopolitan. It is chock full of illustrated reading matter, and those who want a good magazine can do no better than to subscribe for it. Only $2.40 per year, Office No. 365, 5th avenue N. Y.

—Rev. W. T. Price, of Pocahontas county, was in Lewisburg Tuesday on his way to Ronceverte to meet his daughter, Miss Susie, who has been attending school in Richmond, Va.—Independent.

—Messrs. A. J. Mires and J. A. Hareld, of Pendleton county are in town. These gentlemen are here for the purpose of bidding on the bridge abutments to be replaced under the bridge across Knapp's creek at this place.

—Mr. Jas. W. Warwick Jr., of this place left last week to attend the semi-Centennial and Commencement exercises of the Virginia Military Institute. Mr. Warwick is an old student of the Institute, and we predict for him a good time at the reunion of his old class mates.

Preaching Arrangements.

Sacramental meeting at Huntersville, the second Sabbath of July. Preparatory service, Friday night before, Saturday morning, and Saturday night.

Sacramental meeting at Dunmore the fourth Sabbath of July. Preparatory services Fridaynight, and Saturday night before.

The assistance of a visiting minister is expected, Bro. Frierson or Wilson. There will be no dinner on the ground, services morning and night on Sabbath.

W. T. P.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Miss Grace Clark is visiting friends and relatives at Marlinton.

Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker has been in poor health for some time. He has labored faithfully for his congregation at this place for years, without any vacation, and we all all think that he richly deserves one now and should spend it in complete rest from his duties.

Mr. H. Nathan and Misses Georgia and Rose Shearer left Saturday morning to visit relatives at William's river.

The following are the officers elected by the Hillsboro Division of the Sons of Temperance, for the coming quarter:

G. R. Curry. Worthy Patriarch; G. W. Clark, Worthy Associate; Recording Scribe Miss G. M. Shearer; Assistant Recording Scribe, Miss verdie Clark; Financial Scribe, Miss Kate Marshall; Treasurer, Mr. A. R. Smith; Conductor, Mr. Thos. Vis; Asst. Con., Mr. Gus Eskridge; Chaplain, Rev. Wm. E. Miller; Inside sentinel Miss M. Curry; Outside sentinel, Mr. Wm. Wiley.

The wedding of Mr. Edward Hill, of Farmington, Washington Ty., to Miss Jennie C. Beard, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Beard was solemnized last Wednesday at the residence of the brides parents. The attendants were Messrs. Joe McNeel, Dick Beard, Sam McNeel and John Hill, and Misses Lou Ligon, Blanche Clark, Kate Beard and Pauline McNeel. The bride was attired in a handsome blue henrietta cloth, trimmed with old gold plush. Her waiters wore lovely walking costumes. The bride received many handsome bridal presents, among which were a silver butter dish by Mr. Dick Beard, silver teaspoons by Mr. Jake Beard, table cloth and napkins by Mrs. Wallace Beard, whisk broom and holder by Miss Annetta Ligon, toilet set by Miss Lou Ligon, and many other handsome and useful presents, too numerous to mention. They were tendered a handsome reception at Mr. Geo. Hill's, father of the groom, on Wednesday evening. The happy couple will leave soon for Washington Ty., where they will make their future home. Miss Jennie was one of our prettiest young ladies, and very popular, and we are sorry to see her leave, but wish both of them all happiness.

PRUNELLA.

Sons of Temperance.

Pocahontas District Division, Sons of Temperance, will meet at Hillsboro, Wednesday, July 17th, 1889, 10 o'clock, a. m. All Sub-divisions will see that they are fully represented.

The Committee on programme, has assigned to the several delegates the following subjects upon which to prepare essays, to be read at meeting of Divisions:

What can be done:—

1st. To add Interest to our Division—Geo. R. Curry.

2nd. For organizing new Divisions—E. H. Moore.

3rd. To Resussitate Dormant and Suspended Divisions—W. S. Anderson.

4th. For organizing Bands of Hope—Miss G. M. Shearer.

5th. For Distributing Temperance Literature—Miss L. M. Overholt.

6th. For Interchanging Fraternal Visits among the Divisions—D. A. Peck.

7th. For Visiting Public and Sunday schools and Addressing the Children—T. A. Bruffey.

8th. For Collecting Funds for our Work—J. H. Weiford and J. O. Hill.

9th. Relation of the Church to the Temperance cause—Rev. W. E. Miller.

10th. Responsibility of the Christian Church foi the Liquor Traffic—J. C. Loury Sr.

11. Woman's Position on the Temperance Question—Mrs. J. J. Beard.

12th. Necessary for Thorough Organization—W. H. Overholt.

All members of the order are cordially invited to attend our sessions.

C. W. ESKRIDGE, D. W. P.
J. C. LOURY Jr., D. S.

A False Christ.

The little town of Rockford, Ill., is the seat of a man who pretends to be Christ returned to the earth.

He has auburn hair and beard and taking advantage of a resemblance to the conventional pictures of Jesus he declares that though his body is new and does not show the wounds into which doubting Thomas thrust his fingers, his countenance is the same. His life, outside of his blasphemous claim to divinity, is said to be blameless and his calm suavity of manner coupled with more than ordinary intelligence gives him a marvelous influence over his followers. His claim was expressed to a correspondent of the New York, Examiner as follows:

"I am the Christ. I am the perfect man. I am God. I possess all of the divine attributes, and am sinless. This is my second advent on earth, and the time is not far off when I shall make such manifestations of my divinity and power as will startle the world, and bring beleivers to me by the thousand and tens of thousands. I have unlimited power. I do not this time often work miracles, for I wish now to convert the world to truth without intervention of the supernatural, but I can work them, and have done so for those who believe. (His followers testify that he works miracles.) I shall be here many years, but I am only incarnate this body is material and must perish. When it becomes corrupt in death I shall enter another body and still live on earth." (Here is the hook for a successor to hang his claim upon.) "Many things in the gospel about my crucifixion and my former life on earth are inaccurate, and I am now writing a new version of the New Testament that will be correct."

This all came about through the holiness craze. Fifteen years ago Mrs. Dora Helen Fletcher Beekman, the wife of a Congregational minister in northern Illinois professed perfection and soon announced that she had the spirit of Christ as no other mortal ever had it. She had a considerable following in Illinois, Michigan Minnesota and Missouri. Among the converts was George Jacob Schweinfurth a young unmarried Methodist minister who now claims divinity.

"When Mrs. Bedkman died in 1883 she promised her followers that she would rise from the dead in three days. They waited seven days with unwavering faith and then Mr. Beekman, who had never been humbugged, took the responsibility of burying the corpse which had already become offensive.

Then Schweinfurth came forward. He claimed to have had a vision "through the windows of Dora Beekman's soul," and she had revealed to him that he was Christ, the Holy one. "My spirit passes into thee," she said to him as she left the world, "and thus transforms the whole being. Go forth pure and sinless, the only son of God spiritually begotten of me. Thou shalt bring all nations to worship thee."

The Beekmanities accepted his story, and their numbers increased. He told them that through a gradual transformation of his body he was to become Christ, physicaly as well as spiritually. Not long ago he assembled his followers in Chicago and told them that the transformation was complete and that he was now the Christ.

Schweinfurth's following is remarkable. Already the sect has branches in Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Leavenworth; Louisville, Cincinnati and a number of small towns. His followers are so overcome with this infatuation that they hold their property subject to their idol, and it is stated that not less than $50,000 worth of property around Rockford and $100,000 in Chicago has been deeded to him. An old man named Spencer Weldon has given Schweinfurth a magnificent farm of 800 acres, four miles south of Rockford, and there the pretender lives in princely style. He has put $20,000 worth of improvements on the place and lives in a large, elegantly furnished mansion, surrounded with beautiful lawns, drives, lowers and all the appointments of luxury. His dress is modern, and his clothing is stylish and elegant, and his deportment is that of a gentleman. His language is a careful imitation of Christ's, and he is said to be calm, quiet and polite, with no evidence of insanity in his actions.

His mansion they call heaven, and here all new converts are expected to go and receive instructions with the personal influence of the man they worship. Some of these pilgrims Schweinfurth sends into a field of labor, others to their homes, and on others especially favored he confers the degree of "angel," and takes them into his household. About sixty-five of these angels—fifty women and fifteen men—now live in the mansion with their leader. This state of affairs aroused suspicion, and some Chicago gentlemen, whose families had been broken up by the conversion of their wives and daughters, sent a female member of a Chicago Methodist church to investigate the matter. She was to enter the mansion, ingratiate herself in the pretender's favor, and, if possible, discover grounds for a criminal prosecution. The woman went and was converted, returning to Chicago a zealous believer.

The pretender has taken a remarkable hold upon people of apparent intelligence among them several ministers. A former Congregational minister, who is an alumnus of Yale and Andover, is pastor of the Chicago branch, and the leading spirit in Kansas city is the daughter of a Presbyterian minister. The members are very zealous and bold in proselyting, going into homes, prayer meetings and ministers' meetings where they watch their opportunity to rise up and announce the second coming of Christ. In one case they had to be ejected from a meeting by force.

This recalls the beginning of Mormonism which had its birth in the same region. In some respects Schweinfurth appears to be the superior of Joseph Smith, and his influence over his followers, according to accounts, is not less remarkable.

Such a spectacle in this age of schools shows that education does not relieve the world of fanaticism. This sect grew up in a region of schools, and counts among its adherents many persons of education and apparent intelligence. So far no charge of immoral conduct has been lodged against them, and the "angels" in Schweinfurth's "heaven," so far as the world knows, have done nothing to prove that they are imps. About the only thing that seems to do justice to the case is the remark of Puck in the Midsummer Night's Dream, "What fools these mortals be."

Fiduciary Notice.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

C. L. Austin Adm'r of Florence M. Austin dec'd.

S. B. Hannah Ex'or of Barbora A. Gum.

L. M. McCLINTIC. Com'r of Accts.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

The mail hack leaves Frankford for Huntersville, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, and from Huntersville for Frankford every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings. Charges reasonable.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
[illegible]
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
[illegible] Green Bank W. Va.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 3 50	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 4 1889.

Two Great Lawyers.

The Boston Advertiser tells the following story of the late Peleg Chandler and Ben Butler:

Butler or one of his clients had purchased a piece of real estate, in which a woman claimed a right to a portion of the rentals. A tenant paid his rent to her and Butler could not get possession. The case was quite a celebrated one. Choate had been in it and several of the distinguished lawyers of the day. Yet still Butler had the best of it, and the utmost that the opposing lawyers had been able to do was to [illegible] postponements from time to time upon various pretexts. At [illegible] the case was to come up again. The defendant's lawyers had given it up, and as a last resort the came to young Chandler. He appeared in the defense. General Butler's browbeaten methods in court are as well known as the man himself. He tried them on the young man. But for once he met his match. Those who remember the occasion, still roar with laughter at the remembrance of Chandler's [illegible] stories of the cook-eyed man," which he poured, one after after another, relentlessly upon Butler's devoted head, and as the slang phrase of the present day is, fairly wiped the floor with him. Judge, bar, jury and spectators fell into a tumultuous uproar of laughter, which no officer even attempted to quell. At the close of his anecdotes Mr. Chandler gravely, although his talk had not so much as touched the case asked for a continuance [illegible].

The next day the tenant of Mr. Chandler's client, an apothecary by profession, called upon the lawyer [illegible] he should do in the right to reject [illegible]

Gubernatorial Contest.

GRAFTON, W. Va., June 26th.—Including the alleged returns from Kanawha county, General Nathan Goff had a majority over Judge A. B. Fleming of 110 votes in the November election. In the contest by

Mr. Chandler reached for a pen and wrote:

"If Benjamin F. Butler attempts to oust you from the premises occupied by you, my advice is to shoot him through the head."

The next day Mr. Butler appeared with a posse, prepared to eject the apothecary. The latter showed him his instructions.

"Pooh!" said Mr. Butler throwing down the paper. "If you should shoot me you would hang."

"That is no affair of mine," returned the apothecary. "The advice of my counsel is to shoot you if you molest me, and I shall do it," he continued, with blood in his eye, as he produced a big seven-shooter.

"D——d if I don't believe you would be fool enough to shoot me," said Butler as he turned and left the shop.

He at once called upon Mr. Chandler and effected a settlement of the long contested case, granting to the woman a share in the rents which she claimed.

A Fable For Young Wives.

Men are naturally less amiable and more intractable than women. The first point, therefore, to secure a married woman's happiness after the holidays of the honeymoon are over, is that she should study carefully the peculiarities of her husband's temper. It is in the power of a wise and good woman to make a lamb of the greatest bear that ever wore whiskers; while by foolish treatment the process may be reversed, and a generous bearded creature, with all the capabilities of a lion, may end in being a bear or a wolf. A wife must tread oh her husband's temper first as cautiously as a prudent boy does upon recently formed ice. Only when she has learned where the slippery humor of her husband will bear, and where it will break, can she perform with safety those graceful evolutions by which a devoted wife achieves greater triumphs than ever Bonaparte did by his artillery. Wise old Plutarch, descenting on the topic, very appropriately brings in the old fable of the traveler, whom Boreas, with his obstreperous blasts tried to disrobe of his good great coat; but the result was quite otherwise; the more violently Bureas puffed his cheeks, the more closely the man wrapped his coat about him. But what Boreas could not achieve with all his strength, the sum did with a few slight touches of his genial beams. The man was so overcome by the softening influence that he flung both cloak and tunic away. So left no woman foolishly attempt to gain from her husband in a raugh way what she can surely achieve by gentleness.—Cassell's Magazine.

A Man With a Nervous Shock.

Speaking of the published story that he paid a lawyer $7,000 as a salve for a nervous shock that the lawyer had received, Chauncey M. Depew said the other day:

"It was a curious case, I received a letter from a lawyer saying he had been completely upset by a shock he received on one of our trains, owing to a sudden stoppage.

He enclosed in his letter the certificates of four reputable physicians bearing out his statement. A friend of mine, who was a neighbor of the lawyer, came to me and told me it would be a great injustice if I didn't settle the claim. 'The man is completely gone,' he said, 'stays away from his office, can't do any work, wanders around the house scaring his wife into fits, and is unfit for anything.'

"I went down and saw him. 'Where were you before you took this trip?' I asked him.

"'Rusticating at my country seat,' he replied.

"'Have any shock or undue exercise there?'

"'No; everything was supremely quiet.'

"Then he told me he had brought down a basket of eggs on the train.

"'Well how about the eggs; were they broken?'

"'Oh,no,' he said; they remained on the seat beside me, and not one was cracked.'

"'And yet you got a nervous shock?'

"'Yes.'

"Well, I sent him the company's check for $7,000, as the doctors and he were sure he could never get around to business again. You'd be surprised, though, to see how that check acted. It was evidently just the medicine he stood in need of, for he's all right now and practicing law the same as ever."

Fanny—The new garters which you bought yesterday are not pretty at all.

Emma—What difference does it make? Nobody sees them.

Ah, but it may rain.

Mistakes We Make.

Labor when you are not in a fit condition to do so.

To conclude that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

To take off proper clothing out of season because you become heated.

To think the more a person eats the healthier and stronger he will become.

To imagine that if some work or exercise is good, violent or prolonged exercise is better.

To think any nostrum or patent medicine is a specific for all the diseases the flesh is heir to.

To go to bed late at night and rise at daybreak, and imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

To believe that children can do as much work as grown people, and that more hours study the more they learn.

To eat as if you had only a minute to finish the meal in, or to eat without an appetite, or continue after it has been satisfied, merely to satisfy the taste.

"Now, children, said the teacher, "what do you call the meal that you eat in the morning?" "Oat meal!" promptly replied a member of the class.

Little Boy—"Mamma, are you really going to marry an Italian Count?" Pretty Widow—"Yes, my pet." Little Boy (delightedly)—"O, then I can have the monkey to play with, can't I?"—Burlington Free Press.

First Bachelor—"Where shall we go this afternoon—to the matinee, the circus or what?" Second Bachelor—"What sort of hats are the ladies wearing now?" First Bachelor—"Taller than ever." Second Bachelor—"Well let's go to a balloon ascension."

A stout woman in a railway-train sits down on the silk hat of a fellow-passenger.

"I say, madam, you really should be a little more careful how you throw yourself about," exclaimed the owner, indignantly.

"Oh, beg pardon, sir. I thought it was—my husband's."

Einstein (to his partner)—Isaacs you vas oud late lasd night, I zee. Dot must stop, Isaacs; no more drinkin' dis mont'. You hear me, Isaacs!

Isaacs—I don'd drink in peesiness hours.

Einstein—Dot make no differ. You drink ad night, ant effery mornings your hants tremble so you gan't show a gustomer any of dose sheap pants mitout shakin' de buddons off.

The hot water cure is highly spoken of. A young man was completely cured of an attachment for a young lady by one kettleful, which the old man let him have.

Canada has awakened to the importance of excluding American thieves from her territory by denying them an asylum. The Canadian Parliament has enacted very sweeping laws, including almost every species of crime, when it is proved, that all such offenders will be delivered up to the authorities where their offences are committed. Of course it is not retroactive, but in all future cases, after the legislation has been approved by the home government, the offender will be delivered up, on legal authority. It is thought the law will be in operation in about two months.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 11, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 51.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast,
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyors Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

AN INCIDENT.

As down the vale at Johnstown,
The raging waters spead,
Carrying wreck and ruin
Upon their bosom red,
A mother in an attic,
With seven children dear,
Looked out in vain for succor
From death which was so near.

None came and one sweet infant
She gave unto the flood,
She saw it shortly parish
From where she helpless stood,
Another and another
Went down that ragging Styx,
Till of her darling seven
Death had devoured six.

In agony the last one
She lifted to put out;
The child with trembling accents,
Between his faith and doubt.
This question asked "Dear mother,
You've always told me how
God cares for me at all times;
Will He care for me now?"

Unto the rushing torrent
Him, too, the mother gave,
With prayers to the Almighty
This last dear one to save -
Around the throne in Glory,
Are standing all the seven,
Upon the flood they floated
Strait through the Gates of Heaven.

The Story of a Picture.

BY H. E. CLAMP.

It is about 10 o'clock p. m., the hour wheun life in its lightest and most frivolous form is on parade in the upper part of the city's great artery of traffic—Broadway

Madison square is brilliant with a thousand lights; the great hotels are thronged with idle groups, while up and down the sidewalks continues the steady stream of foot passengers which will not diminish much before midnight. The crowd upon the pavements and in the hotels is frequently augmented for a few minutes by persons leaving the theatres in the vicinity during the entr'acte for an airing, refreshments or cigars.

The crowd on promenade is a motley one, composed for the most part of well-dressed men and women, and from the animated tones and gestures, the gay jests and light laughter, distinguishable above the steady tramp of feet, the rattling of cab wheels and the jingling of car bells, one might think that care rested but lightly upon the shoulders of most who are here.

Among the crowd of busy talkers, thoughtless idlers and devotees of pleasure, walking at a leisurely pace and with a thoughtful air, comes a man whose genius has already made his name a household word in many lands. It is Geoffrey Vail, the artist. The handsome, scholarly face, with its delicate whitecomplexion, its large, soft black eyes and sweeping black mustache which fringes his sensitive mouth, his graceful carriage and the plain but faultless style of his attire, stamps him easily as a man of superior type even to those who do not recognize in the lone individual the well-known figure of metropolitan life.

Above the jargon of sounds in the streets rise occasionally from a side street the tones of a piano organ, accompanied by the voice of a person singing some Italian songs. The artist pauses for a moment to listen to the unusually pathetic ring of this voice, and as he approaches it is struck by the appearance of the singer. It is a young girl, about sixteen years of age, with a Madonna-like face touched with a look of most exquisite sorrow. Is it possible that the coarse looking Italian yonder can have any connection with this lovely child? It is not of this the artist thinks as he lingers, [illegible] into the old man's face. It is of how that lovely face would look on canvas!

Suddenly the girl sees his ardent gaze and her eyes droop to the ground, while a color like the first blush of sunrise mantles her cheek. The artist is yet more charmed, although he diverts his gaze, still following the couple from street to street.

Finally the organ is closed up and the two performers prepare to go home. Geoffrey Vail approaches the Italian as he is about to go and touches him upon the shoulder.

"Is it your daughter?" he asks, pointing to the girl.

The man nods his head.

"I am an artist and would like to paint her picture," said Geoffrey.

The man shook his head in disapproval.

"If you will allow her to come to my studio every day for a month I will pay you liberally."

"How much?" asked the man, gruffly.

"One hundred dollars," answered the artist after a moment's reflection.

"She would earn me more than that with the organ."

"Then we will say two hundred."

The man's greed was satisfied, and he consented to the terms.

"When shall she commence?"

"To-morrow, if it suits you," said the artist.

"Very well," answered the man, and Geoffrey handed him his card.

Geoffrey turned homewards, pleased with his discovery. For a long time he had meditated painting a series of pictures representing the emotions. "Here is my 'Angel of Sorrow' idealzed already," he said to himself as he pursued his way through the still crowded thoroughfare home.

The pretty Italian found Geoffrey Vail in his studio awaiting her visit on the following day.

The strong light in the studio, where the curtains were purposely drawn back, revealed to the artist that he had not been deceived with regard to her appearance. The face was delicate, refined and indescribably sad.

She had evidently put on her best clothes—a dress of some soft black stuff and a shawl of the same sable hue wrapped round her head and shoulders.

"You have posed as a model before?" asken Geoffrey, noting the artistic effort of this simple costume.

"What is your name?" asked the artist.

"Consuelo."

"Consuelo," repeated the artist, "and you look inconsolable."

The girl did not understand his remark, but her large dark eyes were turned upon him wonderingly.

"Well, Consuelo, we must make the best of our time," said the artist "Come, I will arrange you as I wish yov to sit," and he placed a chair for her, arranging with some care her attitude and drapery.

"You do not feel timid, do you?" asked Geoffrey, kindly.

"Oh, no," answered the girl, looking at him with wonder again. It was inconceivable to her that she should feel timid in his presence.

The grave, gentle face of the artist had won her confidence completely. Accustomed to rough looks and sometimes blows, the child seemed in the atmosphere of this elegant studio to breathe the air of paradise.

But the look of sorrow did not leave her face; it was too deeply imprinted there.

Geoffrey was soon busy with his pencil. An artist, his soul was in his art. To him the animate beauty was only a stepping stone to the inanimate, everything lovely created that it might be copied on the canvas and immortalized.

Consuelo's sitting was not a long one. He thougnt it best not to tire her too much the first day, and at the end of the third hour rose from his easel, and thanking her, dismissed her till the morrow.

"You will come again, won't you?" said Geoffrey.

The girl's look answered him.

For the first time that she could remember Consuelo went to her miserable home happy. A new vista had been opened to her. She had caught a glimpse of another world with which she seemed to feel some strange kinship.

How gladly those days glided by while the Angel of Sorrow, half real and half the creation of the artist's superb fancy, grew upon the canvas!

The last sitting came. Artist and model were to part.

Geoffrey, who had grown familiar with the child, took her hand in his own when he bade her adieu. Suddenly Consuelo burst into tears.

The artist himself felt unexpectly and strangely moved. Even to him the parting seemed painful. Why? Blind egotist! unknown to himself he had learned to love. Only at this crisis did the truth dimly dawn upon him. But why these tears of hers? Strange infatuation! Then the child must love him also.

She had turned away to weep.

"Consuelo," he said gravely, "come here."

Consuelo came at his bidding.

"Look at me straight in the face."

"I cannot," she sobbed.

"Consuelo, why do you weep?"

The face could be doubted no longer except by the blind.

Geoffrey folded her tenderly in his arms, unresisted. The lovely head rested upon his bosom. His lips were pressed to the blushing cheek.

"Consuelo, would you like to stay here always—to be my wife?" he said rather nervously, half frightened himself.

The girl looked at him and seemed to make some sudden resolve.

Withdrawing herself from his embrace she wiped her eyes, and then without another word or look fled from the studio.

"She is frightened, but I must follow her," said the artist. How soon she had become infinitely precious to him! He hastened to the door, but no trace of Consuelo could be seen. He paused to reflect. He did not know even her address. The Italian had already called for his money. How should he find her? What strange impulse had caused her to turn and fly so suddenly. It was inexplicable, but he must find a key to the mystery. How? Would she not return to her old avocation, accompanying the organ? If he searched the streets for a few days he would soon meet her again.

But days, weeks and months rolled by, and no trace of Consuelo or the Italian rewarded his anxious search.

So his passion died away into a vague and hopeless regret. Nothing remained of Consuelo but the blending of her beauty with his own dreams in the picture. So he devoted himself with renewed ardor to his favorite pursuits. The "Angel of Sorrow" was completed; extravagant offers were made for it, but the picture was not for sale. Money could not buy it.

It was hung in the artist's own studio—his greatest achievement—and many wondered as they gazed upon the sorrowful face whence came the inspiration for it.

Geoffrey Vail received many visitors at his studio. Wealthy patrons and personal friends brought others often to see the great artist's works, often sadly interrupting him when he wished to be alone, but always courteously received.

Five years had gone by since his brief love dream had had its sudden birth and tragic finale.

His gentle face had grown gentler, and perhaps a tinge of sadness had crept in between the handsome lines; but he had little to complain of so far as success was concerned.

He is busy in his studio when some callers are announced. They are foreigners, evidently, from their names. Geoffrey glances carelessly at the card, and, not recognizing the names, is about to excuse himself, but suddenly changes his mind.

His visitors are shown into the studio.

A gentleman, refined and distinguished in appearance, and a lady some year his junior. A white veil partly secludes the lady's face.

Geoffrey bows politely, and advances to meet them as they are announced. The gentleman, speaking in French, apologized for their intrusion and asks permission to look at some of the artist's work, and the lady, who has observed the artist's favorite picture, leads her companion towards it. After viewing it for some minutes and exchanging remarks of admiration in their own tongue, the gentleman, turning to Geoffrey, asks him if the picture can be purchased.

"On no consideration," replied the artist. "It is reserved at a price which even the most extravagant would never care to go to."

"Which means that you do not wish to sell it," replied his visitor.

The artist bowed in acquiescence.

"And did you ever see a face which suggested such beauty?" asked his visitor, adding "Pardon me, but I have a purpose in inquiring."

"I have seen one," replied the artist, "with which this creation of mine could but feebly compare."

As he said this his eye caught the face of the lady who had removed her veil.

"Consuelo!" cried the artist, forgetting his visitors for a moment."

But they were smiling at him pleasantly.

"Pardon me," he said. "Some fancied resemblance compelled me to utter that name."

The lady approached nearer to him. "Do you not remember me, then?' she said, softly.

The artist looked puzzled and perplexed.

"Surely it is Consuelo; but, pardon me, you have changed your name.' And he glanced significantly at her companion. "Ah! and you are no more the Angel of Sorrow; you might now pose for the Angel of Joy."

Consuelo seemed to enjoy his perplexity. "And have not you found a true Consuelo also?" she asked laughingly.

The artist shook his head sadly.

"Papa, this is Mr. Vail," said Consuelo, turning to her companion, who offered his hand to Geoffrey with a pleasant smile.

"You are wondering what it all means," said Consuelo, also smiling, "but it is a long story; papa will tell you while I look at some pictures round the studio, and if you wish to repeat the question you asked so long ago repeat it to him."

The story was briefly told.

Consuelo had been kidnaped [illegible]

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 11, 1889.

President Harrison appointed Frederick Douglas to be minister to Hayti.

Hon. Wm. Walter Phelps, of New Jersey, has been appointed Minister to Germany.

About thirty persons were killed by a wreck on the Norfolk and Western Railroad, July, 2nd.

The Johnstown Coroner's jury finds that the South Fork Dam was the cause of the disaster, and that the club owning the dam is responsible for the bad condition of that structure.

The Philadelphia Press says Wanamaker did not buy his Cabinet seat. Of course not. He was made a present of it in return for his present of $400,000 to the Republican blocks-of-five fund. Some blunt people call it a purchase, however.

The Green Stamp must Go.

The specifications just issued by the Postmaster General for the guidance of bidders under the next contract for postage stamps, advertised for under date of June 7, 1889, provides for bids for two series of stamps of different sizes—one of them being the size now in use, the other about one third smaller.

If the stamps of the larger size should be determined on when the bids are in, the colors will be as follows: One cent, ultramarine blue; two-cent, metalic red; three-cent, vermillion; four cent, milori green; five-cent, chocolate; six-cent, dark red; ten cent, light brown; fifteen-cent, orange; thirty cent, black; ninety cent, carmine. If stamps of the smaller size should be preferred, the colors will be as follows: One-cent, ultramarine blue; two-cent, carmine; three cent, royal purple; four cent, chocolate; five cent, light brown; six cent, vermillion; ten cent, milori green; fifteen cent, steel blue; thirty cent, black; ninety cent, orange. Under one form of bid the contractor will be allowed extra compensation for any change from the present designs, and in another form of bid changes may be made at the will of the Postmaster General, without extra compensation. From the above it will be seen that the color of the two-cent stamp will be changed to either carmine or metallic red. In speaking of the proposed changes, Postmaster General Wanamaker said he believed the smaller sized stamp would be quite as useful and popular as the larger size now in use, and by reducing the size of the stamp a material saving would be affected, which could be profitably expended in a better and in every way more desirable color. The metallic red proposed under one form of bid was the color of the two-cent stamp which immediately preceded the green two-cent stamp now in use. No changes in design have been determined upon.

Our tariff wall is so high that it is toppling over, yet it is not keeping out the English. It is rather aiding them, enfeebling America, to come in and possesses us, body and soul. Already the English own hundreds of thousands of acres of our land, and the distilleries and breweries of the United States are largely owned and controlled by English capitalists. Now there is a scheme on foot in London to control the American dry goods trade. A cablegram says:

"It has just leaked out here that a company or syndicate is being formed in London for the purpose of buying up the principal dry goods interests in the chief American cities. Full details are not yet obtainable, and will not be probably until the organization of the company is more nearly perfected.

From all that could be ascertained, the intention is to get control of the dry goods trade in America in a manner something similar to that in which the brewing business is being brought tributary to English capitalists. As is well known, the amount of money in England seeking investment in enterprises that promise even a small return that is reasonably sure is enormous. It could not be learned certainly whether the company will be organized on the close corporation plan or whether stock subscription books will be opened. In either event, it is reported, the amount of money put into the enterprise will be not less than £10,000,000.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Mr. Harrison and nearly every prominent member of his administration, greatly to the chagrin of the office seekers, celebrated the "Glorious Fourth," by taking a short vacation. The President and Secretaries Noble and Tracy went to Woodsteck, Conn. and are not expected to return before Monday; Secretary Blaine went to Bar Harbor and the date of his return is doubtless; Secretary Proctor went to Vermont and Postmaster General Wanamaker to Philadelphia.

The republican leaders seem to have quite a scare on about the coming elections in the four new states. Senators Allison, Chandler, and Cullom have spent the week in consultation with the "big guns" of their party in figuring out a programme that would give them all the members of the House as well as the Senators from those states. They are to remain here until next week so as to get Senator Quay's opinion. Democrats who are well informed believe that the party is almost certain to carry Montana, and that it has a good fighting chance for one of the Dakota's.

The republicans have, it is said, decided upon an extra session of Congress to be called about November first. They wanted it October instead of November, but owing to their very slim majority in the House they concluded to take no chances, but to wait for reinforcements from the new states.

Before leaving Washington the President made a large batch of appointments, mostly diplomatic and consular. One of them Eugene Schuyler, of New York to be Consul-general at Cairo, Egypt—has caused a great deal of talk, and when the Senate meets it will cause much more, and it would not be at all surprising if his nomination should be rejected. Mr. Schuler is a warm friend of Secretary Blaine by whom he was selected to be First Assistant Secretary of State in the early days of the administration, but when his name went to the Senate, then in session, it was soon apparent to the friends of the administration that it would be rejected if voted upon. As soon as Mr. Harrison was made acquainted with the state of affairs he withdrew the nomination, at the cabled request of Schuyler who was in Europe, where he spends the greater portion of his time, but his friends availed themselves of the cable to keep him posted. The enmity to Schuyler is on account of a book he published some years ago called "American Diplomacy" in which he ridiculed the Senate to such an extent as to gain him the ill will of many Senators.

The White House looks almost deserted, Mrs. Harrison, her farther and the McKee children having gone to Deer Park, Maryland, and the office seekers to the Lord only knows where.

Sir Julian Paunceforte the British Minister was asked to accompany the Presidential party to the Fourth of July celebration at Woodstock, Connecticut, and a rumor was generally circulated that he was going, but as a matter of fact he declined the invitation. He didn't think it just the proper sort of an entertainment for a Britisher.

That big discharge of democrats that was expected to take place at the Government Printing office July, 1, did not materialize. Public Printer Palmer seems to have adopted Mr. Harrison's tactics, and is taking his own time in making changes.

Secretory Noble may or may not have been against Pension Commissioner Tanner of allowing favoritism to be shown in the taking up of applications for pensions. At any rate he has sent the commissioner the following:—"Attention is required to the following regulations applicable to the bureau of pensions: "Order No. 108, January 23, 1885—Owing to the presure brought to bear from all quarters to take cases out of their regular order, and as at this late date poverty and hardship from further delay can be alleged of almost every applicant alike, therefore cases will be taken out of their order only when such causes therefore is shown to the Commissioner in writing as would satisfy the other worthy claiments whose claims precede it should they know the facts, that such action is proper. Hereafter no case will be advanced that is not clearly, within this rule. It is hereby further ordered that this rule be extended so as to embrace cases only where the applicant is in very great distitution or at the point of death. This regulation will not only be strictly enforced but attorneys, agents or others persisting in applications contrary to its language and spirit will be disbarred from practice before the department. You will have this made public."

A friend of Secretary Blaine tells me that there would be no more consular appointments made before fall. If this is true there is disappointment in store for lots of folks.

A case of sporadic cholera has appeared in New York.

MASONIC NOTICE

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Mess. Whiting and Denning were in town Tuesday.

—Our subscription list is increasing.

—Jno. Driscol, wife and child were in the city Tuesday.

—Whiting & Denning were in town Tuesday.

—R. B. Kerr, of Gillaspie was attending County Court Tuesday.

—J. W. Jordan of Academy called to see us Tuesday.

—J. S. Hartzell, of Addison, Pa., was in town Sunday.

—S. L. Gibson, of Frost was in our town Monday.

—Wise Herold, of Frost was in town last week.

Go to John Warts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

—G. C. Cooper was in to see us Tuesday. Read his New ad. of Monuments.

—Jno. W. Feltner, of Webster Depot, Taylor Co., was in Huntersville Monday.

—Wheat harvest is about over and grass cutting will soon be commenced.

—Dan'l O'Connell, wife and little son were in town the first of the week.

—There were so many ladies in to see us last week, that, even our little devil got excited.

John Warts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9 12t

—The newly married couple Mr. Samuel J. Gay and bride, Miss Lillie Friel and Mr. William Gay made us a pleasant call last week.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Warts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9-12

—Mr. Geo. Daubrack and wife, Miss Minnie Kellison and Mr. W. Rider, of Poplar Flats were in to see the wonders of a print shop last week.

—If you want a Lock Lever hay and grain rake or any repairs
Call on
B. P. McGLAUGHLIN agent
Huntersvilee W. Va.

PRUNELLA.

—We return thanks to Mr. C. R. Mathews, of New Helena, Neb., for papers from that place, and also for subscription to THE TIMES.

—Married, at Hotel by Wagner, on Thursday evening, July 4th by Rev. M. M. Everly, Mr. Alex W. Butterbaugh to Miss Mary Alderman. THE TIMES wishes them a long, happy and useful life.

—On Saturday, July 13th, 1889, at the church at Clover Lick, an entertainment will be given to complete and furnish the same, consisting of addresses, vocal and instrumental music, dinner and other refreshments of ice cream cake and lemade will be served. The public are cordially invited to co-operate and make it a success.

—Among the many persons attending Court were Messrs. W. B. Cochell, H. L. Holt and S. H. Clark, of Academy; Dr. M. Wallace, C. E. Beard and Sheriff McNeel, of Mill Point; Geo. P. Moore and Geo. Baxter, of Edray; Uriah Hevener, Dr. Mossman, Maj. Arbogast and Geo. Siple of Green Bank; Wm. McKittric, of Buckeye; L. W. Herold, of Frost; Andrew McGlaugh lin and Lem Gay, of Marlinton.

—A young man a graduate of Yale College, when asked by a farmer where Prof. Taylor could be found, replied: "crucify the quadrangle ascend the grades, make a dextral vert and you will find him perambulating his domicile or prospecting his renestrum." The farmer stood dumbfounded only remembering the last word, "fenestrum" asked, what does that mean? "It is the aperture through which the concave of the dome is illuminated, if you can't comprehend that I will silt you through immensity where it will require omniscience to find you and omnipotence to put you together again." The farmer walking off replied, "that man is wormy or has lately gone crazy."—Ex.

Died.

It is sad for us to have to note the death of one of our brothers of the editorial staff, Mr. Jno. Straughn of the Highland Recorder We haven't learned the exact date of his death or the cause. Mr. Straughn had just lately assumed control of the Recorder, and was giving Highland the best paper they have ever had, so says many of its readers. He was about 45 years of age a good writer and an excellent printer, and will be sorely missed by those of Highland who appreciate a good paper.

Lost.

The daughter of Mr. Amos Dilley about 15 years of age living about 7 miles from this place, started to Sunday school. a short distance from her home, last Sunday morning; and though deligent seach has been made nothing has been heard of her since. The parents are almost distracted with grief.

LATER: As we go to press we learn she was found.

A Big Sale.

Mr. J. W. Hevener of Buckhannon, sold for Uriah Hevener of Green Bank 10,231 acres of land on the waters of Greenbrier river to Messrs. McCurty, Hunter and others of Jefferson co., Pa., for the sum of $30,000.

A Note by the Way.

Eleven or twelve miles north west of Marlin's Bottom, on Laurel run lives Mr. A. N. Taylor, the frontier resident of Pocahontas Co. Beyond him it is a day's journey to the nearest neighbor, a Mr. Bachman, whose home is unaccessible to all conveyances even bob-sleds except in winter, when the streams are freezing.

The writer on July 3rd, visited this frontier home, where he found Mr. Taylor and his good lady in the best of spirits. He is a grandson of the late Frederick Burr, near Huntersville, who was with Napoleon at Waterloo.

On a cross beam hung the Winchester rifle, that had brought down two hundred deer, and over the entrance was the fishing tackle that has landed speckled beauties too numerous to mention.

Though it rained in torrents, all seemed to take it in good nature.

About two o'clock the marriage of Mr. Samuel J. Gay and Miss Oena Taylor, was celebrated, the vows being pronounced by Wm. T. Price. The young bride richly endowed with rare personal attraction in her attire of snowy whiteness made a fine appearance.

The ladies waiting upon her were Misses Maud Taylor, Cary Combs, Susie Simmons and Lillie Friel, who were attended by the following gentlemen in the order named, Messrs. W. M. Beard, Auburn Friel, William Taylor and William Gay.

A very fine dinner was enjoyed by at least one hundred persons and this event will be long remembered as one of the most notable of social affairs occuring in that vicinity.

W. T. F.

HURRAH FOR SULLIVAN.

KILRAIN KNOCKED OUT.

The following is the official bulletin of the Western Union telegraph.

SULIVAN vs. KILRAIN

Kilrain knocked out after 72 rounds; time, 3 hours and 17 minutes. Fight took place at Richburg, Miss.

PREACHING: Rev. M. M. Everly, will hold his fourth and last Quarterly Conference at Swago, the 3rd Saturday and Sunday in July. Conference will convene at 2 o'clock, p. m., on Saturday. Preaching Saturday night, and Sunday morning at 11 a. m., and again at 3:30, p. m. Let there be a full representation from each appointment.

Dunmore Doings.

The glorious 4th is over and we never lost a man. There was a large crowd out, considering the rainy day.

The crowd that went to Cheat Bridge to celebrate the 4th, came back all safe. They had quite a nice time playing button &c.

Auctioneer C. B. Swecker starts to-day to attend the Hutton and Winchester sale at Huttonsville. This will be the largest sale ever in Randolph Co. Several parties will go from this section.

Capt. Smith has returned, and work will be commenced this week at the lumber camp.—William J. Moore and family have arrived here from Johnstown, Pa. Mr. Moore was here time of the flood. He says Johnstown doesn't look like she did two months ago. He spent Friday week in Johnstown, and saw them unearth two bodies.

Some of our farmers have begun cutting wheat

There will be preaching at Baxter Church on Sunday the 15th, at 2, p. m. by Rev. Jasper Sharp.

There will be singing at Cross Roads school-house, Sunday, the 14th, at 2, p. m.

Two weddings last week, Mr. Clark Gum, of Highland Co., to Miss Annie J. Sheets of this county and Mr. Alex Butterbaugh, of Pa., to Miss Mary Alderman, of this county.

W. H. Cackley and wife are off on a business trip to Ronceverte,

We understand that S. L. Jackson and bride will be up this week from Ronceverte. Mr. Jackson son was married in Washington city by the same minister who married Grover Cleveland.

TOM SAWYER.

Thousands Starving.

CHICAGO, July 7.—There are no less than 25,000 people in the mining district of Braidwood and Coal City who are dependent on charity. The extreme poverty to which these people are reduced is proved by an incident which happened yesterday. A horse belonging to one of the striking miners broke its leg and had to be shot. The horse was dragged to the side of the road, and at night many of the starving families had horse flesh for supper. It was the first square meal that many of them had eaten in weeks, and they enjoyed it. The cause of all this poverty is the tyranny of the officials of the Chicago Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Company. The miners were forced to strike by repeated reductions in their wages, and now many families among them are starving.

How many girl graduates of the season have written their commencement essays on the "Coming Man" and how few will find him like his portrait when he comes!

It is thought the Louisiana rice crop will fall 5,000 barrels below the average this year, owing to the recent drought.

Education for Women

It is a pity that when the "higher education of woman" was undertaken nobody had the happy thougt of giving women a better education also. There was no sense in the old theory that the education of women should include no scholarly acquirement; but there is also no sense in the new notion that merely scholarly training constitutes a good education for women, or for men either for that matter. And nothing could be more nonsensical than the assumption on which the higher education of women has been thus far conducted, namely, that men and women should be trained in precisely the same way.

Education is a preparation for life, and in just so far as a woman's life differs from a man's in its circumstances she has different educational needs. Education is good in the degree in which it fits the pupil to discharge well the duties that will probablo fall to his or her lot, and measured by that test the training of our boys is far from good, while that of our girls—those of them at least who receive the "higher education"—is notably bad.

The main duty of a woman is home making, and on her skill in that the comfort, happiness and well-being of all who live in her home depend. The education which does not equip her for that work is a very bad education indeed.

The principal fact of life is that three meals a day are needed by all human beings, and the woman who does not know how to prepare them properly is no more fit to be married than the man who does not know how to earn them. She may have taken honors at Vassar or the Harvard Annex, but she is grossly ignorant and very badly educated, nevertheless.

Bad cooking means bad health. It is an unsanitary condition as much to be guarded against as leaks in the plumbing. And yet the art and science of cookery is utterly neglected in our higher schools for women, and the girls there are taught, by implication at least, that attention to it is beneath the dignity of persons so highly educated as themselves. Thus the training which should fit them for their duties in life tends to unfit them instead.

A false notion on this subject prevails in many homes of the well-to-do class as well as in the higher schools. Woman's work, and especially cooking, is held to be fit only for ignorant servants to do. Nothing could be more false or mischievous. It is, in fact, the most important skilled work that is done by human beings—the work on which every member of the race is daily dependent for health and life as well as for comfort and strength. The woman who makes bread is engaged in chemical work of greater worth and no less dignity than that of the man who makes quantitative analyses of ores.

The first thing a girl should be taught is to respect domestic functions and to regard skill in their performance as a necessary part of her equipment for life—as necessary as her ability to read. After this fundamental need is provided for her intellectual training should be directed with constant reference to the fact that girls grow to be women and not men. It should be remembered that, next to ordering her house well, a woman's chief function is to sweeten and brighten social intercourse, and for that her training should fit her. Facility in the use of one or two modern languages is of much greater advantage to her than the profoundest scholarship in Greek and Latin. A loving familiarity with English literature will do more to make her an entertaining hostess and a pleasing companion than any [illegible] attainments in [illegible] or [illegible]

Two young people of Catlettsburg, Kentucky, were married in fun. Now they are told that it is a binding marriage, and they are repenting at leisure. The bride is the daughter of General Greene Clay Smith. The groom is the editor of a Democratic newspaper, and was engaged to be married to another lady. It is understood that proceedings in divorce will be begun at once. Moral—Don't marry unless you mean business.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

C. L. Austin adm'r of Florence M. Austin dec'd.

S. B. Hannah Ex'or of Barbora A. Gum.

L. M. McCLANTIC, Com'r of Accts.

NOTICE.

I will not hereafter sell mill stuff on credit, and all who owe me will please come forward and settle their accounts at once and save further trouble.

Flour $2.50 per 100 lbs and corn 75cts per bu.

GEO. H. McGLAUGHLIN.
Edray.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
URIAH HEVENER,
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
June20 4-w Green Bank W. Va.

Order of Publication

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, on the first day of July, 1889.

R. S. Turk............ Plaintiff.

vs.

Geo. W. McDannald, John A. McDanald, Rebecca A. McDannald, Geo. C. McDannald and E. B. McDanald... Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of the above styled suit is to have a division of 1,[illegible] and 167 acres of land lying on the head waters of Elk river in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, owned jointly by the plaintiff and the Defendants, and until such division is had, to enjoin the defendants and all others from cutting or removing any merchantable timber from the said lands or otherwise to commit waste thereon, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants, Geo. W. McDannald, John A. McDannald, Rebecca A. McDannald, George C. McDannald E. B. McDannald are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One Inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three In.	3 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	8 50	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1 00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.
These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 11, 1889.

[Continued from first page.]

from her house in Italy and shipped to New York. After many years she had been traced and returned to her parents. She had fled from Geoffrey's presence because ashamed of her humble origin and parentage, believing the padrone to be her father, and had been rescued immediately afterwards.

In Italy she had been educated, previously exacting from her father a promise that as soon as her education was completed he would bring her to New York.

Such a story could have but one sequel—a happy marriage. It was assuredly a happy one, and soon after it Geoffrey commenced the twin picture.—N. Y. Mercury.

"Too Many Of Them."

When the First Napoleon was asked why he did not make war against the Chinese, he curtly replied: "Too many of them."

The time is at hand when the bright young American who is making his choice of a profession or a line of business should give the same answer when asked why he does not join the great army of lawyers.

According to David Dudley Field, there are altogether too many lawyers in this country. In 1880 we had 50,000,000 people and 70,000 lawyers, one lawyer to each 715 people. Now, in France, the same year, 40,000,000 people had only 6,000 lawyers, or one to each 6,667 of population.

The point is made that with our disproportionate number of lawyers many members of the profession naturally drift into the practice of stirring up speculative law-suits. In this way we are all the time swelling our volume of litigation. Decisions increase, the reports become more numerous. The successful lawyer is no longer the one who is well grounded in legal principles—he is simply the pains-taking man whose industry and physical strength enable him to hunt through hundreds of reports to find a precedent exactly fitting the case in hand.

This is Mr. Field's view of the present status of the legal profession, and it is not encouraging. Fortunately, in this age the law is not the only attractive field for intellectual young men. The rapid strides of physical science have made it plain that it is honorable and profitable to apply brain work to agricultural and hundreds of other forms of hand-work. The progressive farmer, the skilled mechanic, the successful civil-engineer or architect stand as well to-day, and have as many opportunities of rising in the world, as the most favored lawyers, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred their chances of securing a good living are infinitely better.

Some of our ambitious young men will do well to consider this view of the situation.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Labor World.

Most of the silk mills are crowded.

Chinese boatmen make $10 and $13 per year.

The demand for sailors is greater than the supply.

Locksmiths in London earn from $6 to $10 a week.

A German servant-maid receives from $20 to $70 a year.

A boot and shoe factory is to be built at Cedartown, Ga.

A party of 250 American engineers are traveling in europe.

The Paris cabmen are a powerful body, politically and otherwise.

The prejudice against labor organizations are fast disappearing.

Strikes are almost unheard of in New Hampshire and North Carolina.

Since 1886 three attemps have been made to organize a drug clerk's union.

The bricklayers in Birmingham, England, are earning from $8 to $10 a week.

The use of Cuban hematites for steel-making in the South is being agitated.

The profit sharing idea is gaining ground in some of the large cities of the West.

There are trade unions in China. A skilled workman doesn't make over $4 per month.

Paper mill building is going ahead faster than ever and there is a great rush for machinery.

The National association of Train Dispatchers has just held its annual session at Indianapolis.

During the summer the glass manufacturers will make extensive improvements in their plants.

There is but little trouble in the labor circles just at present outside of the mining and steel industries.

The Day County (Ind.) miners have asked the Governor to issue an appeal to the public for aid for them.

Drivers employed by express companies now get on an average $65 a month; truckmen about 50 a month.

There is great activity at present in the ship-building yards all over England, and new workmen are constantly being taken on.

Seattle, Washington Territory, which recently visited by a disastrous fire, is giving work to all men who want it at $2 a day.

Statisticians estimate that there are over 3,000,000 women in this country who are engaged in work which is not domestic. Of this number 275 are ministers and seventy-five are lawyers.

At a delegate convention of railroad miners of Western Pennsylvania in Pittsburg a committee was appointed to draft resolutions demanding that coal operators discontinue their stores.

Podsnap (to neighbor Bjones)—"My daughter Angie will be home from the conservatory next week. She has completed her musical education."

Bjones—"How delighted we shall be! You will have a houseful of visitors all the time, and Miss Angie's entrancing strains will hold us spellbound. Your charming daughter is a veritable prodigy."

"Bjones (ten minutes afterward, to his wife)—"Don't distribute that cat poison just now, Maria. The Podsnap howler is expected home next week. I'll go to town and see if I can rent a dozen cats for the season. I'm bound to enjoy some rest!"

"Who was that you bowed to on the car?" she asked of her friend, as they stood in a store-door on Woodward avenue.

"That's Katie ———."

"How sweetly she bowed back."

"Yes, we love each other dearly. When her father died last year I was the only friend she had thoughtful enough to count the carriages and tell her there were forty-seven."

Farm and Garden Notes.

Toads are the gardener's friends.

Clover stubble is good chicken pasture.

The cedar bird is a great devourer of cranker worms.

Excitement reduces the milk flow.

Don't let the cows be hurried from pasture.

Insect remedies are of little avail unless applied promptly, with due persistence and care.

A beekeeper says he knows of no other single plant from which the bees gather so much polen as from the box cider.

A quart of oilmeal and bran a day will make a marketable lamb out of a poor one in a month or two, affirms Farm Journal.

A crop of beans will ripen in time to escape the late frost if planted June 20, says W. H. Bull in American Garden; then string beans are assured to September 15.

Unless you have some choice birds from which you wish to breed next year, dispose of all cocks as soon as the breeding season is over. They are only an expense and an annoyance.

Steer clear of leaky roofs, broken windows and drafts generally, and all other condition that generate roup unless you are studying for the veterinary profession and want lots of practice.

Feed your fowls systematically two or three times a day; scatter the food, so they can't eat too fast or without proper exercise. Do not feed more than they will eat up clean, or they will get tired of that kind of feed.

The public taste, it is said, is being steadily educated to demand fresh butter. As a result it each year becomes more difficult to handle held summer stock. The farmer who keeps abreast with the popular taste is most likely to reap the pecuniary benefits arising there from.

One of the sad things connected with the hard times in Persia is the fact that many men with from fifteen to twentyfive wives have had to reduce the number to three or four.

"You wish to marry one of my daughters? The youngest will get 15,000 marks, the second 30,000 and the oldest 45,000." "You don't happen to have one still older?"

Returned traveler: "Mr. Richman could draw his check for a million when I left. How much money has he by this time?" Citizen: "He hasn't any." "Eh! Why—Did he fail?" "No; he died."

Miggs: "I hear a policeman was killed yesterday in the discharge of his duty." Bliggs: "He probably didn't know it was loaded."

Mrs. [illegible]rest—What is your attitude toward Wagner's art, professor. Professor Baldwin—Hands over my ears.

Some men are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have had fathers who relieved them of all responsibility.

Oldmanson—Have a telephone, Biggs? Biggs—No, I am not on speaking terms with the company. Their rates are too high.

The man who was blown thirty feet in the air out in a Pennsylvania town, while repairing a natural gas main, remarked that he had been thrown out of work.

A.—Can you let me have five dollars? I left all my money at home and I haven't a cent with me. B.—Sorry I can't lend you the five dollars, but here is a nickel car fare. Now you can ride home and get your money.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VI. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 18, 1889. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 52.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Wearied

I am weary—so weary;
Tired of the cares and sorrows of life—
Tired of longing for something beyond me—
Tired of bustle and din and strife—
Tired of this striving, all vainly, to win
Something to make our life sweeter and better,
Tired of battling temptation and sin;
Life at its worst is a wearisome fetter.

I am weary—most weary;
Day after day I've toiled in vain;
Toiled and hoped that the night would come quickly,
Bringing me rest for my labor again;
Came the slow night, but my cares never ended;
Always they clustered my hearthstone about,
Came, not alone, but by others attended,
Filling my soul with their darkness and doubt.

I am weary, so weary—
Sitting alone at the close of the day,
Looking out over the meadow lands dreary,
Over and over I softly say,
After the night falls the morn dawneth fairly,
After the storm shall the sun shine again.
Hearts be thou strong, for brave hearts perish rarely
Fight nobly, grandly the battle with men.

EBEN E. REXFORD.

Joe Bardette.

If you had told any or all of the boys on the Chicago and Overland railroad that Engineer Joe Burdette was sentimental or soft, not one of them would have believed you—that is to say, they would have believed nothing of the kind until quite recently, when something occurred about which, gentle reader, you are supposed to know nothing until duly enlighteded by the narrative.

Joe has run a locomotive over the C. & O. ever since the road was built twenty years ago. He now pulls the fastest and most important mail and passenger trains, and his name heads the list on the engineers pay roll. He has always been known and recognized as a skillful mechanic, a faithful, steady and reliable man, with nerves of steel and eyes like an eagle's; he has, from the first, attended dilgently to his duties, seldom lost time on his run—and has always been respectful to his superiors, courteous to his equals and kind to his subordinates.

And yet during all these twenty years, the C. & O. "boys" felt that Joe Bardette had never been really one of themselves, and were constrained to confess that they knew very little about him.

But there was a little romance connected with Engineer Burdette and a good deal of sentiment has woven itself into his life's history.

Before Joe went to the C. & O., he was a promising young knight of the throttle in the service of a railroad company whose line ran eastward from Chicago. He was a very young man—not yet twenty-four—and with all the depth and intensity of a quiet, earnest nature he loved (even more than he loved his profession) a fair, sweet girl. And when pretty Anna Redman showed a preference for, and finally married the handsome but "ne'er-do-well" Dick Pender, Joe Burdette loved her not one whit the less. He was bitterly and sorely disappointed himself, and he was, in a manly way genuinely and honestly sorry for the girl; for he could, not but think that Dick Pender would deteriorate instead of improve. But Joe said never a word to Anna or to Pender or to any one else; only he resolved not to lose sight of the one woman who might have made him supremely happy.

Too soon Joe Burdette's expectations in regard to Dick Pender proved true. A little child, a girl, was born to Anna; but instead of awakening feelings of fatherly and husbandly pride in Pender, the advent of the little one seemed to start the thoughtless and unprincipled young man on a headlong career to the "dogs." It almost broke Joe Burdette's heart (for he had a large, tender heart under his greasy blue blouse) as he perceived that things were going from bad to worse with Penders; and the consciousness that he could not proffer any practical assistance to poor Anna only made it all the harder for him to bear. At last the worst came. The once beautiful and light-hearted girl died, and more's the pity, died of starvation and neglect.

Burdette did not learn the fate of his old love until she had been several days in her grave, and when he set about to discover the shameless father and his luckless babe, both had disappeared—no one knew whither. Joe looked up a shrewd private detective, to whom he took two hundred dollars of his savings, which he thrust into the hands of the professional solver of many social riddles. To the detective Burdette told his story. "Find the babe," said he, "and obtain her father's consent to let me keep her, and I will give you two hundred dollars more."

But neither money or skill were of any avail, and gradually Joe Burdette gave up all hopes of adopting Anna Redman's baby girl.

Six years passed away, and on a pleasant day in summer Burdette, enjoying a 'lay-off,' strolled through the busy streets of the great Western metropolis. As he sauntered along he came upon the entrance to the central police station and prompted by mere curiosity, entered the court-room. The court was at that moment considering the deposition of a little waif, brought in from one of Chicago's bustling highways by a burly police officer. The tiny wanderer was a flaxenhaired girl with huge blue eyes and chubby hands—without hat or shoes and with but one ragged and soiled garment about the little body; so dirty and so neglected—yet wondrously fair and beautiful!

The child was, perhaps, seven years old, or less, and she said that her name was Anna—that was all she knew. But Joe Burdette knew more; he knew, beyond a peradventure, that she was the child of his old love, the child of Dick Pender's dead wife.

"Your honor," said Joe, hat in hand, addressing the court.

"What is it?" asked his honor, who, besides being a judge of fine points of criminal law, was an expert judge of human nature had rightly passed a verdict of honest and square upon Joe Burdette.

"I should like to adopt that child, if possible," replied the engineer; and half an hour later, Burdette's references proving highly satisfactory to the court, he walked out of the police station leading by the hand Anna Redman's little girl.

The division headquarters of that portion of the Chicago & Overland road, over which Joe Burdette steered his locomotive were at Steamville, a small but busy railway town, and thither the engineer took his young ward.

Everybody said that Joe Burdette was crazy; but somehow nobody ventured to audibly express his opinions on that matter to Joe himself. "The boys" and the neighbors thought a good deal and compared notes among themselves; while the womenfolk were agreed that Joe was making a fool of himself over a little stray-away young [illegible] who might be—well, the Lord only knew who or what she might be!

Whether Joe suspected the opinions, expressed and unexpressed, of his various neighbors, certain it was that he took much comfort in little Anna, and certain it is, too that the child dearly loved Joe, or Dad, as she called him. With Burdette nothing was too good for the child, not even his locomotive. On fine days he frequently took the little girl into his cab, showing her every detail of the workings of his iron steed and explaining the way and the wherefore of each part just as though she had been apprenticed. Indeed, Burdette insisted that she was, and to his chief he declared (when Anna was not ten years old) that his "little'un" knew more about locomotives than half the firemen on the Chicago & Overland, and as much as some of the engineers!

Nine years had passed since Joe's memorable visit to the Chicago police court, and "Burdette's girl" was fast passing from girlhood to womanhood, but she was still the engineer's baby and Joe was still Dad to her.

There was a strike in progress on the Chicago & Overland, though it did not directly involve the engineers. Among other classes of the employes there exisited much bitterness of feeling toward the company and excitement ran high in Steamville.

Joe Burdette, who honestly believed the strikers, in this particular instance, to be in the wrong, showed them scant sympathy and proposed (with the brotherhood) to stay by the company and his locomotive. This made the strikers exceedingly angry and, as a consequence, Anna was constantly fearful of some harm befalling Joe, or the dearly-loved engine—or both.

One night when Burdette had to pull mail train number four out of Steamville, Anna, in a strange but earnest manner, begged permission to accompany him.

"Why, my dear little girl," said Joe, that can hardly be. No—you stay at home and have breakfast ready on my return."

But the girl entreated with remarkable persistance, though she could give no good or logical reason for her wish. At last Burdette yielded, and when Number Four pulled out of Steamville there was a girl, wrapped in a big shawl, huddled like a bundle on Joe's seat in the cab. She hid herself thus so that Joe's enemies might not report him for carrying a passenger on his engine, and she remained in her hiding place while Joe with his hand on the lever and his eye set straight ahead, guided the throbbing locomotive through the misty darkness of a November night over the intricate maze of main tracks, side tracks, switches and sidings of the great Steamville yard.

They had got about one mile from the depot, and were still crawling very slowly through the yard filled with idle cars, when Burdette missed his fireman who had gone to the tender to throw down some coal. Still keeping his hand on the lever, Joe peered through the leather curtain and, as he did so, was rudely dragged from the locomotive by strong arms, wielded by two of the desperate and revengeful strikers.

In another moment, Anna, who was wide awake, had grasped the situation. She understood, perfectly, that the intention of the rascals who had kidnapped Burdette and his fireman was to allow mail train No. 4 to proceed on its way—unguided and unfettered—to rush with increasing speed to certain destruction. But the girl was equal, and more than equal, to the occasion. She was bright as a dollar and smart as a whip and, as Burdette had frequently asserted, she knew as much about a locomotive as many of the engineers on the Chicago & Overland. She now saw an opportunity to save Joe's reputation, as well as to make one for herself; she also saw the chance—nay the imperative need—to save the old locomotive and many lives and so to frustrate the vile plans of the unprincipled strikers.

How she did it not even the girl herself could tell after the exciting time was past. The mail train was scheduled to run over the division without a stop, and run it did. For three hours the plucky girl stood in the cab guiding the train through all its dangers, both seen and unseen. She peered ahead thro the darkness, she watched the steam guage, and anon shoveled coal into the furnace like an old-time fireman. It was hard work and the hours were of well nigh interminable length; but the end came, and mail train No. 4 rolled into Chicago on time.

To-day the boys hardly call Joe Burdette "crazy," and they are willing to admit that Joe ought to have a "soft spot" for the girl who did so bravely on that eventful night. Nor is one of the Chicago & Overland employes jealous of the fact that upon the pay-roll of the C. & O. engineers appears, each recurring mouth, the name of Anna Pender.

Cuba, the Smile of the Sea.

Nearly four centuries ago Columbus, the adventurous, in the blessed island of Cuba, saw happy people with rolled leaves between their lips. Above their heads were little clouds of smoke. Their faces were serene, and in their eyes the autumnal heaven of content. These people were kind, innocent, gentle and loving.

The climate of Cuba is the friendship of the earth and air, and of this climate the sacred leaves were born—the leaves that breed in the mind of him who uses them the cloudless, happy days in which they grew.

These leaves make friends and celebrate with rites the voice of peace. They have given consolation to the world. They are the companions of the lonely, the friends of the imprisoned, of the exiled, of workers in mines, of fellers of forests, of sailors on the desolate seas; they are the givers of strength and calm to the vexed and wearied minds of those who build with thought and dream the temples of the soul.

They tell of hope and rest. They smooth the wrinkled brows of care—drive fears and misshapen dreads from out the mind and fill the heart with rest and peace. Within their magic warp and woof some potent, gracious spell imprisoned lies, that, when released by fire doth softly steal within the fortress of the brain and bind in sleep the captured sentinels of care and grief.

These leaves are the friends of the fireside, and their smoke, like incense rises from myriads of happy homes.

Cuba is the smile of the sea.—R. G. Ingersoll, in Cuba.

A Confederate monument at Manassas, Va., will be dedicated August 30.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 18, 1889.

NEWS FOR WORKING MEN.

"There are more laboring men in Pennsylvania to-day without regular employment than at any time within the last ten years,"

The above remark from a gentleman living in Pennsylvania, who has been for a short time in Pocahontas County looking after large investments here, is noted for consideration.

The Overshadowing Issue.

The Chicago Tribune, the Philadelphia Press, and in fact all the republican papers of the north, appear to have an idea that the questions of "high tariff, low tariff, or no tariff," are disturbing the harmony of the south, and splitting the democratic party into four or five small pieces.

With this imaginary state of affairs on their minds, the organs are going ahead indulging in the most gleeful anticipation of the day when the solid south will be broken into fragments, and several states snugly at home in the bosom of the republican party.

Such fatuousness as this is worthy of attention, if only for the amusement it affords those who thoroughly understand the situation. The republican organs get their cue from those democratic newspapers which, by reason of their ignorance and prejudice, have been engaged in a futile effort to make the tariff the test of democracy.

But the organs ought to perceive that there is no longer any serious attempt on the part of any respectable democratic journal to read other democrats out of the party. Brother Waterson is no longer the obstreperously vengeful kicker that he was, and the idea is gradually dawning on all democrats, of whatever shade of opinion, that the democratic party is a bigger thing than any single issue that can be mentioned. So far as the south is concerned, its people (as the Richmond Dispatch observes) are in no condition to disturb themselves over high tariff, low tariff or no tariff. They are confronted by an issue vastly more important and more pressing than any branch of the tariff question. That issue is the negro problem, and it will continue to remain the one issue, so far as the south is concerned, as long as the republican party remains the party of sectionalism and bourbonism.

The northern people, it may be observed, deal with this negro problem as they please when it affects their own interests. Thus Chicago will not allow negroes to act as the trustees of its public schools, and there are white people in Ohio—and republicans at that—who are willing to violate a state law rather than allow negro children to attend the white schools.

But when it comes to the south, the northern people seem to be of the opinion that the negro problem should be settled from the outside—and it is this disposition that will keep the south solid in the face of all other issues.—Atlanta Constitution.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON July, 12.—Political sensations and very warm weather do not usually go together in Washington, but this week is an exception, for although the thermometer has been dancing around in the nineties all the week we have had a real genuine sensation. At first it was given out that Secretary Noble had peremptorily removed Pension Commissioner Tanner on account of the way in which he had been running the Pension Office. It was stated that Tanner had resigned because the Secretary had reprimanded him and Assistant Secretary Bussey. Both of these reports turned out to have been wrong. Mr. Tanner has neither been removed, nor has he resigned. But one or the other may yet occur, as the relations between the Secretary and the Commissioner are decidedly strained. The day after Tanner's return from his western trip he received a summons from Secretary Noble to come at once to his private office. Arrived there he found Assistant Secretary Bussey, who has charge of the appeals from the pension office and who is in sympathy with the Commissioners ideas, and Secretary Noble. An animated discussion was at once begun with Tanner and Bussey on one side, and Noble on the other. It is said that the Secretary gave them both to understand in the plainest sort of language, that they were subordinates of his. And right here is, I understand, the root of the whole trouble. The Secretary has no serious objection to anything that Tanner has done, but he objects to Tanners way of doing them. He wants the facts impressed on the mind of the public that the pension bureau is a part of the department of the Interior, and that he (Noble) is at the head of that department.

Mr. Harrison has gone to join his family at Deer Park. It is given out at the White House that he will spend very little time here for the rest of the warm weather, not over two days a week at the outside. This taken to mean that very few Presidential appointments will be made between now and September.

Public Printer Palmer has taken his cue from the President and is going very slow in making new appointments. He has just made the most important in his gift chief clerk, and the members of his party do not like it, although the gentleman appointed is a republican. Mr. Collins the lucky man, entered the office as an apprentice, served his time and was afterwards detailed for clerical work. He has been for several years head book keeper and was not an applicant for the chief clerkship.

Mr. Harrison has postively refused to give office seekers the names of parties that make charges against them. He says to do so would be to frighten other people and prevent their telling him of bad things they might know about future applicants.

Secretary Blaine will be represented at the State department until September by his son, Walker, who returned from Bar Harbor this week. I understand that Mr. Harrison will visit Mr. Blaine at Bar Harbor as soon as he can find time to map out his first message to Congress.

A new division has been established in the department of Agriculture and Wm. Hill, a Minnesota editor has been put in charge of it. Mr. Hill's duties will be to condense and simplify the reports and bulletins issued by the department, so that they may be understood by those not familiar with technical and scientific terms.

Senator Quay's friend, Tom Cooper has captured the Collectorship of the port of Philadelphia.

Secretary Windom has prohibited the use of the steam plate printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and printing notwithstanding the offer of the owners of them to accept the royalty named by Congress—One cent per thousand impressions. They received $1.00 per thousand previous to July.

Washington is to have another attraction added to the many it already possesses. The historic old line-of-battle ship "Constitution" is to be brought from Portsmouth New Hampshire, where she now is, to the Washington Navy Yard, when she will be used as a receiving ship. The Constitution has a proud history.

The department of the Interior announces that no more appointments will be made in the Census bureau until September.

Discharges of minor officials in the departments here are quite frequent just now.

The Civil Service Commission was in New York City nearly all this week.

Secretary Rusk denies that Gen. Felix Agnus of the Baltimore American gave him a blooded horse, as was published.

The prize-fight about which all the ruffians of two continents and a very large minority of educated gentlemen have been thinking and talking for the last month came off, and to day Sullivan is the undisputed champion of the world.

Mrs. ex President John Tyler died in Richmond, Va., on the evening of the 10th.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Va., on the first Monday in [illegible]

[illegible] Plaintiff,

vs.

[illegible] Joseph W. [illegible] and [illegible] Defendants

IN CHANCERY.

[illegible]

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Clk.

[illegible], [illegible]
July 18-4t. Printers fee $ 6.00.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Correspondents please write regularly.

—Go to Jacob Boner's for all kinds of fruit jars, cheap.

—Thanks to Mr. C. R. Mathews for more papers from Neb.

—Patronize your home paper and keep posted on local news.

—Hugh Dever, Esq., was in town yesterday.

—Z. C. Alderson, of Alderson was in Huntersville last week.

—This is the 7th annual birthday of THE TIMES.

—Read the letter this week from Cheyenne, Wyo. Ty.

—We will begin the financial statement of the County next week.

—Sullivan will Kilrain if he fights him again.

—Deputy Sheriff L. W. Herold, was in town Monday.

—Wm H. Grose went to Covington Monday. We don't know whether he went to the show or not.

—Reports from all over the State show that crops generally, are good.

—Freddie Beard, who has been in the Levels for some time came up Sunday, accompanied by Joe McNeel Esq., of that place.

—Married, Mr. Jas. R. Webb to Miss Lillie F. Jackson, by Rev. M. M. Everly at the M. P. Parsonage on Beaver creek.

—Atty. H. S. Rucker and family started Tuesday morning for an extended visit to their parents in Lewisburg and near Lynchburg.

—We want a correspondent at Green Bank and at Edray and will give in consideration THE TIMES as long as you correspond, and furnish stationary and stamps.

—Jno. W. Johnson, Jno. B. Williamson, J. H. Lindan, G. W. Lucas, J. G. Kuykendall, of Baltimore were in Huntersville, since our last issue.

—We understand by several different parties, that we have sold THE TIMES office, but we don't believe it, as we have never offered it for sale, and don't expect to offer for sale.

—Mrs. M. C. Early, who has been visiting her parents at this place for some time past, started for her home in Union this morning (Wednesday) accompanied by her brother J. C. Loury Jr.

—The big strike that was about to take place in the Carnegie Iron works at Pittsburg, has subsided; the men agreeing to have their wages cut to 20 instead of 25 per cent.

—Johnstown N. Y. was visited by a cloud burst last week in which a few persons lost their lives and much damage to property was done. Johnstown seems to be an ill-fated name.

—The Rev. Wm. T. Price held his protracted meeting at this place commencing last Saturday morning and continued until Tuesday night, during which time he preached a series of excellent sermons to a large and appreciative audience.

—Chas. Bruce of Mingo Flats, was arrested and brought before Justice Grose at this place last Saturday charged with having driven a flock of sheep under the bridge to avoid the toll, and was bound over in the sum of $100 to appear here at the October term of the court to answer indictment.

—Messrs. Jno. Driscol and Porter Kinports, with their families, were in town Tuesday.

County Court Notes.

Levi Gay, late sheriff, made a full settlement with the Court.

It was ordered that the Burnside and Laurel creek road be opened.

That the Buck's mountain road be established.

J. W. Bolten, tendered his resignation of the County Infirmary, and was accepted.

That the poor farm be advertised for rent.

That the citizens of the county be allowed to take the Marlinton bride and road, on which Jas. Gibson is toll collector, by the year.

That the new piece of road near Lockridge ford be let to contract.

That Geo. W. Wagner, expend, not exceeding $75.00, in repairing the road from M. D. McGlaughlin's to the top of the Alleghany mountain.

A rule was awarded against Jas. Gibson, returnable at the next term of the Court to show cause why he did not comply with his contract in making the road around the mountain above M. D. McGlaughlin's.

That John E. Campbell, Pub. of POCAHONTAS TIMES be awarded the contract for the county printing for the sum of $45.00 per year, from July, 1889.

That an additional span of 90 feet be put to the bridge across Knapp's creek, at Huntersville, and the same to be advertised for contract.

A rule was awarded against M. J. McNeel, sheriff, returnable at the next term of the Court to show cause why he or his deputy did not attend the sessions of the Court.

A rule awarded at a former term of the court against W. H. Cackley late sheriff of the county to show cause why he should not be proceeded against for failure to settle with the Court is enlarged and returnable at the next term of the Court.

Note by the Way.

July 10 1889, it was the writer's pleasant duty to visit another portion of our great county, where he had never been.

It was on the head waters of Stony creek, where Mr. Coombs resides.

A happy party of fifty or more persons had assembled to witness the nuptials of two worthy young people Mr. John L. McNeill and Miss Louella Forrest Snyder.

An interesting feature was the presence of a number of sunbrowned stalwart young men from the neighboring harvest fields, in their work day dress.

About 3 p. m. the marriage vows were pronounced by Wm. T. Price.

Miss Cora Coombs, and Annie Carter were in waiting as Brides maids, attended by Messrs Lee Carter and Silas Barlow.

The young people presented a fine appearance on the floor.

A very excellent dinner was served, and it was greatly enjoyed by the numerous and orderly guests.

Mr. Coombs deserves, grateful recognition for the pleasure afforded by the happy occasion, on the part of all present.

W. T. P.

There is no foolishness about the newspaper business out west. They believe in "calling a spade a spade" out there, judging from the following which is said to have appeared in a Salem, Oregon, paper recently: "If John Jones, who twenty years ago deserted his wife and babe, will return, said babe will lick the stuffin' out of him."

Robert Bonner, of New York, has been refused his offer of $65,000 for the three year-old trotter Axtell, which broke the record Tuesday at Minneapolis.

Letter from Wyoming.

EDITOR TIMES: I have received many inquiries from friends in Pocahontas, relative to the character of this country and its inhabitants. If you will grant me space in your columns for a few items, intended as an answer to all, I promise to be as brief as my limited knowledge of newspaper correspondence will permit. To give in detail, a description of Wyoming its advantages and disadvantages, in one letter, would not only be asking too much space, but would worry your readers. I will therefore, as a preliminary letter, simply give you a brief sketch of Cheyenne, in which place I have been living for the past two months, and which, from its rapid advancement after its first settlement in 1867, has gained the title of "The Magic City of the Plains." It is the capital of Wyoming, and the county seat of Laramie County. Its geographical position is at the very gateway of the Territory, being located about forty miles from the western line of Nebraska, and about twelve miles north of Colorado, with an attitude of six thousand feet. It is the commercial center of Wyoming, and headquarters of the great cattle ranges of the West; being always noted for the wealth and enterprise of its citizens. The city is on the line of the Union Pacific, the junction of the Denver Pacific, Cheyenne and Northern and the present terminus of the Cheyenne and Burlington Railways. The Union Pacific has recently completed one of the handsomest union depots in the West, at a cost of over $100,000; being 226 feet long by 55 feet wide, and constructed of rough stone with an imposing tower 128 feet high.

The Cheyenne and Burlington own a depot built of brick and stone, at a cost of $90,000. The general shops of the Union Pacific have recently been located at Cheyenne, involving the expenditure of several millions of dollars and the employment of fifteen hundred men.

The City has an extensive system of water works; the latest, and most approvied sewerage system, which extends over seven miles of streets; fire department and fire alarm system; telephone exchange; and incandescent electric lighted streets and buildings, besides gas for general use; has fine business blocks; elegant private residences; eleven churches; four banks; three daily, and four weekly newspapers; a capitol building, to cost when completed, $300,000; three public school buildings, valued at $100,000, and another authorized to be built at a cost of $17,000, a convent school; a territorial asylum for the deaf, dumb and blind; a county hospital, and various municipal buildings. Fort Russell, three miles west of Cheyenne, has recently been enlarged by an expenditure of over $200,000, and is now a permanent military post, the largest, and most important in the department of the Platte, Camp Carlin is located about midway between the City and Fort Russell, and is the Government supply depot for various military stations in this department.

All streets within the city limits have a uniform width of eighty feet and people who are accustomed to the dilapidated condition of plank side walks, view with delight the miles of smooth stone flagging and cement sidewalks that line almost every street of the city. The beauty of the streets and avenues, is greatly enhanced by the bright green turf on either side of the walks, and, together with the long straight lines of trees, forms an agreeable feature of the City's landscape. No large expenditure will ever be required here for pavement for nature has provided roads equal to the smooth gravel walks of any park. The number of pretty lakes and broad, smooth boulevards and avenues, and the well clipped lawns afford every facility for adornment, and together with the cool, fresh air in summer, and the absence of the mosquito and other little plagues, make Cheyenne a desireable summer resort. But with its many attractions, I must not fail to note some of its disadvantages and unattractive elements. Under this heading will come the high cost of living, the cost and trouble of irrigation, high taxes, and the strong wind that blows almost incessantly; sometimes compelling small fragments of stone to rise and pelt their victims in such a manner, that one might imagine himself among the arrows of the Indians. Every state in the Union and many foreighn nations are represented among the inhabitants of the City, which aggregate about 10,000; but the principal portion are from the Middle, Western and New England states, which, from their culture, refinement and sociability, indicate a high degree of civilization. At another time, I may dwell longer upon the social qualities of the people. The booming of artillery at Fort Russell in honor of our national independence, has called me to a halt, and I am admonished that my letter has already grown too long. If not taxing your patience too much, I may in the future, communicate such thoughts as may suggest themselves relative to other subjects of interest in this country.

Very Respectfully,
EULA J. YEAGER.

Cheyene July 4 1889.

SUICIDE FOR A LOST BRIDE.—Washington, July 7.—About three o'clock this morning a southern bound fast freight train was dashing rapidly under the wooden archway leading to the long bridge over the Potomac River when the engineer was startled by the sight of a young man throwing himself before the engine, which in a moment struck him and crushed his life out. The train was stopped immediately and the body picked up and turned over to the police, who, by means of papers in the dead man's pockets, identified him as Artie Shirley.

Shireley, who is about twenty-four years of age, was employed up to about a month ago in Richmond, Va., as a tile layer and was engaged to be married to a young lady of that city. She died about a month ago, after a sudden illness, and Shirely gave up his employment and came to Washington. He has been despondent and allowed his grief to take entire possession of him.—Staunton Spectator.

Sullivan and Kilrain

The prize fight between John L. Sullivan, of Boston, and Jake Kilrain, of Baltimore, which has had a world-wide advertisement, for the championship of the world, came off 100 miles from New Orleans on the eighth. The ring was pitched on a private estate called Richburg. The fight commenced at 10 o'clock and lasted until 1—three hours and 75 rounds. Sullivan showed himself the better man throughout the engagement Indeed, had Kilrain stood up fairly, the fight would not have lasted half hour. As it was, there were 75 rounds fought, in the last of which Kilrain's man threw up the sponge and gave up the fight. Kilrain was knocked down square 28 times—Sullivan not once. Sullivan proved himself the better man as a wrestler, a boxer, as a tactician, and for endurance. In fact, it was no match at all. The fight was ostensibly for $20,000 and the championship of the world. Large amounts of money changed hands. Neither of the men were seriously injured. Both were bruised considerably—Kilrain the severest, with a broken nose.

Jem Smith, the Champion of England has challenged John L.

Go to John Wurts & Co, Frankford, W. Va., for Deering Mowers and Self Binders. may 9-12t

John Wurts & Co., of Frankford, W. Va., will be here during June Court with a lot of Mowers. Don't buy until you see them. may 9 12t

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines that's made of John Wurts & Co. Frankford, W. Va may 9 12

A. R. SMITH,
Academy, W. Va.

UNDERTAKER.

Is prepared to furnish and deliver Coffins upon very short notice and at reasonable prices.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.
C. L. Austin Adm'r of Florence M. Austin dec'd.
S. B. Hannah Ex'or of Barbora A. Gum.
L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r of Accts.

WANTED.

500lb of dry sang.
Address BRISON HILL
Jacox, W. Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

2½ cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for 3 cts. mar. 28.

NOTICE.

I will not hereafter sell mill stuff on credit, and all who owe me will please come forward and settle their accounts at once and save further trouble.
Flour $2.50 per 100 lbs and corn 75cts per bu.
GEO. H. MCGLAUGHLIN.
Edray.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

I will run a hack from Huntersville to top Droop Mountain and make connection with hack running to Lewisburg. Will leave Huntersville daily at 6 a. m. Terms reasonable for passengers, baggage or express packages.
July 6th '89 R. V. PERKINS.

FOR THE BEST FURNITURE, CHAIRS AND FINEST TRIMED

in the county, go to
C. B. SWECKER,
AUCTIONEER, UNDERTAKER AND CABINET MAKER.
Dunmore, W. Va.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
URIAH HEVENER,
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
June20 4-w Green Bank W. Va.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit C[illegible] Clerk's office of the County of Po[illegible] tas, State of West Virginia, on [illegible] Monday of July, 1889.
R. S. Turk, ...
vs.
Geo. W. McDannald, [illegible]
Rebecca A. McDa[illegible]
nald and E. B. M[illegible]
IN [illegible]
The object [illegible]
to have a d[illegible]
acres of l[illegible] of Elk r[illegible]
Virgin[illegible]
and th[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 18, 1889.

The Ant and the Beetle.

From the Detroit Free Press.

One day while the ant was rolling a grain of corn over the ground a beetle happened along and inquired: "My industrious friend, why all this labor?" "I am working to get this grain of corn into my storehouse for the winter. I must have a store laid by or I shall starve." "But how foolish to work so hard for it. You don't see me sweating under the collar and yet I get along as well as most insects." "Yes, you are all right now because it is summer, but wait until the winter comes on. If you are idle now you will perish then." "Thanks, my dear ant, but don't worry over the undersigned. Call on me about the middle of January." Time passed on. The ant worked industriously to lay by a store, and, as the winter come on and she was congratulating herself on her foresight and prudence, the beetle came that way. He was fat and sleek and in fine spirits and he halted to say: "Morning, old Economy. How goes it?" I have two kinds of eatables laid by for the winter," replied the ant, "while you—" "While I am located in the governor's kitchen for the next six months and count on no less than seven kinds of food per day." "But how is that?" "Simply that I work with my mouth, while you work with your muscles. I talk politics, while you talk corn." Moral: Let's all talk politics.

A Cat Adopts A Rabbit.

Squire J. T. Molkey has a cat that possesses motherly affection, though she has never had any children of her own. The other day, in her rambles, she discovered a nest of young rabbits about the size of little kittens. So pussy grabbed one in her mouth and started home with it, her tail straight up in the air, manifesting a high degree of cat pride. For 24 hours she nestled and purred around the baby rabbit, as happy as a little girl with a doll. Finally some one of the [illegible] took the rabbit away, and [illegible] box where it could be [illegible] Mrs. Tabby mourned [illegible] baby, but after [illegible] and brought [illegible] the nest, [illegible] pride [illegible] found [illegible] her [illegible]

[illegible] the negro [illegible] as the south is [illegible] as the republican [illegible] party of sectionalism [illegible]

The northern people, [illegible] observed, deal with this [illegible] as they please when [illegible] their own interests. They [illegible] will not allow negroes to [illegible] trustees of the public schools [illegible] there are white people in [illegible] and republicans at that—[illegible] willing to violate a state law [illegible] as those allow negro children [illegible] tend the white schools.

But when it comes to the [illegible] the northern people seem to [illegible] the opinion that the negro [illegible] should be settled from the [illegible] —and it is this disposition [illegible]

A Set of Horrid Men.

It was a French painting and the subject was a beautiful young girl at her toilet. It was displayed in a Wabash avenue art store window and attracted much attention—mostly masculine. The pretty, piquant face, the rounded graceful figure clad but in semi-transparent skirts, a black corset clasping the trim waist, the plump arms raised above the head, and the slender hands busy with the coiffure, combined to make a decided attractive abject for the gaze of men.

Two shop girls sauntered along stopped and gazed at it, though, and made remarks, much to the amusement of several of the rude spectators who overheard them:

"Pretty isn't it?"

"Yes; but they hadn't ought to stick it out in a window."

"It's no'hing to show pictures you see everywhere."

"I know, but she's in her corset and ain't got a dress skirt on. She looks sort of naked," and they both giggled.

"That's a pretty skirt."

"Yes; lovely Valenciennes on the bottom; real swell corset too. I adore a black corset. I'm going to get one as soon as I've paid for my new dress. I know where you can get a lovely one for $2.75."

"What size do you wear?"

"Thirty four bust and small waist. I'm going to have mine with black lace around it, I believe. My dress is to be red, you know, and it's cut so you can turn it in square at the neck or wear it buttoned close. I'm going to get a pair of those yellow shoes, too. I saw a lovely pair for $3, patent leather trimmings. They'll look well with my new dress with black stockings."

"Say, look at that girl's stockings in the picture—extra length. She's got her garters above her knees, too. I wouldn't wear 'em that way."

"Neither would I. I always wear suspenders. Round garters spoil the shape.

But one of the horrid men burst into a convulsion of laughter, and the two girls, blushing and giggling at their unwitting betrayal of feminine confidences, walked rapidly down the street.—Chicago Mail.

The English Girl.

The English girl, observes a traveler in the Boston Herald, is romantic and submissive. While as full of sentiment as the ideal love letter tied with blue ribbon, she still regards man as her lord and master. She rarely dreams of disputing the supremacy of husband, father or even brother, and her privilege and pleasure is to minister unto them. She is so affectionate in her home circle that the average man need only to be admitted there to straitway fall head over heels in love with a girl who worships her fond father and disputes with her sisters the honor and delight of warming the paternal slippers. Even in "high stations" she takes her turn in making the tea and preparing the toast and superintending the breakfast generally—a task which mamma regulates to her daughters. The English girl breaths this engaging air of domesticity. Man doesn't say, "How she can waltz how well she looks at the opera; how she surpasses all of the other girls in the cotillion!" No matter to what advantage she may appear in evening dress under the soft radiance of the wax candles, what the most inveterate bachelor whispers to himself is this: "By George! what a wife she would make and what a home!"

James T. Quick, who was sentenced to a term of five years in [illegible] penitentiary from this county, [illegible] for the murder of Reuben [illegible] the Christmas previous, [illegible] been pardoned by the Governor. The application for pardon [illegible] supported by the Judge who tried the case, the Prosecuting Attorney and others, and also by the physician of the penitentiary—cause, long disease.—Independent.

Short and Sweet.

"Just back from America, Mr. Delange?"

"Ya'as."

"Blasted country?"

"Beastly."

"How's the people of New York?"

"Rabble."

"The business men?"

"Dabble."

"The wives and mothers?"

"Gabble."

"The girls?"

"Babble."

"And out West among the Indians——"

"Battle."

"And cowboys?"

"Cattle."

"And mining mills?"

"Rattle."

"And the nice country town people?"

"Tattle."

"Did you go far West?"

"Seattle."

"Any old mansions in America?"

"Flats."

"Who inhabit them?"

"Bats."

"What games prevail?"

"Ball bats."

"In the cities?"

"No, brickbats."

"Visit the prisons? What's the system?"

"Mush."

"And in the fondling asylums?"

"Hush."

"Many poets?"

"Gush."

"And the habits of the men?"

"Lush!"

Mrs. Stetson, wife of the operator of a little station in New Mexico, was sick and steadily growing worse. At last she said to her husband:

"Stet, that Dr.—— ain't helpin' me one sole bit. I'm gettin' worse every day."

"I know it, Alice; I know it. Don't appear like he's any good on earth."

"I tell you, Stet, I'm going to die. I feel it in my bones."

"Wal, Alice [with solemn earnestness and comfort], if you do I'll be damned if ever I pay the doctor."

"What's the occasion?" queried the tramp as he came to a dozen or more carriages before a house on Fourteenth avenue.

"Funeral," answered one of the drivers.

"Old or young?"

"Baby, believe."

"Good! I struck an old man out here for a quarter the other day and I was afraid the shock had killed him."

Pocahontas Times.

Vol. VII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 25, 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 1

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. (C. E. Beard, Pres't. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.)
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

ALONE.

I miss you, my darling, my darling,
The embers burn low on the hearth;
And still is the air of the household,
And hushed is the voice of its mirth;
The rain plashes fast on the terrace,
The wind past the lattices moan,
The midnight chimes out from the minster,
And I am alone.

I want you, my darling, my darling;
I am tired with care and with fret;
I would nestle in silence beside you,
And all but your presence forget,
In the hush of the happiness given
To those who through trusting have grown
To the fullness of love in contentment;
But I am alone.

I call you, my darling, my darling!
My voice echoes back on the heart;
I stretch my arms to you in longing,
And, lo! they fall empty apart;
I whisper the sweet words you taught me,
The words that we only have known,
Till the blank of the dumb air is bitter,
For I am alone.

I need you, my darling, my darling!
With its yearning my very heart aches
The load that divides us weighs harder;
I shrink from the jar that it makes.
Old sorrows rise up to beset me;
Old doubts make my spirit their own.
Oh come through the darkness and save me
For I am alone.

— Robert J. Burdette.

Highland Nora

A rosy, checked lass, with great gray eyes and white dimpled arms, was gayly singing, as she wielded the churn dasher:

Hear what Highland Nora said:
"The Earlie's son I will not wed."

"Do you mean that, Nora?"

A young man thrust his head and shoulders in at an open window, resting his elbows on the low, old-fashioned sill.

"Do you mean it, Nora?" he repeated. Nora started in well-feigned surprise, and the rich blood dyed cheek and brow.

"Of course, I do," said she promptly, adding, "just as did that other Nora."

But the hint was entirely thrown away, for the young man only answered:

"Did she? I never read the poem But I have been thinking, Nora—"

"Indeed! Is it such a strange thing for the young 'squire to think?" the girl interrupted saucily.

"Don't laugh at me, my darling," said he, not heeding the indignant flash of the gray eyes. "You have said the same thing a great many times before, but somehow I always thought you did not mean it, and that you did love me, in spite of all. Now, Nora, I ask you for the last time, will you marry me?"

Nora did not answer; she was busy taking the butter out of the churn. As she placed it on the table she turned, facing him.

"I beg your pardon—what did you say? I was busy."

The young man bit his lips with vexation, but repeated his question.

Placing her hands behind her, assuming an attitude of defiance, Nora sang:

Hear what Highland Nora said:
"The Earlie's son I will not wed,
Should all the race of nature die,
And none be left but he and I;
For all the gold, for all the gear,
For all the lands both far and near,
That ever valor lost or won,
I would not wed the Earlie's son!"

"But I mean it, Nora," he pleaded.

"And I, too—just as did that other Nora."

Guy Earlie turned his face away and closed his lips tightly a moment.

"Very well; I will never ask you again," said he, coldly.

The rich color faded from Nora's face, but she turned away that he might not notice it, and said tauntingly:

"Ah, that will be something new! I really don't see what you will find to talk of however."

Guy remained silent a short time then he spoke in an entirely different tone—one that made the girl stare in astonishment, so masterful it was.

"Nora' I shall take you boating this afternoon."

She hesitated.

"I did think of gathering ferns; but I'll go," she added graciously, as she thought of his words, "I will never ask you again."

"Thank you."

"Did he mean it?" the girl wondered as she watched him out of sight. "The goose! Why doesn't he read the poem and see what the other Nora meant?"

Meanwhile, Guy was saying:

"I know Nora loves me, she only wants to torment me. Never mind, my lady! I'll change the manner of my siege, and be commander-in-chief a while; you have occupied that position quite long enough." Then an amused smile broke from his lips. "How surprised she looked at my commanding tone! I expected her to refuse me."

After dinner, Nora donned her prettiest dress, a dainty gray, with ribbons the color of the sweet lips. Tying on her wide brimmed hat, she thought: I'll take my zinc-lined box for ferns, there are such lovely ones on the island: There," giving a parting nod to the face in the mirror, "you'll make him ask you again, my dear, this very afternoon!" she said, and smiling at her own conceit, tripped away.

She was purposely late.

It won't do for him to think I am too anxious to go," she had said.

To her surprise Guy was not there, anxiously pacing the sands and wondering at her delay.

"Where can he be?" she wondered. "I never knew him to be late before."

She waited nearly half an hour, expecting the young man every moment, then she grew angry.

"How lucky I brought my fern case! I'll go into the woods and pretend that I never came here at all."

Saying this, she turned to enter the forest, but hearing the tramp of horses drew back, hidden by the bushes. To her surprise they stopped quite near where she was hidden; she could see the animals, but not ther riders. Suddenly a woman's voice said:

"Guy you are sure your love is lasting?"

"Of course, Elsie; I should not have spoken of it otherwise," said the rich voice Nora knew so well.

Parting the bushes she looked through them eagerly. Yes, it was Guy! But the lovely creature by his side—who was she?"

Nora thought her the most beautiful woman she had ever seen. But she was speaking again. The girl moved forward a few steps in her eagerness to listen.

"How pretty the Hudson is today! See how calmly it flows—as if there were no such things as heartaches and disappointments."

Guy took the tiny hand that was laid on his arm.

"We will be happy yet, Elsie," he said.

As they turned the horses' heads and started homewards, Nora's face was pale and set.

"How dare he?" she cried. Then she moaned brokenly, "Oh, my love, why did you take me at my word? But he—he must have known her long ago, he called Elsie, and said they would yet be happy. He has only been trifling with me," she thought miserably, as she walked slowly homeward.

When she reached the gate she heard the sound of strange voices in the house and saw the marks of carriage wheels. Before she could slip around to the back door a young man ran down the steps holding out both hands.

"This is cousin Nora, I am sure," said he, smiling eagerly.

Nora brightened instantly.

"You are my cousin. Laurence Norton, are you not?"

"Since you recognize me, allow me a cousin's privilege," he said; and stooping kissed her on the cheek.

The sound of footsteps caused her to turn her head just in time to see Guy Earlie pause, as if transfixed by astonishment, then turn hastily and stride away.

This little episode was not observed by Cousin Laurence, who was in the best of spirits all the evening; Nora was not so gay.

"What will Guy think of me?" she pondered. "But I am glad he saw it. And I do hope, after what I heard this afternoon, that he will never, never read "Highland Nora!" Cousin Laurie," said she, later in the evening, "don't tell any one you are my cousin while you are here; I need a cavalier to accompany me in my rambles, and beside, I want revenge on somebody."

Of course Laurence was delighted to act as his cousin's escort, and henceforth she was seldom seen without him. When they chanced to meet Guy, Nora bowed graciously, for she thought, I can afford to be magnanimous, as I am victor." She learned from the current gossip that a lady and gentleman were visiting at the Hall, distant relatives, the servant said, and that the lady was very wealthy. Guy himself Nora had not spoken to since that morning in the dairy.

In a few weeks an invitation came for Nora and her guest to attend a picnic given in honor of the young lady at the Hall. The party were to go up the river about two miles in skiffs, and cross over to the opposite side. Here the woods had been cleared of underbrush, the green grass was thickly matted together, and all around the flowers and ferns grew in abundance.

When Nora and Laurence arrived Guy and the strange lady had gone to the spring a short distance away, and Nora hurried Laurence off ere they returned. He accompanied her reluctantly, for he had some curiosity concerning the man he was sure his cousin loved.

"Fern gathering seems to be a perfect mania with you, Nora," he remarked, presently.

"Oh, I don't care if I never see a fern; I just do want to meet that stranger," Nora said quickly.

"I thought we were invited expressly to meet her!"

"How rude I have been!" she exclaimed. "So we were! Let us go back."

They turned to retrace their steps and came face to face with Guy and the fair stranger. Guy introduced her to Nora as Miss Benton. Nora bowed coldly, but the lady held out her hand.

"Guy has spoken of you so often, Miss Neale, that I feel as if I had always known you. I am sure we shall be the best of friends."

Nora was not so sure of that, but she could only murmur something supposed to be a polite reply.

But when her cousin was introduced, Nora was greatly surprised at the glad light that flashed into his eyes, while Miss Benton's pink cheeks changed to deepest crimson. They shook hands, and Laurence turned to his cousin, saying briefly: "We have met before." Then offering Miss Benton his arm, which she accepted, they walked away, leaving Guy and Nora together.

They stood looking at each other in puzzled silence; then, as the funny side of the situation struck Nora, she burst into a merry laugh, in which Guy joined.

The laugh seemed to relieve their embarrassment.

"Nora, may I walk back to the landing place with you?" asked Guy.

"It seems that you must," she said, laughing. "It is a matter of necessity, not choice. I wonder where they met before?"

"No matter since they have given me the opportunity I have been seeking for so long."

"And I" said Nora, interrupting, "want to apologize for not going boating that afternoon. I changed my mind, and went for ferns instead.

Guy looked at her in astonishment.

"Did you not go?"

Nora flushed, but said, smiling:

"Did you find me at the meeting place?"

"No," said Guy, bravely, "for I was not there. When I reached home, after leaving your house that morning, I found that Cousin Elsie and her father had arrived. She wished very much to take a ride that afternoon, and I felt in duty bound to accompany her. I took an extra horse with us as far as your house, intending to invite you to join us, but you were not at home. Since then I have sought an opportunity to apologize in vain."

A great load seemed lifted from Nora's heart.

"She is your cousin?"

"My only cousin," said Guy. "Your guest is a very handsome man," he added presently.

"You mean Cousin Laurie? Yes, he is handsome."

Guy turned like a flash, and, taking Nora's hand exclaimed:

"What a blind, jealous fool I have been! I saw him kiss you Nora, and I thought——"

"Never mind what you thought. Let us hurry; we shall be late to luncheon."

She walked off rapidly.

"Nora," said Guy, as he overtook her, since Cousin Elsie came I have been reading Scott's poems."

She gave him a hasty glance, and sinking on a large stone—that seemed to have been placed there for the express purpose, Guy said afterward—covered her face with both hands.

Guy dropped the fern box which he had taken in charge and took those trembling hands in one of his, placing the other beneath the dimpled chin, then he lifted her face till the sweet gray eyes met his. What he saw there must have satisfied him, for he bent his head and kissed her.

"Guy," said Nora, presently, "today is not the first in which I have seen your cousin."

Then she told him of the conversation she had overheard.

"You see, pet," said Guy, looking lovingly into the gray eyes. "Elsie's is a pitiful story; her name is not Benton, for she is married, but her father disapproves, her being called by his name. I will give you

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 28, 1889.

Who is Harrison?

Who is Harrison? He is the son of his father and the grandson of his grandfather, with no just claims to execute ability, or even the possession of ordinary common sense. Judging his record by his acts during the brief period in which he has occupied—but not filled—the executive chair, this is a high compliment for which he should be thankful.

* * * * *

From the beginning of the campaign until its close the republicans were, as usual, prolific or promises never intended to be fulfilled, by which the gullible citizens who followed the false banner were entrapped, and are now afforded ample time in which to atone for their folly.—Barnum once said that the American people were never happy except when humbugged. But for the grotesqueness of the idea we would remark that we should be to-day the happiest nation on the globe if being humbugged means anything.

But we are not happy, and there is no reason why we should be so long as trusts, combinations in business, the oppression of the laborer the shutting down of mills and factories, and the "riot, rout and ungodly glee" of incompetent and hungry republican officials run riot in the land. What laboring man has been benefitted by Harrison's election? What honest tradesman has experienced increased prosperity? Not one! Then, who has?

We answer, that the promises of the President, backed by the platform upon which he was elected, have been flagrantly, persistently, studiously and unblushingly violatedly, whereby nepotism has become the common rule, and under which thieves sneak in where angels fear to tread. It would seem that we are treading in the foot-steps of old Rome, whose government was once sold to an ignoramus who happened to have more ready cash than any other bidder, and the time is at hand when we should cry out, in the language of an English author, that "we are governed by a set of drivellers, whose folly takes all the dignity from distress, and renders even calamity ridiculous."

What is the remedy for this nepotism, oppression of the poor, combinations and trusts, which oppress the workingman, and made the hollow mockery of "protection," every hour forges stronger than ever the chains which bind them, and increase the bank accounts of the favored few?

There can be but one sensible response to this question, and that is, the return of the democratic party to power on a sound democratic platform. Before the expiration of Harrison's term it is possible that the "fantastic tricks before high Heaven," now so unblushingly played by his henchmen, will be understood and appreciated by the people—who would always be right except for the [illegible] propensity to follow false gods.—Lynchburg Advance.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON July, 19.—Senator Quay dropped into Washington very quietly this week and said that his only busines here was to engage a house for his family. Of course this blinded nobody. That he was on a political errand of great importance is generally believed. He has had a long conference with Gen. Harrison and has been almost constantly with Assistant Postmaster General Clarkson, who was his lieutenant during the late campaign. He and Clarkson, representing the republican national committee have been trying to hatch up some scheme to carry Virginia for the republicans this fall, and democrats in that state will have to keep their eyes wide open to hold their own.

The medical division of the Pension office is to be entirely reorganized. It is thought that all the democrats in the division will follow the three or four discharged this week.

Hon. W. B. Richie, of Ohio, who is closely connected in a business way with Calvin S. Brice, was in town this week. He thinks the democrats will elect the governor and legislature in Ohio this fall, but that they will have to work hard to do it. But the most important statement made by Mr. Richie was the following: "I can say to you without the least qualification that Mr. Brice is not and will not be a candidate for the Senate. There are many reasons why he could not afford such a responsibility, and in making calculations on the Ohio Senatorship you will save much time and worry by leaving Mr. Brice out altogether."

In view of Mr. Richie's relations with Mr. Brice such a positive statement has caused a general rearrangement of the Ohio democratic state.

Considerable talk has been created here by a speech made by a negro at a meeting of the Ohio republican association a night or two ago. He expressed himself as being very much displeased with Harrison's "Southern policy" (something that doesn't exist as far as I can see) and other things. He also registered a strong protest against the slowness of removing democrats and like the famous Mr. Flannagin of Texas he wanted to know "what are here for?" if not to get the offices. "But he capped the climax in conclusion by saying to the government employes present "Don't be afraid of any civil service nonsense but send in your contribution to the president of the association and he will forward it to the republican state committee of Ohio to be put where it will do the most good." This negro is an applicant for office.

It is said that Gov. Foraker of Ohio is in active training for the republican Presidential nomination in '92. That's about as near as he will get to it.

I have heard whispers of a probable duel between Senators Blackburn and Chandler, owing to recent newspapers publications about the alleged pulling of Chandlers ear by Blackburn last winter. It is said that a friend of the Kentucky Senator is now here for the purpose of finding out whether Senator Chandler would accept a challenge. The general impression is that he would not.

Secretary Noble when asked as to the probable result of the attempts being made by the Cherokee Cattle Company to prevent the opening of the Cherokee strip to settlement said that he did not care to discuss the matter farther than to say that the Government would recognize no competitors for these or any other lands in which it had an interest, and that the rights of the U. S. would be asserted and maintained.

Mr. Morgan, the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs seems to be a believer in real civil service reform, even if he did appoint his wife a special agent. He has sent the following circular letter to Indian agents concerning the conditions of appointments. "Approvals will be made with the distinct understanding that the parties named are thoroughly competent to fill the positions for which they are nominated and that they will be zealous and faithful in the performance of their duties; that their tenure of office is permanent so long as they remain competent and efficient, and that the Indian office raserves the right to remove for cause only." Properly lived up to, that letter would make all the civil service law necessary.

The sensation caused by the reported resignation of Secretary Blaine was very short lived.

The completion of the West Virginia Central railroad extention in to Randolph county is another step in West Virginia's phenomenal business progress. The Mountain State is developing its resources. More miles of railroad are being built now, and will be built during the present year, than in any preceding twelve months in its history. West Virginia has become a progressive State. It is a growing State, and a Democratic State. More than this, it is improved and enriched by Democratic capital. The leading stockholder of the West Virginia Central railroad is a distinguished Democrat. The projector of the Monongahela Valley railroad, the Weston and Braxton C. H. railroad, and the Ripley and Nutt Creek Valley railroad, is another distinguished Democrat. Let the demagogues remember this. —Register.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in July, 1889.

Cyrena H. Wilfong, ... Plaintiff,

vs.

Henry A. Yeager, Joseph W. Riley and Charles A. Lightner .... Defendants

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant Henry A. Yeager, and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Yeager to the plaintiff, Cyrena H. Wilfong by bond, dated the 2nd day of October, 1882, for $322.45, payable one day after date of the bond. Subject to a credit for $45.00 as of February 1st, 1888, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Henry A. Yeager is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste:

JOHN J. BEARD, Clk.

SNYDER & McCLINTIC, S'n.

July 19-4t. Printers fee $ 5.45.

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-71

HOME NEWS

—Awful warm isn't it?

—Do you think it will rain this afternoon?

—The farmers are busy cutting ther grass.

—Read the new ad's this week, they may interest you.

—Go to Jacob Boner's for all kinds of fruit jars cheap

—Six hundred visitors are reported at the Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs.

—John Hamilton, Esq., who has been attending school at Concord, has returned home.

—Geo. W. Wagner Esq., went down to Ronceverte the first of this week on business.

—Mr. I. B. Moore, and family of Knapp's creek, were visiting Mrs. Moore's parents Mr. Wm. Curry of this place last week.

—Dr. Patterson has the wood work of his new house about completed, and it is now being painted.

—Attorney C. F. Moore and Harry Beard, Esq., went up to Dunmore Saturday and returned Sunday.

—Messrs. W. C. Hull & Son have bought out and assumed control of the store of A. Shinaberry at Edray.

—This is the 7th volume and 1st number of THE TIMES, and it starts out on its new year with bright prospects and happy anticipations.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic went to William's river Tuesday, where he expects to meet a party of gentlemen from Charleston, to spend a few days fishing.

PREACHING.—Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Peterkin will preach at Clover Lick on Sunday, 18th of Aug., at 11 oclock a. m. and at Huntersville at night.

—Rice Moore, Esq., of Dunmore came down Saturday and returned Sunday evening. There must be some attractions in Huntersville for Mr. Moore.

—Rev D. S. Sydenstricker will preach at Mary Gibson Chapel, on Elk, the second Sabbath of August at 11 o'clock a. m., Edray 3:30 p. m., Martin's Bottom at night.

—Messrs. C. A. Brown, of E. and H. College Va., F. J. Brown of Bluefield, W. Va., and Rev. H. A. Brown, of Crab Bottom, Va., were in town Tuesday. We acknowledge a pleasant call from the former.

—Harper McGlaughlin Esq., and family, accompanied by Miss Eliza Arbogast, of Green Bank passed through town Tuesday, on their way to the home of the former, in Bath county.

PREACHING.—Rev. D. G. Helmick, President of the W. Va. Conference, M. P. Church, will preach at Swago, the 3rd Sunday in August at 11 o'clock a. m. and at 2 o'clock p. m.

Rev. M. M. Everly, will hold his basket meeting at Fairview the 2nd Sunday in August instead of the third, so as not to interfere with the Presidential meeting at Swago.

A Cloud Burst.

The greatest disaster which ever befell Little Kanawha valley came during the night of the 18th in the shape of a terrible cloudburst which completely flooded the county, destroying many lives, carrying off thousands of dollars in property and ruining the crops for many miles.

—Chas. Hogsett, Esq., of Mill Point was in town Tuesday.

—We can't help but feel flattered, from the number of new subscribers, and compliments we are daily receiving.

Edray Items.

Married, at Fairview church on Tuesday 16th July, 1889, by Geo. P. Moore, James M. Johnson to Hannah E. Sharp.

At same time and place by same minister, L. M. Waugh to Ella I. Buzzard.

Serenade at Mr. A. W. Sharp's on the night of the 16th July 1889, by about forty five hunters.

Mr. W. C. Hull is negotiating for the purcase of Mr. A. J. Shinnaberry's store at this place.

Wheat is good and corn is promising around here.

James Gibsonhas not begun work yet on his road. The specifications being beyond his original contract and unless modified by the Com'rs it is doubtful if he begins at all.

The bridge at Huntersville seems to be a necessary sinking fund for the County. Xx.

Green Bank Items.

There is not much of interest going on in our vicinity.

Haying seems to be the order of the day.

Mr. Elliot has finished the addition to the parsonage at this place, which adds very much to its appearance, as well as comfort. We are glad that our pastor, who has labored so faithfully for the erection is the first to enjoy its comforts.

Misses Tokie and Lillie Hull, of Knapp's creek are visiting relatives in this neighborhood.

Mr. Robt. Ralston, and family of Highland, spent a few days with his brother at this place last week.

Miss Sallie Patterson, of Glade Hill, is spening a fortnight with her uncle at this place.

The young men of this vicinity have organized a base ball club. We think it has been a succets thus far in mashing noses and such casualities.

The Messrs Brown, former Props. of the Hillsboro Academy, spent last night in our village, as the guests of Rev. W. H. Ballengee.

Strange what attraction Mr. E. N. Curry finds at Green Bank recently. Xx.

Dunmore Doings.

Hot and still heating.

Auctioneer Swecker has returned from the Winchester and Hutton sale at Huttonsville.

Huttonsville is on a boom.

Mr. Cauley, who has charge of the club house on Cheat Mt., is a nice and accommodating gentleman and has things fixed up in aple pie order. He has raised 700 young chickens for his guests this fall.

Our farmers are busy putting up hay and stacking grain. Our hay crop is very heavy.

Henry Sheets has moved his saw mill to Mrs. Isaac Moore's, near Dunmore.

William Galford has gone for a saw mill, and will set it on his farm on Sitlington's creek.

The frame of the new church was raised here to-day.

Mr. Robt McGlaughlin is putting up a new kitchen and dining room.

Col. Jno. Driscol and Porter Kinports with their families paid us a visit.

Uncle John, Aunt Jane and Miss Sallie Hiner, from Highland paid us a visit last week.

The Lumbermen are busy at work repairing the railroad.

There will be a big meeting at Baxter church on Sunday the 28th, and singing at Cross Road school house at 3 p. m.

We are glad to see Mr. Wm. Pritchard back from the Springs, greatly improved in health.

Mrs. Allie Flenner is no better at this writing.

TOM SAWYER.

The Remains of a Man.

GILLISPIE, July 18.—Some time ago mention was made in THE TIMES of the finding by Ben. Turner, of the remains of a man on the headwaters of Greenbrier River.

On last Monday, Granvill Keller and myself, accompanied by young Turner went to view these remains, and to see what could be seen on the premises.

We found part of the remains, and part of the clothing. The skull bone, the hip bones, the thigh bones, the leg bones, and the feet bones which were in the shoes found.

The hat was wool and of a light color, the coat was wool of a sack pattern, dark color and had been well made, the vest was cotton and of a light color.

None of the bones were broken, but by them lay two pieces of a singular stick. The stick had been broken in two parts, and had been done seemingly at the time when the man died, the wood was curly, and the stick surely was part of a Billiard Cue. Whether or not it was not used by hands to kill the man with I suppose ever remain a mistery no request was held, and the remains were decently buried.

Respectfully,
AMOS S. GILLISPIE.

The Cherokees of the Indian territory have just built a $200,000 seminary for girls. And yet people say that the Indians cannot be civilized.

A Confederate Home has been incorporated in Missouri. It will shelter confederate veterians, their wives, widows and orphans.

We hear that General Mahone is training for the gubernational match in Petersburg, and expects when he gets down to his fighting weight to turn the scales at sixty-three pounds. He spares two hours every day, one hour in the morning and one at night, at a dummy which consists of a demijohn of Bourbon hung up by a string.—Alex. Gazette.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

To the creditors of Hugh M. Carpenter deceased:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas made in a cause therein pending to subject the real estate of the said Hugh M. Carpenter, to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Hugh M. Carpenter, for adjudication to L. M. McClintic, commissioner; at his office in the said county on or before the 6th day of September, 1889.

Witness, John J. Beard, Clerk of the said Court this 20th day of July 1889.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

july 25-4t. Printers fee $6.70

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

To the creditors of George C. Hill, deceased.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas made in a cause therein pending to subject the real estate of the said Geo. C. Hill, to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said George C. Hill for adjudication to L. M. McClintic, Commissioner at his office in the said County, on or before the 6th day of September, 1889.

Witness, John J. Beard, Clerk of the said Court, this 20th day of July, 1889.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

july 25-4t Printers fee $6.7

Notice to Contractors,

The undersigned Commissioners appointed by the County of Pocahontas County for the purpose will receive sealed bids until noon, Wednesday, August 14th, 1889, for the Construction of a new piece of road (about 90 rods) near Lockridge's ford, on the Warm Spring and Huntersville road, according to the following specifications:

The road to be 13 feet wide all through except at the top of hill, where it should be 18 feet wide for 60 feet, said road to be 15 inces higher on outside, sloping to the bank, well drained, with water ways, culverts and side ditches; water-ways to be 4 feet in the bottom with a gradual slope and graveled where the ground is soft or marshy or liable to become so by a constant flow of water. Contractors will give bids for dirt and stone work separately. Said Road to be completed by Nov. 15th, 1889, and the work to be paid for out of the Levy for 1889. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

AMOS BARLOW, }
JAMES H. DOYLE. } Commissioners.

1-2t

Commissioner's Notice No. 2.

Charles L. Austin &c.
vs. } In Chy. No. 2.
Wm. F Arbogast &c.

Notice is hereby given to all parties interested, that in pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered in the above named cause on the 17th day of June, 1889, I shall proceed as Commissioner of said Court at my office in the town of Huntersville, W. Va., on Saturday the 17th day of August 1889 to take, state and report the following accounts:

1st. An account showing who are entitled to share in the fund arising from the sale of 683 acres of land decreed to be sold in this cause, and the amount thereof.

2nd. An account showing what taxes have been paid upon said tract of land within the last five years before the institution of this suit, by whom paid and to whom now due.

3rd. An account showing what will be a reasonable fee to the Attorney for the Plaintiffs in this cause to be taxed on the fund in this suit.

4th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner, or requested to be specially stated by any party in interest.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

july 25-4t Printers fee $9.63.

Commissioner's Notice No 3.

Charles L. Austin &c.
vs. } In Chy. No. 3.
Wm. F. Arbogast &c.

Notice is hereby given to all parties interested, that pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County made in the above cause on the 17th day of June, 1889, I shall, as Commissioner of said Court proceed at my office in Huntersville, W. Va., on Friday the 23rd day of August 1889 to take state and report the following accounts:

1st. An account showing who are entitled to share in the fund arising from the sale of 1,328 acres of land decreed to be sold in this cause, and the amount thereof.

2nd. An account showing what taxes have been paid upon said tract of land, within five years before the institution of this suit, by whom paid and to whom now due.

3rd. An account showing what will be a reasonable fee to the Attorney for the plaintiffs in this cause, to be taxed on the fund in this suit.

4th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or required be specially stated by any party in interest.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

july 25-4t Printers fee $9.45

Commissioner's Notice.

George C. [illegible]
vs. } In Chancery.
Rebecca J. Hill & others

Notice is hereby given all parties, that pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered in the above cause on the 15th day of June, 1889, I shall as Commissioner of said Court, proceed at my office in the town of Huntersvile, W. Va., on Friday the 6th day of September, 1889, take, state and report the following matters of account:

1st. A settlement of the accounts of R. W. Hill as administrator c. t. a. of George Hill, dec'd.

2nd. An account showing the debts against the estate of George C. Hill, dec'd, showing their several amounts priorities and to whom payable.

3rd. A general description of all the lands of which George C. Hill, dec'd seized, with a statement of their fee-semple value and annual rental value.

4th. A statement of the general nature and value of all the personal estate of which George C. Hill dec'd possessed which at the date of report is remaining applicable to the payment of debts against the estate of George C. Hill, dec'd.

5th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or required by any party in interest to be specially stated.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

july 25-4t Printers fee $9.50

BRIDGE LETTING.

The undersigned Commissioner of the County Court of Pocahontas County will receive Sealed Bids until 12, m., August 15th, 1889, for the following repairs to the bridge over Knapp's Creek near Huntersville: A pier to be constructed as follows: To be of cut stone up to the distance of 12 feet from the top of the ground, well laid in cement on solid foundation, every joint well broken, the pier to be 22 feet in length at the bottom and 15 feet at the top and 8 feet wide at bottom and 5 feet at top. One abutment to be of cut stone for 12 feet above the top of the ground, well laid in cement on solid foundation, joints well broken, the abutment to be 22 feet long at bottom and 13 feet at top, 8 feet wide at bottom and 5 feet at top. All cement to be of the best quality, and any additional height of stone work, shall be ruble work laid in lime and sand. One span of 90 feet similar to the one already there. The approach to said bridge to be trestle work built of Locust posts and yoke not less than 12 inches in diameter, without hewing, said posts to be sunk in the ground not less than four feet. A distance of 12 feet in span; upon which 3 stringers 6x10 inches are to be laid on top of yokes, upon which a floor of 3 inch oak plank 16 feet long shall be laid single railing 3 feet high the whole length of said approach. The contractor shall give bond with approved security, for the faithful performance of this contract. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

1-2t L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

Go to John W[illegible] ford, W. Va., for Dee[ring] Self Binders.

John Warts & Co., o[f] [illegible] W. Va., will be here d[uring] Court with a lot of Mow[ers] [illegible] buy until you see them.

FOR DYSPEPSIA
Use Brown's Iron Bitters.
Physicians recommend it.
All dealers keep it. $1.00 per bottle. Genuine has trade-mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

Buy the Deering Mowers and Self Binders, the best machines th[at]'s made of John Warts & Co. Frankford, W. Va. may 9 12

A. R. SMITH,
Academy, W. Va.

UNDERTAKER.

Is prepared to furnish and deliver Coffins upon very short notice and at reasonable prices.

Fiduciary Notice.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement.

C. L. Austin Adm'r of Florence M. Austin dec'd.

S. B. Hannah Ex'or of Barbara A. Gum.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r of Accts.

WANTED.

500lb of dry sang.
Address BRISON HILL
Jacox, W. Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

2½ cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for 3 cts. mar. 28.

NOTICE.

I will not hereafter sell mill stuff on credit, and all who owe me will please come forward and settle their accounts at once and save further trouble.

Flour $2.50 per 100 lbs and corn 75cts per bu.

GEO. H. McGLAUGHLIN.
Edray.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

I will run a hack from Huntersville to top [illegible] Mountain and make connection [illegible] hack running to Lewisburg. [illegible] leave Huntersville daily at 6 a. m. [illegible] reasonable for passengers, baggage [illegible] express packages.

July 6th '89 R. V. PERKINS.

FOR THE BEST FURNITURE, CHAIRS AND FINEST TRIMED

in the county, go to

C. B. SWECKER,
AUCTIONEER, UNDERTAKER AND CABINET MAKER,
Dunmore, W. Va.

Administrator's Notice.

All parties holding claims against David McGlaughlin dec'd., are required to present the same at once to his administrator for payment, and all parties indebted to said David McGlaughlin are required to come forward at once and settle up.

Respectfully,
URIAH HEVENER,
Adm'r of David McGlaughlin dec'd.
June20 4-w Green Bank W. Va.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, on the first Monday of July, 1889.

R. S. Turk, ... Plaintiff.

vs.

Geo. W. McDannald, John A. McDannald, Rebecca A. McDannald, Geo. C. McDannald and E. B. McDanald... Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of the above styled suit is to have a division of 1,6[illegible], 394 and 167 acres of land lying on the head waters of Elk river in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, owned jointly by the plaintiff and the Defendants, and until such division is had, to enjoin the defendants and all others from cutting or removing any merchantable timber from the said lands or otherwise to commit waste thereon, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants, Geo. W. McDannald, John A. McDannald, Rebecca A. McDannald, George C. McDannald E. B. McDannald are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

July 11-4t. Printers fee $[illegible]

[illegible]s Times.

[illegible]cahon[illegible]. CAMPBELL,

E[illegible] AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered [illegible] the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 28, 1889.

[Continued from first page.]

the details of her story some day; a brief outline will suffice now, as I am more deeply interested in my own," squeezing the soft hand. "Elsie went on a visit to an aunt in an adjoining State, and while there was secretely married to a poor, but worthy man. The next week she returned home, and had hardly entered the house when her father announced that he had selected a husband for her. Finding refusals useless, Elsie at last disclosed her secret. He was simply furious, and shut her in her own room till he could bring her here. He says the ceremony was illegal, and declares that Elsie must remain here until she forgets Will Norton."

At the last words Nora sprang to her feet.

"Guy, Cousin Laurie is Elsie's husband! His name is William Laurence Norton, but I always call him Laurie. And he isn't poor now; his mother's brother died last week, leaving him half a million."

"You will let me row you home, Nora?"

"And Elsie?"

"She will prefer going with her husband, of course. Uncle Ned's objection to him is removed now that he is rich." After a pause, "Do you know, sweet, after Elsie had confided her love story to me I returned the compliment. And she, God bless her! referred me to Scott's poems. Did you mean it, darling? Say you did not. Let me hear you say it, do!"

"Of course, I meant it—just as that other Nora did," said saucy Nora. "Don't you remember, Guy? "But Nora's heart is lost and won, She's wedded to the Earlie's son!"

A Chinese Collection.

The highest ambition of a Chinaman is to have a nice coffin and a fine funeral.

When a Chinaman expects a present and it does not come he sends one of lessor value.

Men wear long petticoats and carry fans, while women wear short jackets and and carry canes. Boats are drawn by horses, carriages by sails.

The Chinese lack appreciation of the stage. As soon as a Celestial enters on the stage he is deprived of citizenship and his children after him for four generations.

When a Chinaman desires a visitor to dine with him he does not ask him to do so, but when he does not wish him to stay he puts the question: "Won't you stay and dine with me, please?" The visitor will then know he is not wanted.

If a Chinaman desires the death of an enemy he goes and hangs himself upon that enemy's door. It is considered a sure way to kill, not only that particular enemy, but members of his entire family will be in jeopardy of losing their lives.

In China one can always borrow money on the strength of having a son, but nobody would advance him a cent if he had a dozen daughters. The former is responsible for the debt of his father for three generations. The latter is only responsible for the debts of her own husband.

Old men play ball and fly kites, while children fold their arms and look on. Old women, instead of the young, are the idols of society. Love making is only three days before marriage. It is not only considered the safest way to get ahead of a rival, but the surest way to get a wife without losing much time.

When a Chinamen meets another he shakes and squeezes his own hands and covers his head. If great friends had not seen each other for a long time they would rub sholders until they got tired. Instead of asking each other's health, they would say: "How is your stomach?" or "Have you eaten your rice?" "How old are you?" "How much did you pay for your sandals?"

A rich man's servant gets no salary, yet many are the applicants; while big salaries are paid to the servants of common people, but few applicants. The perquisites of the former often more than triple the salary of the latter, which is the sole reason of these differences. To encourage honesty and sincerity, confidential clerks and salesmen in all branches of industry receive an annual net percentage of the firm's business, besides their regular salary.

The four highest ranks of mandarin in China are entitled to a red silk umbrella with three flounces—the smaller nobility may have only two. Gentlemen-commoners of the two highest ranks have a red state umbrella surmounted by a gourd-shaped knob of block-tin. The two next degrees have the knob of wood only, though painted red. Then comes the fifth rank, whose umbrella must be of blue cloth with a red painted wooden knob at the top, and only two flounces. The Governor-General of a province is heralded two great red silk umbrellas.

Wise Words.

Be honest and they be generous.

Mockery never degrades the just

Let none wish for unearned gold.

Whose credit is suspected is not safe to be trusted.

A truse man never frets about his place in the world.

Something is wrong when a man is afraid of himself.

Honesty is better copital than a sharper's cunning.

Leave your business unduly and your business will leave you.

It would be a shame if your mind should falter and give in before your body.

No longer talk at all about the kind of man that a good man ought to be, but be such.

We ought not to judge of men's merits by their qualification, but by the use they make of them.

Usually speaking the word-bred person in company is a young traveler just returned from abroad.

There is a transcendant power in ample. We reform others unconsciously, when we walk uprightly.

There are many that despise half the world; but if there be any that despise the whole of it, it is because the other half despises them.

Woman famed for their valor, their skill in politics or their learning, leave the duties of their own sex in order to invade the privileges of males.

Charles Dudley Warner is now lecturing on "The treatment of the Criminal Classes." He thinks they should be sent to prison instead of elected to offices. He was always queer.

Minister (making out record of baptism and in doubt about the date)—"Let me see, this is the 23rd, isn't?" Interested Mamma—"No sir; it is only the fifth and two of those are dead."

"For forty long years have my good old wife and I traveled hand in hand adown life's thorney road," said old Deacon Gush at an apple-paring party the other evening, "and in all those years not one single harsh, hasty unkind word has passed our lips when speaking to each other. Isn't that so mother?"

"Mother" had quietly fallen asleep on the sofa by Mr. Gush's side, and as he laid his hand caressingly on her shoulder, she gave a little snort of defiance and said, sharply:

"Get up yourself and build the fire, Sam Gush. I built it last and I'll see you in Guinea before I'll build it this morning, you—oh!—oh!—I—I why, where am? I guessed I dropped off to sleep."

"And I guess you'd better have stayed asleep, Lizy Gush?" hissed Samuel into her ear as the crowd around the sofa made a rush for doors and dark corners where giggling and tittering could be indulged in freely.

Insulted Montanian (to tenderfoot newspaper correspondent)—Lookee here young man, you want to be a little more keerful how you write things that ain't so to them newspapers back East. This is a high toned town, by Jinks, and the boys wont stand it!

Terrified tenderfoot—Why, I—I—what have I written?

"Why, you wrote to a Chicago paper that we lynched fourteen men here last month and it's a lie."

"I—I—thought it was true, or I—I—"

Well, it wasn't. We didn't lynch but twelve and only rid the other one on a rail and peppered him a little with buckshot. Stick to facts young man that's all we ask of you."

"Sir," said the defeated highwayman, as he slowly picked himself up and gathered himself together; "that was done very scientifically. May I ask of which class of pugilists you are the champion?"

"Of none," replied the victor. "I am simply a plain man who won't let himself be thrashed."

"Let me clasp your hand," returned the other. "In this age of champions, men of your kind are so scarce that it is rather pleasant than otherwise to be licked by one of them."

Editor—What compensation do you expect for your poem?

Poet—Regular rates.

Editor—All right, thanks.

Mamma—Howard, are you going to take parte in the tree planting at schooll on Arbor Day? Howard (emphatically)—No, I hain't; there's 'nuff switches growin' 'round our school now.

Some persons turn down the corner of a leaf of a book in order to find the place. Other turn down the street of a city for the same purpose.

A lady at the centennial banquet said that a distinguished guest ate like a bird. It is to be hoped that he did not take a peck at every mouthful.

"What is is an orphan?" asked a lady teacher. None of the children seemed to know. "Well, I am an orphan," said the teacher, as being not too plain a clew. A hand popped up and the owner explained: "An orphan is a woman that wants to get married and can't."

She had done something naughty and her mother had sent her off to bed a little earlier than usual and told her that she would punish her for it in the morning. The child knelt down to say her prayers and she put in the interpolation:

"Please, God, won't you take mamma up to Heaven—not for altogether, but just for to-morrow."

A gentleman in this town had a very bright but droll little boy. The other day the little fellow feigned sleep. His father came in and shook him gently. He remained immobile and silent. He shook him harder and would have waked a sleeping person. No movement; no noise. The boy thought he was acting natural. The father threw a drop of water in his face. Not a wince. He emptied a pitcher. Not a twitch. He threw him on a bed. The boy slept on. Soon his mother asked him why he said nothing when his father shook him.

"Tos I was asleep,' he answered.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, August 1 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 2

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. (C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.)
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.
County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Financial Statement, For the Year 1889.

FOR JAIL AND COURT-HOUSE PURPOSES.

S L Brown, jail acc't Ed. Martin	$30 50
Same, Thomas Rider	1 50
Same, Perry Townsend	21 50
M J McNeel, arrest of Perry Townsend	4 50
Henry Grose and son, plank fence C H lot	12 56
Lowry & Doyle ½ picket fence C H lot	12 19
J B Piles, wood for jail and C H	25 75
S L Brown, secial Constable	2 10
Same, jailer, receiving and boarding prisoners	3 00
Same deputy sheriff	7 00

FOR CLERK'S OFFICE & COURT PURPOSES.

Amos Briow, sundries	15 61
Kirk Snyder page Cir. Ct.	3 00
A H Sharp, jury claim	3 50
J B Piles, wood for Clk's office	14 00
J W Milligan, drawing jurors	1 00
J J Beard stationary &c	12 97
J B Canfield, pub. financial statement	35 25
Kirk Snyder, page Cir. Ct.	3 00
R C Shrader, drawing jurors	1 00
J E Campbell, printing blanks	9 37
CF Moore, Indering deed book	12 50
C F Moore, assignee of F J Snyder examining Cl'k's office	5 00
Amos Barlow, examining Cl'k's office	5 00
H S Rucker, same	10 00

ROADS & ROAD PURPOSES.

H S Rucker, broken plow	3 50
John T Sharp, road claim	3 00
E A Smith, same	3 00
J N Barnett, same	8 25
Wm M Hill, same	4 00
O W S Gum, same	3 00
E A Smith, same	5 50
J L Hudson, plank for road	15 00
John W Lindsay, road claim	3 50
C B Grimes, same 1887	2 62½
Same	3 00
Jacob M Beverage, same	3 00
Geo Callison, same	3 00
H Lee White, same	1 25
J H Galford, same	10 00
George Cooper plank for road	2 64
C C Silva, road claim	5 00
Allen Calhoun, same	3 00
Thos B Beverage, same	5 00
M Brown Trainer, same	10 25
J P Wooddell, same	42 99
J L Hudson, same	13 00
O M Alderman, same	10 00
J B McNeel, same	8 00
Geo W McKeever, same	3 00
J W Hill, same	3 00
John J Kellison, plank for road	2 12
A C L Gatewood road claim (86)	3 00
Same (87)	3 00
Same (88)	1 50
R T Mayes, use of team 3 days on road	8 00
F P Vandervourt same 1 day	2 50
S B Moore road claim	12 25
C B Swecker, same	4 50
S H Hazzard, same	6 70
H D Hively, same	9 00
James W Loury, same	3 00
H H McClintic, same	1 25
John L Cleek, same	3 00
Geo D Oliver, same	21 00
Wise Herold, same	6 40
S J Sutton, same	8 00
Geo McErvine, same	3 00
H H McClintic, plank for bridge	6 50
Clabe Ashford road claim	5 50
C W Underwood, road claim	3 00
John A Clarkson, use of mule on road	1 50
J W Oliver, use of team on road	8 00
Clayton Dilley, road claim	8 00
Jas W Riley, same	6 25
C W Perry, plank for road	5 74
D W S Alderman road claim	11 50
Sheldon Moore, same	3 00
Wm H Dilley, same	7 37
Sheets & McGlaughlin, plank for road	16 74
A D W Hill, road claim	5 00
Geo W Whiting, same	3 55
P M Harper, same (1887)	1 50
Same (1888)	1 50
A F Denning, same	20 50
R W Hill, same	3 75
W O Jack, same	8 00
John M Ratliff, same	14 50
John Will Sheets, same	5 00
John W Malcomb, same	13 00
F M White, same	11 00
G P Moore, 112 feet plank	1 12
A K Dysard, road claim	3 50
R M Yeager, same	16 12
Geo Baxter, surveying road	12 00
J Rankin Poage, road claim	7 00
Giles Sharp, same	3 00
Jno C Price, same	14 50
Geo W Wagoner, same	1 50
S D Price, road claim	3 00
John A Young, same	1 50
Paul Sharp, same	6 50
Wm M Sharp, same	3 00
A M McCay, same	5 00
C I Hill, same	3 00
G W Wagner, same	25 00
Marion Ray, same	6 50
Brown M Arbogast, same	3 00
James D Kerr, same	8 00
W H McGlaughlin, same	7 75
W H McGlaughlin, same	3 75
W A G Sharp, same	1 50
Wallace H McGlaughlin, same	3 00
C M Rogers, same	3 00
Ernest N Moore, same	8 00
D A Peck, same	7 50
Peter W Warwick, putting up foot bridge	4 50
G D Oliver, same	5 00
A M Oliver, same	2 50
Wm M Siple, .	5 00
Same plank	2 35
K O Wade, road claim	4 00
W R & C M Cole, allowance	35 00
H M Lockridge, claim	10 00
Jas Gibson, plank for culverts	25 00
Sam'l A McCarty road claim	4 00
J M Cutlip, serving process in road case	50
Geo S McComb, assig. of W R & C M Cole, road allowance	15 00
A M McGlaughlin, witness in road case	1 60
W H McClintic, same	2 10
C A Yeager, lumber for bridges &c., 1885	20 00
J L Cleek, allowance on road	65 00
James Gibson	200 00
For road purposes &c	2 625 00
John W Tyler, viewing road	2 00
Sam'l M Gay, same	2 00
John Waugh jr, same	2 00
Amos P McGlaughlin, bal on fill	40 00

MEDICAL ATTENTION TO POOR &C

Dr Wm G Townsend, sundry medical acct's	78 70
Dr Chas Gwinn, same	22 20
Dr W G Townsend, medical acct's	9 00
Dr J B Lockridge, same	3 00
Dr J B Lockridge, same	7 00
Dr M Wallace, same	20 35
same	37 90
Dr J P Mooman, same	29 80
Dr C L Austin	62 20
McClintic & Ligon, same	25 00
Dr F T McClintic, medical services to poor	40 00
Dr S P Patterson, same	47 50
Barlow & Moore, 2 poor accounts	16 25
Geo P Moore, coffin for poor	5 00
A B McComb, making coffin and trimmings	6 00
Mathew Corbett, keeping pauper	35 00
Sam'l R Hogsett, same	10 00
Wm R Sutton	25 00
John B Kennison, Overseer of poor	6 00
P M Harper, making coffin for 2 paupers	10 60
J B Bradshaw, furnishing supplies	3 59
Jas C Gay, keeping Wm Dilley and son	60 00
John L Cleek, removing pauper to Greenbrier co	4 00
A R Smith, making 3 coffins for paupers	13 00
Jas A McClure, Lumber for poor farm 1884	31 12

ELECTIONS &C

Dinnis and Argabrite, making pole books	4 00
J H Patterson Com'r of Election 1 day	501
Adam Arbogast, same 2½	3 75
J W Warwick, same 1	1 50
A M Oliver Clerk 1	1 50
C L Barner, same 1	1 50
W H Cackley, com'r 2	3 00
E N Moore, same 1	1 50
G W Arbogast, same 1	1 50
John Taylor, clerk 1	1 50
Hugh McGlaughlin, same 1	1 50
P D Yeager, com'r 1	1 50
N B Arbogast, same 1	1 50
Lafayette Berner, same 1	1 50
P D Arbogast, Clerk election 1 day	1 50
W J Yeager, same 1	1 50
John B Kinnison, com'r 2	3 00
C W Eskridge, same 1	1 50
R V Hill, same 1	1 50
J H Clark, clerk 1	1 50
W S Anderson, same 1	1 50
W J Moore, same 1	1 50
O B Sharp, same 1	1 50
D W C Slanker, same 1	1 50
L P Curry, same 1	1 50
John E Barlow, com'r 2	3 00
Wm M Sharp, same 1	1 50
Geo K Gay, same 1	1 50
A R Gay, Clerk 1	1 50
Charles Cook, same 1	1 50
S L Brown, com'r 1	1 50
D A Fisher, same 1	1 50
Sheldon Moore, same 1	1 50
C F Moore, Clerk 1	1 50
H P McGlaughlin, same 1	1 50
John B Kennison, com'r 4	6 00
M J McNeel, same 3	4 50
R W Hill, same 3	4 50
W H Landes, clerk 3	4 50
J H Clark, same 3	4 50
Peter D Yeager, com'r 1	1 50
Lafayette Burner, same 3	4 50
A M V Arbogast, same 1	1 50
P D Arbogast, same	1 50
W J Yeager, same	1 50
Geo W Arbogast Com'r of election 2½	3 75
W H Cackley, same 1½	2 25
E N Moore same	2 25
Hugh McGlaughlin, clerk same	2 25
John M Barnett, same	2 25
Geo W Siple com'r same 4	6 00
Adam Arbogast, same 2½	3 75
John R Warwick, same	3 75
John R Hevener, clerk same	3 75
Ezra Wooddell, same	3 75
Wm M Sharp com'r same 2	3 00
John W Tyler same 3	4 50
W T Via same 2	3 00
John C Warwick, clerk same 2	3 00
J W G Smith, same	3 00
E D King, com'r same 1	1 50
S S Varner, same 2½	3 75
H B Sharp, same 1	1 50
D W C Slanker, clerk same 1	1 50
W Bande Hannah same	1 50
I B Moore com'r same 2	3 00
A Herold same 1	1 50
W A G Sharp, same	1 50
W J Moore, clerk same	1 50
O B Sharp, same	1 50
W P Hogsett, com'r same 1½	2 25
Sheldon Moore, same	2 25
J H Doyle, same	2 25
M A Friel, clerk same	2 25
R Dice Rimel, same	2 50

COUNTY OFFICERS & COUNTY PURPOSES.

John J Beard, clerk Cir. Ct.	100 00
Same, County	175 00
Same, examining land and property books	30 00
Same, making off land books	75 00
S L Brown, jailer	75 00
C O Arbogast, assessor	325 00
L M McClintic, prosecuting attorney	350 00
M J McNeel, sheriff	175 00
For Juries	600 00
S H Clark, com'r county ct.	6 00
Geo P Moore, same	44 00
S B Hannah, same	38 00
C E Beard, same	36 00
C O Arbogast, assesors commissions	42 23
Depositum	500 00
Total amount levied for.	$7 282 55

Found at Drury's Bluff.

BY PHILIP JARVIS.

"Phil, my boy, wish me good luck! I'm going to ask Mildred Graves to marry me before I go."

My God! I wish him luck in winning the woman who was all the world to me! The one woman whom I had loved from my boyhood's days! All the savage in my nature was aroused into fury at the thought that he dared to aspire to what was mine, by the right of long years devotion. I could have throttled him as he stood there—so handsome and debonair—so self-reliant and confident of success.

Yet what claims had I upon her affections? The hot blood grew cold; my fierce wrath died out. How could I be sure she might not love him best? Was he not finer-looking, more agreeable than I, a man in every respect better calculated to win a girl's fancy?

Mildred and I had been friends from our school days, the most intimate friends; and on my part that friendship had grown into a part of life itself. I had no hopes, no ambitions, which had not her happiness for their object. Yet no word or token of love had passed between us. I was shy and reticent on this one subject that lay so near my heart. I shrank from declaring myself her lover, doubtless feeling that if she could not return my love I should destroy forever our friendly relations.

So matters stood between us, when she was twenty, and I twenty-one, in the fall of '60 when Carl Maxam came to our village. He and I were associated in business and soon became friends, as friendly intimacy goes between men. He was five years my senior, and had read and traveled much, and had acquired the ease and polish of a man of the world, while I was shy and reticent in society. I felt he had every advantage in his favor, in his intercourse with Mildred, but until to-day I had never had a jealous feeling.

In the spring of '61 came the fall of Sumter, and the declaration of war. We both enlisted, though in different regiments, and were ready to leave for Washington. We had returned to our homes for the final leave takings with friends, I in my plain suit with only a Sergeant's chevrons on my sleeve, he in the gilt and epaulettes of a Lieutenant, looking handsomer than ever in his fine uniform.

On the morrow we were to rejoin our regiments, and on this last afternoon had met for a final friendly chat. We had talked on other matters of mutual interest and at the last moment, as we stood at the gate, he had said:

"And now comes the toughest part of it. I'm going to ask Mildred Graves to marry me before I go. Phil, my boy, wish me good luck, can't you?"

Filled with surprise and anger I could make no reply; but it passed unnoticed as he went on without looking at me. "I have been half in love with her ever since I first met her, and long ago decided she should be my wife if I ever got ready to marry, that is, of course," with a nervous laugh, "if she'd have me. I don't know, she always seemed to like me, and I fancy I've the inside track there; at all events I'm going to make sure; I'm not going off for a year or two and leave her for some other fellow to win. If she'll promise to marry me, I can trust her to wait my return, if it were ever so long.

At that moment, to my great relief, the Captain of his company drove by and stopped to take Carl in.

"Well, good by, old fellow, hope to see you later," and with a wave of his hand he was gone.

"He shall never have her," I said savagely to myself, as he was driving away; "at least, I will know first if there is anychance for me," and I hurried off to Mildred's home.

But when once in her presence—fool that I was—I talked of everything else, past, present and future, all save the subject that lay nearest my heart; my tongue seemed tied whenever I approached that.

A half-hour passed, other visitors come and I rose to leave. Mildred followed me to the gate.

"I shall miss you so much," she said, as she held out her hand at parting. There were tears in her eyes, and a tremor in her voice. My heart leaped; surely she must love me a little, and the words I had tried so hard to utter came to my lips; but she added: "you have always been a brother to me," and I felt as if a cup of cold water had been dashed in my face.

Ah! yes, a brother! she had never thought of me as a lover; could I declare myself one and lose all this friendly regard? I hesitated—others joined us, and the oppor-

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

August 1, 1889.

The Army of Unemployed.

The senior editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate has written an interesting little pamphlet entitled "The Unemployed."

We do not endorse everything that the writer says about the causes of the enforced idleness of many of our poor people, but a few of his statements of fact are worth reproducing. The editor of the Advocate says that thirty or forty years ago every laborer was a real or prospective land-owner. Charles Dickens at that time visited this country, and wrote from Boston: "There is not a man in this town nor in the state who has not a blazing fire and meat every day for his dinner; nor would a flaming sword in the air attract more attention than a beggar in the street." Of course this language was too strong, but it gives a good idea of the general prosperity of that day. Two or three years after the date of that letter the Advocate writer traveled leisurely through the western, middle and eastern states and saw no professional beggars, with the exception of a few in New York.

But such is not the case now. Our wealth is three times greater than it was thirty or forty years ago, but the number of the poor is five times what it then was. Our wealth has increased threefold and our poor fivefold.

This way of putting it makes the outlook gloomy indeed. Naturally, the gap between the rich and the poor is increasing, and with oppression and greed we find bitterness and strife and the possibility of a class conflict.

Our Christian Advocate contemporary believes that the hope of the country rests with the farmers. Wise legislation that will improve the condition of the farmers and make them prosperous and independent will be our best safeguard in the future. To this end he gives his readers the following advice: "Be American citizens, study the federal constitution and the constitutions of your respective states that you may well understand the principles upon which your government is founded, then select wise, true and reliable men to legislate, to adjudicate and execute just and proper laws. With such men you will always have a good government, and with such government you will soon have the arrogant and oppressive combinations, trusts and monopolies healthfully regulated by statutory laws, so they will operate not to the benefit of a few only, but to the benefit of all classes. You may then have peace, and with the blessings of the Almighty have prosperity."

All this is rather general in its scope, but it is sound and on the right line. One thing is certain—we must give the great army of unemployed something to do or its increasing and clamoring hosts will give us something to do in a very unpleasant line. This is a matter for all good citizens as well as statesmen to think about.—Atlanta Constitution.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON July, 26.—The Pension Bureau is enjoying a sensation of the biggest kind. Certain newspapers have been making charges of more or less importance against almost every branch of that office ever since Commissioner Tanner took charge. And now the action of Secretary Noble in appointing a committee to investigate the re-rating of all pensions during the past twelve months, and the charges of favoritism in making the applications of a prominent pension attorney of this city special, has opened the eyes of a good many people to the fact that there must be some basis for these charges. The committee investigating holds daily sittings in the Pension office. The sessions are secret but enough has leaked out to make it certain that they have discovered a very loose way of doing business in the matter of re-rating pensions; it has been learned to a certainty that many clerks in the office have been largely benefitted by getting their pensions re rated, some of them getting an increase of as much as $10, a month. It is believed that many discharges will follow the investigation unless the thing is hushed up which is not at all probable now. If this committee should make a white washing report there will be a Congressional investigation as soon as Congress meets that will show up the real condition of things. Commissioner Tanner is said to have received several letters from Governor Foraker of Ohio urging him not to change his liberal policy toward the veterians, at least not during the gubernatorial campaign. From what can be learned on the outside almost every pensioner employed in the Pension bureau has had his pension re rated and increased during the last twelve months. It is said that it was the amount of money spent by certain Pension office officials that first aroused the suspicion of a wide awake newspaper man as to where it came from.

Smith the colored democrat, who was dismissed from the Sixth Auditors office bids fair to become a National issue. He says he will appeal his case to the civil service commission and demand reinstatement on the ground that he was dismissed on account of his politics. He is indulging in a great waste of time, and does not seem to realize that the civil service law was passed for the special purpose of being violated.

The alleged combination of Southern republican Representatives, who were to vote for Brewer of North Carolina for Speaker of the House until he was elected for the administration had agreed to give them the patronage they claim, is already going to pieces, Representative Ewart, of North Carolina, having announced his intention of voting for McKinley for Speaker, and in the event of his withdrawal for Barrough's or Cannon.

The Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury department is a very important position in more ways than one, and considerable talk has followed the sudden withdrawal of the opposition of Grand Masterly Powderly and other labor leaders to the appointment of Thomas Furlong, a St. Louis railroad detective, to the position. Furlong's principal backer is Russell Harrison son of the President and it is generally believed, now that the labor opposition is removed that he will get the place. The labor people opposed him because of his work during the Western railroad strikes. Why they withdrew their opposition is a conundrum that is too much for mid summer weather.

Senator Barbour of Virginia who is also chairman of the democratic State committee has been interviewed on the political situation in that State. He says "Virginia is naturally democratic. It is too early to outline the issue on which the battle will be fought, but I presume Mahone will make the high protective tariff his rallying cry, I do not know how much of a figure Langston, the negro would be Congressman will cut. He hates Mahone enough to give him trouble if he can, but he may be bought off with a good office by the administration before the campaign opens. The campaign will excite national interest because the Republican National Committee propose to aid their party with money and speakers. I cannot name the democratic nominee, but, whoever he is he will be the next Governor of Virginia."

Senator Hampton has just returned from an extensive Canadian tour. He says the people there are very serious by considering the annexation question, and he thinks a large majority are opposed to it at the present time.

The Connellsville Coke men will go off on a strike August 1st.

The Yellow river in China has again overflowed, bearing death to thousands.

Imprisonment for debt is still the law in Maine. The barbarians still hold the fort in Maine.

A recent fire at Lu Chow, China destroyed over 87,000 dwellings and 1,600 lives were lost.

The Republicans of Va., may nominate Mahone for Governor, "but they can't elect him you know."

The wealth of Frederick Douglass, United States minister to Hayti, is estimated at $300,000.

A detective has sued Wanamaker for $500 for services rendered in hunting up stolen goods.

An American lady of Tennesee is under sentence of death in Corea for preaching Christianity.

The marriage of the Princess Louise, eldest daughter of the Prince of Wales, to the Earl of Fife took place on the 28th.

Under Clevelands administration sugar that would cost $1.00 you have to pay $1.50 for it now. It is protected.

A man has been arrested in London who claims that he is the man who killed the White Chapel victims. But it is thought that he is insane.

A man in Atlanta, Ga., has just laughed himself to death. Probably he was contemplating the efforts of the Southern governors to arrest the prize fighters.

Some one has recently published a book entitled, "People I Have Smiled With." There must be a good deal of the give away about this. The friends of the author are not likely to buy it for their wives to read.

MASONIC NOTICE

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE NO. 65, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'ty.

6-31

HOME NEWS

—Locals are scarce this week.

—Berries seem to be very plentiful around here.

—What has become of our Academy correspondent.

—W. S. Yager of Baltimore was in town Sunday.

—In this issue will be found the financial statement.

—Several lumbermen are at Hotel by Wagner, waiting for work to commence.

—Capt D. A. Stofer, who has been on Elk for a short while has returned.

—Letters can be sent through the mails and the postage collected from the party to whom addressed.

—Rev. D. A. Penick and wife of Kerr's Creek, Va., passed through town last week.

—Mr. Dan'l O'Connell, and family are in town. Mr. O'Connell will commence cutting lumber above town soon.

—We've had a good deal of rain in the last few days, and its sorter bad on the farmers about getting up their grass.

—Three negroes escaped from the Covington, Va., jail last week by running out the door over the jailor.

—Mr. Jacob Beard, of Pocahontas county, was in town Monday to see his brother off to Washington Territory.—Independent.

—The Rev. A. A. P. Neal, preached last night (Wednesday) and will also preach to-night in the Methodist church.

—B. P. Bloom, formerly of Dunmore walks the streets of Parsons Tucker Co., W. Va., with a broad grin. It's a boy.

—We are under obligations to Mr. Henry Yeager, of Cheyenne, Wyoming Ty., for papers from that place.

—If you want a Lock Lever hay and grain rake or any repairs

Call on

R. P. MCGLAUGHLIN agent
Huntersville W. Va.

—We learn from the Alleghany Sentinel, that it is reported that the Warm, Hot and Healing Springs have been sold to the C. & O. R. R. Co.

—The memorial sermon of Mrs. Catherine R. Campbell will be preached the second Sabbath of August in Huntersville, by the Rev. M. D. Dunlap, or in his absence by the Pastor.

—A negro by the name of John Carter was lynched near Lewisburg last week, for the shooting of a constable in Summers county, who attempted to arrest him.

—Capt John Peters, of Pocahontas county, brought in two cherry rafts Sunday night by hard scrapping. There was 34,000 feet in the lot. This makes the Captain's 61st trip and 65th raft, and he has never hung up yet.—Ronceverte Messenger.

Notice to Friends

It has been circulated of late since I had the misfortune to have one of my little girls lost for a short while that I had mistreated her that caused her to leave home, which is a base falsehood. Furthermore my child will testify to the same. I also sincerely thank the kind people who aided me in finding my child.

Respectfully,
AMOS DILLEY.

Institute Notice 1889.

The Institute for Pocahontas Co., will convene in Huntersville, August 26th, beginning at 9 o'clock., A. M.

Teacher's will be required to attend and put in full time. No excuse taken for non-attendance except those given by law.

Teachers holding four years certificates will be required to attend the Institute and pass an examination on Pysiology.

M. G. MATHEWS,
Co. Supt.

Notice.

Edray, July 29th, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Charges having been made against, me which affected me as a Minister of the Gospel, and which I have no doubt many of my friends, both white and colored believed—a church meeting was held, to investigate the matter, at which meeting it was from that I was wholly innocent of the charges made.

Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper, to state publicly that the Church, at Edray, of which I am pastor here declared me innocent. Respectfully,

REV. I. M. BOGGS.

LADY CORRESPONDENT, wanted by a young man of 26 years; good looking, weigh 150lbs 5 feet 8 inches high; worth some money and of a good family and would like a young lady correspondent from 16 to 25.

Address P. O. Box 16,
Dilley's Mill, W. Va.

Dunmore Doings.

Mr. S. L. Jackson, with his accomplished lady, of Ronceverte, is visiting friends and relatives at this place, and will go to Huttonsville this week.

W. H. Cackley is off on a business trip to Ronceverte.

Rev. W. T. Price's meeting was largely attended at Dunmore.

Farmers are busy putting up hay and grass.

Our hay crop is over an average; the wheat crop will make 80 per cent.; oats 90; and corn 80 or 90.

Singing first Sunday in August at Pine Grove school house, at 3 p. m.

TOM SAWYER.

Green Bank Items.

Several persons from our neighborhood attended sacramental meeting at Dunmore yesterday, and reported a very pleasant time.

We have a flourishing Sunday School at this place. The Banner, through long delayed arrived at last and as it is a thing of beauty should be a joy forever.

Dr. S. P. Patterson, of Huntersville was called to Green Bank last week to see Miss Sallie Patterson, who has been seriously ill at her uncle's for some time, but we are glad to say, is somewhat better at this writing.

Mr. Davis the artist has moved his gallery to our place, and is now ready for business.

The Rev. A. A. P. Neale, will preach at this place on Tuesday the 30th, at 8 p. m.

DANLINA.

Drexl Morgan & Co., have become the purchasers of 100,000 shares of the common stock of the C. & O. Railroad Company of C. P. Huntington, for $2,250,000.

The biggest sea turtle on record was caught off Cape Cod recently. He was 10 feet long, 5 feet wide, and weighed 1,000 pounds, and some of the people who saw him had not been drinking, either.

The Milwaukee newspaper man puts the pathetic touch of experience in his words when he writes: "Everybody begs and borrows from a bachelor, and then the whole crowd asks in a chorus why he does not save money, with only himself to care for."

Many Persons
Are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile, and cures malaria. Get the genuine.

During the last fifteen months the Government has paid $23,873,100 in premiums on the purchase of $151,445,750 of Government bonds. These bonds come high, but we must have them in order to get rid of some of the surplus revenue unnecessarily extracted from the pockets of the people.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The Charleston News and Courier says: "All well-read people know that it is the negro that has turned the tide of immigration from the south ever since the tide of immigration began to flow; indeed, that it is the black man that has kept our green hills and fertile valleys from being crowded with people anxious to leave the fey north for on more congenial clime."

The Richmond Dispatch adds the following indorsement: "There can be no other reason. The negro is a good laborer for some reasons; but he is not of the kind that white men will consort with. Would that the negroes could be equally distributed over all the states and territories. Look at the new states and see what Virginia would have been to-day if she had had few or no negroes since 1850."

Neuralgic Persons
And those troubled with nervousness resulting from care or overwork will be relieved by taking Brown's Iron Bitters. Genuine has trade mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

To the creditors of George C. Hill, deceased.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas made in a cause therein pending to subject the real estate of the said Geo. C. Hill, to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said George C. Hill for adjudication to L. M. McClintic, Commissioner at his office in the said County, on or before the 6th day of September, 1889.

Witness, John J. Beard, Clerk of the said Court, this 20th day of July, 1889.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

july 25-6t Printers fee $6,70

Notice to Contractors,

The undersigned Commissioners appointed by the County of Pocahontas County for the purpose will receive sealed bids until noon, Wednesday, August 14th, 1889, for the Construction of a new piece of road (about 90 rods) near Lockridge's ford, on the Warm Spring and Huntersville road, according to the following specifications;

The road to be 15 feet wide all it should except at the top of hill, where road to be 18 feet wide for 60 feet, and sloping to be 15 inces higher on outside, at water the bank, well drained, with water-ways, culverts and side ditches; with a ways to be 4 feet in the bottom the gradual slope and graveled wherever the ground is soft or marshy or liable to become so by a constant flow of water and Contractors will give bids for dirt and stone work separately. Said Road to be completed by Nov. 15th, 1889, and for work to be paid for out of the Levy of 1889. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

AMOS BARLOW,
JAMES H. DOYLE, } Commissioners.

1-3t.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in July, 1889.

Cyrena H. Wilfong, ...Plaintiff,
vs.
Henry A. Yeager, Joseph W. Riley and Charles A. Lightner .... Defendants

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant Henry A. Yeager, and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Yeager to the plaintiff, Cyrena H. Wilfong by bond, dated the 2nd day of October, 1882, for $[illegible], payable one day after date of the bond. Subject to a credit for $45.00 as of February 1st, 1886, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Henry A. Yeager is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Clk.

[illegible] & McCLINTIC, Sl's.

July [illegible] Printers fee $ [illegible]

Commissioner's Notice.

George C. Hill's Adm'r
vs. } In Chancery.
Rebecca J. Hill & others

Notice is hereby given all parties that pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered in the above cause on the 15th day of June, 1889, I shall as Commissioner of said Court, proceed at my office in the town of Huntersville, W. Va. on Friday the 6th day of September, 1889, take, state and report the following matters of account:

1st. A settlement of the accounts of R. W. Hill as administrator c. t. a. of George Hill, dec'd.

2nd. An account showing the debts against the estate of George C. Hill, dec'd, showing their several amounts priorities and to whom payable.

3rd; A general description of all the lands of which George C. Hill, dec'd seized, with a statement of their fee-semple value and annual rental value.

4th. A statement of the general nature and value of all the personal estate of which George C. Hill dec'd possessed which at the date of report is remaining applicable to the payment of debts against the estate of George C. Hill, dec'd.

5th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or required by any party in interest to be specially stated.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

july 25-4t Printers fee $9.50

BRIDGE LETTING.

The undersigned Commissioner of the County Court of Pocahontas County will receive Sealed Bids until 12, m., August 15th, 1889, for the following repairs to the bridge over Knapp's Creek near Huntersville: A pier to be constructed as follows: To be of cut stone up to the distance of 12 feet from the top of the ground, well laid in cement on solid foundation, every joint well broken, the pier to be 22 feet in length at the bottom and 18 feet at the top and 8 feet wide at bottom and 5 feet at top. One abutment to be of cut stone for 12 feet above the top of the ground, well laid in cement on solid foundation, joints well broken, the abutment to be 22 feet long at bottom and 18 feet at top, 8 feet wide at bottom and 5 feet at top. All cement to be of the best quality, and any additional height of stone work shall be ruble work laid in lime and sand. One span of 90 feet similar to the one already there. The approach to said bridge to be trussle work built of Locust posts and yokes not less than 12 inches in diameter, without hewing, said posts to be sunk in the ground not less than four feet. A distance of 12 feet in spans upon which 5 stringers 8x10 inches are to be laid on top of yokes, upon which a floor of 2 inch oak plank 16 feet long shall be laid single railing 3 feet high the whole length of said approach. The contractor shall give bond with approved security, for the faithful performance of this contract. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

1-2t L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

Staunton Marble Works.

If you want head stones Marble and granite Monuments etc., etc., you can do no better than to buy from

G. C. COOPER, agent,
Green Bank, Pocahontas Co.,
W. Va.

A. R. SMITH,
Academy, W. Va.

UNDERTAKER.

Is prepared to furnish and deliver Coffins upon very short notice and at reasonable prices.

WANTED.

500lb of dry sang.
Address BRISON HILL
JACOX, W. Va.

GOOD FLOUR.

2½ cts pr. pound, meal 75 cts per bushel at H. H. McClintic's mill, also his flour at A. Barlow's Huntersville, and Barlow & Moore's, Edray for 3 cts. mar. 28.

SHOEMAKER'S SHOP
at
Huntersville, W. Va.

I am prepared to make in the best syle and order, Boots and Shoes of all kinds, also repairingdone in neat style.

May 16 6 m. J. C. THOMPSON

NOTICE.

I will not hereafter sell mill stuff on credit, and all who owe me will please come forward and settle their accounts at once and save further trouble.

Flour $2.50 per 100 lbs and corn 75cts per bu.

GEO. H. McGLAUGHLIN.
Edray.

NOTICE TO TRAVELERS.

I will run a hack from Huntersville to top Droop Mountain and make connection with hack running to Lewisburg. Will leave Huntersville daily at 6 a. m. Terms reasonable for passengers, baggage or express packages.

July 6th '89 R. V. PERKINS.

FOR THE BEST FURNITURE, CHAIRS AND FINEST TRIMED

in the county, go to

C. B. SWECKER,
AUCTIONEER, UNDERTAKER AND CABINET MAKER,
Dunmore, W. Va.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

To the creditors of Hugh M. Carpenter deceased:

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas made in a cause therein pending to subject the real estate of the said Hugh M. Carpenter, to the payment of his debts, you are required to present your claims against the estate of the said Hugh M. Carpenter, for adjudication to L. M. McClintic, commissioner at his office in the said county on or before the 6th day of September, 1889.

Witness, John J. Beard, Clerk of the said Court this 20th day of July 1889.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

July 25 6t. Printers fee $6.70

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's office of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, on the first Monday of July, 1889.

R. S. Turk, ... Plaintiff.
vs.
Geo. W. McDannald, John J. McDannald, Rebecca A. McDannald, Geo. C. McDannald and E. B. McDannald... Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of the above styled suit is to have a division of 1,622, 304 and 19 acres of land lying on the head waters of Elk river in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, owned jointly by the plaintiff and the Defendants, and until such division is had, to enjoin the defendants and all others from cutting or removing any merchantable timber from the said lands or otherwise to commit waste thereon, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants, Geo. W. McDannald, John J. McDannald, Rebecca A. McDannald, George C. McDannald E. B. McDannald are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

July 11 4t. Printers fee $9.78.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

August 1, 1889.

[Continued from first page.]

tunity to speak was lost forever. I said "good-by," and went home, inwardly raging at my own stupidity.

"But perhaps it is better so," I thought at last; "she would remember me as a friend, love me as such, which as a rejected lover, she could never do."

Then I thought of all her kindness during the long years of our intimate friendship; might it not be possible that underneath all this sisterly regard there might lie the germs of a deeper love? And could I not awaken it to life by long and careful wooing? I would be so patient if there was only one spark of hope that she would ever love me. I would, like Jacob of old, serve seven years, oh,—so willingly, could I but win her. Was I not a coward, after all, to yield my own chance of success to another, by not putting my fate to the test?

Under the influence of this feeling I dashed off an ardent, impulsive letter. All the love I could never speak, found expression now.

"Can you not, dearest Millie," I concluded, "find down deep in your heart, underneath all this sisterly regard you have given me, one spark of something dearer, sweeter than a sister's love? Will you not give me just one word of hope that, in time, you may learn to love me better than a brother or friend?"

I sent the letter by a sure messenger, and waited impatiently for a reply. Now it was done, and I had risked all on one throw of the dice, I felt all the gambler's unrest. My blood was alternately at fever heat or ice cold. The moments seemed hours. Hopes and fears alternately held sway, until I could scarcely endure the suspense. At last the answer came. Hurrying to my room, I tore open the envelope. There in Millie's handwriting, I had learned to love so well, were the words: "Dear Friend;". a cold hand seemed to clutch my heart as I read: "Your letter was a great surprise to me. I have always regarded you as a friend, and as such, you will ever have my highest esteem, but my love has long been given to another. Forgive me if I give you pain by this avowal, and I pray God may bless and keep you, in the danger into which you are going. Sincerely your friend, Mildred Graves."

The letter fell from my hands, my head dropped upon the table beside me. The worst had come! All the hopes and fears, the sweet dreams of a lifetime were over. Carl had won her, and I had lost all that made life endurable.

The memory of every hour of sweet companionship—every gracious smile she had ever given me—every kindly word came back with redoubled sweetness, now that she was lost to me forever. Through all the years of youth and manhood she had been interwoven with every hope and plan; it seemed like giving up life itself to lose her. But ...good citizens as well as ...ers to think about.—Atlanta ...tution.

[W]ASHINGTON LETTER.

[From] our regular correspondent.]

[WA]SHINGTON July, 26.—The ...n Bureau is enjoying a sen... of the biggest kind. Cer... ...ewspapers have been making ...s of more or less importance ...t almost every branch of that ... ever since Commissioner Tan... ...ok charge. And now the ac... ...f Secretary Noble in appoint... committee to investigate the ...ing of all pensions during the ...twelve months, and the charges ...voritism in making the appli... ...ns of a prominent pension at... ...y of this city special, has open... ...e eyes of a good many people ...e fact that there must be some ... for these charges. The com... ...e investigating holds daily sit... in the Pension office. The ...ons are secret but enough has ...ed out to make it certain that ... have discovered a very loose ... of doing business in the mat... of re-rating pensions; it has ... learned to a certainty that ...y clerks in the office have been ...ely benefitted by getting their ...sions re-rated, some of them ...ing an increase of as much as ... a month. It is believed that ...y discharges will follow the in...igation unless the thing is hush... ...p which is not at all probable. ... If this committee should ...ke a white washing report there ... be a Congressional investiga... as soon as Congress meets ...t will show up the real condi... of things. Commissioner Tan... is said to have received several ...ers from Governor Foraker of ...o urging him not to change his ...ral policy toward the veterians.

...ated hurled their forces against us and were met by the fiercest resistance of our men. Charge succeeded charge, volley returned volley, repulse followed repulse; backward and forward surged the huge columns of men; broken, rallying, retreating, advancing; cheering for victory one moment, and beaten back by the foe the next.

The dead, the wounded, the dying lay in heaps. The wheels of the guns could not be moved until the windrows of dead were removed. There were few wounded, nearly all were killed outright. Carefully we removed those few and bore them to the hospital tent in the rear. I was directing my men in the work, when suddenly from among the piles of dead, a face was upturned, a face I knew only too well. Carl Maxam and I had met at last.

He was horribly mangled and I saw could only live a few moments unless the flow of blood was checked. For an instant the thought flashed across my brain, "If he died Millie would be free!" But I crushed back the traitorous thought, and hastily improvising torniquets I stopped the bleeding arteries as best I could, and, with the help of one of my men, bore him to the hospital tent.

He opened his eyes as we laid him down. One glance and I knew I was recognized. He raised his hand feebly, and tried to reach his breast pocket.

"A package—my pocket!" he gasped.

I slipped my hand into an inside breast pocket and drew forth a small package, carefully enclosed.

"Mildred," he said, with great effort, looking at me wistfully, and vainly trying to say more. His lips moved for a moment but no sound came from them; then the jaws relaxed, an ashen pallor spread over his face, and with a few short gasps he was dead.

I placed the package in my breast pocket, and just at that moment the call sounded to re-form in line of battle, and we were hurried away to another part of the field. In half an hour we were again in the thickest of the fight.

[A]t the first charge a ball passed [th]rough my leg, and the battle of [D]ury's Bluff was over for me, and [the] war, also, it proved, for after [se]veral weeks in the hospital I was [dis]charged from the service and re[tur]ned home.

All this time I had carefully kept [the] package Carl had given me. I [ha]d a morbid desire to give it to [Mi]ldred in person, and waited my [retu]rn home, which I knew from [the] first must soon come.

The day after my return I lay on [a] large, old fashioned lounge in [the] living room of my father's house [wh]en Mildred came to me. Wan [an]d wasted with suffering, with [on]e leg gone, I was scarcely more [th]an the wreck of my former self.

She had changed almost as much [as] I; all the girlish freshness and [bl]oom had faded, and the grave, [qu]iet manner seemed more befiting [a] woman of fifty than a girl of [tw]enty-three; yet to me she seemed [de]arer and sweeter than ever.

"I am so glad to see you home [on]ce more!" she said, as she grasp[ed] my out strenched hand.

There were tears in her eyes, and [he]r voice trembled.

How good it seemed to look into [he]r face, to hear the sound of her [vo]ice, and feel the pressure of her [h]and once more!

Could she—could she care for me, [no]w Carl was dead! I found my[se]lf so eager, even now, for her love, [th]at I would be only too thankful [fo]r even a small part she had given [hi]m.

But Carl's letter must be deliv[er]ed first, though it might be the [m]eans of separating us still more [w]idely.

After a few mutual inquiries and [re]plies I drew the package from my [po]cket.

"I found Carl on the battle field of Dury's Bluff, and he gave me this for you as he was dying," I said, holding it out to her, and immediately turning away my head that I might not see her emotion.

"For me?" she said in tones of surprise. "I don't understand."

"It probably explains itself," I said wondering why she should think it strange that Carl should send a dying message to her.

I heard the rustle of paper as she undid the package, and in another instant with a strange cry she dropped on her knees beside the lounge.

"O Philip, Philip! what does it mean?" she said, her face as white as the letter she held out to me with trembling hands.

I took it, and the first line brought me to a sitting position with an astonishment great as her own. I read in her handwriting the words:

"DEAR PHIL: There is no need that you should teach me to love you. I learned that lesson long ago. You have been dearest [illegible] in the world to me since our childhood days. Come to me at eight this evening and you will find, Your own love, MILLIE."

Faint and giddy with the surging tide of emotions that swept over me, I caught both her hands in mine.

"You wrote that, Millie, wrote it to me?" I said, scarcely believing such good news true.

"I wrote it in answer to your letter the day you went away; and you never came—I heard nothing from you until I knew you were gone the next day. I could not understand it."

"But I received an answer," I said in bewilderment; "you wrote you had never thought of me except as a friend—that you loved another."

"Oh, no, no! I wrote that to Carl in answer to one I received from him at almost the same time as yours. And I must have enclosed them in the wrong envelopes. O Philip, to think of all these years of sorrow to us both, for such a stupid mistake! How can you ever forgive me?"

"There is nothing to forgive, if you only love me now," I said eagerly.

"I never loved any one else, I never could, you seemed a part of my life, and I've been so wretched, so very wretched! It's like heaven itself to have you back once more!"

"Oh, thank God! thank God!" was all I could say as I caught her in my arms. Oh the delirious joy of the moment, after all those years of sorrow, to know she loved me, could heaven hold any raptuse to equal this?

All the wretchedness of the past seemed to vanish as a dream, in the glad joy of the present. Then, suddenly there came a reaction of feeling. What was I now? Broken in health, crippled, helpless! What woman would take such a wreck of manhood as I!

"O Millie, darling!" I said, despairingly, "I've loved you, God only knows how well, but, I'm only a wreck at best; I cannot ask you to marry me now."

"You need not ask me at all," she said archly, between smiles and tears. "I shall take you anyway. O Phil, you cannot think I love you less for this? So long as there is enouch of the body left to hold the heart of my dear old Philip you'll be just the same to me, No, not the same, but a hundred fold dearer for all you have suffered. You will be strong and well soon, dear, and your lost leg is an honor, not a blemish."

Was not this the acme of all earthly joy! Shall I shame my manhood when I say the tears were running down my face, as I caught the dear girl to my heart, and thanked God for such a treasure.

After our emotions had calmed down somewhat, we examined the package more closely, and found a letter from Carl telling how he had received the note in answer to his letter, that he had rightly conjectured that in her agitation, Millie had misdirected the envelopes, that his must have been a rejection and had been sent me. In his chagrin and disappointment that I had been preferred to him, he had kept the note, hoping that the one sent me might have no name in it, and thinking I had been rejected I would leave without an explanation. Then followed an account of theupbraidings of conscience, the strivings of his better nature, until he had written this explanation to give me, in case of our meeting or of his death.

"I have been a coward and a villian," he wrote in conclusion, "not to have returned the note long ago. I cannot hope for your forgiveness."

But in the supreme happiness of our union we could find no room in our hearts for enmity toward the dead, even though he had wronged us so bitterly.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, August 8 1889. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 3.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff,
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, Pres't. / S. B. Hannah. / G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A DREAM OF THE PAST.

Last night by chance I heard a child
His evening prayer repeat,
"Make me gentle meek and mild,"
He lisped in accents sweet,

And in the twilight listening there
Once more I seemed to be
Kneeling beside my mother's chair,
My head upon her knee.

I felt her fingers gently rest
Upon my curley head,
And on my cheeks a kiss was pressed
When my good night was said.

But all too soon the spell was broke,
The vision passed away,
A voice called and I awoke,
But brighter seemed the way.

Long years have passed since mother died
And I all friendless roam,
Nor can I bridge the chasm wide
Through which my life has flown.

The cheek she kissed has lost its bloom,
The curly head is gray,
But that sweet dream dispels the gloom
And lights my weary way.

The Three Passengers.

A STORY OF THE SEA.

I entered the service of the United Company when only fourteen years of age. The United Company was an organization of English and Chinese capitalists at Shanghai which exported teas and other commodities. It had at one time eleven vessels, eight of which were small schooners and brigs, which were employed in visiting ports along the coast and various islands in the China Sea and Pacific Ocean. It is of my first trip I am going to tell you about.

I had run away to sea on a vessel bound from Liverpool to Shanghaia and had left her on arrival. I found that the Captain of the Silver Crown, one of the company's traders, was an old friend of my father's and so it came about that I took service under him with the rating ing of cabin boy. The Crown was a fine new fore-and-aft schooner, carrying a crew of eight men, all told. She had a native cook, but all the others were foreigners. The Captain, mate, and myself were English, two of the men Americans, and the other two were Swedes. While I rated as cabin boy, I had to assist in sailing the vessel, and was a sort of clerk to the Captain. The schooner carried a dozen muskets, a lot of boarding pikes, and half a dozen cutlasses as an armament, but everything was boxed up and stored away, if not forgotten. Captain Wharton had been in the service for six years, and had never met with any trouble.

When we got away it was with orders for the Philippine Islands, among which the company had many resident agents who collected products. Our course was to the southeast, to pass between Formosa and the Loo Choo Islands, and we had made the run thus far without incident, when one day about noon a junk-rigged native craft, which doubtless came from some port in Formosa, intercepted us to the eastward of that island. We were about thirty miles off shore she hailed us. She claimed to be short of water, owing to an accident; but this, as we afterward came to know, was only an excuse. When she found that we were bound to the Philippines she had three passengers to transfer. They were three natives of Formosa, who were going down there to form a colony, and would pay liberally for the passage by the schooner. They claimed to have contracted with the junk for the round trip, but she had sprung a leak and must return to port.

I am only giving you the gist of what was offered in excuse. We lay to for a couple of hours, and I heard only a part of what was said. It did not seem to strike Captain Wharton or Mate Williams as queer or suspicious, and after haggling over terms for a while the three natives were transferred to our decks and the vessels separated. Then I had time to look the strangers over, and I was not long in concluding that I did not wish for an intimate acquaintance. They were a tough looking trio, and the cook had scarcely set eyes on them before he declared that we had made a great mistake in taking them aboard. We had no accommodations for them aft, and as the schooner was in ballast they had agreed to occupy the hold. This wasn't such a bad place with the hatches off, and they looked like fellows used to roughing it ashore and afloat.

I took an early opportunity of communicating my suspicions to the Captain but he laughed at me in a good-natured way. I tried the mate, but he saw nothing to arouse distrust. It was singular, however, that every man of the crew outside of the two officers was satisfied that there was something wrong with the trio. While their excuse was reasonable enough, the looks and actions of the men were suspicious, and it was plain to all that they were sailors. They let us all severely alone except the Captain and the cook, and I called it to mind afterward that while one interested the former the other two were occupied with the latter. I could "chin-chin" a bit and the cook could speak a little English, and so we managed to understand each other pretty well. Three days after the men came aboard "Slop-Slip," as we called the cook, assured me with very serious face that the stranglers were evil-minded men, who had planned to capture the schooner. They had asked him to join them, and he had refused. I posted off to the Captain with the news, and he greeted it with contempt.

"If you and the cook have nothing better to do, I'll put you to rubbing the rust off the anchor chain," he gruffly replied.

The mate also laughed at me, but when I went quietly among the men every one of them was ready to believe. Each one had noticed something to arouse his suspicions, but in the absence of orders we could do nothing but wait for what might turn up.

We were getting well down toward the northernmost island of the group, when something happened which should have opened the Captain's eyes. The leader of the three borrowed the glasses and went up to the crosstrees of the mainmast and took a long look around. We saw the sailor in his every move, and he had not been down an hour when a native craft came creeping up from the south, bows on to us. She had a free wind, while we had been beating down all the forenoon. We were at this time forty or fifty miles to the northward of the group, with a beautiful afternoon and a smooth sea. Half an hour after the native craft had been sighted, one of the natives and the Captain retird to the cabin. Five minutes later the native slowed his head above the deck and called to the mate, who had just come on watch. He disappeared down the companionway, and at the same time I entered the forecastle to look for something wanted. I was down there about five minutes. I heard no particular row on deck, but when I reappeared I was struck dumb by the spectacle. One of the natives was at the wheel, and was bringing the schooner into the wind to lie to. The decapitated bodies of the two Americans and the cook were lying amidships, while the two Swedes were at the foremast crosstrees. Not a shout hod been raised nor a cry uttered. The work had been done with terrible rapidity and in silence.

As I reached the deck one of the natives came forward with a bloody creese in his hand and called me "good boy," and said I should not be hurt. He left me sitting on the windlass so scared and weak that I could not stand, and then assisted his companions to lower the sails. When this had been accomplished they called to the Swedes to come down. The poor fellows began crying and lamenting, and refused to descend. The natives picked up the bodies from the deck and tossed them overboard, and then descended to the cabin and brought up the bodies of Captain and mate and served them the same way. Both had been killed by the one native who enticed them down. About the time the last body was flung over the rail the native craft drew along-side. She had thirty men on board, all of whom seemed to know our three passengers and their plans. There was great rejoicing over the capture of the schooner, and for a quarter of an hour no one paid me any attention. Then there was a hot discussion, a part of the gang seeming anxious for my life, but the result was that I was conducted to the cook's galley and given to understand that I was to do the cooking. Although our cook was a Chinese they did not spare him. What saved me was my youth, or they might have planned to cut my throat after I had served their turn.

When my fate had been settled the Swedes were again ordered down. One of them descended, begging and pleading, but he was cut down the moment his feet touched the deck. The other refused to come down, and half a dozen natives ran up the foremast shrouds with knives in their hands. Before they could reach him the sailor made his way to the mainmast. His feat was greeted with applause, but others ascended, and there was no longer any hope for him. The poor fellow made the best defence possible, but they cut and hacked him until he lost his hold and fell to the deck. His body was thrown overboard, deck and cabins cleansed of blood stain, and about sundown the schooner, with twenty five men, was headed for the Philippines. The rest of the gang, numbering seven or eight, followed with the native craft. I boiled a large quantity of meat and got the best supper possible, and was glad to find that no one gave me any attention.

We had a brisk wind all night and during the next forenoon, and at about 2 o'clock we reached an anchorage on the east side of the main island and within a quarter of a mile of the beach. The native craft passed us and entered the mouth of a river. From what I could gather she was going to bring out men and cannon to the schooner. A hunt was made through the schooner for gun carriages, and the discovery of the small arms seemed to put the fellows in good humor. There was about $2500 in gold aboard in the cabin, and this was counted out and dividen pro rata, or in some other satisfactory manner as we lay at anchor. Then I was ordered to draw a pailful of wine from a cask in a sort of lazaretto or storeroom, reached from the galley. The cook might have known of the presence of the wine there, but I did not. I had never looked into the place. There was a tin pail, holding about ten quarts in the galley, and this I filled and carried to the main hatch, with several glasses, and everybody proceeded to help himself. Now that we were at anchor all discipline had ceased, and one man was as good as another. They were prowling all over the schooner, and perfectly as home.

The wine must have tickled their palates mightily, for a second pailful was soon demanded. It was while I was drawing it that I noticed the barrel had no bung in it, and I wondered why the wine had not soured. I retired to the galley as soon as I had filled the second order, and for half an hour there was a great deal of loud talk and laughter. All of a sudden, while I was reflecting on the situation, and perhaps crying a bit in my sorrow and anxiety, it struck me that things were wonderfully quiet. I looked out of the galley to see half a dozen figures lying on the deck, and later on, when I had summoned courage to walk the length of the schooner, I found every man aboard apparently asleep. Their breathing was labored, but I supposed this was the result of too much drink. The night had come down dark and gusty, with the wind directly off shore, and as the sleepers continued to lie quiet some strange ideas came to me. I was tempted to take one of their knives and begin killing but doubted my nerve. The yawl was at the navits and I planned to lower it and let the breeze carry me out to sea. I held to this idea for a few minutes, and then surrendered it for a other. I would swim ashore and hide in the forest. I had to abandon that scheme as well, for I saw at a glance that the tide was running out strong. I was wonderdering if I should not start a fire in the forecastle or cabin when I discovered that the craft was under way. She had her light anchor out and had been tugging heavily under the tide and gust. The chain had ground off against some sharp edged rock or the pin had slipped from a shackle. It was probably the latter case, as I heard a splash as of the end of the chain falling from the hawe hole. She drove off stern first and then, as she began to swing about, I stepped softly back to the wheel, put it over to get her off, and then extinguished the two lanterns on deck and the lamp in the cabin. I am not boasting of my nerve in stepping over the sleepers to do this work or of my sagacity in getting the idea. I was working like one in a dream and could hardly have identified myself.

What occurred between the time I put out the lights and daylight next morning, I never can clearly remember. The schooner took care of herself for any effort of mine, and I think I went into the galley and crept behind the stove. At least I crawled out of that contracted space soon after daylight, in response to a call. I suppose I was called to prepare breakfast for the pirates, but I was no sooner out of the galley than I saw a large ship hove to a quarter of a mile away, while one of her boats, with five men in it, was alongside the schooner. I must have looked and acted like a stupid, for as a couple of men came over the rail one of them gave me a hearty shaking and growled out:

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

August 8, 1889.

John L. Sullivan has been arrested and taken to Miss.

S. B. Seig, and F. H. Matheny have bought the Highland Recorder May they have success.

Rev. Father Curley, director of the Georgetown University died in Washington, July 24th.

The county court of Summers has reconsidered its previous decision and issued bar-room licenses.

The Wedding presents at the marriage of Princes Louise and the Earl of Fife are valued at $1,000,000.

Japan covers an area of 157,000 square miles; not quite as large as California. It has a population of 38,000,000.

Wheeling has a sensation over the stealing of over $30,000 from the bank of Wheeling by its "individual account," book keeper.

President Harrison will have to appoint another postmaster at Sweetwater, Wyoming. The late P. M. was hanged the other day for stealing cattle.

Electricity from a broken wire killed another mule in the streets at St. Louis the other day; and yet the New York experts fear electricity won't "remove" their murderers to a certainty.

Assistant Postmaster General Clarkson beats the record. He has removed 9,000 more postmasters in the same space of time than did Mr. Vilas.—Valley Virginian.

The contract for building the new Insane Asylum at Spencer, Roane county W. Va., was awarded to an Anthens, Ohio, contractor, for the sum of $35,000.

The Connellsville coke strike is not a success. The majority of the workers seem to think it better to wax fat on a dollar a day than to starve for the chance of getting a dollar and a quarter.

The widow of John C. Little, a drummer of Pittsburg, who lost his life in the flood at Johnstown, has sued the South Fork Fishing Club for $50,000 damages.

It is thought that Governor Fitz Lee will accept the Superintendency of the Virginia Military Institute after the close of his term of office. This is one of the finest institutions of learning in America. The mathematical course is said to be equal to West Point.

Here is a poem from the Cleveland Plaindealer that deals with the live questions of the hour:

Is marriage a failure?
Do detectives detect?
Does prohibition prohibit?
Does protection protect?

Here is another credited to Senator [illegible] which elucidates a very important subject.

[illegible] battle once began, [illegible] from howling sire to son, [illegible] and won By having every son of a gun.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON August, 2—Mr. Harrison will probably wish the Virginian republicans in a— much warmer climate than Washington, if they don't stop worrying him. He had scarcely shaken the dust accumulated on his trip from Deer Park to Washington yesterday out of his clothes before he was pounced upon by three different crowds of Virginia republicans each demanding the appointment of a different man to be Postmaster at Richmond. Mahone of course, has a man, then Gov. Brady and John S. Wise, the whilom anti Mahone crowd have a candidate and the third would-be-postmaster is backed by State Senator Waddell, who hopes to get his name in as a compromise. Doubtless the President wishes some of the harmony which is claimed to exist among the "old Dominion" republicans could be brought to bear on this postoffice.

The Commission investigating the re-rating of pensions have determined to make a preliminary report to Secretary Noble next week. This is taken to mean that the investigation has not in the opinion of the investigators—so far sustained any of the charges made, and that the preliminary report is made to give the Secretary of the Interior a good excuse for ordering the investigations stopped. If it should turn out that way there is certain to be a Congressional investigation of the whole business.

"We have put our foot in it now," said a Naval officer referring to the seizure of the Canadian Sealing vessel "Black Diamond" by the U. S. Revenue cutter "Rush" for the alleged illegal taking of seals in Behring sea, "we tried the same trick three years ago, but when the British government demanded the release of the vessels, Secretary Bayard had to accede to it, or rather he thought it right to do so. The laws have not been changed since the seizure referred to, but this administration seems to put a different construction on them. It is to be hoped that it will now have the necessary courage to refuse to surrender the seized vessel.

Considerable commotion has been created in naval circles by the report that the plan of the battle ship "Texas," now under construction at the Norfolk navy yard is so defective that she would not float if finished on the present lines. The officials at the navy department are all mum on the subject, but from other sources it is learned that several experts are now at work on the plan trying to discover whether, it is possible to modify them sufficiently to save the vessel. A court martial may come of it.

Gov. Wilson of West Virginia, was here this week. He says the contest now going on before the legislative committee for the Governorship is bound to result in Fleming's favor, and that as soon as the committee is ready to report he will call a special session of the legislature to receive it.

Representative Campbell of Ohio who will, it is thought here, be the democratic candidate for governor of that State is here. He thinks that, if nominated he will have a good fighting chance to carry the State.

Mr. Harrison will leave here Tuesday morning for Bar Harbor where he goes to visit Secretary Blaine. He will go to New York by railroad and from there to Boston, where he will remain all day Wednesday, by Steamer. He will be met at Boston by Walker Blaine who left here yesterday to arrange the programme in that city. He expects to remain at Bar Harbor about ten days.

Civil Service Commissioner Roosevelt and Ex-Postmaster General Frank Hatton, now editor of the Washington Post, seem about ready to indulge in a quarrel on account of the hard knocks Hatton is giving the Civil Service law. Roosevelt speaks of Frank Hatton, as a "Spoilsman" in a newspaper interview, and Hatton comes back at him by charging in an editorial in his paper that Roosevelt has received, aside from his salary, more money from the Government during the past three months than he (Hatton) did during his entire connection with the public service. And now everybody is asking everybody else what Hatton meant.

Quite a rumpus has been raised among the members of the labor union by the removal of E. W. Oyster, one of the foremen at the Government Printing office. He was once a republican, but worked hard for Cleveland.

Postmaster Paul of Milwaukee, who was so severely criticised in the recent report of the Civil Service Commission has forwarded his resignation.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

To the Heirs of Reuben Buzzard dec'd The Heirs of James w anless, dec'd, Henry D. Davis and John F. and w. S. Grimes, sons of Samuel Grimes, dec'd, David wilfong, Greeting:

we command you that you appear before F. J. Snyder, a Commissioner in Chancery of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County at his office in the town of Huntersville, in said County on the 5th day of September, 1889, and show cause, if any, you, or either of you, can, why certain lands shall not be sold for the benefit of the school fund, which are mentioned in a petition filed in said Court by the Commissioner of School Land for said County, which was referred to said Commissioner Snyder for report thereon by decree of said Court made on the 18th day of June, 1889.

witness: John J. Beard, Cl'k of our said Court, at the Court-house, of said County, the 8th day of August, 1889, in the 27th year of the State.

John J. BEARD, Cl'k.

aug 8-4t Printers fee $7.68

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, West Virginia on the first Monday in August, 1889.

Augusta National Bank, of Staunton, Va., and M. J. McNeel, Sheriff of Pocahontas county and as such adm'r of M. Mustoe, dec'd.

vs.

Samuel C. Tardy, K. D. Urquhart and Samuel C Tardy Jr. late merchants and partners, doing business under the firm name and style of Tardy, Urquhart & Tardy; Wm. M. McAllister and Charles P. Jones, Trustee.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to enforce a payment of the sum of $2,551 due to the plaintiffs by the defendants, Tardy Urquhart & Tardy, by two protested negotiable notes, and the costs of protest; with interest on $1,018.05 thereof, from February 24, 1886, and on $1,533.79, the residue thereof from March 22, 1886, and the costs of this suit; and to attach the interest of the defendants, Sam'l C. Tardy & Sam'l C. Tardy, Jr. in a tract of land containing 2,197 acres, lying in the County of Pocahontas, sufficient to satisfy the same.

And it appearing by affidavit filed that the said Defendants, Tardy, Urquhart & Tardy, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

JONES & MCALLISTER, p. q.
aug. 7 4t. Printers fee [illegible]

Notice to Contractors.

The undersigned Commissioners appointed by the County of Pocahontas County for the purpose will receive sealed bids until noon, Wednesday, August 14th, 1889, for the Construction of a new piece of road (about 90 rods) near Lockridge's ford, on the Wrm Spring and Huntersville road, according to the following specifications:

The road to be 12 feet wide all through except at the top of hill, where it should be 16 feet wide for 60 feet, said road to be 15 inces higher on outside, sloping to the bank, well drained, with water ways, culverts and side ditches, water-ways to be 4 feet in the bottom with a gradual slope and graveled where the ground is soft or marshy or liable to become so by a constant flow of water. Contractors will give bids for dirt and stone work separately. Said Road to be completed by Nov. 15th, 1889, and the work to be paid for out of the Levy for 1889. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

AMOS BARLOW,
JAMES H. DOYLE, } Commissioners.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Clerk's Court Clerk's office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in July, 1889.

Cyrena H. Wilfong, ... Plaintiff,

vs.

Henry A. Yeager, Joseph S. Riley and Charles A. Lightner .... Defendants

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant Henry A. Yeager, and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Yeager to the plaintiff, Cyrena H. Wilfong by bond, dated the 2nd day of October, 1882, for $[illegible], payable one day after date of the bond. Subject to a credit for $[illegible] as of February 1st, 1886, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Henry A. Yeager is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Clk.

RUCKER & MCALLISTER, p. q.
July 18 4t. Printers fee $[illegible]

MASONIC NOTICE.

HUNTERSVILLE LODGE No. 63, A. F. & A. M.—The time of regular meeting of this Lodge is on the Friday evening preceding each Full Moon, unless the Moon falls on Friday, then on that evening.

J. H. DOYLE, W. M.,
S. P. PATTERSON, Sec'y.

6-21

HOME NEWS.

—Still it rains.

—J. H. Rider, Esq., of Frost was in town the first of the week.

—Andrew Herold, Esq., of Frost was in town Monday.

—Mildred Herold, of Frost was in the city Monday.

—S. L. Gibson, of Frost was in Huntersville Friday last.

—David Walbell, of Richmond, was in our city over Sunday.

—Constable J. H. Bussard, is confined to his house by sickness.

—N. W. Buckman, Esq., of Mill Point, called to see us Tuesday.

